They recommend concurrence in the amendment numbered 41, with an amendment, as follows: Provided, That twenty-five hundred dollars of this amount may be used for school-purposes.

They recommend concurrence in the amendment numbered 44, with an amendment, as follows: Strike out the words "twenty-five" and insert in lieu thereof thirty-five.

They recommend concurrence in the amendment number 84, with an amendment as follows: Add at the end of said amendment the following: Provided, That there be first deducted from said amount of twenty-four thousand dollars the sum of five thousand seven hundred and twelve dollars and seventy-one cents, the same being the balance of amount due to said Indians for money derived from the sale of their trust-lands, together with amount due them for lands erroneously sold as public lands.

TEXAS AND PACIFIC RAILWAY.

FEBRUARY 27, 1875.—Recommitted to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOUGHTON, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, submitted the following

REPORT:

[To accompany bill H. R. 4547.]

The Committee on the Pacific Railroad, to whom was referred the memorial presented by the Texas and Pacific, and the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad companies, praying a guarantee by the Government of the interest on certain bonds to be issued by said companies to complete a southern line of railroad from the Valley of the Mississippi to the Pacific Ocean, as set forth in said memorial, and the bill submitted therewith, makes the following report:

Having heard the statements made on behalf of the various interests affected by the proposed legislation, and taking into consideration not alone the interests of those sections of the country through which the route of the road has been located and which are contiguous thereto, and those which will be brought into direct communication thereby, but also those of the Government and of the entire country as well, your committee have reached the conclusion that the interests of the Government and of the people of the entire country demand the early completion of a southern line of railroad to the Pacific Ocean.

Economically considered, it is too clear to admit of question that, for the military, postal, and Indian service of a vast territory, the line of road seeking the aid of the Government is an absolute necessity. The reports of committees of Congress and the records of the Government show conclusively that the construction of the existing line of railroad to the Pacific has, since its completion, saved to the Government annually about $2,000 per mile, and certainly an equal, if not a greater, saving will be effected by the construction of this road.

More than twenty-five years ago the United States paid for the Territory of Arizona $10,000,000, and since that time, to provide for the subsistence of the Indian tribes, and to maintain troops for the protection of settlers and the Government mails through that Territory, and through New Mexico and Western Texas, there has been expended by the Government more than $100,000,000, yet the expenditure of this vast sum of money has afforded such inadequate protection to the people who have gone there to settle and to develop its agricultural and well-known mineral resources, that the greater portion of that vast region is now almost without civilized inhabitants. In addition to this, our Government has also incurred heavy liabilities because of the depredations on Mexican territory by Indians who have made raids across the frontier, which incursions are still of frequent occurrence, and likely under existing conditions to continue for an indefinite period of time.

To hold in subjection the numerous savage tribes scattered through it, and to protect the lives and property of the white inhabitants of the country traversed by this line of road, there are now stationed troops aggregating about one-fourth of the entire available force of our Army, maintained and subsisted at an expense which cannot fall short of $10,000,000 per annum.

At this time, when so many of the industries of the country are paralyzed, and the resources of the Government insufficient to meet the demands upon the Treasury, any measure which will curtail this enormous expenditure, and at the same time develop the resources of such an extensive portion of our national domain, and so greatly add to our national wealth, while insuring safety to life and property where both are so exposed and imperiled, seems to your committee to merit, and in their opinion ought to receive, the approval of all thoughtful men.

The saving by the construction of the Union, Central, and Kansas Pacific roads has been so great, that were the Government to pay the entire principal and interest of the bonds loaned to aid in their construction, the net result would still be largely in its favor.

The success of these roads demonstrates that the benefits to result from the completion of this southern line of road are not conjectural. It is well known that the country on the line of these roads before they were built was so infested by hostile savages as to render it uninhabitable by whites. But such great facilities were afforded by their completion for the rapid movement and concentration of troops, that a very small force has been sufficient to put an end there to all Indian depredations.

It is evident that the construction of this road will enable the Government to withdraw three-fourths of the troops now stationed in the country traversed by it, and render the remaining fourth far more efficient than the whole force now employed there, and the saving so effected, added to the diminished cost of transporting military stores, Indian supplies, and the mails, will aggregate every year more than the annual amount of the interest on all the bonds proposed to be issued.

It is believed by your committee that much, if not all, the prejudice existing among some of our people against granting Government aid to railroads arises from the fact that in those cases where such aid has been granted heretofore the interests of the Government have not been as fully protected as they might and should have been. But, guided by the experience of the past, your committee feel persuaded that they have been able to avoid similar errors, and they believe that the bill (H. R. No. 4547) herewith submitted, as revised and amended by them, does most effectually; requiring, as it does, that no bond shall be issued, except to represent actual expenditures, certified to have been made by commissioners to be appointed by the President of the United States, so that the issue will be confined to the actual requirements of the work, not to exceed in any event thirty-five thousand dollars per mile.

The bonds provided for will be those of the companies, payable forty years after date, bearing five per cent. interest per annum; the interest-coupons only to be guaranteed by the Government.

To indemnify the Government and insure it against the possibility of loss, and to secure the payment of the bonds at maturity, adequate provision is made, as follows:

1st. A first mortgage, to be held by the Government, upon the road receiving the bonds, its franchises, property, income, and lands granted by the Government;

2d. The retention by the Government of all sums earned for transportation, and for postal and telegraphic service ;

3d. The payment into the Treasury of the United States of the proceeds of the sales of Government lands, and of such additional sum from the earnings of the road as may be required to pay maturing coupons, and provide a sinking-fund for the payment of the bonds at maturity ; and,

4th. The retention by the Government of $5,000 per mile of bonds to be sold, and the proceeds applied to the payment of the interest, should the company during or after the construction of its road fail to do so.

The evidence submitted to your committee has satisfied them, from the actual results obtained upon the existing northern line of road to the Pacific, that there can be no reasonable doubt that the earnings of this line will be ample to provide for the interest upon the bonds ; $5,000 per mile of gross earnings will more than meet this interest, and the actual receipts of the Union and Central Pacific Roads amount to much more than double that sum, upward of seventy per cent. of which is from local business, all of which has been created since that line of road was built.

The natural advantages of the country to be traversed by the southern line are as great, if not much greater, than those of the country through which the existing line passes ; while the low summits, easy grades, and freedom from snow, will materially diminish operating expenses ; and in this connection it must not be forgotten that in addition to the resources of our own Southern and Western States and Territories, the richest portions of Mexico lie adjacent to the proposed road, with a population of two millions of people, simply waiting its construction to pour a very large and valuable traffic upon it.

There are other matters connected with this question which seem to your committee to be worthy of careful consideration. They do not believe it to be the true interest of the Government or the people to be dependent solely upon one line of railway across the continent. The material interests involved are too important to be controlled by what is practically one corporation, especially when it is considered that the present route is liable to blockade and interruption during several months of the year.

There can be no doubt that the people of our country have reached the conclusion that competitive lines of travel are an absolute necessity to their welfare and prosperity ; and the South may well urge that, while the North and Northwest have been lavishly favored by the General Government, in appropriations for internal improvements, a very small sum indeed has been granted to that section, and that it is only reasonable and just that whatever can properly be done to revive her industries and restore her prosperity should more than ever be done at this time ; and when, by pursuing this course, the South is not alone benefited, but employment given to the laboring masses of the whole country, now suffering from the prostration of our mining and manufacturing industries ; and when, by the development of new territory, additional wealth is created, and additional revenue given to the Government, it seems to your committee that the measure proposed, tending, as it does, so far in those directions, should receive the favorable consideration of Congress.

It will be seen that under the provisions of the bill reported some thirty millions of acres of land revert to the Government, much of which will be greatly enhanced in value by the construction of this line of road. This results from connecting the Atlantic and Pacific, or the 35th parallel road, with the Texas and Pacific Railway, or 32d parallel line, and building but one trunk-line from the point of junction to the Pacific. This plan, through its eastern connections, will give a competing line between California and Saint Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Philadelphia, Baltimore, as well as direct connection and communication between the Pacific and Galveston, New Orleans, Mobile, Savannah, Charleston, Wilmington, Norfolk, Richmond, Memphis, Nashville, Atlanta, and other centers of population and trade.

For these reasons your committee recommend the passage of the bill as amended and reported by them.

CHINA MAIL-SERVICE.

FEBRUARY 27, 1875.—Ordered to be printed and recommitted to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KASSON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following

R E P O R T :

On the 20th of February, 1873, the House adopted the following preamble and resolution :

Whereas, in the testimony taken before the Ways and Means Committee of this House, in reference to certain matters committed to said committee for investigation, it has been sworn by Le Grand Lockwood, of New York City, that a large sum of money was used to secure the passage through Congress of an increased annual appropriation to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in the nature of a subsidy, for the transportation of mails and other purposes : Therefore,

Resolved, That said Committee on Ways and Means are hereby authorized and directed to make full inquiry into the truth or falsity of said sworn statement, and to this end the said committee is hereby authorized and directed to send for persons and papers, and generally to exercise such powers and discretion as will be necessary thereto.

On the 12th of January, 1874, the following entry appears upon the Journal of the House of Representatives :

The Speaker also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House, transmitting testimony taken by the Committee on Ways and Means during the third session of the Forty-second Congress, touching the subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

On the 24th of March, 1874, the following order was made in the House :

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means are hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, and administer oaths in all matters from time to time pending and under examination before said committee.

An additional resolution on the same subject was referred to the same committee on the 3d of April, 1874. In pursuance of this action of the House, the Committee on Ways and Means entered upon an investigation of all the matters embraced within the inquiries therein indicated, and have taken a great mass of evidence bearing thereupon, and now submit, with the evidence, the following report :

By act of Congress "to authorize the establishment of ocean mail-steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865, a monthly mail-service was provided for between San Francisco and some Chinese port, including the port of Honolulu and a port in Japan, by means of a monthly line of first-class American steamships of not less than 3,000 tons burden each, and of sufficient number to perform twelve round trips per annum, covering a period of ten years. The contract was to be made with the lowest responsible bidder.

Pursuant to this law a contract was made with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and the amount required therefor was annually appropriated thereafter. By a further act of Congress "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1873," approved June 1, 1872, an additional monthly mail between San Francisco, Japan, and China was authorized at a cost not to exceed the sum of $500,000 per annum. By this act the contract was to be made with the lowest bidder after public notice, and was to cover a period of ten years from the 1st day of October, 1873. The act made further provision as to the character of the additional steam service, requiring the vessels to be built of iron and to be not less than 4,000 tons register each, and so built as to be readily adapted to the armed naval service of the United States in case of war, with the right on the part of the United States to take possession of them in time of war upon payment of a reasonable compensation, not exceeding the original cost of the vessel. In pursuance of that act, this same company made the lowest bid for the service and it was accepted. They then proceeded to build two additional steamers adapted to the service. In the annual report of the Postmaster-General, dated November 14, 1874, the following facts are stated in respect to these additional steamers:

The contract for the additional monthly mail-service between San Francisco and Japan and China, authorized by the act of Congress approved June 1, 1872, was, after advertisement, in accordance with the requirements of that act, awarded to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company of New York, at an annual compensation of $500,000.

The company failing, however, to commence the additional service contracted for in such steamships, and at the time prescribed, both by the act of Congress cited above and the terms of their contract, when this Department was notified, in the month of July, 1874, nine months after the stipulated time, of the completion of two steamers built and designed for the service, it was deemed necessary to submit to the Attorney-General, for his opinion, the question of the company's right to have the new steamers inspected, and, if approved, accepted for the service under their contract.

The Attorney-General's decision, upon a full consideration of the case presented to him, having been to the effect that the contract with the company had not lapsed, but was in force, notwithstanding the failure to commence the service with the steamers and at the time provided, the steamers City of Peking and City of Tokio were inspected, as provided by the act of Congress of June 1, 1872, and, upon the favorable report of the Secretary of the Navy, were accepted by this Department for service under the contract with said company, with the understanding, however, that, as no appropriation was made by Congress at its last session for the additional monthly service contracted for, no payment could be made therefor until Congress should further legislate upon the subject.

It is not within the province of this committee to make report whether said vessels should have been accepted after failure of the company to complete them within the time required by the provisions of the act.

The investigation by the Committee on Ways and Means was upon the question whether money had been corruptly used by said Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or by any person, to procure the passage by Congress of the act providing for this increased mail-service.

The testimony shows that Alden B. Stockwell was, by a stock combination, elected president of the company in November, 1871, with a new board of directors. In December, 1871, he appears to have revived the purpose entertained by former officers of the company of obtaining an appropriation for additional service between San Francisco and China, and summoned Richard B. Irwin, one of the company's agents at San Francisco, to New York for consultation. Irwin accordingly came to New York in January, 1872, when he was told by Mr. Stockwell of his purpose to bring the matter again before Congress, and Stockwell arranged with him that he should proceed to Washington in charge of the efforts to procure the passage of such an act. This was done prior to any communication of his purpose to the board of directors or to the executive committee.

It also appears that on the 14th of February, 1872, at a meeting of the executive committee of the board of directors, the following resolution was adopted by that committee, at the request of said Stockwell :

Fourteenth February, 1872. Resolved, That the president, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to employ counsel and incur such other necessary expense as may be necessary in connection with the measures for additional subsidy now pending before Congress.

And on the 21st of the same month, at a meeting of the board of directors, that resolution was approved and ratified. It also clearly appears that the statement was expressly made at the time to the executive committee and to the board of directors, by Mr. Stockwell, that the contemplated expenditure would not exceed $10,000, and was for the purpose of employing counsel, procuring statistics, and such legitimate purposes. No further action on the part of said committee, or of the board of directors, upon the subject appears to have been had until long after the passage of the act providing for the additional service. It also appears that said Stockwell made, personally, an arrangement with said Irwin, without consultation with the executive committee or the board of directors, in pursuance of which he sent to him the following letter, under date "New York, February 13, 1872 :"

Very respectfully, yours,

A. B. STOCKWELL.

RICHARD B. IRWIN, Esq.

These were either the personal checks of Stockwell, or checks belonging to him, not the checks of the company.

Irwin claimed that under the arrangement made by Mr. Stockwell with him, instead of the sum of $250,000 named in the preceding letter, he was to have $500,000, and so stated to Stockwell in reply to that letter. To this communication of Irwin, Stockwell replied under date of May 4, 1872 :

DEAR SIR: Yours of the third to hand. We are much encouraged by the result of yesterday, were it not for the demands of to-day. When we were defeated in the "House," you said to me there was some good to come of it; that if we did get our bill it could cost less. I don't think it wise for the company to give their checks in this matter. Notwithstanding, I now inclose the four checks for $100,000 each, as your desire; but if they must be used, I would prefer my checks to be substituted for these; but, as I say above, I send them because I want to do everything to insure success. Of course you will return me my checks for $250,000, previously sent you.

Yours, very respectfully,

A. B. STOCKWELL.

Mr. R. B. IRWIN.

Prior to both the foregoing letters, and before the resolution of the executive committee of the 14th of February, Stockwell had given a check for $25,000 to Irwin without knowledge on the part of the company; this was in January, 1872; and in like manner $40,000 on the 13th of February.

It appears that Irwin took a house in Washington, indulged in extravagant expenses of living, claimed by him to reach the amount of about $40,000, and remained in Washington until the passage by the House of the Senate amendment authorizing the additional service desired, which was on the 21st of May, 1872. He also employed many agents and lobbyists during his residence in this city.

The precise amount expended or retained by Irwin prior to the 21st of May does not appear satisfactorily to the committee, but it amounted to a very large sum, about $140,000. The other original checks were returned to Mr. Stockwell and new checks substituted therefor at a later period.

On the 24th of May, 1873, Irwin appeared in the city of New York and received from Stockwell a series of checks signed by the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, amounting in all to $750,000. These checks were at first made payable to the order of Stockwell, and charged by entries on the stubs to his personal account. Upon their issue Stockwell's personal checks were returned to the amount of about $560,000. By his direction these checks for $750,000 were subsequently destroyed, and again new checks for like amounts were drawn, payable to the order of R. B. Irwin, not to be charged at that time to any account, but subsequently ordered by Mr. Stockwell to be charged to the account of Eldridge & Irwin, agents in San Francisco.

It also appears that these amounts, or the greater part of them, were transferred, fictitiously, to other accounts, with the evident purpose to conceal the character of the expenditure in such manner that the books of the company should not show the real object of it. With the exception of some small sums paid directly by Stockwell, the total amount disbursed by his direction, in connection with the legislation referred to, appears to have been retained by or disbursed through the hands of said Irwin, and to have amounted to about $890,000. The committee ascertained the names of the parties to whom payments were made by Irwin to the amount of $703,100. These names are given below.

It is claimed on the part of the company that the history of the first payments made to Irwin before the resolution of the 14th of February; the explanations given by Stockwell at the time he procured the adoption of that resolution; the fact that the first series of checks given to Irwin were not the checks of the company; that the first issue of the company's checks were noted to be charged to Stockwell's personal account; that the amount of $750,000 was entered in the cash-book without indicating to what account it was to be charged; the subsequent attempts to conceal in the books the object of the disbursement; the fact that by a by-law of the company the president had no authority to make payments exceeding $5,000, without previous sanction of the executive committee or board of directors; and the further fact that Stockwell, anticipating an advance in the value of the stock, to result from the favorable action of Congress, had undertaken enormous speculations—that all these facts lead to the conclusion that Stockwell's earlier intention was to assume personally all these expenditures. His later losses, however, appear to have induced him to impose the liability upon the company from which he had concealed his operations, and whose books were tampered with, and strewn with false entries, in his efforts to conceal his unlawful purpose. The committee recognize the force of these views, but it is hardly within their duty under the order of the House to pass upon the question.

The struggles of the spring and summer of 1872, to "bull" and "bear" the stock, in consequence of which some payments from this fund appear to have been made to appease the "bears," and their connection with the efforts to procure this subsidy, are sufficiently recited in the evidence, and need no further comment in this report.

Irwin's statement of amounts received and disbursed, or retained by him, and corrected as to amount paid to Whiting, and adding amount paid to Donn Piatt, as testified by Abert, is as follows:

Of this balance, Irwin claims the following expense account:

House and personal expenses, (including traveling, telegrams, stationery, printing, carriages, &c., in Washington and New York)	40, 000
	98, 400

At least $100,000 was taken by Irwin himself to California, after the passage of the law, and deposited to his credit in the Bank of California.

The payment to Mr. Piatt, although a part of the funds under investigation, is claimed by him to have been a loan, which was afterward repaid by a friend of his.

Of the sum of $125,000 paid to Charles Abert, the disbursement of which is included in the foregoing list, there remained, after his payments to the agents of Irwin and his own fee, $18,500, which he returned to Irwin's credit at a bank in New York. Of a subsequent remittance he also returned $1,000 to Irwin. The evidence submitted shows without contradiction that the sums so disbursed by Abert were retained by the parties into whose hands the testimony before the committee traced it. But the testimony of Mr. Forney, whose continued absence in Europe has prevented his appearance to testify, and of Mr. S. A. Hatch, who could not be found by the summons issued for him, and of Mr. Moran, whose illness prevented his attendance upon the summons served on him, was not for these reasons given to the committee.

The payments made to Richard C. Parsons are clearly shown to have been retained by him, and for legal services rendered by him, (and expenses,) at the request of Stockwell, the principal sum of $12,000 having been paid by Stockwell himself, upon account rendered.

The larger portion—$35,000—of the amount paid to Mr. Randall (now deceased) is shown to have been intended for and applied to buying off certain parties from New York, who were alleged to be lobbying at the capital to defeat the proposed legislation in order so to aid counter-speculations in stock of the company in New York.

In respect to the other payments included in the foregoing list, the committee cannot withhold the expression of their surprise that sums so extraordinary as those paid to most of these parties should have been given for a consideration of services absolutely insignificant, and, in some cases, as the evidence shows, to persons unquestionably without influence, or even efforts to bring influence, upon the legislation of Congress.

Nearly every part of the evidence shows that the whole transaction under inquiry was a reckless robbery of a corporation under the temporary control of speculators. Its only effect must have been to demoralize all just sense of the honest relation between service rendered and compensation received, and to destroy all sense of official fidelity on the part of the then president and vice-president and book-keeper of the corporation.

Of the important witnesses whose testimony was necessary to a complete examination, William S. King and A. B. Stockwell could not be found within the jurisdiction of the United States; King having avoided process by taking refuge in Canada, and Stockwell continuing absent in Europe.

The evidence taken by the committee in respect to the payments made to William S. King, while holding the office of Postmaster of the House, has revealed contradictions of the most painful character. Mr. King was summoned before the former Committee on Ways and Means near the close of the Forty-second Congress, and was, on the 25th of February, 1873, duly sworn and examined by that committee touching his knowledge of the use of money in connection with the passage of the act now the subject of investigation. During that examination the following answers were given by him in reply to inquiries addressed to him by the committee:

Q. Did Mr. Irwin use any money here to secure that subsidy?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did anybody use any?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you ever hear anybody charged with using any?—A. Yes, sir. As I have said, I heard the charge made on the floor by members.

Q. Never off the floor?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never heard the charge made in the lobby?—A. As I say, I have heard of these rumors growing out of the discussions on the floor; that is all.

Q. That is a very plain answer. You have, then, heard it talked about in the lobby?—A. Just as I have said in my previous answer.

Q. What was the purport of the talk you heard in the lobby about the expenditure of money?—A. The same rumors that I have stated.

Q. What amount did you hear named?—A. I never heard any amount named; these fellows never name amounts; they deal in generalities about these things.

Q. You do not know anything about any sums used?—A. I do not know of the expenditure of one dollar.

Q. How long was Mr. Irwin here?—A. I cannot say. I should think he was here most of the time during the pendency of the measure.

Q. Is your memory about private affairs as poor as it is about this matter?—A. I do not know how poor my memory may be considered about this matter.

Q. I will then ask you the direct question whether you received money for your services in behalf of this scheme?—A. Not one dollar, directly or indirectly.

Q. Did you ever expend any money for anybody yourself?—A. Not one dollar, directly or indirectly; not a single dollar.

Q. Where did you keep your bank-account?—A. I am sorry to say I have no bank-account.

Q. You keep none ever?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are a wealthy man, are you not?—A. I am not certain about that; I am in comfortable circumstances.

Q. Yet you keep no bank account whatever?—A. No, sir; if I have a note coming to me for collection, I pay it wherever it is presented. I do not think I have ever kept a bank-account in Washington, or that I have had particular occasion to.

It will be observed that Mr. King swears absolutely that he did not know of the expenditure of one dollar, and that he did not himself receive for his services one dollar, directly or indirectly.

Second, that he kept no bank-account whatever.

The evidence herewith reported to the House shows that he kept a bank-account with Jay Cooke & Co., in the city of Washington, covering a period from February 11, 1871, to April 22, 1872, embracing items amounting to $49,000.

The testimony also shows, beyond any doubt, that Mr. King received on account of his alleged services the sum of $125,000, of which $10,000 had been paid in smaller sums in Washington, and $115,000 was paid to him in the city of New York on the 30th day of May, 1872, immediately following the passage of the act. A portion of the $125,000, amounting to $34,000, appears to have been applied by him to his own use; another portion, $41,000, to credit of Minnesota banks, probably also for his own use; another sum of $5,000 paid by him to John H. Rice; and the remainder, amounting to $45,000, was divided into three unequal sums, the final disposition of which the committee have been unable to ascertain. So far, therefore, as the sum paid to Mr. King is concerned, the committee have found no fact showing that any part thereof was paid to any member or officer of either House of Congress, or to any person under their jurisdiction, while the fact remains that the disposition of $45,000 of that sum is not disclosed.

It also appears that this sum of $115,000 was drawn in New York under circumstances denoting an evident desire on the part of the said King to conceal his name in connection with these payments. His persistent and successful effort, since this examination commenced, to prevent the service of a summons on him, adds force to the conclusion of the committee that he desires to evade any further examination on the subject. The facts hereinbefore recited, whatever may be the disposition made by him of this extraordinary sum of money, indicate clearly the duty of the officers of justice in this District to institute proceedings against said King, by which, upon trial, it may be ascertained whether he did not violate his oath as a witness in February, 1873, as it now appears to the committee he did.

Mr. John G. Schumaker received the still more extraordinary sum of $300,000 in two checks, one for $275,000, on the 29th day of May, 1872, and one for $25,000, transmitted from California by Irwin after his return to San Francisco in June, 1872. The committee have made every effort in this case, as in that of Mr. King, to ascertain the ultimate disposition of that enormous sum. The entire amount is traced beyond question into the hands of Mr. Schumaker. It was his duty, as it would be the earnest desire of a man sensitive to any impeachment of his honor or integrity, to give the clearest explanation and the most willing evidence touching the whole transaction. It is incredible that for two or three months' service as an attorney, or parliamentary agent, there should have been paid to him so remarkable a compensation. In fact he only claims to have retained for himself about $10,000. As to the remainder, excepting one sum of $50,000, his memory had become a void. His evidence has left the most unhappy impression upon the minds of the committee.

The following extracts from his testimony will better inform the House of the difficulties surrounding this witness than any comments the committee can offer.

In respect to the sum of $275,000, he says :

Q. Did you receive it in compensation for your services?—A. I received it for my clients.

Q. I am not asking who your clients were, I am merely asking whether you received it in compensation for your services.—A. Not the whole of it.

Q. Any part of it?—A. Yes.

Q. What part of it?—A. A small amount.

Q. How much?—A. I cannot say. You have a copy of my bank-book.

Q. How much do you think you received for your services?—A. My impression is that it was in the neighborhood of $10,000. You have my bank-book and all my accounts.

Q. About $10,000 for your own personal services?—A. Yes.

Q. The rest of it was for some other purpose than in compensation for your own personal services?—A. That relates to confidential communications between myself and my clients.

Q. Was there more than $10,000 for your personal services?—A. I think about that sum.

Q. Do you think it would exceed that?—A. Not a great deal.

Q. In order to come to a limit, did it exceed $15,000?—A. My impression as to the amount is, that it was in the neighborhood of $10,000.

Q. Then the difference between $275,000 and about $10,000 was received for some other purpose than for your personal services?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You got that check certified, did you?—A. I did not.

Q. What did you do with it?—A. I took it to the Brooklyn Trust Company, by direction of my clients, and had it broken up at their direction, and directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to send the broken-up checks to my client, reserving about $10,000, I think.

Q. You did that without having the $275,000 check certified?—A. I did not get it certified myself.

Q. When you took it to the Brooklyn Trust Company was it certified?—A. It was not certified.

Q. Did you, in that month, take any other check for $275,000 to the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, whatever check you presented to the Brooklyn Trust Company during that month is the one that we are examining about?—A. Yes.

Q. And you think that that one was not a certified check?—A. I think it was not.

Q. You directed them to break it up, and to send all of it, except about $10,000, to your client?—A. Yes.

Q. The same client from whom you received it?—A. Well, I would not say that; that is a construction of law. It was not the person from whom I received it.

Q. Give us data enough, so that we can form a legal opinion about it.—A. I would say that it was not sent to the person from whom I received it.

Q. Was it sent to the clients from whom it came?—A. It was sent, under instructions from my clients, by the Brooklyn Trust Company, to my clients again, in small checks.

Q. Returned to the same clients?—A. Yes, sir. Well, that is not exactly a fair question, after what I have said previous to my being sworn; I told you that I was counsel for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and for Richard B. Irwin.

Q. * * * * * You say that you directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to break up that check and to send it all to your clients except about $10,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how you directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to break it up—into what forms?—A. I did not give them any personal instructions. I had a memorandum from my client, or something, to indicate what was to be done. I cannot recollect it now particularly.

Q. Did you have $150,000 passed to your own credit there?—A. No, sir; I did not give any instructions to have anything passed to my credit.

Q. Did you have any sum passed to your credit?—A. It seems that I did.

Q. How much?—A. One hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars.

Q. That sum was passed to your own credit?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think that the bank officials did not follow your instructions about that?—A. Not as to that particular matter.

Q. They misunderstood you in passing $125,000 to your credit?—A. It seems that they have done so.

Q. That would leave $150,000 out of the $275,000. What did you tell them to do with the rest?—A. I know that they broke the check, and passed $125,000 to my credit.

Q. How much would that leave?—A. They made three distinct checks, payable to my order, on the Marine National Bank, for $50,000 each.

Q. What did you do with those checks?—A. I directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to pass them to my client.

A. These [presenting them to the witness] are the three $50,000 checks, are they not?—A. It seems so; there is no doubt about it.

Q. Did you give directions to have those three checks sent to any person or to different persons?—A. To no particular person. I would not like to say that exactly. I directed them to be sent to my clients in the city of New York.

Q. Did you direct that they should be sent to different directions, or all to one direction?—A. All to one direction.

Q. Why did you have three checks?—A. I had three checks by the direction of my client.

Q. Was that the same client that gave you the $275,000 paper?—A. No, sir.

Q. A different client?—A. Yes.

Q. One client gave you the $275,000 paper, and by the direction of that client you sent these three checks to another client?—A. Yes, with other checks.

Q. What other checks did you send with them?—A. Personal checks of my own on the $125,000 which had been placed to my credit.

Q. How much did you send with them?—A. As I have told you, I sent all of the $125,000, with the exception of about $10,000; that was my impression.

Q. Did you send it all to the one direction?—A. Yes.

Q. At one time?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you say that no part of the $125,000 which the Brooklyn Trust Company passed to your credit as part of the proceeds of that $275,000 check went to your own personal use in any way, except $10,000 or thereabouts for your fee?—A. I do.

Q. No other part of it beyond the $10,000 or thereabouts went to your own personal use?—A. I say so.

Q. It went to the use of other persons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us who they were.—A. I cannot, for I do not know.

Q. And the avails of it you did not have?—A. I did not.

Q. Now, one step farther. Tell us who did have the avails of it.—A. My clients in the city of New York.

Q. Any one client, or different clients?—A. You know that the plural is applied to corporations and the singular to individuals.

Q. What is the corporation?—A. I will not say unless I am obliged to.

Q. To what officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company did you send those checks?—A. I will not be positive, but my impression is that I gave directions to the Brooklyn Trust Company to have them sent to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to Mr. Stockwell, or as he might direct.

Q. Do you mean to say that you were directed by the person from whom you received this $275,000 check to divert the whole of it back to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, except the $10,000 that was for your own personal services?—A. No, I do not mean to say that. I had such instructions.

Q. From whom did you get those instructions?—A. Those instructions I received as attorney and counsel for the parties for whom I was transacting business in the city of New York.

Q. The parties from whom you received the $275,000 paper?—A. I have said that I did not get such instructions from the party from whom I received the paper.

Q. You received those instructions from a different party?—A. Yes.

Q. What instructions did you receive from the party who gave you the paper?—A. Scarcely any at all.

Q. The paper was given to you by him without instructions?—A. I will not say that; I do not recollect any particular instructions.

Q. Were you directed by the party who gave you the $275,000 paper to make any disposition of its avails?—A. I do not recollect what the instructions were from the party from whom I received the paper.

Q. Did you have instructions from anybody else before you received the paper what to do with the avails when you did receive it?—A. I cannot be positive in regard to that.

Q. Did you receive instructions from anybody after you received the paper as to what disposition you were to make of its avails?—A. I think I did.

Q. What person was that?—I think it was my client in the city of New York.

Q. What person was it?—A. I am not at liberty to state.

Q. You have just told us one client; why not tell the other?—A. I told you the name of my client, but I did not tell you the communications between us.

Q. I do not ask you what the instructions were, but only the name of the client who gave you the instructions how to dispose of the avails of this $275,000 check.—A. I would like to tell you if I could, but it relates to confidential communications.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not ask you what the communications are.

The WITNESS. Yes, you do.

The CHAIRMAN. I only ask you the name of the client.

The WITNESS. You have asked me what client in the city of New York gave me the instructions.

The CHAIRMAN. The reason that I have asked you all these questions is the difficulty of getting an answer.

The WITNESS. I hope you do not consider that I am an unnecessarily unwilling witness.

The CHAIRMAN. O, no.

Q. Is there any more reason why you should retain the name of one client than there is why you should retain the name of the other?—A. No, sir.

* * * * *

As to the two checks of $50,000 each, indorsed by Mr. Schumaker, and traced to the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co., Washington, witness says:

Q. You have not yet told us about the two checks of $50,000 each that passed through the house of Jay Cooke & Co.—A. I did not draw the cash on them.

Q. Tell us all your connection with them.—A. I had nothing more to do with them than I have already described—to have them sent to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Was your indorsement on those checks?—A. Yes.

Q. So that they were presented to Jay Cooke & Co. either by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or by some person other than yourself?—A. That is true.

Q. And the proceeds were not paid to you, either directly or indirectly?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any information where the two $50,000 checks that passed through Jay Cooke & Co.'s house went?—A. Not the slightest.

* * * * *

The WITNESS. I am glad to give you information. I particularly want to say that I never drew the money on those checks from Jay Cooke & Co. I never bribed any officer or member of the Forty-second Congress, or attempted to bribe any officer or member of the Forty-second Congress.

As to the $50,000 check, also indorsed by Schumaker, and paid to himself by the bank of Riggs & Co., the witness says:

Q. Be kind enough to state again where you took that $50,000 check.—A. I took it to Lyman Elmore, at his office in the city of New York.

Q. Did you find him in?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see him?—A. Not in New York.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. I saw him in Washington.

Q. You came to Washington that night?—A. I think I came on that evening.

Q. You found Mr. Elmore here?—A. I think I did.

Q. What is Mr. Elmore's business?—A. He is a practicing lawyer in the city of New York; his specialty is railroad law.

Q. Where did you meet him here?—A. I think I found him at his rooms.

Q. At what place?—A. On F street.

Q. Has he an office there?—A. Yes.

Q. What transaction had you with him after you met him?—A. I told him that I was directed by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to deliver him this check; he said that it was not for him, but that it was for parties or for a party whom he represented.

Q. Did he say who that party was?—A. He did not say at that time. I told him that my authority was to give it to him or to parties whom he would designate or represent. Said he, "I cannot take the check; you must give the bills; I am not known here, and I could not get the money on such a large check." I took the check by his directions and went to Mr. Kennedy, and got Mr. Kennedy to go with me to Riggs & Co. They asked me there how I wanted the money. I said in large bills. They said they could not give me large bills at that particular time; that they would have to get them somewhere, I do not know where. In the course of two hours I received the money, and went down to Mr. Elmore's rooms, and in his back room I counted out the money to a gentleman in his presence, whom I do not think I had ever seen before, but whom I have subsequently seen, and whom he introduced to me at the time by the name of Smith. I supposed then that it was a fictitious name, but since then I have found out that it was not a fictitious name.

Q. What was this gentleman's name?—A. Mr. Elmore introduced him to me as General Smith.

Q. What other name?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did he take this whole $50,000?—A. He did. I counted it out to him.

Q. What did he do with it there?—A. I left the room.

Q. Where was the money when you left the room?—A. On the table.

Q. Who were present?—A. Mr. Elmore and General Smith.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. A very few moments.

Q. Did you take any memorandum that you had converted this $50,000 check into money and had delivered it over to a General Smith?—A. I made a memorandum.

Q. Did you take any?—A. Not from them. I was not authorized.

Q. Did you take any from anybody?—A. I took no receipt for the money from anybody.

Q. Did you take any memorandum from anybody that you had delivered the proceeds of this $50,000 check to any person?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any evidence to carry about with you that you have not got that money now in your pocket?—A. I have not the evidence.

Q. You have got no voucher for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. As the matter stands now, the cash is traced into your hands from the bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have no evidence about you that you paid it out?—A. No, sir.

Q. You depend upon those parties to clear you from the money, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the ordinary course of business with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What reason was there for doing this business in an unusual way in that respect?—A. I was requested to pay this money, and I did it in the manner which I have described.

Q. What was there in the transaction that led you to depart from your usual course of business and to take no voucher that you had paid the money out?—A. I will tell you if you will permit me.

Q. That is what I want.—A. The company said to me in New York that there were men from Washington running the office down, who represented that they had been employed by Mr. Stockwell in assisting in the passage of the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy; that the bill had passed the House; that they had all sorts of rumors in respect to it, and that they wanted to pay any person whom they had honestly and properly employed in prosecuting the case before Congress or the committees, and they wanted to get rid of that crowd.

Q. Go on.—A. They told me that a gentleman by the name of Elmore, whom I knew very well, represented most of those parties, or knew those parties; that they were willing to trust to him to direct me whom to pay of the men who were hunting the office down. There were men running in there all hours of the day, stating that they had been employed by Mr. Stockwell and others in the prosecuting of this subsidy measure before Congress, and they were so clamorous that no business could be done in the office. They came over to my office, 17 William street, and made this complaint to me, and they directed that I should take this check and give it to Mr. Elmore, or pay it to such parties as he directed. I hesitated about the matter. I did not want to do it. I told them that if it was to pay it to any member of Congress I should have nothing to do with it. They assured me that there was no member of Congress whom they had employed, or agreed to employ, and that there was no officer or member of the Forty-second Congress who was to have anything to do with the money. I went to Mr. Elmore's office, and he was not in. I understood that he was in Washington. I came on here and saw him, and said, "I have this check for you, and I want you to take it." He said, "I cannot get the money on it. I must have the money." I went and got the money as I was directed, and paid it in that way, asking for no voucher, for no receipt particularly for the reason that it was to be paid, as I supposed, to different parties who had been employed by Mr. Stockwell and others in prosecuting the passage of the additional subsidy. Now, that is the reason.

Lyman Elmore's testimony in respect to the same transaction is as follows:

Q. What do you know about Mr. John G. Schumaker's service in connection with that matter? State all you know about it.—A. I can state it exactly as the transaction occurred, which I presume is what this committee wishes to know about. At my office in Washington there were from twenty to fifty people a day calling, and I met and was introduced to a great many people at saloons and elsewhere. In this way I was introduced to a gentleman by the name of General Smith. I met him probably three or four times during the spring of that year. One day, passing from the Treasury Department down F street, he was talking with a group of gentlemen, and he called me and came up to me in the middle of the street, and asked me if I knew the attorney of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I said that if it was Mr. Irwin I did not know him except by sight. "No," he said; "he is the agent. I mean the attorney in New York. You have a New York office, have you not?" I said that probably I knew most of the attorneys in New York, and he said: "They are to send over their attorney from New York to pay me some money. Have you any objection to identify me?" I told him certainly not. I passed along down the street. Three or four days passed, when one morning John G. Schumaker came into my office and threw down a check for $50,000, saying: "I was instructed to give that check to you." I did not even pick up the check. I saw it lie there. I said, "Not for me; you are mistaken." "No," said he, "the Pacific Mail Steamship Company told me to pay that to you or to somebody whom you were to identify." I told him then that I knew who the gentleman was and would see him during the day probably, and would let him know. I then made a suggestion to him different from what the report in the newspapers seems to indicate. I did not say that I could not draw the check and that he must get it cashed, because I could have drawn the check very easily if I had wanted to; but I remember making this remark: I said, "You are not going to pay in a check, are you?" He then said he would get it cashed. My remark was a natural remark of caution. I made an appointment with him between 2 and 3 o'clock. I met this gentleman, Mr. Smith, and he came to my office about half past two. My own desk being in the back room, he sat there reading papers, and became very nervous, and kept suggesting that he thought Schumaker had made up his mind not to come around again, but some time after three o'clock Mr. Schumaker came in. The only remark that I made to him was, "This is the General Smith who I believe was to meet you here." After shaking hands, he stepped up to the dressing-bureau back of my desk, and he pulled a roll of bills out and said, "Count that." After counting the money he said, "That is all right." After making some remarks about Brooklyn, Schumaker left the office. I then made the jocular remark to General Smith that that was too much money for one man to carry. He said if it was for him he would be very glad to make a divide, but that he had nothing to do with it, except that he was receiving it for other parties. He left the office. A few days after that I left Washington and was not here for several months. I came on again the next winter and was introduced to General Morgan L. Smith. Supposing that he was the Mr. Smith I had met in my office, I recollect making the remark that I guessed we had met before, and he neither assented nor dissented. I asked him if he had not changed his whiskers, under the impression all the time that he was the same gentleman. Again, in December last, I said to him when this investigation came on, "I suppose they will have us before the committee." He said he did not know anything about it; that he could tell them all he knew about it in five minutes. That is the only thing I know about the transaction.

Q. Was that the General Smith you introduced to Mr. Schumaker?—A. I suppose it was, but subsequent events have led me to believe that it was not.

In testifying in regard to his bank account with the Brooklyn Trust Company, Mr. Schumaker said:

Q. In this account, which you have presented here, after this $125,000 was credited to you on May 30, there is a subsequent credit on June 19 of $27,775. Where did that come from?—A. I have no distinct recollection. It did not come from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. It may have been from the sales of some stock or property that I had. I will not be certain. When I saw it to my credit it struck me as a novelty. I did not recollect the transaction.

It is to be remarked that Mr. Schumaker expressly declares that on the 30th of May the Brooklyn Trust Company gave him three checks for $50,000 each on the Marine National Bank, and that checks were then also drawn for smaller amounts representing the remaining $115,000, and that the Trust Company, by his direction, sent these smaller checks, together with the three $50,000 checks, to somebody at the office of the Pacific Mail Company; and that he knows nothing more of their disposition, except the one check for $50,000, the amount of which he drew from the banking-house of Riggs & Company, in Washington, and paid over to the indefinite Smith in Elmore's office.

The evidence found in the books and furnished from the office of the Brooklyn Trust Company does not support this statement of Mr. Schumaker. These books show that the balance to Mr. Schumaker's credit on the 30th of May, before this deposit of $125,000 was made, was about

The committee cannot believe that if the checks into which the witness claims the $115,000 were broken up had been issued and delivered, as stated by him, they would have remained so long in the adjoining city of New York, or elsewhere, without being presented for payment. Unfortunately for the further prosecution of this inquiry, the president of the Trust Company, Mr. Mills, who, according to the witness's statement, bore his instructions for the issuance of these checks and caused them to be sent to Stockwell, or other person, in New York, is dead, and Stockwell himself residing in Europe. The committee, therefore, cannot adopt this explanation of the witness, and find more reason to believe in the application of this portion of the funds to his own use than this alleged transmission of the checks to unknown persons in New York, especially in view of the statement made by Mr. Schumaker that he cannot remember who told him how to break up the checks, and that he destroyed these checks in February, 1873, just before (as he says) the commencement of the investigation by the former Committee on Ways and Means.

It will be further remarked that the witness denies that he was at the Exchange Bank in company with William S. King. Here, again, his evidence is in serious and irreconcilable conflict with that of two witnesses, George S. Coe, president of the bank, and Dumont Clarke, assistant cashier of the same bank.

Mr. Clarke testified as follows :

The following day, or the day after, two gentlemen came in and went to the paying-teller's desk, and presented, one a check for $275,000, and the other a check for $115,000. It is our instruction to the teller not to pay any large sum of money, even if the check is payable to bearer, unless the parties presenting it are identified, because we have got into court once or twice by paying forged checks, and therefore the teller told these gentlemen that he would be unable to pay the checks unless they were identified. They then came up to my desk, and I had a little conversation with them, and told them the reason why we did not care to pay those large checks without identification, and that I thought it was right and proper for them to give us some clue to their identity. They refused; one of them quite lustily. I then referred them to Mr. Coe, and went into his room with them.

Q. You know Mr. William S. King now?—A. I do.

Q. Was it Mr. King or the other that refused in that way?—A. It was the other. Mr. Coe went over the matter with them, and told them that he did not think it was a proper thing for them to ask that such large sums of money should be paid by the bank without some identification of the parties. He told them that all we wanted to know was that the money went into the proper hands—that the checks were genuine; that while we were supposed to know the signatures of the drawers of our checks, still we thought we were justified in taking even greater precautions in order to protect the bank. This other gentleman (not Mr. King) remarked that he did not think this was a very large sum of money; that he had seen very much larger sums, and did not think it worth while to make a fuss about such things. Mr. Coe still refused, and asked the man how he was going to use the money, whether he was going to use it in a bank, and he said that he was. Mr. Coe then told him that we would certify the check for him, which would answer his purpose, and thereupon we had the paying-teller certify his check. That was the check for $275,000. The other gentleman stated that he wanted to use the money on the following day, and Mr. Coe told him that if he would come in the next morning we would pay him the money; knowing that if the other check passed correctly through another bank we would have some clue if there was anything wrong about this one. In the mean time we had communicated with a detective, and engaged him to be present on the following morning. Next morning this gentleman bearing the $115,000 check came in and took it to the president, who authorized its payment. We had instructed the detective beforehand how to proceed, and I told him that was the man, and to keep a lookout for him. The detective followed him out of the bank, and in the course of ten, fifteen, or perhaps twenty minutes, he came back and reported that the gentleman had gone to the Park Bank, had there held a short conversation with the cashier, and had then gone to the note-teller's desk, taken out a large amount of greenbacks, and had a transaction with the note-teller of the Park Bank.

The two gentlemen were then referred to me, and hearing them very emphatic, for I had overheard part of the conversation, I asked them to sit down and explain to me what the matter was. They said in substance—for, of course, it is impossible for me to recollect any words that were used—they said, in substance, we have two checks on your bank, and they refused to pay them. Said I, "Let me look at them, gentlemen." They handed the checks to me, and I looked at them. One of them was for an amount over $200,000—as to that my memory would serve me without any assistance—and the other was over $100,000. I see by the account-current that one was for $275,000 and the other for $115,000. I said, "Now, gentlemen, you know these are very large sums of money," and one of the gentlemen remarked, that is not a large sum. I said, "Sir, $275,000 we consider in New York to be a very large sum;" and he answered, "We handle larger sums than that," or something to that effect. I then said to them, in substance, "Now, gentlemen, there is a courtesy due between gentlemen, and there is a certain obligation which every man owes to the community in handling large sums of money, and which men who are engaged in these large transactions owe to each other to take care of each other, and on that general ground I ask you to identify yourselves, simply that I may be sure that I am not paying a forged check." The answer of the gentlemen was something like this, or to this effect, that they had reasons for not wanting to be identified, and they declined to be identified.

Therefore I said, "Gentlemen, how do you propose to use this large check? If you are going to use this in a bank, you can relieve me from all embarrassment." And the gentleman who had presented the large check said, "Yes, I am going to use it in a bank." Said I, "Then have it certified, and you can deposit it, which will save you and us the trouble of counting this large amount." And he assented. So I directed the check to be certified, which accounts for its being drawn on the 29th of May. Then turning to the other gentleman, I said, "How do you want yours?" He said, "I want mine to-morrow morning, in money." I said, "Come in to-morrow morning, and you shall have it."

Yet Mr. Schumaker testifies that it was not certified when he took it to the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Again, Mr. Schumaker testifies his entire ignorance of the disposition of the two $50,000 checks partly converted into certificates of deposit at Washington; yet the following certificate of deposit was put in evidence:

JAY COOKE & CO., BANKERS,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1872.

John G. Schumaker has deposited with us $90,000 to the credit of himself, subject to his order and the return of the certificate.
$90,000.]

JAY COOKE & CO.,
Per W. M. TENNEY.

It is indorsed "John G. Schumaker."

On which it is shown that $30,000 was paid the 5th day of June, 1872, and on the same day the following certificate of deposit was issued for the balance:

JAY COOKE & CO., BANKERS,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1872.

John G. Schumaker has deposited with us $60,000 to the credit of himself, subject to his order and the return of the certificate.
$60,000.]

JAY COOKE & CO.,
Per W. M. TENNEY.

On the face of it is the hand-stamp, "Jay Cooke & Co., June 7, 1872, Washington, D. C."

On the back of it is, "Received $15,000 on the within, June 6, 1872, J. G. Schumaker." Then there seems to be a memorandum which says, "Balance $45,000, paid June 7, 1872;" and then an indorsement, "John G. Schumaker."

And the genuineness of the signatures is admitted. The bank-officer summoned before the committee gave the following explanation of the transaction :

Q. From your knowledge of the business of the bank, and from the entries on the books, state how these checks, Nos. 192 and 193, were paid, in your judgment. Give the history of them according to the books.—A. I should say that these two checks for $50,000 each were presented by Mr. John G. Schumaker, and that there was a certificate issued for $90,000, and $10,000 paid in cash. Afterward this $90,000 certificate was returned, was surrendered, and a new certificate issued to the same party, John G. Schumaker, for $60,000; and afterward that certificate was returned and cashed for $60,000. That seems to be the end of it, so far as it can be traced through the journal.

It will be observed, from his testimony, that Mr. Schumaker gives no satisfactory account of any portion of the fortune dropped into his hands except his alleged fee of $10,000, and that his account of the $50,000 paid in Washington is strange, dark, and mysterious. The return of checks for the other $240,000 is still more shrouded in the gloom of the night which hangs over his memory.

When the committee produced to him two additional checks of $50,000 each, indorsed by him, and the two certificates of deposit above recited, with evidence tending to show the payment to him in cash of the other $10,000, still not a ray of light dispelled or penetrated the darkness of his recollection. He admitted the signatures, but searched his memory in vain for an explanation. Of the disposition of the $115,000 returned in smaller checks to Stockwell, (or somebody else,) and of the $25,000 transmitted to him from California by Irwin, he gives us no possible trace. These sums may have been devoured by the wounded "bulls" or "bears" of the stock-board of New York, or may have swollen the sum of disbursements at Washington.

There remains, therefore, until further evidence can be obtained from Stockwell and King, or until the memory of John G. Schumaker is restored, no satisfactory or credible explanation of the final disbursement of $335,000 passing through the hands of King and Schumaker.

The committee also followed up certain reports in respect to indications of evidence alleged to exist in the books of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House. It was alleged that the former book-keeper of that officer had made a memorandum of parties who had presented unusual sums of money at the counter about the time of the passage of the act in question. The committee find that he had at the time made a memorandum of the initials of certain names which he had given to a former Committee on Ways and Means at the time of the examination in February, 1873. That committee, calling before them some of the parties indicated, became satisfied that there was no evidence afforded from that source worthy of confidence. The witness also, finding himself mistaken in points of fact, or of identity, asked leave to withdraw, and did withdraw, his evidence.

This committee had not, therefore, any access to it, but they brought the same witness before them, and searched his memory without other result than obtaining three names among those which he thought his former statement indicated. These gentlemen, astounded by his declaration that his memorandum indicated the presentation by them each of a $1,000 bill at the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, voluntarily appeared before the committee and swore that no such transaction had ever occurred in which they had any part. The further fact appeared that they were opponents of the act in question, two of them having voted against the bill, and the other having been at his home at the time of its passage.

The committee have not found the least evidence in the examination of Mr. Dillon, (the book-keeper,) of the Sergeant-at-Arms himself, of the paying-teller, or in the books of the Sergeant-at-Arms, which have also been examined by the committee, which indicates any unusual transactions, or any transaction whatever, involving even a suspicion that it represented a part of the money alleged to have been used in connection with the passage of the act under investigation.

The Committee on Ways and Means have pursued the inquiry ordered by the House with a profound appreciation of its magnitude. A sum of nearly one million of dollars appears to have been disbursed in some sort of connection with the passage of a particular act of Congress. The first impulse of every citizen of the country, partially justified by the bare statement of that fact, leads to the suspicion that it must have been paid to persons whose votes were necessary to the passage of the act. The charge would naturally be applied to the whole body of Congress, in the absence of the individual names involved; and the stain implied in it would rest upon the character of that body as a whole, or at least upon that portion of the body whose votes were recorded in favor of the act. But even this discrimination is rarely made by the rash public judgment. The vast powers conferred by the Constitution upon Congress, and the great interests involved in their legislation at each successive session, are such as ought to be intrusted only to a body which is above reproach and above just suspicion. Any charge which involves the character and reputation of a body exercising such high functions should not be believed unless supported by undoubted evidence. The reputation of the ruling authorities of a republic should be as dear to the people as the courage, the virtue, and the intelligence of its inhabitants. The dishonesty or disgrace of individual members of a legislative body should be carefully limited by the public judgment to the individuals themselves involved. The moral power of a legislature, a judiciary, or an executive consists largely in its just reputation for integrity. No greater evil could befall a country than a false belief in the corruption and venality of its rulers. This danger chiefly exists in a republic, where all the organs of public opinion are unlicensed and absolutely free. It is a peril which has always been appreciated in this country since the beginning of its free government. Washington, in a parting address which he had prepared near the close of his first term of office, and in expectation of leaving the public service, called attention to it in these words: "However necessary it may be to keep a watchful eye over public servants and public measures, yet there ought to be limits to it; for suspicions unfounded and jealousies too lively are irritating to honest feelings, and oftentimes are productive of more evil than good."

Indifference on the part of the people to the integrity of public servants and to the honesty of public measures, on the one hand, and groundless suspicions and unfounded beliefs in their corruption on the other, are equally dangerous to the honor and safety of the country.

The committee have, therefore, appreciated the importance of tracing the money, so alleged to have been disbursed, into the hands where it remained for the compensation of the parties interested, whether in either House of Congress, or belonging to that numerous class of persons who are always found about great capitals, professing to exercise an influence over the action of legislative bodies. To this end the committee have exhausted every resource which the laws or the usages of the House have afforded. The importance of the inquiry, as affecting the reputation of the chief legislature of a great country, increases the guilt of those persons who, knowing facts which would contribute to the discovery of the truth, have either falsified them or withheld them from the knowledge of the committee.

The results of the evidence are, that about $900,000 was disbursed upon the allegation that it was used in aid of the passage of the act now under investigation; that about $565,000 appears to have been paid to the exclusive use of persons having no official connection with such legislation; and that the disposition of the remaining $335,000 remains in doubt upon the evidence presented, but without any testimony showing that it was a reward paid to any person at that time a member of either House of Congress; and that the uncertainty attending the disposition of this latter sum is owing to the refusal of William S. King to testify the truth, and to the failure or refusal of John G. Schumaker to present all the facts which the committee believe it was in his power to give. The committee are of opinion that the importance of the absent witnesses and of the question involved requires that the investigation should not rest at the point where they are obliged to leave it. In order that another Congress may have it in its power to pursue this inquiry until the guilty parties, if any, are discovered, and that the disgrace belonging to such discovery may attach exclusively to the individuals involved, and not rest upon the Forty-second Congress as a body, they recommend that the evidence, and especially that relating to money paid to these two parties, and to the action of Alden B. Stockwell, be delivered to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, to be laid by him before the next House, of which body J. G. Schumaker and William S. King are members-elect. Mr. King is not a member of the present House and not within its jurisdiction, and the committee is not prepared, therefore, to make any recommendation affecting him, except as embraced in the accompanying resolutions. It is evident that the testimony of Mr. Stockwell may be of vital importance to the credibility of Mr. Schumaker's evidence. The committee think, therefore, that it may better tend to a just disposition of his case to give opportunity for further evidence, and with the strongest motive on the part of this witness to furnish a more satisfactory explanation of his connection with these disbursements.

The adoption of the first resolution accompanying this report is recommended in order to secure the prompt attention of the next House.

The second resolution is recommended, owing to the serious character of the question, involving the veracity of the two witnesses, which seems to demand judicial investigation.

The enormous evil attending the existence of an unregulated lobby, with license to appear before committees and urge measures upon members, upon fraudulent pretense that they are acting for the public interests, when they are privately retained by interested parties, calls for further legislation. The committee deem it necessary, for the protection of Congress against future transactions as discreditable as those they have now brought under review, that a law should be passed requiring every person appearing and advocating measures for a private interest to appear in his true capacity as a retained attorney or agent. They present a bill designed to throw some guards around Congress and the public interests in this respect, and recommend its passage.

The facts of this case also disclose that sums have been paid to influence the action, or in reward of the action, of two employés of this House, and of persons entitled to the privilege of the reporters' gallery. Such practices merit the condemnation of the House. They also present in the bill a provision to prohibit, in the future, this class of persons from using their positions corruptly, or for pay, to defeat or secure the passage of any measure pending before Congress, and recommend its passage. The committee do not recommend further action in the case of the two employes of this House, who, after the passage of this act, received rewards, as shown in their evidence, being informed that both of them have resigned.

Resolved, That a copy of the testimony taken before the Committee on Ways and Means, upon the question of a corrupt use of money to procure the passage of an act providing for an additional subsidy for the China mail-service, be delivered to the Clerk of the House of Representatives, to be by him laid before the House at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, to the end that they may make further inquiry and take due action upon the questions affecting William S. King and John G. Schumaker, and further proceed therein as they shall deem just.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House transmit to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia a copy of the evidence taken before the Committee on Ways and Means upon the question of a corrupt use of money to procure the passage of an act providing for an additional subsidy for the China mail service, with direction to lay so much of the same as relates to the truth of the testimony given by William S. King and John G. Schumaker before the grand jury of said District, for such action as the law seems to require.

Resolved, That any reporter or correspondent, having a seat in the gallery by permission of the Speaker, who has received any fee, bribe, or reward in connection with any legislation pending in either House of Congress, should be deprived of such privilege; and such conduct, as disclosed by the evidence taken before the Committee on Ways and Means, is severely censured by the House.

CHINA MAIL-SERVICE INVESTIGATION.

TESTIMONY TAKEN BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

WASHINGTON, February 25, 1873.

HERBERT L. BRIDGMAN sworn and examined.

By Mr. MAYNARD:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am 28; I reside in Washington; I am a journalist.

Q. With what newspapers are you connected?—A. I am correspondent of the Boston Daily Advertiser.

Q. My attention was called to an issue of that paper of the 21st of the present month, in which the following paragraph appears:

The Committee on Ways and Means have a most inviting field of inquiry thrown open to them by Mr. Randall's resolution directing them to investigate the use of money in the passage of the Pacific Mail subsidy bill last winter. Upon no measure before Congress for a long time has common report been more free and accordant, and, unless greatly mistaken, some of the southern republicans, who expect to compel their recognition in the next Congress by pressing the Credit Mobilier censure in this, will do well to make sure of their own standing.

Will you please state upon what facts and information you predicated that paragraph?—A. The information upon which I wrote that paragraph was given to me by a gentleman connected with the House, and he, I presume, can give the committee the facts upon which he predicated that information.

Q. Who was that gentleman?—A. Mr. H. H. Smith, clerk of the Committee on Claims.

Q. What was the substance of his information?—A. The substance of his information was the fact that a resolution of censure upon all the gentlemen whose names had been mentioned in the Credit Mobilier transaction would be offered in the House by a southern republican.

Q. Did he say who that southern republican was?—A. No, sir; he declined to give me the name. He stated that he was sure of the fact; that he himself had draughted the resolution at the request of the member; and then he conveyed, in general terms, the same idea that I have expressed in the dispatch you have read.

Q. Did he give any names at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you from any source any information bearing upon this inquiry?—A. I do not know the scope of the inquiry sufficiently well to answer.

Q. The scope of the inquiry is to ascertain whether the subsidy-legislation in behalf of the Pacific Mail Company of the last session was procured by corrupt or indirect means, or undue appliances of any kind.—A. No, sir; I only know what I have been told by gentlemen who are not members of the House; concerning any members of the House I have no information whatever.

Q. Who, is it understood, were the agents of that company lobbying them here?—A. I know nothing of that except what I have been told; no person ever approached me, directly or indirectly, to do or say anything in behalf of the company. I was told of a gentleman who had some interest in the matter, and who was present that year; but he never approached me on the subject, or had any conversation with me in regard to it.

Q. Who was the gentleman?—A. There is a gentleman, I think, by the name of Samuel F. Irvin, or Irwin; his name was frequently mentioned to me last winter as having something to do with the company, or as having some interest in the company. I know nothing of this gentleman, as to who he is or where he is.

Q. Then the knowledge upon which you sent the paragraph I have read is derived from your conversation with Mr. Smith, and the substance of that conversation you have stated?—A. Yes, sir; the substance of the conversation was the general effect of the paragraph you have read.

Q. You understood from what he said or what he suggested that certain southern republicans had been unduly and corruptly influenced in the matter of that legislation?—A. No, sir; I do not know that I could state it as strongly as that.

Q. You understood him to mean that?—A. I do not know that I would even go as far as that. I understood that certain southern republicans were to make an effort to turn the present condition of affairs to their advantage, and I am pretty positive in my recollection that, in the course of this conversation, this idea in regard to the Pacific Mail subsidy was developed, but I would not put upon him the responsibility of making that suggestion.

Q. Did he give you the names of any who had been so influenced?—A. No, sir; you will see in another part of that paper another dispatch in which the same idea is given in even more explicit terms.

Q. That he had drawn up a resolution of censure at the instance of some southern republicans?—A. Yes, sir; that he had drawn up such resolutions.

Q. Did you understand whether the gentlemen whom he mentioned in that connection were members-elect to the next House?—A. I do not think that precise point was touched upon in conversation.

By Mr. KERR:

Q. How long have you been about the Capitol?—A. I came to Washington the 9th of October, 1871, and I think I was here every day of the last session, and, so far, every day during the present session.

Q. Where do you spend the most of your time, in the House or in the Senate?—A. I spend most of the time at this end of the Capitol, though, if there is anything of interest I go over to the Senate wing.

Q. Did you hear any other person spoken of as manager of that subsidy business except Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir; I think I heard of nobody who was supposed to have any authority for the company. I may have heard some other persons who were about the Capitol mentioned, but nobody who was supposed to have any influence.

WASHINGTON, February 25, 1873.

WILLIAM S. KING sworn and examined.

By Mr. KERR:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and position in the House.

—Answer. I am forty-four; I reside at Minneapolis, Minn.; I am Postmaster of the House of Representatives.

Q. How long have you held that office?—A. During the Thirty-seventh, Thirty-eighth, Fortieth, Forty-first, and, so far, the Forty-second Congresses.

Q. When were you summoned to appear before this committee?—A. I first received a summons by telegraph about fifteen or twenty minutes after leaving Wilmington, Del., on the express to New York last Friday afternoon, about 6 o'clock.

Q. Where next?—A. At the office of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, New York.

Q. Who served the summons upon you?—A. Mr. Barons, I believe his name is.

Q. Who is Mr. Barons?—A. I do not know. I understand him to be a deputy sergeant-at-arms.

Q. When did you leave for New York?—A. I left on the 1 o'clock train, Friday.

Q. What did you go to New York for?—A. I went for the purpose of closing up some business of the firm of Payson, Canda & Co., of which firm I am a member, and in relation to a contract for the construction of a division of the Northern Pacific Railroad.

Q. Who were the persons you met for the purpose of making that settlement?—A. General Cass, president of the Northern Pacific, Charles B. Wright, and Frederick Billings, of the executive committee.

Q. Where did you meet them?—A. In the office of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, New York.

Q. Had you any other business in New York besides that?—A. No, sir; no other business whatever. I have been in New York most of the time during the last 8 or 10 days, having had some little difficulty in making the settlement; I left New York Tuesday night for Washington to procure some papers in my possession here relating to a private business transaction I had with Mr. Frederick Billings.

Q. What did that private transaction relate to?—A. I wish to say that I do not know that there is a question on earth that I am not willing to answer, although it may relate to matters purely private, and that I will answer this question, if the committee so direct it, frankly, although it has no connection whatever with this investigation, or any matter of public concern of any description.

Q. Do you own any of the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Not a dollar.

Q. Did you ever own any of that stock?—A. No, sir; I believe not. I hesitate to answer the question directly, because I did once deal in Pacific Mail. I recollect that a friend advised me on one occasion to sell short, which I did, and lost quite heavily on it in consequence.

Q. Have you never held any of this stock?—A. I never did, directly or indirectly, other than I have stated. I never owned a dollar of it in my life, and this transaction of selling short, to which I have referred, and on which I lost $2,490, transpired four, five, or six years ago.

Q. Did you meet the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company while you were in New York?—A. I met Mr. Stockwell, the president.

Q. Did you meet any other officer of that company?—A. Not to my knowledge; I don't know who they are.

Q. Who else did you meet there?—A. I met Mr. Frederic Billings.

Q. Has he any connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. He is a director.

Q. Did you have a talk with him about this investigation?—A. We talked about the matter—this investigation.

Q. Did you talk about the same thing with Mr. Stockwell?—A. Very little; I saw Mr. Stockwell not more than three or five minutes.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. At Mr. Billings's room, at the Brevoort House. I think the room is 126, where Mr. Billings lives when he is in New York.

Q. And you only talked five minutes on the subject?—A. Not to exceed that. I doubt if as long.

Q. Did you meet the secretary of the company there?—A. I do not know that I did; I do not know the secretary of the company.

Q. Did you meet a Mr. Johnson?—A. I did not.

Q. Does Mr. Stockwell live at the Brevoort House?—A. I think not; I think his residence is up town somewhere.

Q. How did he come to be there?—A. I cannot tell you; I have no knowledge.

Q. Did you send any telegrams from here before you went?—A. No, sir; I sent a telegram from Baltimore, on my way, to Mr. Billings, requesting him to engage a room for me at the Brevoort House.

Q. Have you a copy of that telegram?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. Can you repeat it?—A. It was substantially, "I am in the noon train; will you engage rooms for myself and wife at the Brevoort House?"

Q. Was that all?—A. That is all I can recollect.

Q. Did you say anything in that about the Pacific Mail matter?—A. Not a word.

Q. Did you write before and ask him to meet you there?—A. I never wrote a word to any officer of that steamship company in my life.

Q. Not a word?—A. Never a word or letter.

Q. Do you know who was president of that company during the last long session of Congress?—A. I only know from chance report that Mr. Stockwell was president.

Q. Was Mr. Stockwell here during the session?—A. I am not aware that he was; I never saw him here.

Q. Who was there representing the company?—A. I understood that Mr. Richard B. Irwin was.

Q. Who is he?—A. He resides in San Francisco. He was at that time agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in San Francisco, as I understood.

Q. What agent did the company have here?—A. I do not know of any other. I think Mr. Irwin told me he was here on that business.

Q. Did they not have some local agent here whom you knew?—A. That recalls to my recollection that I think there was a Mr. Abert here, who had been in the habit of collecting moneys from the Government for them, or something of that kind.

Q. Did you not know other gentlemen here interested in that company, or in their service?—A. No, sir.

Q. You feel pretty clear on that subject, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Holman?—A. I know W. S. Holman, a member of the House.

Q. Do you know another man by that name here?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect any other.

Q. When you were talking with Richard B. Irwin, for what purpose did he tell you that he was agent of that company?—A. I cannot say about that; he told me he was here in regard to that matter.

Q. Had you known him before?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you come to know him then?—A. I think he was advised to make my acquaintance, to see if I could be of any service to him in this matter that he came here charged with.

Q. What was the object of his visit to you?—A. I presume it was to see if I could render him any assistance in the matter of legislation in which he was interested.

Q. What proposition did he make to you?—A. He made no proposition.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said they were anxious to get a subsidy, and that he thought they ought to have it.

Q. What else?—A. I cannot remember anything, except the general idea of the conversation.

Q. He did not say anything to you about desiring your services in getting the subsidy?—A. Yes; he said he wanted me to help what I could; to which I replied, as I have already stated, that I would do anything I could in that direction.

Q. Then what did he say?—A. That is all he said.

Q. Simply that he wanted you to help him; he did not say anything more?—A. Nothing more.

Q. He did not go into any details at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. He did not tell you anything about any compensation?—A. Nothing.

Q. He did not ask any advice of you?—A. No, sir; Mr. Irwin is a man, I should think, who asks the advice of nobody. He is a very intelligent gentleman.

Q. How long was your interview with him?—A. Really, I could not say. I may have talked with him on a half a dozen different occasions during the pending of the bill. He would sometimes call at my office and ask me how things looked, and what I thought of the prospects of the bill.

Q. Where is your office?—A. The post-office of the House, immediately under this room.

Q. How often do you suppose you had interviews with him?—A. I cannot say; he may have called there half a dozen times, and it may have been less, and it may have been more. It is something I did not charge my mind with.

Q. May it not have been as often as fifty times?—A. I should say it was less.

Q. As often as thirty times?—A. I should say that I saw him half a dozen times altogether, and probably not more.

Q. When you say he called during the pendency of the bill, do you mean the steamship bill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you hear any rumors, during the pendency of that bill, of money being used here by the steamship company?—A. Yes, sir; I have no doubt rumors were reported among the members of the patriotic corps who are about this Capitol.

Q. Whom do you mean by the patriotic corps?—A. I mean quite a strong body of gentlemen, who seem to have no visible means of support about the Capitol, but who are frequently here, and apparently deeply engaged in legislation.

Q. Were any of these men apparently looking after the Pacific Mail

Steamship Company?—A. I could not tell you. I heard them talking about that in conversation.

Q. Did you ever talk with any of these people on the subject of that subsidy yourself?—A. Very likely, in a general way; I cannot say that I did or that I did not. The office of the House post-office is a public one, where people are coming in and going out, and I generally talk with people who come in there.

Q. Did you ever hear rumors of any officer of the House who was interested in that subsidy, and was electioneering for it?—A. Not until I heard it lately through the press.

Q. You never heard of any officers of the House being interested in that subsidy before?—A. No, sir; except in this general talk to which I have referred.

Q. You have not told me about the general talk on that subject.—A. I refer to this debate which occurred on the floor of the House, in which the charge was made upon members of Congress that money was being used here by men who were in these lobbies, and who were in and around the Capitol, and I have heard the same kind of talk among that class of people.

Q. What kind of talk have you heard among those people?—A. I have heard them discussing this same question.

Q. Were they approving of what it was charged was being done, or denouncing it?—A. I cannot tell you that; it was a general talk about it.

Q. You have a singularly imperfect memory.—A. I do not treasure up in my memory all the talk I hear about the office; I cannot repeat to you these conversations which I hear every day upon a thousand different topics which form the subject of conversation among people who come there.

Q. You cannot state whether the conversations you heard were in favor of or against the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you do not know whether there was a lobby here for or against the bill?—A. I do not.

Q. You would quite as soon believe that they were opposing the proposition for a subsidy as that they were favoring it?—A. I have no opinion to express upon that subject.

Q. If you have any opinion at all upon that subject, will you be kind enough to express it?—A. I have none, and I cannot express any.

Q. Do you mean to say that you have been an officer during these sessions of Congress; that you have seen these men in these lobbies; have heard a great deal of talk, and yet you have no opinion as to what it was about, or whether it was in favor of or in opposition to the measure?—A. I cannot; I could as well undertake to repeat the conversation of a town meeting in an exciting election as to give you any of the conversation I heard about this matter.

Q. I am not talking about the language used, I am asking you for facts and conclusions, and I think it would be a very unusual circumstance if a gentleman was not able to repeat something that had occurred at a town meeting?—A. If he was a candidate he probably could.

Q. Whether he was a candidate or not. I ask you again if you cannot give the substance of any conversation upon the subject?—A. I cannot.

Q. Have you any distinct information that anybody lobbied against the bill?—A. I have not.

Q. And you do not know whether the people had any friends or not?—A. Not outside of the gentleman I have referred to.

Q. Outside of this single man, Richard B. Irwin, you do not know a friend the company had here?—A. Only except by general rumor.

Q. He is the only gentleman you have any knowledge of who was in favor of the measure?—A. I could not answer you more explicitly than I have.

Q. You do not know of any man who is a friend of that scheme, besides Richard B. Irwin?—A. I may know a great many as friends; I do not know any who are here.

Q. Be kind enough to explain what you mean by that answer.—A. People call upon me in my office every day in large numbers and converse upon the current topics of legislative interest; one expresses an opinion for a measure and another expresses an opinion against it, and that was the fact in regard to this Pacific Mail Company subsidy; but I cannot state who the parties were, and I do not know that, per se, there was a friend of the measure here in the interest of the company.

Q. I do not know exactly what you mean by a friend, per se, in the interest of the measure?—A. I mean a friend of the company here taking an especial interest.

Q. I ask you again to state whether you know a single person who was here as a friend of that enterprise, except Mr. Irwin.—A. I don't know how I can answer your question other than I have.

Q. You can answer it by saying yes or no.—A. Then I must say no.

Q. Are you aware that it was commonly rumored during that time that you were acting in the interest of the company?—A. I was not aware of any such rumor until within a day or two.

Q. Are you aware that it was commonly rumored that you were the hired agent of that scheme?—A. No, sir; I was not aware of that fact.

Q. Are you aware of the fact that it was commonly rumored and believed about the House that both you and Mr. Stevens on the floor of the House were in the service of that company for money?—A. No, sir; I do not know what Stevens you refer to.

Q. I refer to the librarian of the floor library.—A. No, sir; I have no knowledge whatever on that subject.

Q. Did you, during that time, or at any time, in connection with the scheme, attempt to exercise any influence in behalf of the enactment of that law?—A. I talked with some members about it in a general way.

Q. For it or against it?—A. For it.

Q. Always for it?—A. Always for it.

Q. With whom did you talk?—A. I cannot recollect; I think I talked with the Representative of my own district, General John T. Averill. I think I remember talking with both the Representatives from Minnesota.

Q. Can you say that you talked with other than these two men?—A. I cannot say; if I did it was in the way of ordinary conversation.

Q. We must assume that you are a very intelligent man, with a clear and well-defined memory?—A. That is your privilege, of course.

Q. Now, then, I ask you to state with whom you did talk among members of that Congress on that subject.—A. I have answered you to the best of my recollection.

Q. I ask you to give the names.—A. I have given you all the names I can state.

Q. Only the two Representatives from Minnesota?—A. I cannot give you any other name.

Q. Can you state whether you talked with Mr. Dawes, or not?—A. I cannot state whether I did or not.

Q. I assume that you did not talk with Mr. Dawes at all. Tell me whether you talked with Mr. Golladay, of Tennessee.—A. I have no recollection.

Q. Or Mr. Gavett, of Tennessee.—A. I do not know that I know Mr.

Gavett personally. I presume if I were to be introduced to him I should recognize him at once, but I would not now be able to call him by name.

Q. You swore a while ago that you knew of no other man who was employed in the capacity of a lobbyist during that time, or who was working as a friend of that scheme, except Mr. Irwin; now you swear that you were a friend of that scheme, and that you were talking in its interest.—A. You did not then ask me whether I was friendly to that scheme or not. You were asking me for others than myself.

Q. I have the right to put the question as I please.—A. And I to answer you in that way.

Q. Is that true?—A. That I was favoring it? Yes, sir; it is true.

Q. When did you begin to favor it, how early in the session?—A. I cannot say; I presume as early as it was introduced.

Q. Do you remember when it was introduced?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you remember when it was passed?—A. I cannot. I cannot state the details at all.

Q. Did you ever have any correspondence with Mr. Stockwell on the subject?—A. Not a syllable.

Q. Did Mr. Irwin use any money here to secure that subsidy?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did anybody use any?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you ever hear anybody charged with using any?—A. Yes, sir. As I have said, I heard the charge made on the floor by members.

Q. Never off the floor?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never heard the charge made in the lobby?—A. As I say, I have heard of these rumors growing out of the discussions on the floor; that is all.

Q. That is a very plain answer. You have, then, heard it talked about in the lobby?—A. Just as I have said in my previous answer.

Q. What was the purport of the talk you heard in the lobby about the expenditure of money?—A. The same rumors that I have stated.

Q. What amount did you hear named?—A. I never heard any amount named; these fellows never name amounts; they deal in generalities about these things.

Q. You do not know anything about any sums used?—A. I do not know of the expenditure of one dollar.

Q. How long was Mr. Irwin here?—A. I cannot say. I should think he was here most of the time during the pendency of the measure.

Q. Is your memory about private affairs as poor as it is about this matter?—A. I do not know how poor my memory may be considered about this matter.

Q. I will then ask you the direct question whether you received money for your services in behalf of this scheme.—A. Not one dollar, directly or indirectly.

Q. Did you ever expend any money for anybody yourself?—A. Not one dollar, directly or indirectly; not a single dollar.

Q. Where did you keep your bank-account?—A. I am sorry to say I have no bank-account.

A. You keep none ever?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are a wealthy man, are you not?—A. I am not certain about that; I am in comfortable circumstances.

Q. Yet you keep no bank-account whatever?—A. No, sir; if I have a note coming to me for collection, I pay it wherever it is presented. I do not think I have ever kept a bank-account in Washington, or that I have had particular occasion to.

Q. Do you know of any employes of the House using any money in the interest of the company?—A. I do not.

Q. When you were in New York, did you discuss with these officers of the company whom you met there the nature of your testimony before this committee?—A. I did not.

Q. You talked about this investigation?—A. I did, very briefly.

Q. What was the substance of your talk about it?—A. I was discussing this private business with Mr. Billings in his room, when Mr. Stockwell and another gentleman came in. Mr. Billings asked me if I knew Mr. Stockwell, to which I replied that I had met him once before. Mr. Stockwell asked me what was going on here in Washington; I said, I suppose, "You know they are going to investigate the affairs of your company." He said he did.

Q. Was that all he said?—A. No, sir; that was not all he said.

Q. What else did he say?—A. He said he was perfectly willing the company should be investigated, but that it would make him a good deal of trouble and loss in leaving his business-matters to come here.

Q. What loss?—A. I heard afterward of some rather heavy dealings of stock-operations; that they were making a fight against him; and that it would endanger him if he were to leave.

Q. What stocks was he operating in?—A. I do not know; I did not ask Mr. Stockwell about his business.

Q. Is Pacific Mail stock upon the boards now?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know anything of the price of stock during the pendency of that legislation?—A. Nothing.

Q. Did you ever talk with Mr. Billings or Mr. Irwin about that?—A. Never.

Q. What is your salary?—A. I do not know that I can tell you; I think it is $2,560; I am not certain.

Q. It is a matter of indifference to you, it seems; you do not live on that amount of salary, do you?

The WITNESS. Would it be proper for me to ask what your salary was?

Mr. KERR. No; because I am not testifying as a witness; if I were, I suppose it would.

The WITNESS. Would it be proper for me to ask if you live on your salary?

Mr. KERR. It would be proper if I were on the witness-stand; but these are not our relations just now.

The WITNESS. I know our relations are very different.

Mr. KERR. Then will you answer my direct question?

The WITNESS. What is your question?

Q. What is your salary?—A. I think it is $2,560.

Q. Is that all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you engaged in any outside business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it?—A. Railroad-contracting and farming.

Q. Do you contract to build railroads?—A. Yes, sir; I am a member of the firm of Payson, Canda & Co., who have a contract for constructing the Northern Pacific Railroad from the Red River of the North to the Missouri River. I was also a member of the Northwestern Construction Company, which built the road from the junction, fifteen miles west of Du Luth, to the Red River of the North.

Q. Who are the members of these companies?—A. The members of the Northwestern Construction Company are D. Morrison, W. H. Eastman, D. C. Shepard, William D. Washburn, William S. King, John L. Merriam, H. R. Payson, F. E. Canda, John Ross, A. McDonald, Balch, and George A. Brockett. The firm of Payson, Canda & Co., constructing the road from the Red River to the Missouri River, is composed of D. Morrison, George A. Brockett, William S. King, H. R. Payson, and F. E. Canda.

Q. Then your partners in the firm of Payson, Canda & Co. do not reside here?—A. The gentlemen who are my associates are now in New York endeavoring to arrange in regard to settlements under their contract.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. At what time did you talk with Mr. Irwin about this matter?—

A. I could not say; it was during the discussion of the measure.

Q. The matter was pending for some little time; do you remember when you had your first interview with him?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. What was the matter you talked about?—A. It was, as I recollect, the question of a double subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the Japan and China service.

Q. While that was pending in the House you had this conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you talked about it before that?—A. I think I had; and if the committee will pardon me, I can explain my motive. I am largely interested in the Northern Pacific Railroad as a stockholder. That company, of course, felt a great interest in the increase of trade which the increase of mail-steamship service would bring to the Pacific coast. For that reason I felt great interest and anxiety for the success of the measure, and that was the only motive I had.

Q. Do you remember that Mr. Averill, a member of your State, was opposed to it at first?—A. No, sir; I do not think he was.

Q. What other western members did you talk with?—A. I do not know that I talked with anybody. Your question does recall to me the fact that I talked with Mr. Burchard one day about it, and I will tell you how the conversation came up. There was a sharp little passage at arms in the House, in which some patriotic sentiment was uttered, and I think I said, "That is the talk; I like to hear an American congressman talk that way." If I recollect, Mr. Burchard came up about that time, and commenced sailing into the measure pretty vigorously.

Q. Did you confine your patriotic expression of sentiment to those who favored the measure?—A. That is hardly a question I could answer. It was one of those little things that I recall in the conversation.

Q. I have no recollection of that conversation. Did you talk with other members from Illinois or Ohio?—A. I cannot say whether I did or not. If the subject was mentioned in their presence, I certainly talked about it.

Q. It was not these patriotic ideas so much as the Northern Pacific Railroad that interested you?—A. It was both; I believe in both.

Q. Was this while the measure was pending in the House, and during the first discussion there?—A. I think it was; and that recalls a fact I had forgotten—that the measure had different discussions in the House. I remember now that it was once defeated in the House, put on in the Senate, and finally passed in the House as a Senate amendment. I cannot say whether it was during the first or last discussion, or both, that these conversations occurred.

Q. You do not know any other persons with whom you conversed?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say you never talked with any other members of the House on the subject except those you named?—A. I did not mean to be understood as saying that. I say I have no recollection of having a talk upon this question distinct enough to justify me in swearing that I did or did not. I may have talked among the members if they mentioned the subject; I would most certainly have talked about it, for I am pretty free in my conversation.

Q. You were asked if you had any conversation with my colleague, Mr. Garrett, on that subject; did you have a conversation with any others of my colleagues from Tennessee?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you ever see a list of the members of the House who could be relied upon to vote for the measure?—A. I never did.

Q. You say you had half a dozen conversations with Mr. Irwin. Was that before the measure finally passed, or afterwards?—A. I do not recollect that I ever saw Mr. Irwin after the measure passed until I met him in San Francisco last fall.

Q. You say he applied to you to assist him?—A. Yes, sir; he asked me if I could do anything to aid in the passage of the measure, and said he would be glad if I could. That is not a very uncommon thing. I am asked the same thing very often.

Q. Was there any offer to pay you for your services?—A. No, sir. I was known to be friendly to this thing from the first. I was very anxious to see the subsidy granted, and there was no necessity to pay me for my services.

Q. You saw Mr. Irwin in San Francisco; does he reside there?—A. He now resides there, as I understand.

Q. You do not know any other person who was in the employ of the company to present the case properly and legitimately to the House?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know, or have you any reason to believe, that any money was paid, directly or indirectly, by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or by any agent of that company, to any member of either House of Congress?—A. I have no knowledge, directly or indirectly, that any member of the House or any member of the Senate ever received from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or any agent of that company, or any person authorized or unauthorized to represent the company, one dollar.

Q. Do you know, or have you any reason to believe, that any money was paid, directly or indirectly, by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or by any agent of that company, to any member of either House of Congress?—A. I have no such knowledge, and I have no reason to believe it, save the fact that the House has ordered this investigation.

Q. Do you believe it?—A. I do not.

Q. You say, then, with the responsibility that attaches to your present position, that you do not believe that any money passed from the company, or any of its agents, directly or indirectly, to any member of either House of Congress?—A. I do say that I have no reason to believe that any such transaction occurred, and I do not believe it. I do not believe this Congress is made up of cut-throats and robbers.

Q. Did you see, at any time about April or May last, in or around the Capitol, large-sized bills in the possession of any person; bills of the denomination of $1,000, for instance?—A. I did not, unless I may have seen some in the Sergeant-at-Arms' room. Persons very frequently ask me if I cannot get money changed for them; and I frequently send a $50 note or a $100 note to the Sergeant-at-Arms, to get it changed; but I do not know that I ever saw a $1,000 bill in the Capitol; I have no recollection that I did.

Q. They are very unusual, are they?—A. They are with me.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 26, 1873.

H. H. SMITH sworn and examined.

By Mr. MAYNARD:

Question. Please state your age, residence, and occupation.—Answer. I am thirty-one; I am clerk of the Committee of Claims of the House; I reside at 923 G street, Washington.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Bridgman, correspondent of the Boston Advertiser?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Some days ago he sent a communication to that paper to the effect that the southern republicans were implicated, dishonorably and corruptly, in the legislation in regard to the Pacific Mail Company of last session; he referred to you as his sole informer, and repeated a conversation he had with you. Please give us your recollection of that conversation.—A. Mr. Bridgman and other newspaper correspondents are in the habit of coming frequently to my room for items of information. Several days ago, on coming there, he asked me what I knew about Pacific Mail. I replied that I had heard various rumors in regard to it. The statement had been made in my own room, where members are in the habit of coming frequently, that a member from Louisiana had made a proposition to control certain votes upon that subsidy; that for $50,000 he would undertake to influence certain votes. Mr. Bridgman seemed to be in possession of the same rumor, which he stated to me substantially in the same way. I know it was current along Newspaper Row, on Fourteenth street, and that I heard it that night in two or three of the offices as a common subject of conversation.

Q. Please state all the conversation you had with him on this occasion.—A. That is all in regard to Pacific Mail. The other portion of the conversation was looking to action in the next Congress. I stated that in riding up to the Capitol in a car with a southern republican, whom I did not name, in a conversation about the organization of the next Congress, he said the southern republicans had not been fairly dealt with in this Congress, and that they would doubtless be disposed to take some action to remedy that in the organization of the next Congress.

Q. Did you tell him you had drawn up a resolution on that subject?—A. No, sir. I had copied a resolution and I had also copied a private letter for a gentleman which he had received regarding the action of a delegation of a Southern State, looking to action purely of a State character. I draughted no resolution. I did copy one, which was designed to be shown about among southern members of Congress and to be presented at a republican caucus preliminary to the organization of the Forty-third Congress.

Q. Did that relate to any investigation now going on in the House?—A. Not at all. I stated to Mr. Bridgman that I knew nothing on that subject. I had, however, heard a conversation between seven or eight members of the House, in the committee-room, regarding the Pacific Mail subsidy, in which the proposition of the member to whom I have referred seemed to be pretty well understood and to be news to no one.

Q. Whom had he made the proposition to?—A. To the president of the company. I think it was Mr. Garrison. I do not remember the name.

Q. Who was the member making the proposition?—A. Mr. J. H. Sypher.

Q. Who gave you the information that he had proposed to influence 14 votes for $50,000?—A. I first heard it along in the "Row." I think probably I heard it first in the office of the Chicago Tribune.

Q. Who spoke of it in the conversation you heard in the committee-room?—A. I am not sure whether Governor Blair or Judge Ambler first mentioned the matter; Mr. Bingham of Ohio, Mr. Foster of Ohio, and others. I think at least seven or eight were present.

Q. Can you give us the name of any party who can furnish information touching that matter?—A. I only remember a conversation with Mr. Cowlam, who was a clerk for General Butler, who came to me with a letter about a matter pending before our committee. He spoke about the Pacific Mail as a matter likely to be brought up in the next Congress. I heard that there was a dispatch sent to the New York Herald representing that if these gentlemen escaped Scylla they might run upon Charybdis.

Q. What gentlemen might run upon Charybdis?—A. No name was stated.

Q. What did you say about copying a resolution to be circulated among southern republican members of Congress?—A. The dispatch of Mr. Bridgman, to which you refer, speaks of a resolution to be introduced into the House in reference to the Credit Mobilier matter. He did not get any information from me in regard to that. Our conversation referred to the senatorial election in Alabama, and the next Congress.

Q. Who prepared the resolution you copied to be shown to southern members?—A. That was to be shown to a delegation in the Alabama legislature in regard to the senatorial election in that State.

Q. I am now inquiring of you about one which was to be presented to the republican caucus.—A. I copied nothing relating to the next Congress. What I stated on that subject was a conversation I had with a southern member in a street-car on the way to the Capitol.

Q. What southern member was that?—A. Clinton L. Cobb. He stated that the interests of the South had not been fairly represented in this Congress, upon important committees. No point was made on the subject of chairmanships, but he said it was due to the South that they should be represented in the important committees of the House, and that some action would be taken by the southern republicans in the organization of the next Congress to set that right.

Q. Did Mr. Cobb say anything about any action to be taken in regard to gentlemen supposed to be connected with the Credit Mobilier?—A. No, sir; nothing was said upon that subject.

Q. Was Mr. Cobb connected with the Pacific Mail?—A. No, sir; not that I ever heard of.

Q. Have you ever heard anything affecting his purity of character?—A. No, sir; on the contrary all I have ever heard about him was in his favor.

Q. All you know, then, was this casual conversation in which he expressed the opinion that southern gentlemen had not been placed upon committees so as to give the South its due influence in matters of legislation?—A. That was all, and Mr. Bridgman seemed to be perfectly familiar with that.

Q. How did Mr. Bridgman connect that with the Sypher transaction, and with his statement about the Credit Mobilier; they seemed to be all mixed together in his dispatch?—A. I cannot answer that; it did not grow out of our conversation.

Q. Do you know what members were referred to whose votes Mr. Sypher could influence?—A. No, sir; I have heard all sorts of rumors in the newspapers.

Q. Who were understood to be the agents about the Capitol of the Pacific Mail?—A. I have heard of a Mr. Irwin. I do not know anything about him or even know him.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. King, the Postmaster of the House, mentioned in that connection?—A. Only from the statement I saw in the Star the other day, that he had been before this committee. I had heard of his being connected with the Northern Pacific Railroad, and I understood that that road was more or less interested in the results of the Pacific Mail service. I think that statement was made to me by Mr. Cowlam, who was an employé of the post-office of the House, under Mr. King.

Q. What is Mr. Cowlam's post-office business?—A. I do not know, except I think that he is an employé in the post-office.

Q. And he is a clerk for General Butler?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He is paid as a messenger in the post-office?—A. I think so.

Q. Did you hear the names of no members whose votes Mr. Sypher was to influence mentioned?—A. I merely heard the rumor mentioned that the proposition had been made. I think it was a matter of general conversation in the committee-room where these members were talking. They were broken up into groups, and were conversing about various matters. I think Governor Blair made the statement at one time as having heard that the rumor was current that such a proposition had been made, and that this Mr. Garrison would probably testify that the proposition had in fact been made to him by Mr. Sypher.

Q. Have you stated all you know bearing upon the subject of this investigation?—A. Yes, sir; and I really know nothing beyond the merest rumor. I stated nothing that Mr. Bridgman did not seem to be perfectly familiar with in the conversation I had with him, and in fact he gave me more information than I did him.

Q. I understand you to deny that you copied any resolution to be shown to southern members of the House, in reference to the Credit Mobilier matter, or that you made any such statement to Mr. Bridgman?—A. I did not so state. The resolution I copied was to be presented at a private caucus of southern republicans in the Alabama legislature, and which was not to be used here in Washington at all. Mr. Cobb's statement was that a resolution was to be introduced into the caucus of the republican members of Congress for Speaker. He did not have that resolution with him; it was simply a statement that he made to me in the car.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. When did this conversation occur with Mr. Bridgman?—A. It must have been about the middle of last week.

Q. When did this conversation between members of Congress in your committee-room occur?—A. I think it was the morning previous.

Q. It was during this month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At what time was it that you heard the reports in Newspaper Row on this subject?—A. I think the latter part of the previous week.

Q. Had you heard such rumors before during the present session?—A. They have been a matter of discussion between newspaper men, more or less.

Q. You heard the rumor stated in the committee-room by Governor Blair?—A. I think the rumor was mentioned by some one else, and that Governor Blair stated he had heard such a rumor before.

Q. You also had heard such a rumor before?—A. In Newspaper Row, as I stated.

Q. And you heard no names mentioned whom Mr. Sypher was to influence?—A. I think I heard he was to influence the Louisiana delegation.

By Mr. MAYNARD:

Q. Do you understand that it is the duty of a newspaper correspondent to pick up every rumor afloat and send it out as an absolute verity?

—A. There seems to be a kind of rivalry as to what shall be sent. I have written items of a few sentences about some ordinary matter and have seen it grow into a dispatch of some fifteen or twenty lines, containing the most exaggerated statements; but that applies only to certain newspapers, whose correspondents here seem to think it necessary to have only a grain of wheat to a bushel of chaff.

WASHINGTON, February 28, 1873.

CORNELIUS K. GARRISON sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN;

Question. State your business.—Answer. My business is steamshiping.

Q. Are you interested in any particular steamship-lines?—A. Yes, sir; I am interested in two or three; I am interested in the United States and Brazil Steamship Line, and I am interested directly in a line of steamers running from New York to Havana.

Q. Were you here at the last session of Congress seeking a subsidy for the Brazil Line?—A. I was.

Q. Was it at the same time the Pacific Mail Steamship Line were seeking a subsidy for their line?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Pacific Mail succeeded in getting theirs, I believe, and you failed to get yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who represented the Pacific Mail here?—A. Mr. Irwin appeared to have the management of affairs.

Q. Did you know anybody immediately connected with the company who was here in their behalf?—A. Mr. Stockwell, the president, was down here for a day or two.

Q. Who represented your company here?—A. I represented it myself.

Q. Were any others aiding Mr. Irwin and Mr. Stockwell, that you know of?—A. Only from public rumor—not of my own knowledge.

Q. Did your subsidy pass the Senate?—A. Yes, sir; but it failed in the House.

Q. Was yours defeated before or after the Pacific Mail passed?—A. Immediately after—the next vote.

Q. Do you remember the majority by which theirs was carried?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect precisely. It was not very large.

Q. Do you remember the majority by which yours was defeated?—A. I think it was defeated by about forty votes.

Q. Of course, there must have been those who supported theirs and voted against yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything that you know of that accounts for that change in votes?—A. I could only account for it at the time by supposing that, my being a novice in Washington legislation, there were means of reaching members of Congress that I did not know of or could not afford to adopt.

Q. Do you mean to say by that that you had not the art of presenting the merits of your claims so fully as those who represented theirs?—

A. I think I had the knowledge and presented it, in a proper business form, as understandingly as the other was presented.

Q. You then attributed the change to some other influence?—A. To some other influence that I did not use or did not possess.

Q. To what do you allude as the other influence?—A. I have always supposed that large sums of money were used, but I know nothing of it.

Q. What led you to that supposition?—A. That my bill had, in my judgment, more merits than the other, although I failed and they succeeded. They already had a large subsidy, and I had a small one.

Q. Did you hear anything here that led to that conclusion?—A. Only that there was a general talk outside that it was necessary for me to use large sums of money.

Q. Who told you that? Give us the whole history of it.—A. What I mean by that is, that the men who are running around the hotels—men who profess to be lobbyists, more or less—said to me, “You do not use money; you do not use the necessary material; you cannot get your bill through unless you pay for it.”

Q. Who did you hear making use of such observations?—A. People I found around the hotels.

Q. Did you find them anywhere except at the hotels when you visited Washington?—A. No.

Q. They did not grace the Capitol by their presence?—A. I find these people everywhere. I find them in New York, and I find them here.

Q. When you came to the Capitol on your legitimate business, did you meet them here in the Capitol?—A. I found that class of people—yes, sir.

Q. Were they in the lobbies of the House?—A. I saw them almost everywhere.

Q. When the Pacific Mail subsidy was pending, did you see them here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Could you give us the names of any of them?—A. There was a man by the name of Cammack, who studiously tried to impress me with the absolute necessity there was of using money, and that was the general talk among these people. I could not state particular conversations.

Q. Was it something invisible you felt in the air?—A. Yes, sir; I was told by these people that my bill would not go through unless I paid for it. That was the general talk.

Q. Was it desired that you should treat certain parties in the same manner that it was claimed the Pacific Mail Company had treated them?—A. I wanted to get my bill in ahead of the Pacific Mail. Mr. Irwin represented to me that, if their bill passed first, whatever votes they got would be given for my subsidy.

Q. Were you introduced by any of these lobbyists to anybody?—A. I might have been.

Q. Did any of them introduce you to any members of Congress?—A. Perhaps they did. I cannot name them.

Q. Were you introduced to any member of Congress by one of these men and shown into a room alone?—A. Yes, sir; I was.

Q. Will you state the circumstances?—A. After the Pacific Mail bill had passed, of course I was anxious to have mine go through. Mr. McKay (a brother of Hon. Donald McKay) came to me and said I had better try to get the southern delegation pledged for me, and wanted to introduce me to somebody who he said he thought controlled a number of members. I met the gentleman referred to, but there was nothing done.

Q. Were you and he shown to a room alone?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was the room?—A. It was on the upper floor of the House, one of the committee-rooms; I do not recollect which one.

Q. What passed between you and him?—A. He said he was going to vote for me at any rate, but that there were twenty or thirty members, more or less, who would go together on this subject. My remark was something like this: that if the object of this meeting was dollars and cents, I would not pay a single shilling.

Q. What did he say?—A. That was all he said, "I shall vote for you under any circumstances."

Q. What was said that led you to make that remark?—A. Mr. McKay, who introduced me, was simply a friend, who wanted my bill to go through. He said there were a number of these members voting together, and I had understood from outside talk that money was being used in regard to the other matter.

Q. Did he say anything of the locality of these twenty or thirty members who were going to vote together?—A. I understood they were southern members. I did not go into particulars.

Q. Did he state that they would go as he did, if they could be persuaded?—A. That was what he pretended to me; but I stopped the conversation right there, as I said.

Q. What happened before you stopped the conversation? State it as exactly as you can.—A. I have given you the substance of it. I supposed that some consideration was wanted; but I do not know.

Q. Was any suggestion of that sort made?—A. No.

Q. Did he intimate what was the purpose of the interview?—A. No; I did not give him an opportunity. I stopped right there.

Q. Who was it?—A. Mr. Sypher.

Q. At any time, did any member of Congress follow you to the depot when you were about to return?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of it.

Q. I want to ask you again to state in detail just the words that were used by both parties in this conversation as nearly as you can.—A. I have said that this gentleman (Mr. McKay) was very friendly toward me. I believe I had served him in days gone by, and I am satisfied that he had no motive in the world except to serve me. He said to me that it had been noised all around that there had been large sums of money paid, and he said he wanted to introduce me to a certain member of Congress. I replied to him that if the purpose was to pledge me or to get money out of me, I wanted him to understand distinctly that I would not pay one single dollar. He said, "It will do you no harm to meet this man." I said, "Certainly, I am not afraid to meet a member of Congress." So I met him in one of the rooms up-stairs, in this building.

Q. Did he go out and get him?—A. I believe he did. I was up there, or I went up there. I am not sure who was first in the room.

Q. How soon did he come?—A. I am not quite certain, as I said, whether he was before me or I before him.

By Mr. MAYNARD:

Q. Who else was there?—A. Nobody; he and I were alone.

Q. Mr. McKay was not present?—A. No, sir. Mr. Sypher remarked, when we came in, that my bill would probably be defeated, although he should vote for it. I anticipated any further conversation, and said to Mr. Sypher that if this meeting was for the purpose of inducing me to pay any member of Congress, the matter might drop right where it was.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that before or after he had intimated that there were twenty members who would vote as he did?—A. It was after. This was my reply.

Q. When you and Mr. Sypher were together in the room, was there any remark made that you could make your own arrangement, or anything of that sort?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember the first name of this Mr. McKay?—A. His name is Nathaniel McKay.

Q. I ask you again if you cannot state the exact words used, word for word, in that conversation.—A. There were not a dozen words spoken after we got into the room. I supposed, although I cannot state any reason for it, that he had a motive in bringing me there, and it was for that reason I did not wish to go on with the conversation.

Q. Did he give you the names of those who would vote with him?—A. He gave me the names, but I cannot recollect a single one.

Q. About how many?—A. I think twenty-three was the number.

Q. He called over the names?—A. I believe he did.

By Mr. MAYNARD:

Q. Do you remember whether my name was on the list?—A. I have not the pleasure of your acquaintance, and therefore cannot state.

Q. Was the name of Horace Maynard given?—A. No, sir; it certainly was not.

Q. Was that of Mr. Beck?—A. I cannot remember the names, but I can say distinctly that Mr. Beck's name was not there.

Q. When you said to him you would not pay a dollar, what did he say in reply?—A. Not a thing; the meeting broke up at once. He said he should vote for me at any rate, and I believe the record shows that he did.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When you said to him you would not use money, did he protest that no such thing was intended?—A. No; his reply was, "I shall vote for you;" and that was all he said.

Q. That was the amount of his indignation?—A. Yes, sir. At the time I suppose Mr. Sypher was anxious to have my bill go through. I had supposed, from the representations which had been made to me, that I should get 140 votes, but I found almost as soon as they commenced calling the roll that I was defeated; and, without waiting for the vote to be announced, I went right down, packed my trunk, and started for New York.

Q. How long before the vote was taken did this interview occur?—A. About an hour.

Q. Do you remember whether the men whose names Mr. Sypher gave you had voted for the passage of the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. I think so; I am not positive. The fact is, I had become so disgusted that when I left the Capitol that day I tried to forget what had occurred here. I am free to say that I believe Mr. Sypher wanted my bill passed.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Was Mr. McKay working for the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. No, sir; he was on his own business here; his interest in this matter was purely one of friendship to me.

Q. Was there any conversation with any other member of Congress, or with any person in regard to any other member of Congress, looking to the payment of money?—A. Never. So far as money was concerned, no member of Congress ever asked me for a dollar, nor did I ever pay a member of Congress a dollar, or anybody for the use of any member of Congress, directly or indirectly.

Q. Do you know whether any one was here working for the Pacific Mail except Mr. Irwin, or did you ever hear how much money was paid by them?—A. No, sir; I never heard. They succeeded and I failed. They went away immediately and left me out in the cold.

Q. I would like to have you give the names of some of these lobbyists, or place the committee in the way of ascertaining what member of Congress, if any, money was paid to?—A. I do not think that they paid any to anybody; I think they were after the money themselves. I do not believe there was the number of members bought and sold that has been charged. I think it frequently happens that these men who profess to pay money to members of Congress put the money in their own pockets.

Q. Did any employes of the House ever approach you?—A. None, that I know of.

Q. Were there any threats made by any persons that they would oppose your bill unless money was used?—A. Not for the purpose of getting money out of me, that I know of. I came here determined not to use any money, and if I had been disposed to do it I would have been afraid. I have lived too long to engage in that sort of business. So far as Mr. Sypher is concerned, I do not want the inference to be made from my evidence that he came to me after money. He never asked me for a dollar, and never intimated that he wanted a dollar for himself or anybody else.

By Mr. MAYNARD:

Q. Do you know anything about stock-dealings in New York—whether there has been any movement within the last few days in Pacific Mail stock?—A. Yes, sir; there has been a downward tendency of that stock. I think it has declined from about 103 to about 59.

Q. Do you know whether this investigation has had any effect in producing its decline?—A. I do not know. I have not owned a dollar of Pacific Mail stock since I went out of the directory.

Q. Had you seen Mr. Sypher before you met him on this occasion?—A. I may have met him, but not on steamship-business. I do not think I would have known him by sight.

Q. You have seen him since, so that you know it was Mr. Sypher?—A. I have never seen him since.

WASHINGTON, March 1, 1873.

J. H. SYPHER, member of the United States House of Representatives from the State of Louisiana, sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. You have heard read the testimony of C. K. Garrison. If you desire to make any statement in regard to that, the committee will be glad to hear you.—Answer. I am obliged to the committee for giving me an opportunity to make a statement. Some time during the last session Mr. McKay asked me to be introduced to Mr. Garrison, to which I assented. Some time afterward Mr. Garrison met me on the stairway, and we walked together to my committee-room, the Pacific Railroad Committee, where we sat down and talked a short time.

Q. Who were with you?—A. I think no one was present. I supported quite actively the bill to establish a line of steamers from New Orleans to the Mexican ports. The friends of our bill conferred with the friends of the Pacific Mail bill and the advocates of Garrison's Brazilian bill in the House, and tried to get them to join their force with ours. The delegation from my State was united in the support of our bill, which had already passed the Senate and was on the Speaker's table. I may have said to Mr. Garrison that if their friends would vote for our bill that we would vote for their bill. That is the substance of the conversation I had with Mr. Garrison. Not a dollar was mentioned by me to him, or by him to me, and no money proposition of any kind or character whatever was made by either of us; nor could he draw any such inference from any remark made by me.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Did he make a remark to you that if this interview had any reference to dollars and cents, he would have nothing to say to you?—A. He made no such remark. He certainly had no occasion to make any such remark.

Q. Did he make any remark involving that idea in substance?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go up to the committee-room together, or did one of you go there to meet the other?—A. We went there together. I did not go there to meet him, and I do not think that he went there especially to meet me. We met on the stairway, as I was going to my committee-room.

By Mr. MAYNARD:

Q. You have heard the testimony of H. H. Smith read, in which he refers to you. Do you desire to say anything in regard to that?—A. I will state to the committee that it is false. No proposition in money or any other consideration was ever made by me, at any time during the pendency of these bills, to any person whatsoever, or by any person whatsoever to me.

Q. The statement is that you made a proposition to Mr. Garrison.—A. That is false, and the proposition itself is absurd.

Q. And you desire your answer to cover both sides, that no proposition was made to you, and that no such proposition was made by you?—A. I intended my answer to cover both, most emphatically.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you any knowledge of any money being used for the passage of the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. None whatever. I have heard rumors to that effect, but I have no knowledge on the subject.

Q. Was there anything in the conversation of these men, or in the appearance of matters, that led you to believe money had been paid or promised to any members?—A. Nothing.

Q. Do you know who had charge of the Pacific Mail Steamship bill?—A. I do not.

Q. Who in the House had charge of it?—A. I do not even know that.

Q. Do you know a Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir; I never saw the gentleman.

Q. Do you know Mr. King, the postmaster of the House?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he seem to have any interest in the matter?—A. No special interest that I observed.

Q. Did he say anything to you on the subject?—A. I do not remember that he did.

Q. Do you know Paul Stevens, librarian of the House Library?—A. I know him, but I never heard him mentioned in that connection.

Q. Did there seem to be an absence of any such influence at work about the corridors of the Capitol, or about the lobbies?—A. I could answer that only by repeating the statement made by some member on the floor of the House, that there was a lobby on those measures.

Q. I am asking you now for what you yourself observed.—A. I did not observe any particular lobby at that time.

Q. Did you observe anything in particular about the passages of the House about that time?—A. I do not remember that I did.

By Mr. MAYNARD:

Q. You and your delegation made a very strong effort at the last session to get an appropriation for the steam-line from New Orleans to Vera Cruz?—A. Yes, sir; we did for it everything we could to secure its passage. The bill is now on the Speaker's table, and it has more merit in it than any steamship bill ever presented to Congress. The South and West are especially interested in it.

Q. Do you state that under oath?—A. I think I can safely state, that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, that bill has greater merit than any such bill ever brought before Congress.

Q. I understand you to say that the interview between you and Mr. Garrison related solely to the question whether the friends of the Vera Cruz and the Brazilian Line should unite their interest and act harmoniously?—A. That was the sole object of the interview, as I understood it.

Q. Something of that kind was mentioned by you or by Mr. Garrison?—A. I do not remember which. I think I mentioned the fact to Mr. Garrison that I was interested in our own bill first, and that it would be better for the friends of these bills to act together in the House.

Q. Was that an incidental conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. McKay introduce you the day you had this interview?—A. I think it was several days previous.

Q. Was the meeting that day with Mr. Garrison brought about by Mr. McKay, or was it an accidental meeting?—A. I think it was accidental, at least so far as I know.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 11, 1874.

RUSSELL SAGE sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. Have you had any personal or official connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—Answer. Yes.

Q. State what it has been.—A. I was elected a director of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in May, 1873, and was re-elected in May, 1874. I was elected president of the company on the resignation of Captain Bradbury, about a year since.

Q. Were you a director of the company at the time that Congress granted an additional subsidy to it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you a stockholder at that time?—A. I cannot answer positively, but my impression is that I was not. I was a stockholder some time before I was elected a director.

Q. Are you aware that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had any agent or business-representative at Washington during the session of Congress at which that subsidy was granted?—A. No, sir; I know nothing about it except what I saw in the newspapers. I had no personal knowledge on the subject.

Q. Have you examined the books of the company, or caused an examination of them to be made for the year 1872, so as to ascertain the expenditures of the company during that year?—A. There were various reports, or partial reports, made as to certain expenditures in that year, but I do not recollect of any definite examination being made for that year. Indeed, the accounts were somewhat confused. When I went in as a director in 1873, our book-keeper found it very difficult to get an accurate abstract of the accounts from the books, because they were so very far behind. We employed an expert to give us an abstract. That expert was Mr. Higgins, who was said to be a very competent man, and who did a like business for the city.

Q. Did you see the result of that examination?—A. Yes, sir; it was a general result—nothing in detail. We wanted to get at the bottom, and start upon a basis that could be relied upon. I found that a great many of the accounts had been sent over from the office at San Francisco, and that in the press and hurry of business they had not been examined up and had not been checked off; there had been an accumulation of that business, which had been very much neglected.

Q. Do you know of any item in that account that had any relation to the expenditures made in Washington, or on account of the services of any agent at Washington?—A. All that I know as to that was that there were on the books checks made payable to the San Francisco agency; I never knew what they were for except by general rumor; they were supposed to have been connected with some of Mr. Stockwell's and Mr. Irwin's operations, but we were never able to know what they were. There was such a general discussion of the subject in the press that we had a consultation with our counsel, Mr. Pierrepont, as to our legal right to proceed against Mr. Irwin, who had left for Europe, as we were advised; and we directed Mr. Pierrepont to commence a suit against him for the purpose of compelling him to account for those sums that were charged to the San Francisco agency.

Q. State more particularly what were the sums charged, and under what nominal account.—A. I am unable to give the exact sums charged to that account, because I never took any memorandum of them. As I say, it was a matter of consultation between the directors and Mr. Pierrepont, about the time that the matter was before this committee. The thing had been discussed pretty freely in the papers of the day.

Q. Can you not approximate the amount so charged?—A. I cannot; but perhaps I can answer all that you desire to get at, and all that I know, in a very few words. On a further examination of those charges, so far as they could be explained to us by our clerks, and as they were represented by our general manager, Mr. Hatch, we found checks of the company which had been made payable to the order of Mr. Irwin, (and which are now, and were when I resigned, in possession of the company,) amounting, I think, to $750,000. When Mr. Irwin came to this country last August, he called upon me a day or two before we took the excursion to Newport. He came in with his lawyer, and spoke to the secretary, Mr. Johnson, whom he had known a long time, and Mr. Johnson presented him to me. I was very busy at the time. Irwin said that he understood we wanted to see him, and that he had come to this country at great inconvenience, and almost at the risk of his life, as he had been thrown from his carriage, and had injured his head in the fall, and that he was there to answer any questions that we might put to him touching his affairs and his accounts. He seemed to be quite earnest and prompt, alleging that some of the clerks in the office had made charges to that account which ought not to have been made there. He said that he had had a conversation with Mr. Scott, one of the directors, and the vice-president of the company, who was then in Europe, but who has recently returned. Irwin said that he was there to make any explanation that we desired, by the advice of his counsel; and he introduced me to his counsel. I told him I was just on the point of leaving, under a previous engagement, which I could not well forego, and I asked him if he could not name a day, when I should be very happy to sit down with him and hear his explanation with regard to any matter that affected the company. I did not know then that he had been in the country fifteen or twenty days. He said that he was going to sail again for Europe the following Saturday. I told him that I was very sorry that I was under an engagement to go on the excursion to Newport; that we had invited our guests, and of course it could not be postponed, and that I did not know that I should be back before Friday night or Saturday morning. He answered very promptly, and said, "Here is my card, (handing it to me,) so that you may know where to call upon me; I shall be found at that place." The place was the residence of D. R. Martin, of Englewood, whose son-in-law I believe Irwin is. He then asked me if there had been any developments since Mr. Scott had gone to Europe; I said that there had been some in regard to the purchase of fire-extinguishers at Chicago, to a very large amount, which purchase was not authorized by the company, and was in violation of its by-laws. Irwin then left, and I directed Mr. Johnson to make a memorandum of that conversation, as we might want to refer to it.

Q. Did Mr. Johnson make that memorandum?—A. I think he did. This was Mr. Theodore T. Johnson, who was then secretary of the company, and who was a very competent, upright man. I reflected a few hours upon the matter, and I felt it my duty from what had been stated in this interview, and from the tone of it, to direct Irwin's arrest. I consulted with Mr. Hatch, the managing director, who barely overheard the last part of the conversation. I did not want Mr. Hatch to take any part in it, for he is a very violent man and uses very violent expressions sometimes. I also spoke with other members of the company, and they concurred in my opinion, and said that it was our duty to ourselves, as Irwin was in the country, to have him arrested. We had directed Mr. Pierrepont to commence proceedings against Irwin before, but I thought it my duty then to order his arrest. Mr. Pierrepont was absent, however, I think, at the White Mountains, and I at once sent for our attorney, Mr. Henry Bennett, and directed him to bring a suit against Irwin on these checks. He prepared the papers, and got some deputy sheriffs and detectives, and he told me on my return from the excursion on Saturday morning that it took him about three days before he could arrest Irwin, and that he finally caught him coming down from Englewood and served the papers upon him. Bennett informed me that Irwin was then very penitent, and proposed to make some explanations which would be valuable, and to make me an apology if he had said anything unbecoming to me, or that might be considered as threatening. Irwin said that if he had done so he was willing to make an apology in writing or any way else. I did not want an apology from him; I merely wanted to do my duty as executive officer of the company. This occurred some time in August last—I think about the 29th. Irwin did not sail on the Saturday, as he said he would, nor did I see anything more of him. Of course his counsel had frequent interviews with Mr. Bennett, as Mr. Bennett reported to me, and he asked for time to put in his answer. I consented that the time might be given, because I was anxious to hear from Mr. Scott, who had telegraphed me to delay action until he came home. He had written me previously that he had some explanations which Irwin had made to him in Europe, and which he thought rather tended to mitigate the impressions which we had formed against Irwin. Of course I wanted to do full justice to Irwin, as I would to anybody else, and I gave my assent to have the time for answer extended. I believe that he never has put in an answer till this time. The suit is still pending.

Q. In the mean time Mr. Scott has arrived here?—A. He has.

Q. Has Mr. Scott stated to you since his return any of the facts to which he alluded as having been explained to him by Irwin?—A. He has not given me any particulars. I only had a very brief conversation with him the night before last. He stated that Irwin had called upon him on his second return to Europe and spoken of his arrest, and said that he was very sorry, and that he proposed to make any apology if he or his client had been rude. His counsel, Mr. Chapman, had called on me last spring and said that if I did not retract something that appeared in the Tribune, in the shape of an interview with me, reflecting on him or on his client, he would sue the Tribune or sue me for libel. He wanted that I should acknowledge or deny whether I had inspired the article. I heard him through and told him that I did not propose either to admit or to deny anything reported by any irresponsible reporter; that I did not want to do Mr. Irwin any injustice; that, if he was entirely innocent, he had of course nothing to fear, and that if he was not so, it was our duty as officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to call him to account for those large sums.

Q. Has Mr. Irwin at any time given any explanation to you touching those checks or any amount of money placed in his hands?—A. Not the slightest in the world.

Q. Has Mr. Irwin been in Europe most of the time since 1872?—A. I understood him, in that conversation, to say that he left for Europe in October, 1873.

Q. He only returned last August?—A. He might have returned, I think, in July; for I learned afterward that he had been in the country some twenty days, and had been in San Francisco.

Q. During his absence in Europe, had he a business-office or an agent in New York?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Since his return, has he been engaged in any business?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Where is he now?—A. I do not know. I have only heard that he is in New York.

Q. Has he, to your knowledge, called on the company since that first occasion in August last?—A. No, sir; only the interviews which I spoke of with our counsel when we were absent in Newport.

Q. Do you know where he is to be found at this particular time?—A. No, sir; I have not seen him since that interview in August.

Q. Has there been any explanation furnished to the company from San Francisco or elsewhere as to the use of any sum of money in connection with the subsidy?—A. No, sir; not any.

Q. Have you any knowledge whatever of the expenditure of any sums at Washington authorized by the company?—A. Not a dollar.

Q. What was the form of the checks to which you refer?—A. They were simply the company's checks, in various sums, given to Richard B. Irwin or order.

Q. Without stating the object?—A. Without stating the object. They were simple checks, and Mr. Hatch informed me that those checks had been paid by the bank.

Q. Do you know by whom they were indorsed?—A. I think they were simply indorsed by Irwin, and that the money was drawn by him.

Q. On what bank were those checks drawn?—A. I think on the Mechanics' Banking-Association of New York, where the company kept its general account.

Q. By what officers of your company were those checks signed?—A. By the treasurer, who, I think, was then Henry Smith. He has since resigned.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. I think somewhere in New Jersey. His health failed him, and he resigned about a year since.

Q. Were the checks countersigned by any other officer than the treasurer?—A. My recollection is that they were signed by the vice-president, Mr. F. G. W. Bellows. He is now the secretary of the Panama Railroad Company, which has its office in the same building.

Q. Did Bellows, in his conversation, indicate that he had any knowledge of the object of the checks?—A. No, sir; I think not. I think he acted under the direction of the then president, Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Was it customary for that officer to sign checks as directed by the president?—A. I do not say that. While I was president, I signed all checks myself. I did not delegate that power to anybody.

Q. Were there any other expenditures through Mr. Irwin or any other person, the object of which was questionable, except those checks amounting in the aggregate to $750,000?—A. Nothing; there were some bills presented during my administration by some of the lobby-men here, who claimed that they had been employed by Mr. Irwin to assist him here as attorneys or in some other way.

Q. Can you mention the names of those persons to whom you refer as presenting bills of that character?—A. One man who presented a bill was named Corwin. I do not recollect his first name.

Q. Do you recollect whether he spelled his name Corwin or Corwine?—A. I do not. He is a rather stout, short gentleman. The company refused to recognize his claim. I want to state distinctly here that since my connection with the company there never has been a dollar paid to my knowledge, directly or indirectly, for any services of the kind here.

Q. Can you give the name of any person connected with the company, or outside of the company, who, so far as you know, can inform us what the object of giving those checks was, or whether any money was actually expended in the connection of obtaining the additional subsidy?—A. I cannot. My object in allowing time to Mr. Irwin to file his answer was in order that Mr. Scott might get this information. I had a talk with Mr. Scott the night before last. His object in telegraphing me was merely to keep on friendly relations with Irwin, in order to learn from him the particulars as to how that money was expended.

Q. During your whole connection with the company, have you any knowledge or information as to any member of Congress or officer of either House to whom any money was paid in connection with this subsidy?—A. No, sir; I have not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. When did you first become a stockholder in the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I think in the winter of 1873.

Q. Were you a stockholder at the time the subsidy was granted by Congress on the 1st of June, 1872?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of being a stockholder till 1873.

Q. You recollect hearing a good deal of scandal at the time, growing out of this subsidy?—A. Yes, sir; in the press.

Q. This investigation was opened because Mr. Le Grand Lockwood appeared before this committee in February, 1873, and, in answer to questions by Mr. Kerr, stated that he was a member of the stock-exchange in New York, and that it was currently reported that about $1,000,000 were expended in obtaining this subsidy through Congress. Had you any knowledge relative to this matter before you became a stockholder in the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir. Those things are generally so grossly exaggerated that I do not pay much attention to them.

Q. Since that time, have you caused any investigation to be made into the truth of that statement beyond what you have related to the committee?—A. No, sir, except that the matter was discussed with the counsel of the company, Mr. Pierrepont, with the view, if we had any legal rights, to take measures to enforce them.

Q. What was the impression of your board of directors as to what those checks were given to Irwin for?—A. There was a general impression that there had been an improper expenditure or withholding of the funds which should be accounted for to the company.

Q. Do you recollect about the date of those checks to Irwin?—A. My recollection is that they were in April or May, 1872.

Q. This subsidy passed through Congress on the last day of May, 1872, and was approved on the 1st of June, 1872.—A. Then the checks must have been in April or May, 1872.

Q. Do you recollect about the amount of those checks?—A. About $750,000.

Q. How many checks composed that aggregate?—A. There were several checks for different sums—$50,000, $75,000, and $100,000. There was one large check.

Q. How large was the largest amount?—A. My recollection is that it was some $400,000.

Q. In whose possession are those checks now?—A. The last that I heard of them they were in the possession of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Was the suit against Irwin based on them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were the checks filed in court in that suit?—A. I do not think they were filed in court. I have talked with Mr. Bennett about the order of the suit, and I felt entirely confident of recovering against Irwin and making him account for the proceeds of those checks. He explained to me his interpretation of the law, and he thought it to be a very clear case when we got to the merits of it.

Q. What official position did Mr. Irwin hold in the company prior to 1872, and when those checks were given?—A. As I recollect his connection, he was one of the agents of the company at San Francisco in 1872. The agents of the company there are Irwin and Eldridge.

Q. Was he a director of the company?—A. No, sir; never to my knowledge. Indeed, I had very little knowledge of the affairs of the company till I went in as a director.

Q. Was he sent by the company to Washington during the pendency of that application for a subsidy?—A. Not to my knowledge. I do not know anything about it.

Q. Did he ever attempt to give you any explanation of those checks?—A. No, sir; none other than I have stated. Indeed, I never saw him before or since that first interview.

Q. Do you recollect whether he had gone to Europe before the 20th February, 1873, when you came into the directorship?—A. He told me at that interview that he went to Europe, I think, in October. His lawyer published a card, after the interviewer's report, which appeared in the Tribune. I suppose the lawyer wrote the card, and in it he said that he had openly engaged his passage to sail for Europe in a steamer in October, 1873.

Q. Do you recollect when this committee first commenced the investigation of this subject in February, 1873?—A. Yes, I heard there was an investigation here.

Q. Did you know where Mr. Irwin was then?—A. I did not know where he was. I know nothing about his habits.

Q. Do you not recollect that at the time of this investigation in 1873 Irwin was not to be found?—A. I do not recollect. I was not connected with the company, and never had any connection with it till late in May, 1873.

Q. Has your company, since you have been a member of it, or at any time, had no developments made to it as to what was done with that money by Irwin?—A. Not the slightest beyond what I have stated here. We were hoping to get this information from Mr. Irwin when Mr. Scott returned.

Q. Do you recollect whether at the time of this subsidy Mr. Stockwell, the then president of the company, was in Washington?—A. No, I did not know Mr. Stockwell. I never spoke a word with him till after I was elected a director.

Q. Did you ever inquire from Mr. Bellows for what purpose he gave those checks to Mr. Irwin?—A. I had a conversation with him at the time of our hunting up these checks, but he never gave any particular explanation of them, except that Mr. Stockwell had told him to give those checks to Mr. Irwin.

Q. Did you ask Mr. Bellows at the time why Mr. Stockwell gave checks for such a large amount to the agent of the company at San Francisco? Did it not strike you as very curious that he should do so?—A. It struck me that they were very large sums, though the operations of the company are very large in San Francisco, and large sums of money are used there.

Q. Did Mr. Bellows ever tell you what his understanding was as to whether those checks, amounting to $750,000, were to be used here or at San Francisco?—A. No, I never asked him. Mr. Bellows said that he was a mere clerk to do the bidding of others. Mr. Irwin appeared to be very vindictive against Mr. Bellows, and said that he was a mere clerk, and would do the bidding of others to keep his place.

Q. What was the cause of the severe language on the part of Irwin against Bellows?—A. Irwin seemed to be boiling over with venom against Bellows. I do not know that I ever witnessed such an exhibition of anger. He did not speak to him, though he was as near to him as I am to you while he was having this conversation with myself, in the presence of his lawyer, in August last. I thought it a remarkable exhibition of vindictiveness and venom.

Q. Did you never call Irwin's attention to the fact that he was charged with squandering large sums of money?—A. No, sir; I had not time then. As I stated, I was waiting for the developments which might be made by the vice-president, Mr. Scott, who communicated with me that he had had one interview with Irwin, and had got considerable information from him, and hoped to get more. Mr. Scott subsequently telegraphed to me, after Irwin returned to Europe, to delay compelling him to put in his answer till his (Mr. Scott's) return.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Smith as to the purpose of those checks?—A. No, sir; I do not recollect that I have seen Mr. Smith since those checks came to my knowledge. He seldom came into the city. He is in poor health, living somewhere in New Jersey.

Q. Have you talked with Mr. Scott as to what those checks were given for?—A. I talked with Mr. Scott the night before last, and he told me that he had had quite a full talk with Mr. Irwin, and that Mr. Irwin promised, when he came over here, to give us a good deal of information. He made the same promise to Mr. Bennett, after we had commenced the suit against him, that if we would discontinue the suit he would give information.

Q. In the course of your conversation with Mr. Scott, did he tell you what Irwin said he had done with the money?—A. No, sir; Mr. Scott left the impression on my mind that he had not got the information from Irwin, but was in hopes to get it.

Q. Do you recollect the amount of the bill which was sent in by Corwine?—A. It appears to me that he claimed that Irwin had promised to pay him $5,000. He applied afterward to get his bill back, but I declined to give it. His bill was in the possession of the company when I left the office.

Q. From whom can we get copies of those checks that were given to Irwin?—A. From Mr. Hatch, the managing director and executive officer of the company.

Q. Can this bill of Corwine's be had from him?—A. Yes; from him, or from the secretary of the company.

Q. You say that there were other bills besides Corwine's sent in, but that you do not know the names of the parties?—A. I do not; I think they were more verbal than written ones, but Corwine made a written application.

Q. Do you recollect the amount that was demanded in any of those bills?—A. No, sir; the amounts were not large.

Q. They were generally by lobbyists, who asserted that they had aided to get the subsidy through?—A. They claimed that they had been employed to prepare papers, &c. This Mr. Corwine made out a regular bill for preparing papers and getting up statistics, &c.

Q. Do you recollect what papers were necessary to be prepared during the pendency of that subsidy measure?—A. No, sir; I haven't the slightest idea.

Q. To whom were those papers to be submitted?—A. I know nothing about it.

Q. No money has been paid, however, since then to any of those people?—A. Not a dollar. I studiously refused to pay even a ten-cent piece since I have been connected with the company.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you trace all the money expended by the company during the time within which this subsidy measure was before Congress, except those checks to Irwin?—A. I do not think I can.

Q. Are there other items or charges for expenditures of money which the company is unable to trace, besides those checks to Irwin?—A. No, sir; I do not think there are in connection with this thing.

Q. In connection with anything covering this period?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Then, if the expenditures under these checks were traced, the company should show us what had been done with all its money in the period covering that time?—A. I think it could in the main; but, as I stated in the first part of my examination, the accounts of the company are very voluminous. We had one book-keeper, who resigned because he could not strike a balance to suit him. The accounts and vouchers from the San Francisco office had been delayed so long that there were boxes full of them which had not been checked off for years gone by, so that it was very difficult to strike a balance. When I became connected with the company a new set of books were opened, because we wanted to get down to hard-pan, and to know that our administration was straight.

Q. So far as you know, can the company, if it pleases, trace for us all of its expenditures, except under those checks?—A. I think it can; I do not think there is any indisposition to give the committee any information.

Q. The expenditures under these checks is a mystery to the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it is the only mystery hanging over the company's expenditures?—A. Yes, sir; that is the only thing that we were attempting to ferret out.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Sherrell, now of this city, and formerly of New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had he anything to do with these expenditures?—A. Not to my knowledge; I never knew that he had anything to do with the company or with this matter.

Q. He has no connection whatever with this question?—A. Not the slightest. I have known Mr. Sherrell for ten or fifteen years, and I never knew that he had the slightest connection with it.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. What is your regular business?—A. I am vice-president of the Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad Company.

Q. Has your business been more in connection with railroads than with steamships?—A. Yes, sir; I never had anything to do with steamships until I got in with this thing, unfortunately.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. What was your position in the company at the time of this subsidy?—A. I had no connection whatever with it.

Q. Then all the knowledge you have of it comes from your being an officer in the company since that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you never instituted an investigation as to these enormous expenditures?—A. Certainly. We have had consultations with the counsel of the company, and a suit has been brought against Mr. Irwin to recover the money.

Q. In the investigation of these details, did you discover how any of the money had been expended?—A. Not as to a dollar; these checks were unexplained. That is the very thing we have been trying to get from Mr. Irwin.

Q. The expenditure of this $750,000 has never been explained?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. Under the by-laws of the company, who is authorized to sign checks?—A. The president of the company. I have been told by the directors who served under Mr. Stockwell's administration, that he was the "board and all hands." Mr. Bellows was a vice-president and drew the checks. Mr. Stockwell, it appears, did not sign the checks. Mr. Bellows did the business of the office and mere clerical business as vice-president, and Mr. Stockwell made loans just as he pleased.

Q. Then the authority to draw money is lodged with the president?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Mr. Stockwell is not insane now, is he?—A. No, sir; he has been in Europe since last April.

Q. Can you suggest any method by which the committee may be able to discover the details of this large expenditure?—A. I cannot. We felt it a duty which we owed to the stockholders to ferret this thing out, and we exerted our best efforts to do so.

Q. Has your company incurred any expenditures recently with reference to any question arising between the company and the Government here as to the construction to be put upon the law respecting the additional subsidy of $500,000?—A. No, sir; not that I know of—not during my presidency.

By Mr. E. H. ROBERTS:

Q. You stated that the company has not expended a dollar in that direction. Has the company, during your administration, made any arrangement for spending money here in connection with the subsidy?—

A. Yes, sir; we made a conditional contract with Mr. John Roach that if the subsidy was secured the company would need additional steamers, and otherwise would not need them. The option expired on the 2d of November, and was not renewed, because the thing was not consummated.

Q. Then there is no arrangement now existing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Excepting these arrangements with Mr. Roach, was there any arrangement for the payment of money, or any other consideration in connection with the subsidy?—A. Not a dollar, to my knowledge. We have been very careful, indeed, to avoid anything of the kind since I have been with the company.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Where is the San Francisco agency located?—A. In San Francisco.

Q. Do Mr. Irwin and Mr. Eldredge have their office in San Francisco?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where were those checks executed?—A. In New York.

Q. Were they forwarded to San Francisco?—A. No, sir; I did not so understand it. They were delivered to Mr. Irwin in New York.

Q. What was the annual amount of the transactions at the San Francisco agency?—A. They were very large, running into millions. The pay-rolls there, I think, are about $60,000 a month. Many times in the working of the office large remittances have to be sent from New York to San Francisco, and occasionally there are remittances this way. That depends upon the amount of through freight from China and Japan that would be collected in New York and shipped by the way of the isthmus.

Q. All the accounts that were examined have been satisfactory, except as to these checks?—A. Yes, sir; we had no suspicion of any other expenditure irregularly, except the one to which I have referred.

Q. If I understand you, these checks were all drawn within a few weeks of each other?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Were there any other months where checks to that amount had to be sent to San Francisco for any business whatever?—A. Not that I recollect.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Are these checks so situated that you can send us a copy of them?—A. I have no means of getting at them; there is no difficulty, however, about the committee getting at them.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Was there any memorandum or note made of those verbal applications for pay by these lobbyists?—A. No, sir. This other man, Corwine, made a written application, and I thought it a good thing to keep his bill.

Q. But the verbal applications were not kept?—A. No, sir. I never paid any attention to them.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 12, 1874.

RUFUS HATCH sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. State what official connection you have held with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and during what period of time.—Answer. I was elected a director in May, 1873—I think on the 27th or 29th of the month.

Q. And continued so until when?—A. Until the end of that year. I was re-elected last May, and I am still a director.

Q. Have you, during that period, been what is termed managing director of the company?—A. Not all the time. I took the management of the company in November, 1873.

Q. Have you, as such officer, made an examination, or caused one to be made, of the accounts of the company for previous years?—A. To a certain extent I have. I have not examined them in detail myself, but I have examined them to a certain extent.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of those accounts for the year 1872, either by report of their condition from an officer of the company, or from your personal inspection?—A. I have, by report from our book-keepers to me.

Q. Is there any part of the accounts of that company, of its disbursements, which has not been explained to the satisfaction of the company?—A. Yes, sir; I think there are some of the disbursements not explained.

Q. What are those unexplained accounts?—A. They are known as the San Francisco account. That account has not been explained to the satisfaction of the officers of the company.

Q. What disbursements do those unexplained accounts relate to?—A. To money paid to Irwin, according to the check-book.

Q. In what way does the check-book show that this money was paid to Irwin?—A. There are several checks drawn payable to his order.

Q. What amount in the total?—A. These unexplained checks amount to $750,000.

Q. How many checks are included within that sum?—A. Five or six. I have got the checks in my pocket.

(The checks were produced and put in evidence. They are as follows:)

Q. Are those the only checks, the object of the disbursement of which is not satisfactorily explained in the San Francisco accounts?—A. I think they are; they are the only ones that I have any knowledge of.

Q. Are there any other disbursements, or accounts of the company which have relation to any other object of disbursement than the regular customary business of the company?—A. No, sir; not that I have ever found out.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Irwin was in New York at the time that those checks were drawn?—A. I do not.

Q. Is there any memorandum on the check-book, or in any other account of which you have any knowledge, relating to those several checks, or to the amount named in them?—A. Nothing on the check-book.

Q. Is there any entry or memorandum on any of the other books or papers of the company, within your knowledge, relating to those sums of money or to those checks of which you have now given the description?—A. I think there are entries on our books. When these checks came into my possession last summer, I think I discovered that there were entries prior to them on the books of the company.

Q. Prior to the date of those checks?—A. Yes.

Q. What do those entries indicate?—A. They indicate very large operations in Wall street.

Q. And you think that those entries relating to those stock-operations have relation to those items which you have now given?—Yes, sir; I have no knowledge of the fact.

Q. State the reasons that bring you to that conclusion.—A. There are very large entries of purchases and sales of stock, or rather of stock-loans to stock-brokers.

Q. State what you mean by stock-loans.—A. Loans made to stock-brokers and bankers.

Q. Of the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir; I mean money—money is loaned to stock-brokers and bankers.

Q. On what security?—A. I did not see the envelopes. I have no knowledge of the business prior to May, 1873.

Q. What were the dates of those loans?—A. They dated back for several months before these checks, and dated about that time.

Q. They were dated about May, 1872, and for several months prior?—

A. Yes, sir, and perhaps later than that—for months prior and months subsequent.

Q. Please to state what leads you to believe that these checks relate to those stock-loans.—A. I did not take any memorandum from the books, but, if my memory serves me, there are entries on our books such as I have stated.

Q. Entries of stock-loans?—A. Of moneys loaned to stock-brokers.

Q. That hardly gives us a reason for your connecting these checks with them. Is there any fact within your knowledge which leads you to think that these checks were a part of those loans, or were given in payment of those loans, or had any relation to them?—A. I have no memorandum from the books prior to 1873, when I was elected a director, and I know of no transaction of the company prior to that, only from what I have seen on the books. I found those checks there about two or three months ago, and in the dispatch which I received last night I was requested to bring them here, and I brought them.

Q. Can you state any fact which justifies the conclusion that those checks have relation to those loans or were a part of the loans?—A. I think that those checks went to pay the loans. That is my impression. I distinctly state that I do not know of any business of the company prior to May or June, 1873.

Q. To whom were those loans made?—A. I cannot recollect. They were made to a large number of brokers, whose names I cannot give now.

Q. State, if you know, whether the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had an agent at Washington during the pendency of the bill granting an additional subsidy to that company.—A. I do not, only from what I have heard reported in general reports.

Q. Did you come into the possession of any facts during your connection with the company which indicate that it had any agent prior to that time at Washington?—A. No, sir; there is nothing on our books to that effect, to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know from conversation among the officers of the company whether the company had any person representing it at Washington during the pendency of that subsidy-bill?—A. I only know from what I have read in the newspapers and from general conversation; but there is nothing on the books, to my knowledge, which indicates that the company had any agent here.

Q. I do not speak now of the contents of the books, but whether you have any knowledge of the matter from your connection with the administration of the company, or from conversation with the officers of the company.—A. I do not know of my own knowledge that the company had any agent at Washington.

Q. Have you had any conversation with Mr. Irwin on the subject?—A. I never spoke to him in my life.

Q. What was his relation to the company?—A. He was the agent of the company at San Francisco.

Q. During what period of time?—A. I cannot tell that; several years, I think.

Q. Is there anything on the books of the company indicating that the money which was derived from those checks went to San Francisco?—A. I cannot tell you without examining the books of the company more thoroughly.

Q. Who has the books covering that period of time?—A. The books are in the possession of the book-keeper, and of the treasurer, Mr. Neiler.

Q. Have you heard it stated by any officer of the company, who was an officer during the year 1872, that any money of the company was disbursed in connection with that subsidy-bill?—A. I have not; not a dollar.

Q. Have you heard it stated by any person as of his own knowledge?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you do not know of any person being employed to represent the company at Washington in connection with that bill?—A. Not of my own knowledge. I only know from general report that Mr. Irwin, our agent at San Francisco, came on to Washington at that time.

Q. What efforts has the company made to ascertain the object of the disbursement of the money raised from those checks?—A. The company commenced suit against Mr. Irwin last winter; and when he came here from Europe in August last, process was served upon him. That was something which I had nothing to do with. Mr. Sage had charge of it.

Q. Have you or any other officer of the company, within your knowledge, called on this agent for an explanation of his disbursement?—A. Mr. Sage, I think, had some conversation with him.

Q. Has any account of this disbursement ever been given to the company within your knowledge?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. What books are they which contain the entries of loans to stock-brokers which you have associated with those checks?—A. I cannot recollect whether it is a loan-book or a stock-book. I suppose the entries are on the ledger. I never kept the books of the company; I have only looked into them to learn about the business, and particularly such business as should come under my knowledge, so as to make myself familiar with it as manager of the company.

Q. Then you cannot name the particular books in which those entries are?—A. I presume they would be the journal, and the ledger, and the general cash-book.

Q. State, generally, if there is any fact within your knowledge, whatever, that indicates the disbursement of any of this money, directly or indirectly, in aiding the passage of the subsidy bill through Congress?—A. I have not any knowledge, directly or indirectly, that one dollar of this money was spent here. All I know about it is from what I have seen in the newspapers and from general talk.

Q. And, so far as you know, every other item of expenditure of the company has been made for the usual and customary objects of disbursement and for the carrying on of the business of the company, except those checks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There is no mystery about any other part of the accounts of the company?—A. Not a particle. There is no mystery about them in any shape whatever. The committee is surely welcome to a full inspection of the books since I took charge.

Q. Have you ever seen, or do you know of, any entry in the books in favor of Mr. Irwin on account of any expenditure made by him at Washington, from personal observation or otherwise?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any such payment being made to him?—A. I think that, on looking over the accounts of the San Francisco agency, I found a check of $29,500, which was paid to him some six months afterward, about the time that he left the company. I think it said it was for expenses, but it did not say whether they were at Washington or anywhere else. That is the only piece of paper that I know of which there is not a proper voucher for. There was a voucher with it, but the voucher was not satisfactory when I looked over it. That is all I can say about it.

Q. You do not know what the voucher specified?—A. I do not think it said anything about Washington. I think it said that it was for expenses or disbursements.

Q. Can you tell us about the date?—A. November, 1872. That was the time when Irwin left the company; when he was settling up his accounts. That check was brought to my attention by the book-keeper, and the voucher that accompanied it was not satisfactory to me. It was Irwin's own voucher.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Do you know the date of the passage of the subsidy by the House of Representatives?—A. I do not; I think it was in June, 1872.

Q. The bill was approved by the President on the 1st of June. Do you think that the date of its passage by the House was not somewhere about the 24th of May?—A. I have not the slightest idea. It might have been in February, for aught I know. I was not connected with the company then, and was not in Washington.

Q. You observe that each one of those checks is dated the 24th of May, 1872?—A. Yes, sir; I notice it.

Q. Was Irwin at that time the company's agent at San Francisco?—A. Yes; and, if my memory serves me right, he continued in that capacity until November, 1872, or perhaps a month or two later.

Q. Why should that amount of money be put into Mr. Irwin's hands on that day in connection with any stock-loans?—A. I do not know that it was put in his hands. I do not know anything more about it than you do.

Q. But can you give any reason why Irwin should have been trusted with $750,000 in one day in any connection with stock-loans?—A. I do not give any reason for it; I haven't any reason to give; I do not know what was done with the money.

Q. If you have no reason to give, why did you say that you thought the money was used in that way?—A. I said that it might possibly have been used in that way.

Q. It might possibly have been thrown in the fire. Is not that just as possible as that it would be used by the San Francisco agent of the company in a way with which he had no connection? He had nothing to do with the stock-loans; that was attended to by the president of the company; and was not Richard B. Irwin in Washington at that time?—A. I do not know where he was.

Q. I think they were all indorsed by him on the same day, and that they were paid on the same day in New York.—A. The checks do not show when they were paid.

Q. Mr. Irwin had no power to make loans for the company at that date, had he?—A. It seems that he indorsed the checks, but for what purpose I do not know.

Q. But did he occupy any such position in the company as would be enabling him to use the funds of the company in making loans to stock-brokers?—A. The indorsement may have been at a later date.

Q. That is not the question. Did Irwin occupy such a relation to the company, or such a position in it, as authorized him to draw the money of the company out of bank and to make loans to stock-brokers?—A. Any one can make a loan to a stock-broker, or any one else, if he has the money.

Q. Did Irwin occupy such a position in the company as authorized him to draw the money of the company out of its bank to loan to stock-brokers?—A. I cannot say what position he did occupy. I was not in the company at the time. I understood that he was the agent of the company at San Francisco.

Q. Had he, as such agent, any power or authority to draw money of the company out of the bank of New York to make loans to stock-brokers?—A. It does not seem that he did draw money out for that purpose.

Q. Did his position as agent at San Francisco give him power or authority over the money of the company in the bank at New York, so as to enable him to draw it out and loan it to stock-brokers?—A. I do not know anything about his power prior to 1873.

Q. Has any agent of the company at San Francisco, or elsewhere, power, under your management, to draw the money of the company out of bank and to loan it to anybody?—A. I think he has in San Francisco, and I think he does it.

Q. I mean the money of the company in bank in New York. Has any agent of the company the right to draw it out of the bank and loan it?—A. No, sir; no one has power to draw a dollar out of the bank in New York, except the president.

Q. Have you any reason to believe or suppose that in May, 1872, Mr. Irwin had any such power or authority?—A. I do not know what power he had. He evidently had a good deal of power, or else he could not have got checks for $750,000 in one day payable to his order.

Q. It is very obvious that he had a good deal of power of some sort; but you have said that you had reason to believe that that $750,000 was used to pay loans to stock-brokers.—A. I guess I did not say that. I said that it might have been used in Wall street.

Q. Why throw in that "might have been," unless you supposed that it was so used?—A. I was asked what was done with the money, and I said that it might have been used in that way.

Q. Why did you say that there were entries on the books which indicated that the money was used for stock-loans?—A. My impression is that there are such entries on the books.

Q. What are those entries?—A. I have brought here all the copies of the entries that I was asked to bring.

Q. What reason have you for supposing that Mr. Irwin had authority to draw the money of the company out of bank?—A. Evidently he had some authority, or else he could not have had checks to that amount payable to his order.

Q. Is it not more probable that the fact was, as has been charged, that the money was drawn by him for some corrupt purpose?—A. I do not know what he drew the money for, any more than you do.

Q. But you do know that the books of the company do not show that the money was used for any legitimate purpose?—A. You can get hold of the books by sending for them.

Q. Is not that the fact?—A. I have expressed my opinion of the purpose for which the money was used, and you can get the books and see for yourselves. I have not the slightest idea what the money was used for.

Q. Why is it that the company will allow such a large sum of money to remain unaccounted for from the 24th of May, 1872, up to August, 1874?—A. We took steps, and did investigate this matter in 1873, very soon after we took charge of the affairs of the company.

Q. Was there not a resolution pending before this committee as early as February, 1873, to investigate the conduct of your company, of Mr. Irwin and others, in the disbursement of this very money; and did you know of that fact?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where were you at that time?—A. I was in New York, attending to my business.

Q. And you did not know that there was a committee of Congress investigating the charge of illegal expenditures of money in obtaining the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where was Mr. Irwin in February, 1873?—A. I think he was in Europe.

Q. Were you not advised by the company that this committee was endeavoring to obtain his testimony in February, 1873, at the close of the last Congress?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recollect whether Mr. Stockwell was temporarily insane at that time, or pretended to be insane?—A. I believe that he was sick at that time.

Q. Was he sick, or did he only pretend to be sick?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did he ever boast that he had fooled his doctor and had fooled the committee in that matter?—A. Not to me.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him at that time about his connection with the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is Mr. Stockwell now?—A. I think he is in Europe.

Q. What is he doing there?—A. I really cannot tell. You can telegraph over and see.

Q. I wish to know whether you have any knowledge of what he is doing.—A. I have not the slightest idea. As I stated at the start, I have no knowledge of the expenditure of this money, and had nothing to do with the company till the last of May, 1873.

Q. Has the question of the subsidy of this money ever been the subject of conversation in your board of directors?—A. Yes, sir; it has been, and we have sued Mr. Irwin to make him account for the money.

Q. You sued him in August, 1874?—A. We should have commenced the suit before that if we could have found him, but he went to Europe a year ago last summer, and only returned last summer. When he came here we had the paper served upon him.

Q. But he remained in the employment of the company from the 24th of May, 1872, till the November following?—A. I think he did.

Q. And during all that time no question was asked him, so far as you know, as to what he had done with his money, and no investigation was had about it?—A. Not to my knowledge. I was not connected with the company at the time, and cannot tell what questions were asked him.

Q. Is there anything in the books of the company that indicates that from May, 1872, until Irwin left the service of the company, any inquiry was made about this money?—A. I do not know. The books would not be likely to show that fact. I do not know what transpired in the company up to May, 1873.

Q. Was anything developed in any of the investigations of the board of directors, showing that any steps had been taken to make Irwin account for this money during the time that he remained in the service of the company?—A. I do not know anything that took place in the company up to May, 1873.

Q. In your consultations, was anything developed showing that before that time anything was done to recover this money?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was there anything developed which indicated that any movement was made to investigate the matter until this committee of Congress undertook it in February, 1873?—A. I repeat, that I do not know of anything connected with the company prior to May, 1873.

Q. Do you recollect that Mr. Stockwell, the president of the company, was here during the pendency of this subsidy measure?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear him say that he was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever talk with Mr. Irwin about it?—A. I never spoke to him about it; I never saw him but once; that was the day when he was in the office in August of this year, and I only saw him then as he was about leaving; I would not know him now if I should see him.

Q. Did you hear the conversation between Irwin and Sage on that occasion?—A. I only heard one remark, just as Irwin was leaving the office.

Q. Give us the benefit of that.—A. I saw Mr. Sage and those two gentlemen talking together by the secretary's desk; my desk was not very far from it; I was busy at the time at my desk; Mr. Sage seemed to be talking quite in earnest. I heard him say something about fire-extinguishers. I knew something about some bills for fire-extinguishers, and I looked up at Mr. Irwin, (as it proved to be.) He left in about a minute. That was the only remark I heard. After he left I was told that that was Mr. Irwin. I heard Mr. Sage make this remark, that he was going to have that thing investigated, and would go to the bottom of it; and that there was another thing he was going to have investigated, and that was the purchase of a large lot of fire-extinguishers. That ended the conversation.

Q. Did not Mr. Irwin, before he left the employment of the company, settle up all his San Francisco accounts?—A. Not on our books. I do not think that the account is balanced on our books; but anything of that kind is all open to investigation; we have no secret to withhold from the committee.

Q. Is there anything on your books which indicates that that $750,000 had any connection with the San Francisco business?—A. I think there are entries in that connection, but I do not want to make an affidavit about that without seeing the books again.

Q. This account of $750,000 remains wholly unsettled up to this time, and nothing appears on the books of the company to indicate what became of any part of it?—A. I am not certain of that; I am not certain that the account of the San Francisco agency is overdrawn $750,000; my impression is that it is about $600,000.

Q. Then there is a $29,000 check which has not been settled?—A. That check was paid to Mr. Irwin, but the voucher was not satisfactory.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. When Mr. Stockwell went out of the presidency of the company he also went out of the board of directors, did he?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He did not remain as director?—A. No, sir.

Q. What other changes were made in the management of the company at that time?—A. Captain Bradbury was elected president at that time, and I think there was only one director who remained. That was Mr. James D. Smith. All the other directors were new.

Q. What was the practice of the company in the disbursement of money; had the company an executive committee for that purpose?—A. I think there was an executive committee then.

Q. Who was chairman of that executive committee?—A. I cannot tell you. I have not looked back to see.

Q. Could there have been any disbursement made of any character on account of the company at that time without the knowledge of the executive committee or its chairman?—A. That I cannot tell you.

Q. Is there any record by which we can ascertain who was chairman of the executive committee at that time?—A. The books will show.

Q. Is there any person now in the board of directors who was a director at that time?—A. I think that Mr. James D. Smith was a director at that time. He is the only member of the board at that time who continues a member of the board.

Q. Does your company disburse large sums of money without having vouchers in detail?—A. Not since I have had any connection with the company. I cannot tell you prior to that.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wilson, cashier of the American Exchange Bank?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Irwin kept his account in that bank?—A. I do not.

Q. Will your books be able to give this committee any satisfactory explanation of this money so far as information has been given by Mr. Irwin, or in his answer to the suit?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. When your new board of directors came in and you examined as to the true condition of the company, did you not have a committee to investigate very closely as to its assets and liabilities?—A. We had a committee later—not immediately then. Captain Bradbury and Mr. Holman, the former cashier of the Purveyor of San Francisco, then took charge of the company, and remained in charge till October or November.

Q. In that examination and in the balancing of the new accounts on the books, how were those claims against Irwin classified?—A. I think we opened new books, and that claim remained in an unsettled condition.

Q. You must have classed it either as an asset or as a claim, or set it in some character on your books?—A. I do not think that it has ever been changed. We did not alter it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say that the books of the company disclose large stock-loans about that time?—A. Large loans to bankers and brokers.

Q. You called them stock-loans, and you explained them as being loans to brokers and bankers, and you imagine that those checks to Irwin had some connection with the loans?—A. I do not know anything about that. I was asked if there was any way by which they could be accounted for, and I suggested that way.

Q. When the company loaned to a stock-broker or banker, the stock-broker or banker became debtor to the company to the amount loaned, did he not?—A. Yes.

Q. Explain to me how a check of the company would pay a debt due to the company.—A. You may come and get the books and see.

Q. I do not know, but you may explain it.—A. I do not know where the money from those checks went to.

Q. Will you not explain that process?—A. If that money should be taken to a broker's office, and the broker should come back and pay his loan, it might be done in that way.

Q. Would that change the relation of the company to the broker at all?—A. The broker would have paid off his loan.

Q. Would the broker be thereby relieved of his debt to the company if he paid it off with the money of the company?—A. That is a question.

Q. Would the money derived from the checks of the company not be the company's money?—A. Not when in the hands of a third party.

Q. Well, will you explain how it is? I always supposed that a check of the company paid its debt to somebody else; but this seems to be a process by which the company pays the debt due to it by its own checks. Tell me just what the process is.—A. I do not know that it was done.

Q. How could it be done? Just explain it.—A. If Mr. Irwin should take those checks and go and draw the money on them and deposit that money in a broker's office for himself or for anybody else, that broker would then be able to pay back his loan to the company, would he not?

Q. You know better than I do.—A. He would if he had the money.

Q. Was Mr. Irwin the sole agent of the company at San Francisco?—

A. I think he was at that time. I think Captain Eldridge had retired at that time, but I am not positive about that.

Q. Do you know how the checks for the payment of the San Francisco current accounts were drawn at that time?—A. I do not. My impression is that Captain Eldridge had retired some time previous, but I am not positive.

Q. To recur to this method, which is new to me, would the debt of somebody else to the company be extinguished, or only transferred, by the operation you refer to?—A. I should say that the company was lending Mr. Irwin money.

Q. To pay stock-loans with?—A. I do not know that.

Q. If your supposition is correct, the process which you have described would be simply the change of the debt due by a stock-broker to the company into a debt of Mr. Irwin to the company?—A. That is it.

Q. And Mr. Irwin would be debtor to the company to the same amount which, before the check was drawn, some stock-broker owed to the company?—A. Yes; I do not say that that is the case; but I was asked if there was any possibility that that money could have been used in any other way than the way suggested here, and I answered as far as my ability and knowledge enabled me to do.

Q. Can you tell whether those large loans to stock-brokers bear date earlier than those checks do?—A. I have answered that question before.

Q. Perhaps you can answer it again.—A. I think there were, before and since the date of the checks, large transactions of Mr. Stockwell in the stock of the company.

Q. Do they appear to be transactions of Mr. Stockwell?—A. There were very large transactions of Mr. Stockwell in the stock of the company, and there were very large loans of the money of the company to different bankers and brokers.

Q. Are those loans balanced now?—A. I think they are; I cannot say that.

Q. Are they substantially all balanced?—A. I know nothing of the affairs of the company prior to May, 1873.

Q. Do you not know its financial condition?—A. I know it now.

Q. How did you ascertain it?—A. By taking what was found and going on from that time since.

Q. Will you tell me whether those stock-operations were in Mr. Stockwell's name or not?—A. My impression is that a great many of them were.

Q. Did they stand in anybody's else name?—A. That I cannot tell you. My impression is that there were a great many names.

Q. Officers of the company?—A. No, I do not think so.

Q. Connected with the company in any shape?—A. No, sir; bankers and brokers.

Q. Were the accounts between Mr. Stockwell and brokers and bankers, or between the company and bankers and brokers?—A. Between Mr. Stockwell and bankers and brokers.

Q. Is there anything connecting Mr. Irwin's name in any of those transactions?—A. That I cannot tell you.

Q. In trying to trace this large indebtedness of Mr. Irwin to the company, did it occur to you to look and see if his name was connected in any way with those stock-transactions?—A. We took the original checks as we found them with his indorsement. That is the only receipt we have got from him for the money.

Q. Having answered what I did not ask, be kind enough to answer what I did ask, which was, whether, in trying to find out the mystery of this indebtedness of Irwin, it occurred to you to see whether his name was connected in any way with those stock-operations.—A. I cannot say that it did.

Q. But it occurred to you that it was possible that those checks went to pay stock-loans. Did it occur to you then to see whether Mr. Irwin's name was connected with them or not?—A. I did not go back of the check to Mr. Irwin for that money.

Q. You never looked beyond them?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is that the extent of your investigation?—A. Yes; on Mr. Irwin's account.

Q. Tell me on what is based your supposition that Mr. Irwin took this money to pay stock-loans, if you never looked beyond the checks.—A. I think I have answered that question before.

Q. Please to answer it again. If you never looked beyond those papers, which you brought here to-day, for Mr. Irwin's connection with the money, on what did you base the idea that the money might have gone to pay stock-loans?—A. On memoranda on the books.

Q. What are those memoranda?—A. I will tell you when I have the opportunity to see the books again, or I will bring the books here and show them to you.

Q. Not having the books here, perhaps you can tell.—A. I remember some large operations in stocks and loans.

Q. I speak of memorandums on the books. What led you to infer that the $750,000, which came into Mr. Irwin's hands through those checks, went in that way?—A. I did not infer anything of the kind.

Q. But tell me about the memorandums.—A. My impression is that there are entries on the books.

Q. Be kind enough to tell us what the memorandums are to which you allude.—A. I have already answered that question.

Q. Your answer having escaped me, be kind enough to answer it again.—A. I said that there were large loans made to stock-brokers about that time.

Q. Is there any memorandum on the books that there were large loans made to stock-brokers about that time?—A. That is my impression—months prior and months afterward.

Q. In whose handwriting is that memorandum?—A. That I cannot tell.

Q. Under whose account in the books is that memorandum? Is it under any particular man's account?—A. I cannot tell you without looking back.

Q. Do you swear that there is such a memorandum on the books?—A. That is my impression.

Q. Give, as near as you can, the words of any of those memorandums.—A. I do not recollect any of the words.

Q. As near as you can.—A. My impression is that there is a loan to a broker or banker of $100,000, and that it was paid off.

Q. That is not the question I asked you. You say that, outside of the entries, there is a memorandum on the books, and about that time there were large loans to brokers.—A. No; I mean that the entry is on the book.

Q. Is there any memorandum on the books outside of the ordinary entries of debit and credit?—A. No, sir; none others—I mean entries. I should have changed the word from “memorandums” to “entries.”

Q. Is there a single word on the books of the company that connects Mr. Irwin with any stock operations?—A. That I cannot tell without examining them.

Q. Have you ever seen any?—A. I don't remember seeing any.

Q. Is there any reason for supposing that this money went in the direction of stock speculations other than that there were entries of large stock operations by Mr. Stockwell about that time?—A. The entries on the books will explain themselves better than I can explain them.

Q. No doubt of that; but I want now to get at the fact, so far as you can state it without having the books here.—A. I don't remember. I cannot remember any of the names, only I know there were very large sums of money loaned and paid back again. Perhaps it was that some of the leading bankers borrowed money and it was paid again.

Q. Can you state to what amount the books will show such operations?—A. Several millions.

Q. You have taken an earnest interest in the affairs of the company from the time you went into office until now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Has your attention been devoted to ascertaining what had been done prior to that time?—A. I have been responsible for what has been done with the funds of the company since I took charge; not prior to that.

Q. Were you interested in the stock of the company before you went into the management?—A. I was.

Q. Largely?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For how long?—A. I think it reached back six or eight months.

Q. Were you interested in the company when the application was made for a subsidy here?—A. I don't think I was; but I don't remember now.

Q. Or when the subsidy finally passed, about the 24th of May, 1872?—A. I don't remember now whether it was or was not.

Q. When did Mr. Trenor W. Park become interested?—A. I think he was elected at the same time.

Q. Was he interested in the stock before May, 1872?—A. That I don't remember.

Q. Is he still a member of the board?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Did not Mr. Stockwell fail about the time that he left the company?—A. He failed about two or three weeks before, I think.

Q. Was it not understood generally in banking and mercantile circles that he had been operating very largely in stocks in connection with the company?—A. Yes.

Q. What were his connections personally with Mr. Irwin?—A. I think they were very friendly and intimate.

Q. Were they confidential?—A. I believe so, but I cannot say; I never saw Mr. Irwin with Mr. Stockwell, and I don't know that I ever heard his name mentioned by Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Have you not heard that Irwin was simply an agent of Stockwell, in his operations?—A. Yes, sir; I have heard that intimated.

Q. Was not that the general impression?—A. I cannot tell you what the general impression was.

Q. I thought that you had been among those persons who were talking freely on this subject.—A. I cannot answer for others, but my own impression was that Mr. Irwin held very confidential relations with Mr. Stockwell.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. You have a secretary of your company?—A. Yes, sir; Theodore T. Johnson.

Q. In the usual course of business, he has charge of the books of the company, has he not?—A. He used to have a book-keeper there; we have now an accountant. Mr. Johnson does not have charge of the books.

Q. In case we should desire to inspect the books, whom should we ask to bring them—whom should we summon?—A. You could summon some of the officers—Mr. Neiber, that I have spoken of.

Q. How voluminous are the books?—A. There are four or five books. I should very much prefer that you should send a committee or some responsible person to examine them; otherwise it will interfere with our business for three or four days. There are no secrets on the books that are not open to you, so far as my power goes, and I am quite willing that anything that has been done since I took possession shall be examined and criticised.

Q. Our object in examining you is not to criticise you; we want to get at these extraordinary disbursements of money, if we can, especially as it has been rumored for some time past that a good deal of this money was expended here in Washington.—A. You will remember that Mr. Stockwell made a settlement with the company for money that he had used; I think that must have been in February or March.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Money used here?—A. No, no; money that he had used in his speculations. He made a settlement, and gave his notes for $840,000.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. He was indebted to the company to that amount on his settlement?—A. Yes, sir; on his own showing.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. You have been managing director of this company since May 1873?—A. No, sir; since November 1, 1873. I was a director up to that time, and Captain Bradbury was the manager.

Q. The officers of your company have been taking steps since that to ascertain what became of that $750,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What have your investigations revealed as to the whereabouts of Irwin at the time this money was drawn?—A. That I cannot tell.

Q. Do you know whether he was at San Francisco at that time, the 24th of May, 1872?—A. I don't know.

Q. Don't the indorsements on the checks indicate that he was not there at that date?—A. Yes, sir. If the money was paid on the 25th he would probably have been in New York; if it was not paid until a later date, he might have been in Washington, or in San Francisco, and might have indorsed them later.

Q. Don't the indorsements on the checks show that they were paid on the 29th of May?—A. I think not.

Q. Look at those two checks for $5,000 and for $10,000, respectively, [Nos. 2360 and 2361:] look at the stamp on the back, "American Exchange National Bank, paid May 29th, 1872." Is this the first time that your attention has been called to that indorsement on the back of those checks?—A. Yes, sir; to the payment of them.

Q. Now, having examined that indorsement, you are satisfied, are you not, that he could not have been in San Francisco at the time those checks were paid, the 29th of May, or between the 24th and 29th?—A. I should say he could not. This is the first time, however, that my attention has been called to when they were paid. Perhaps the others are indorsed in the same way.

Q. No, they are not. From what you know of the manner of transacting banking business in the city of New York, where were those checks paid?—A. I should say they were paid at the counter of the bank on which they were drawn.

Q. Have you in your investigation in the interest of the stockholders of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, taken any steps to ascertain what disposition was made of this money by Mr. Irwin; whether it was placed at his credit at the National Bank of Commerce, or was drawn by him in currency?—A. What steps we have taken I have already explained—that we have sued Irwin on these checks.

Q. You have made no investigation at the bank?—A. I have not.

By Mr. FOSTER:

Q. You don't know whether he drew it out in currency or not?—A. I do not. It might be necessary for him to draw the money personally. If it went through any other bank, the other bank's name would be on the back.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. The indorsements show that only $15,000 passed through any other bank, and that $735,000 was paid at the National Bank of Commerce?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your company has made no investigation at the National Bank of Commerce for the purpose of ascertaining to whom they were paid?—A. I have not made any, and I know of none being made. Mr. Sage, the president, had that in charge.

Q. Would not an examination there readily determine the disposition of the money, after it went into Mr. Irwin's hands?—A. No; not necessarily. Perhaps Irwin did not draw it at all; somebody else may have drawn it; Mr. Stockwell may have drawn it.

Q. If somebody else had drawn it, would not Irwin have indorsed it over to his order?—A. No, sir; not necessarily at all. If the indorsement was certified to, or if the gentleman went in and said, "This is Mr. Irwin," that would do.

By Mr. E. H. ROBERTS:

Q. You are managing director of the company at present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Suppose there was a transaction of this sort, so much money drawn to the order of an agent, upon whose order would it be done, yours or that of the president?—A. The president signs the checks.

Q. But who makes the transaction?—A. The business is done by myself.

Q. Mr. Stockwell was president at the time these checks were drawn?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there, at that time, any managing director?—A. No, sir; Mr. Stockwell was the executive officer. He ordered a check drawn, and the treasurer and the vice-president signed it. As you see, the checks are not signed by Mr. Stockwell himself; but he, too, signed checks.

Q. You say that he ordered these checks drawn?—A. No, sir, I do not. I say that he would order a check drawn—any check—and it would be signed, either by himself or by these other officers.

Q. Then, according to your way of doing business in the company, the authority to draw these checks would have come from the president or from the executive committee?—A. It would come from the president, I think. When I took charge, the agreement between Mr. Sage and the board and myself was that he should sign all the certificates and all the checks. Since I have been in the board as manager I never have signed a certificate, a check, or a note. That was the agreement, because it takes considerable time to do that signing, and I don't much like writing, and, in fact, as executive officer I could not very well do it.

Q. Then, in order to perfect the transaction in 1872, the only person who would need to have known about it would have been the president?

—A. Yes, sir, at that time.

Q. You were asked about the executive committee. Would the executive committee at that time have had occasion to know of the issue of those checks?—A. They would or would not—not necessarily—unless he called his executive committee together.

Q. It was possible for Mr. Stockwell to have issued those checks for so much money without the knowledge of any other officer of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you knowledge of any arrangement since with reference to the continuance of this subsidy, by which the company is to pay to any person money or any other valuable consideration?—A. No, sir; not a dollar. You mean since the first of May.

Q. At any time? Do you know of any arrangement of any kind, for the payment of money or any valuable consideration?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Sage mentioned an arrangement with Mr. Roach. Have you any knowledge of any arrangement between the company and Mr. Roach with reference to the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did the transactions of the company with Mr. Roach have any relation to the subsidy in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you able to say positively that they did not?—A. They did not to my knowledge.

Q. Would you have known if there had been any such arrangement?—A. I think I should.

Q. Did you make the settlement with John Roach?—A. I did not do it personally. It was done by the board; Mr. Alexander, the president. You mean recently?

Q. Yes. Was there anything said with reference to Roach's interest in the subsidy, or was there any consideration for anything that he did or assisted in doing with reference to the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, had the company any arrangement with Mr. Roach with reference to the subsidy, or bearing upon it in any way?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And if there had been any such arrangement you would have known it?—A. I should probably have known it.

Q. Especially as the settlement was made during your administration and to your knowledge?—A. Yes, sir; the settlement with Mr. Roach was made last week, or the week before.

Q. The company is asking now for a continuance of this subsidy?—A. Yes sir.

Q. Has the company taken any steps to influence Congress or any of the Departments with reference to it?—A. Not one dollar, to my knowledge, directly or indirectly.

Q. Would any other officer of the company than yourself be charged with making any transaction with reference to that?—A. I don't think it; not without my knowledge. The president would, if any one. That was Mr. Sage. Mr. Alexander has been elected only a few days.

Q. Have you stated everything that you know with reference to the relations of the company to the application for the continuance of the subsidy?—A. Yes, sir; we made contracts with Mr. Roach, expecting that this subsidy would come in according to the agreement with Congress. We have paid him $300,000 on three ships already.

Q. You say you made a contract expecting the continuance of the subsidy?—A. We would not have made a contract for the ships if we had not expected the subsidy, if we had not expected that the Government would keep its contract with us.

Q. On the examination of Mr. Sage yesterday I asked the question, "You stated that the company has not expended a dollar in that direction," (that is, for the continuance of the subsidy.) Has the company during your administration made any arrangement for spending money here in connection with the subsidy?—A. Yes, sir; we made a conditional contract with Mr. John Roach that if the subsidy was carried the company would need additional steamers, but otherwise would not need them. The option expired on the 2d of November, and was not renewed because the thing was not consummated.

Q. He states the contract was made conditionally. What does that mean?—A. He made the contract; I did not.

Q. I understood you just now to say that there was no arrangement with Mr. Roach having reference to the subsidy in any way?—A. There is not, to my knowledge, any arrangement with him other than there would be with any other ship-builders. If we don't get the subsidy we shall not want so many ships, and we shall not be as well able to pay for them either, as if we had the subsidy. That is the only arrangement I know of, and that is between the Government and the company.

Q. But you don't expect to continue business if the subsidy is not continued?—A. That is very true; but if we got the subsidy we should be enabled to build more ships; and to keep up the semi-monthly line we should need more ships.

Q. Have you any contracts now for ships?—A. We are building three more.

Q. Is there any condition in those contracts depending upon the continuance of the subsidy?—A. No, sir; they are positive contracts; I drew them myself, and I know there is nothing of that kind in them.

Q. Then what do you say to the statement of Mr. Sage, that the company made a conditional contract with John Roach, that if the subsidy was secured the company would need additional steamships; otherwise not?—A. I suppose he means that to apply to two more large steamers of the class of the Peking and the Tokio.

Q. You have a positive contract with Mr. Roach for three additional steamers?—A. Yes, sir; and he has got two thousand men at work on them now. Those are not steamers of 4,000 tons, though—only 3,600 tons.

Q. Then, was there an arrangement for two larger steamers additional upon the passage of the subsidy?—A. If we got the subsidy we should want two more large ships, which would come under the contract. There is no arrangement about it. I did not make the contract.

Q. There is not now any such arrangement for two large ships, based upon the condition of the continuance of the subsidy?—A. The conversation that I heard was that we would have to have two more large ships to keep up that service, unless Congress would reduce the size of the ships required.

Q. Do you want to have it understood that there is a conditional arrangement with Mr. Roach, or that there is not? Is there an arrangement with him that you will take of him two ships of the largest class if the subsidy is continued?—A. There is no arrangement to my knowledge, beyond the contract for the three ships that he is building; but if we get the subsidy we shall build two more large ships that will come under the class of the Peking and the Tokio, as required by law.

Q. Do you base your answer upon the word arrangement? Is there any understanding with Mr. Roach that you will take of him two ships of the larger class if the subsidy is granted—anything in the nature of an understanding or a contract?—A. Nothing beyond what Mr. Sage has explained here. If the subsidy is continued, then we shall want the two large ships.

Q. And you will take them of Mr. John Roach?—A. If somebody else does not build them cheaper, I suppose. I have no arrangement.

Q. Has the company?—A. Mr. Sage is the one that made the contract.

Q. He states that the option expired on the 2d of November, and has never been renewed; do you confirm his statement or modify it?—A. I confirm his statement that there is no contract to my knowledge.

Q. You say there is no “contract” and no “arrangement;” is there any “understanding” with Mr. Roach to that effect?—A. No, sir; the board has taken no action on the subject.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Are these checks charged on the books of the company to any account?—A. I have suggested that the committee had better get a memorandum from the books. I cannot tell you what account they are charged to.

Q. In your examination of the books have you noticed an account with Irwin, in his name?—A. I don't know. I can't tell you whether there is one or not.

Q. Is there an account with the San Francisco agency?—A. There is.

Q. Does that account show a balance in favor of the company or against the company?—A. My impression is that the San Francisco agency is largely in debt to the company, but I cannot give you a definite statement as to that.

Q. I understood you to say that a check for twenty-nine thousand and some odd dollars was given to Irwin at the time when his connection with the company as agent ceased; was that a balance of account?—A. No, sir; I don't think it was; that is my impression about it; I cannot tell you the detail of that without refreshing my recollection.

Q. You have noticed upon the books of the company entries in regard to these particular checks, have you not?—A. I referred to that on my first statement. I think there are large entries occurring prior to that time, but I cannot tell you whom they are made to; nor the amounts, nor the dates.

Q. I don't refer to that; I ask you whether these particular checks are not charged up and credited to the different accounts?—A. I cannot tell you without referring to the books.

Q. You don't know, then, whether they are charged to Stockwell's account, Irwin's account, or the San Francisco agency's account?—A. No, sir.

Q. What do you give us by which we can identify the entries in the books in reference to the loans to stock-brokers, &c.?—A. The books will show. You can have the book-keeper come on with the books, or I will come on.

Q. But what will enable us to begin at some particular place or account in the books? How shall we know the entries that refer to these loans, &c.?—A. That I cannot tell without referring you to the books, and I don't know that you could tell then.

Q. Then it would be necessary to have you present when we examined the books?—A. No, not necessarily.

Q. There are, I suppose, in the books a great number of accounts?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To which particular name shall we look to find these entries?—A. You will have just as much knowledge of the books as I have, or as the books will show.

Q. Can you give us some name or indication by which we can find these particular entries?—A. I will give it to you when I see the books. I don't know that I could explain the books; it all took place before I had anything to do with the company.

Q. Were there large stock-operations connected with the Pacific Mail stock about the time of the passage of this subsidy bill?—A. That I could not tell you without seeing the books.

Q. Do you recollect whether there was any advance in the market-price of the company's stock about that time?—A. My recollection is that it was a pretty active stock-market, both prior to and after that time.

Q. Had you any idea that this money was drawn for the benefit of the company, for the purchase of stock?—A. I had not any idea about it; I did not know what it was drawn for.

Q. Is Mr. Irwin's correspondence with the company or its officers on file among the papers of the company?—A. I presume it is.

Q. Have you examined it?—A. No, I have not.

Q. Or looked at any of the letters passing about that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no knowledge of whether there is such a correspondence?—A. No, sir.

Q. If there is, it is preserved?—A. Yes, sir; I presume it is; everything is intact, I presume, so far as my knowledge goes.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Was it the custom of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to advance money to bankers or brokers with a view to protect the market-price of their shares or securities?—A. Not that I know of; I don't know whether they did it or not, but I know of no such transaction.

Q. If Mr. Stockwell had simply ordered the vice-president and treasurer to sign these checks, amounting in the total to $750,000, without presenting any vouchers or giving any explanation of the object, would those officers, in the ordinary course of business, as you understand it to have been at that time, have signed the checks under his direction without any explanation?—A. Yes, sir; that is my impression.

Q. That would at least have been consistent with the rules then in force?—A. I think so; that is my impression.

Q. Checks Nos. 2360 and 2361 bear the indorsement, "Pay to E. Willson, cashier, for deposit, Richard B. Irwin;" the others are indorsed in blank merely, "Richard B. Irwin." The two whose numbers I have given are the ones that are stamped "paid" on May 29th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does that indicate that they were passed to the credit of the indorser, Richard B. Irwin, in the bank of which Willson was the cashier?—A. I don't think it would.

Q. What would that indorsement indicate, "Pay E. Willson, cashier, for deposit, R. B. Irwin?"—A. That it had gone to Irwin's credit.

Q. Then it would be entered, in the ordinary course, to the credit of R. B. Irwin in the bank of which Willson was cashier?—A. Yes, sir, it might have been, or it might have been paid; but the indorsement would indicate that it was placed to his credit.

Q. You speak of the possibility of these payments being made in satisfaction of loans made of the company's money. If a loss had been sustained by the president of the company in the effort to manipulate the stock, so far as you know, would it have been possible or consistent with the custom of the company to make satisfaction of those loans out of the funds of the company?—A. No, sir; it would not. I never heard of its being done.

Q. Then the possibility that you suggest is simply this: that somebody may have been indebted to the company, and, through some influence, may have had checks issued upon which he could draw the money of the company and put it to the credit of the charge previously made against him by the company?—A. There is a possibility of that.

Q. And that is the possibility to which you have referred?—A. Yes, sir, in answer to your question whether there was a possibility of the money being used in any other way.

Q. I think you stated that, to your knowledge, there was not any correspondence, or copy of correspondence, in the company's papers, either with Irwin or any other party, relative to this $750,000?—A. I don't know of any such thing. I know of nothing of the company's affairs that transpired prior to May, 1873.

[Mr. Hubbard, attorney for Mr. Irwin, here handed to the chairman a list of questions which he desired to have put to the witness.]

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Irwin has not appeared, and it seems to me rather a questionable course to permit questions to be put in his behalf before he appears. If there is any member of the committee who desires to ask any questions, from whatever source they may be suggested, I shall make no objection; but it does seem to me that it is very unusual to have the attorney of a person against whom no charges have been made, who has been subpoenaed as a witness, and who has not responded to the summons of the committee, examine witnesses who have appeared.

On motion of Mr. Wood, the committee resolved that, until Mr. Irwin should appear in person, the committee would not permit his appearance by attorney; and, also,

On motion of Mr. Wood, the witness, Mr. Hatch, was excused until Wednesday, December 16, at 10 a. m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 15, 1874.

Mr. ORDWAY, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, came before the committee and made a report as to the action of himself and his assistant, Mr. Aaron Bradshaw, in regard to the subpoenaing and subsequent arrest of Richard B. Irwin, whom Mr. Ordway reports as having been taken by him to Washington yesterday, and as being now in custody. He expressed the belief, however, that Irwin was too ill to appear before the committee this morning. He was directed to call upon the witness and ascertain his condition.

Mr. G. G. HUBBARD, counsel for Irwin, stated that Mr. Irwin had come on to Washington last evening, and was then apparently quite well. He had known him for a number of years. He (Irwin) had been an officer in the Army during the war, and had then been seized by a long, lingering illness, from which he had never entirely recovered. About a year and a half ago he had been thrown from a carriage in San Francisco, and had fallen on his head on the rails of a street-railroad, by which fall his skull had been broken, and ever since he had been suffering under a complication of disorders. He (Mr. Hubbard) had been with him till a late hour last evening, and had left him in a very nervous, excited state of mind. He had again called upon him this morning, and had told him, in view of the condition he was in, that he ought not to appear before the committee to-day. Irwin's reply had been, "I must be there. I am able to be there." He (Mr. Hubbard) had talked with him a little further, and had told him that he would be running a risk of his life if he attended the hearing this morning. Irwin had then replied, "My headache is beginning to be bad, and I shall be positively, in a few minutes, almost insensible and unconscious." Before he left him, he (Irwin) was unable, without an effort, to recall his mind to the subject they were discussing.

Mr. BECK. It appears to me, then, that it would be better if you should stay away from him.

Mr. HUBBARD. Very likely. What I stated was that Mr. Irwin was in a very nervous, excitable state of mind from long-continued illness; and, so far as my knowledge of the man goes, it would be a risk of his life for him to appear before the committee this morning.

Mr. KASSON. Were there others besides you visiting him?

Mr. HUBBARD. No others but Mr. Chapman, another of his counsel.

Mr. KASSON. He saw no one but his counsel last evening?

Mr. HUBBARD. No one, to my knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. Has he had a physician?

Mr. HUBBARD. No; but he took his regular medicine last night before he went to bed.

Mr. CHAPMAN (another counsel for Irwin) stated that he was present at the interview narrated by Mr. Hubbard; that Mr. Irwin had expressed his profound determination to be before the committee this morning; but that from his, Mr. Chapman's, knowledge of Mr. Irwin, and of the condition of his mind, he had deemed it prudent to lay the matter before the committee and to ask to have the matter postponed till to-morrow. He desired to say, in justification of Mr. Irwin, that there had been no desire on his part to evade examination——

Mr. BECK, (interrupting.) I object to counsel stating what Irwin's intention was. He can tell that himself. I think that the Sergeant-at-Arms should be instructed to keep Irwin's counsel away from him, and give him a chance to get well.

The CHAIRMAN (to Mr. Chapman.) You say that Mr. Irwin possessed a strong determination to come here.

Mr. CHAPMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. But that you and Mr. Hubbard, his counsel, felt that it would not be safe for him to do so?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Has he addressed any communication to the committee himself?

Mr. CHAPMAN. He simply desired us to come and make that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. You represent him here, and still you do not represent his own desire.

Mr. CHAPMAN. I beg your pardon.

The CHAIRMAN. You represent what you think is best for him?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Before we left him he came to the same conclusion.

The CHAIRMAN. You convinced him?

Mr. KASSON. I think that this idea of attorneys representing what physicians only are competent to represent cannot be satisfactory to the committee. If the witness does not desire to stay away I do not see that it is the business of counsel to urge him to stay away unless they are physicians as well as lawyers.

Mr. WOOD. Is it not understood that the Sergeant-at-Arms has gone, or sent, to bring Mr. Irwin here?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. WOOD. I think that until we hear from him we ought not to hear from any one else.

Mr. BECK. It is very remarkable that this man should have come here last night quite well, and that now he should be in the very excited state of mind described by his counsel; that this morning he should have expressed his determination to come before the committee, and should have seemed to have no doubt about his ability to do so; and that a short interview with his counsel should have rendered him unable to do so, and put him in such a condition as that he thought he would be insane very shortly. The whole thing seems to me like playing fast and loose. I do not believe in letting a witness have counsel, and I deny the right of counsel to represent witnesses, or to appear at all. He ought never to be heard or allowed. The committee will protect witnesses without the aid of counsel. I am opposed to this whole proceeding of having counsel before a committee.

Mr. NIBLACK. We had better hear nothing further until we hear from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. BURCHARD. If a witness claims to be in ill-health and unable to attend, he should be heard either by letter or messenger.

The CHAIRMAN submitted the question on hearing counsel further on the subject of Mr. Irwin's intention, and it was decided in the negative.

Further proceedings were suspended to await a report from the Sergeant-at-Arms.

After waiting till noon without hearing from the Sergeant-at-Arms or the witness, the committee adjourned till 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, unless sooner called by the chair.

The committee met again at 2 p. m., on the call of the chairman.

Dr. WM. P. JOHNSTON, a practicing physician in Washington for the past thirty-four years, appeared and made a statement as follows:

I know Richard B. Irwin; I attended his wife about six or eight years ago, and I attended him when he was here last, two or three years ago. I had not seen him since that time until I was called to see him this morning. I found him quite unwell. His condition proceeded, I think, from an accident which occurred to him some time since in California, and which he described to me; I had not heard of it before. He was thrown from a buggy, he said, and severely injured, and his physicians told him that he had sustained some lateral fracture of the cranium. Since then he has suffered a good deal from pain in the side of the head and compression of the brain. He said that he had suffered a good deal from concussion after the accident, and when these pains have continued for some time, his stomach, in consequence of the reflex action, becomes disordered and rejects food, so that he cannot eat anything for two or three days. What he seemed to be apprehending this morning was a return of this disorder of the stomach. It had not yet appeared and he had taken steps to guard against it; he had taken a warm bath before I arrived, and he told me that he felt better, but he was still in bed and suffering from pain in his head. It was about half past 10 o'clock when I saw him; I stayed a little while, and on leaving he begged me to come to-morrow early, because he desired to meet this committee, and hoped he would be able to do so. He repeated twice his desire that I should call upon him early. My opinion is that he will be able to come out to-morrow, but I do not think he is able to attend here to-day. He looked very pale and seemed to be suffering from a good deal of nervous prostration, and I think that the necessary excitement of an examination would so prostrate him that I doubt very much whether he would be able to go through with it to-day, but I think he will be able to appear to-morrow. That is my opinion as a physician, and that appeared to be his own opinion, if I understood him correctly.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Was his condition such that you could form your opinion without his own statements?—Answer. Well, no; I could not judge of his pain; all I could see was that he had received an injury; he had no fever, his pulse was tranquil, but he looked pale; the first thing that struck me on entering was his pallor.

Q. Have you any question about his illness being real?—A. I have no question at all, sir. He spoke to me in that confidential way that one does to a physician—spoke freely about his sensations and described them accurately.

Q. Was it not possible for him to have feigned illness without your detecting him?—A. Yes, I think it was. A man can say that he has got pain, that he feels prostrated, that he has pressure on the brain, that frequently he has a disordered stomach, and that he apprehends a return of the same.

Q. Of course you could not tell what he apprehended, but could not you detect whether he was really ill when you saw him?—A. Well, my impression when I first went in was that he was very sick; I was struck by his pallor, but these other feelings and conditions could only be ascertained from his own statements.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. In your judgment, is it wise to allow persons to visit him and converse with him about a subject that excites him?—A. I think not, sir; and he thought not himself; in fact I was not admitted myself until my name was sent in; while I was there two or three of his young relatives came to see him and did not send up their names, and he said he would not see anybody that did not send up his name.

Q. In your judgment, then, it would be wise to exclude all persons from conversing with him to-day on business that would excite him?—A. I think so; I think he ought to be perfectly quiet to-day.

At this point the doctor retired, but almost immediately he returned to the committee-room and asked leave to qualify his last answer. He had only meant to say that visitors should be excluded from Irwin to-day—not that his counsel might not see him.

Mr. BECK. The difficulty about that is that his counsel say they found him pretty well last night, and that after they had talked with him awhile he got very sick.

The CHAIRMAN. Has anything occurred since you went out, doctor, that led you to return?

Dr. JOHNSTON. Yes, sir; a gentleman asked me whether I meant that his counsel could not see him, and I thought that if there were any matters that he had discussed with his counsel, I did not suppose it would hurt him to confer with them briefly, but I thought that a long discussion with his counsel would be prejudicial to him.

Mr. KASSON. The counsel made such a report this morning as indicated that he was worse when they left him ; now unless this business would excite him, what would ?

Dr. JOHNSTON. Well, he says that reading excites him and prostrates him. He is suffering now, as I understand, from a peculiar condition of his brain, resulting from this severe concussion that he received, and while he is in that condition of course he cannot go into any long explanations that would tax his mind ; that would be positively prejudicial ; but if any one merely had business that would detain him a few minutes, I don't suppose it would injure him.

Mr. KASSON. Would it hurt him if a subcommittee of the Ways and Means were to ask him a few questions touching this business any more than it would for his counsel to talk with him ?

Dr. JOHNSTON. Well, sir, I really think now that to-morrow he will be in a much better condition to meet the committee.

Mr. KASSON. Our point now is to see that nothing is done in the mean time to depress his condition ; we don't want him thrown into such a condition that he cannot come here to-morrow, and we wish to have your judgment as to whether his counsel worrying him with questions would not have that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. If you could have him for treatment exactly as you wanted him, what would you do ?

Dr. JOHNSTON. I would keep him in a state of absolute repose.

The committee, after hearing Dr. Johnston's statement, decided to wait for Irwin until to-morrow morning.

Statement of Mr. Rufus Hatch, general manager, and Mr. H. E. Merrill book-keeper of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 16, 1874.

The books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company having been exhibited to the committee, Mr. Rufus Hatch, the general manager of the company, and Mr. H. E. Merrill, the book-keeper, explained the entries to which their attention was called, and were examined, as follows :

Mr. ROBERTS. This entry of $100,000 on the ledger, page 207, dated May 24, 1872, under the account of Eldridge & Irwin, agents, refers to the like entry on page 197 of the journal ?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTS. Under the head of "loan-account," page 81 of the ledger, the entry of $650,000, under date of May 31, 1872, to Harriott & Noyes, refers to the entry on page 197 of the journal ?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTS. Are there any other entries in these books referring to these particular checks ?

Mr. HATCH. Not that I know of.

Mr. ROBERTS. Are these the entries with reference to which you suggested the other day that these checks might refer to stock-loans ?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTS. Be kind enough to explain which of these entries justifies that idea.

Mr. HATCH. The $650,000 check being charged to Harriott & Noyes as a loan, and so journalized and posted.

Mr. FOSTER. And liquidated by them ?

Mr. HATCH. I presume so.

Mr. ROBERTS. These entries show that this money was loaned to them?

Mr. HATCH. That is the entry on the book.

Mr. ROBERTS. Can you state whether there are any entries in the books showing that payment of this loan was made by Harriott & Noyes?

Mr. HATCH. I stated the other day that I knew nothing of these transactions except as they appear on the books, and I state the same now.

Mr. ROBERTS. But you have shown us an entry on the books which you say indicates that that $650,000 was a loan to Harriott & Noyes. Now I ask you whether these books show that this loan was ever paid?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir; I believe they do show it.

Mr. ROBERTS. Is there an account with Harriott & Noyes?

Mr. MERRILL. No, sir; there is not.

Mr. ROBERTS. But there is a loan-account?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS. Can you, in that loan-account, trace whether or not this particular sum was paid by them?

Mr. MERRILL. No, sir; I have not been able to, and I have been over the books very carefully. I find, by looking at the books, that after May 31 they returned $280,000. Whether or not it was a portion of this $650,000 loaned to them on May 24 I do not know. Other loans to them appear on the books before and after this May transaction.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do the books show whether there is a balance due from them, so far as the books go?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir. At the time the balance was carried forward from the old ledger to the new ledger, on July 30, 1872, there was a balance of $500,000 against them.

Mr. ROBERTS. Did your accounts with them go beyond that date in these books?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTS. Was that sum of $500,000 ever paid by them?

Mr. MERRILL. Not in that amount. They may have paid it, part at one time and part at another.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do your books show that they continue to be debtors to that amount?

Mr. MERRILL. O, no, sir; they are not now. It is all settled.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then this loan of $650,000 is shown by the books to have been paid?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir; not in that amount of $650,000 at one time, but at several times. There were other amounts, in addition to that $650,000, loaned to Harriott & Noyes continuously, both before and since that time. They paid back these loans—$500,000 one day; $100,000 another day; $25,000 another day; and so on until the account was square.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do you mean to say that the entire loan represented by this entry of $650,000 has been fully paid and settled?

Mr. MERRILL. The books show that; so that at present there is nothing charged to Harriott & Noyes on our books.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do the books show whether the payment was made by cash, or was settled by an entry of some other sort?

Mr. MERRILL. It is posted as "by cash." All the entries in this loan-account are posted as "cash."

Mr. ROBERTS. So that the books would show that this loan was paid by cash?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROBERTS, (to Mr Hatch.) From your knowledge of the books, do you now believe that loan of $650,000 to Harriott & Noyes to have been fully paid off by cash?

Mr. HATCH. I cannot answer whether it has been paid by cash or by transfer of the loan to other parties.

Mr. ROBERTS. You stated the other day that this was a mysterious account, which you could not understand. What do you see on the face of the book?

Mr. HATCH. It is posted as paid by cash.

Mr. ROBERTS. Can you give us any information as to that transaction?

Mr. HATCH. I cannot, without going into the details of the books. Nearly all the large entries in the loan-account are to Harriott & Noyes, and to F. C. Markham, who was Mr. Stockwell's confidential broker—particularly so. Along about December, 1872, or January or February, 1873, it was found, when the books were examined, (as I understand—I was not an officer of the company at the time, or until the last of May, 1873, so that I cannot speak from personal knowledge,) that Mr. F. C. Markham had a loan from the company, for which the company had little or no security. It had some Australian steamship stock. My impression is that when Mr. Stockwell settled up with the executive committee of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company it was shown that he owed the company $840,000—which included Markham's indebtedness—and the Howe Sewing-Machine notes were taken in settlement of that claim. These notes were afterwards settled for 10,000 shares of Pacific Mail stock, and the stock was sold. That is my impression of the way the matter stands.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do you connect that settlement with this loan in any way?

Mr. HATCH. You may get somebody to go over the books and see.

Mr. ROBERTS. You have given us your impression at various stages. What is your impression as to that? Your statement seems to imply that.

Mr. HATCH. I do not wish to imply anything. I am only telling you as I understand it.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do you understand that that settlement covered this loan in any way?

Mr. HATCH. My impression is that there are cross-entries in the books by which the loans to Harriott & Noyes were paid off and charged to Markham and Stockwell, and perhaps Eldridge and Irwin were included.

Mr. ROBERTS. That would make the settlement with Stockwell include these entries.

Mr. HATCH. It might or might not.

Mr. ROBERTS. What is your impression as to whether it did or not?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Markham was Mr. Stockwell's confidential broker. He did a large business with him in stocks in every possible way. And Harriott & Noyes were the largest borrowers of money from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Now, if these entries do show this, (as it is believed they do,) then I should connect these circumstances.

Mr. ROBERTS. You were kind enough to give us your impression of this transaction at various stages; can you not give us your impression to the end?

Mr. HATCH. My impression is that a considerable amount of it, if not all of it, passed into the hands of Mr. Stockwell or his brokers.

Mr. ROBERTS. You have given us your impression of the history of this transaction; but you stop at a particular point. Now, I ask you simply whether or not your impressions connect this loan to Harriott & Noyes in any way with the settlement made by Stockwell?

Mr. HATCH. My impression is that they are connected; but I do not wish to state that until I shall have examined the books further.

Mr. ROBERTS. You stated the other day that these entries would give the ground on which you assumed that the money from these checks may have gone into Wall street.

Mr. HATCH. Yes; and I have given you the facts. You know just as much about it as I do.

Mr. ROBERTS. But you stop just at the point.

Mr. HATCH. In every statement that I have made about it I have said that I had no knowledge of the facts. I have brought the books here and shown the entries. And I have stated what I believe to be the facts in regard to Mr. Stockwell's final settlement with the company. My impression is that Mr. Stockwell used the funds of the company continually and constantly. You may take these entries and see whether one loan is paid off by a loan to another man. I do not pretend to be able to explain it to you. In the winding-up of Mr. Stockwell's account, he gave notes for $840,000.

Mr. ROBERTS. That included Markham's account.

Mr. HATCH. Yes, as I understand it; his account and loans from the company.

Mr. ROBERTS. And Harriott & Noyes's?

Mr. HATCH. I do not know about that.

Mr. MERRILL. I think that Mr. Hatch wishes to convey to the committee the idea that Harriott & Noyes's loan may have been paid by a transfer from one broker to another.

Mr. ROBERTS, (to Mr. Merrill.) Well, I ask you whether these books show in any way that this loan of $650,000 to Harriott & Noyes appears in the settlement with Stockwell?

Mr. MERRILL. That I do not know. I have not examined the books as to that point.

Mr. ROBERTS. What do the books show in that regard?

Mr. MERRILL. The books show that Harriott & Noyes's loan-account is square.

Mr. ROBERTS. How? By a transfer to some other account?

Mr. MERRILL. I have not examined as to that. I was not the accountant or book-keeper of the company at that time.

Mr. ROBERTS. I wish that you two gentlemen would be kind enough to examine that matter in order to be able to satisfy the committee.

Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURCHARD, (to Mr. Merrill.) What books are those before you?

Mr. MERRILL. The old ledger, the new ledger, into which all the transactions are posted, and the journal.

Mr. BURCHARD. Are the unsettled accounts in the loan-account drawn off the old ledger and carried forward?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURCHARD. And, at the date of the opening of this new ledger, were Harriott & Noyes indebted to the company?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes; the entry shows that they were indebted to the amount of $500,000.

Mr. BURCHARD. And subsequent entries show that the account was settled?

Mr. MERRILL. Yes. On August 1 there is brought forward into the new ledger, on the loan-account, a debit of $500,000 by Harriott & Noyes, and on September 7 there is a credit on the loan-account of cash received from Harriott & Noyes of $500,000, which would offset the former indebtedness.

Mr. BURCHARD. On page 220 of the journal, under date of June 20, 1872, I find this entry: "H. McAlister, legislative expenses, subsidy res., $5,000," and "Sundries, $1,000." Will you find in the day-book, or cash-book, the corresponding entry from which this entry is made?

Mr. MERRILL. That came from the San Francisco account. We do not know anything about the items; we take them from the agency-account as we find them, and enter them on our book.

Mr. BURCHARD. On page 200 of the journal, under date of May, 1872, there appears an entry, "Harriott & Noyes, Dr., to Eldridge and Irwin, agents," and there is a charge of $100,000, made up of $40,000, $35,000, $20,000, and $5,000. Can you find the corresponding entries in the day-book, or cash-book, or on the check-book stubs?

Mr. MERRILL. No, sir; I do not believe I can. I will explain what I think that entry is, although I never saw it before. It looks to me as if these amounts of $40,000, $35,000, $20,000, and $5,000 had been charged to the wrong account, (as a loan to Harriott & Noyes,) and that this entry was made to reverse the former one.

Mr. BURCHARD. Have these entries any connection with the account of $100,000?

Mr. MERRILL. No, sir; they could not have any connection with it.

Mr. BURCHARD. Who made these entries about which you have just testified?

Mr. MERRILL. It looks to me as if they were in the handwriting of Mr. L. D. Walker; but they were made under the supervision of Mr. John Roundy.

Adjourned till 10 o'clock to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 17, 1874.

The inspection of the books and the examination of Rufus Hatch and H. E. Merrill in connection with them was resumed as follows:

Mr. WALDRON. I suggest that Mr. Hatch and Mr. Merrill take these books, and trace out the item of $650,000, which is charged to Harriot & Noyes on 24th May, 1872, and ascertain whether that was finally merged in the settlement made by Mr. Stockwell with the company.

Mr. HATCH. That will require four or five or six accounts to be thoroughly analyzed.

Mr. MERRILL. And then I doubt whether it would be satisfactory; because, when these loans to brokers were returned, they were returned in odd amounts and at various times; and, at the times they were returned, it was not specified on account of what loan they were returned.

Mr. WOOD. But you can find the aggregates.

Mr. MERRILL. Yes; we can give the aggregates.

Mr. WALDRON. Here, for instance, was a charge to Harriot & Noyes on 24th May, 1872, of $650,000.

Mr. MERRILL. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALDRON. And there was a credit made to some other broker intermediately before it went into Mr. Stockwell's account; but it was finally balanced by a charge to Mr. Stockwell.

Mr. MERRILL. That remains to be seen by going through the books.

Mr. HATCH. To do that correctly and satisfactorily, it will be necessary, in my opinion, to have the man who made these entries. Some of these entries do not explain themselves, and Mr. Merrill and I cannot explain them. But the man who made the entries might be able to explain them.

Mr. WALDRON. On the 24th of May there was a charge of $650,000 to Harriott & Noyes. A few days after that there was a credit to Harriott & Noyes of $622,000, nearly balancing the charge; and on that same day there was a charge of a similar amount to some other broker.

Mr. MERRILL. Yes; to F. C. Markham.

Mr. WALDRON. Then, if Markham was credited with that amount on some other day, you can find to whom a like charge was made on that day, and thus follow it right through.

Mr. BURCHARD, (to Mr. Merrill.) State what the books indicate in reference to the payment of that loan by Harriott & Noyes.

Mr. MERRILL. In reference to the loan of $650,000 to Harriott & Noyes on 24th May, 1872, the books show that of that loan they returned $500,000 on September 7, 1872; and that on September 7, 1872, there was a check drawn to the order of A. B. Stockwell for $500,000, and charged to Eldridge & Irwin, agents. That would indicate that it was a portion of the $650,000.

Mr. BURCHARD. Was there any payment made prior to that on account of that loan?

Mr. MERRILL. No, sir; I have not been able to find any.

Mr. BURCHARD, (to Mr. Hatch.) Will you produce the check of September 7, 1872, numbered 3023?

[Mr. Hatch produced the check, of which the following is a copy:]

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,
New York, September 7, 1872.

$500,000.

National Bank of Commerce, in New York, pay to the order of A. B. Stockwell, Esq., five hundred thousand dollars.

F. W. G. BELLOWS,
Vice-Prest.

HENRY SMITH, Treasr.
No. 3023.

Certified by the teller, S. Newman, for $500,000.

Indorsed:

Stamped, 47, for deposit to the credit of—
Indorsed:

A. B. STOCKWELL.

HARRIOT & NOYES.

Mr. BURCHARD. Explain to the committee the transaction as it appears to you from the books.

Mr. HATCH. As our books show, a check was drawn by the company to the order of A. B. Stockwell for $500,000, on the 7th of September, 1872, and was charged to Eldridge & Irwin, agents. That check was indorsed by A. B. Stockwell and deposited to the credit of Harriott & Noyes. On the same day it appears that Harriott & Noyes paid the company $500,000 on account of the loan of 24th May.

Mr. BURCHARD. Did they pay it with that check?

Mr. HATCH. Evidently not, because this check is stamped, "For deposit to the credit of," and indorsed by Harriott & Noyes, in their own handwriting; so that they must have paid the company that $500,000 with their own check.

Mr. WALDRON. Was the effect of that transfer to change the indebtedness that was standing against Harriott & Noyes, and put it to the account of Eldridge & Irwin, agents?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir.

Mr. WALDRON. To whom was charged the check of $500,000 which was issued to A. B. Stockwell?

Mr. HATCH. To Eldridge & Irwin, agents.

Mr. WALDRON. Then, was not the result this, that Eldridge & Irwin were made to appear debtors to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to the amount of $500,000, which passed to the credit of Harriott & Noyes?

Mr. HATCH. The books show that. The polite way of putting it is, that Harriott & Noyes paid off $500,000 of their indebtedness, and that A. B. Stockwell furnished the money to do it with, and that the money was charged to Eldridge & Irwin.

Mr. MERRILL. And perhaps Eldridge & Irwin never knew anything about that amount being charged to them.

Mr. WALDRON. How did Eldridge & Irwin settle their accounts with the company?

Mr. MERRILL. That's a running account. The agents at San Francisco have been changed since these entries on our books, and the balance of the account is carried forward from one agent to the other. The accounts at the office in New York never can show the same balance on the same day, as the agency-accounts in San Francisco do; because in New York these accounts are always a month behind.

Mr. HATCH. My impression is that Eldridge & Irwin never have settled their accounts with the company, as they stand on our books here. They may have settled them with the agency in San Francisco.

Mr. WALDRON. Is there an item on your books showing a sum of $5,000 paid for legislative expenses?

Mr. MERRILL. We came across such an amount paid by the San Francisco agency to H. McAlister.

Mr. WALDRON. Is there any voucher on file in the office of your company showing the items of that expenditure?

Mr. MERRILL. There probably is a voucher of some kind in the office in New York. I have never seen it myself. We always get vouchers with accounts.

[Mr. Hatch and Mr. Merrill were requested to produce the voucher referred to.]

Mr. HATCH presented the check-book of the Pacific Mail Company, from the stubs of which the following memorandums are copied:

Margin memorandums.

Check No. 2360, charge Eldredge & Irwin, agents.....	$5,000
Check No. 2361, charge Eldredge & Irwin, agents	10,000

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1874.

THEODORE T. JOHNSON, secretary of Pacific Mail Steamship Company, sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. What is your business ?—A. I am secretary of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and have been in that service since the 13th of September, 1860. I was purveyor for sixteen months first, and afterward I became secretary.

Q. What book have you there before you ?—A. A check-book ; the stubs of the check-book of May, 1872.

Q. Have you it open at Nos. 2360 to 2365, inclusive ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In whose handwriting are the stubs filled out ?—A. In mine.

Q. I have the same numbers here on certain checks, and I desire to ask you if the corresponding number on the check is not printed on the blank checks ?—A. Yes, sir ; it should be printed on the check.

Q. I observe that these numbers on these checks are all in red ink and in writing ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where are the corresponding numbers on the checks in print ?—A. Those checks were destroyed.

Q. Then the checks originally drawn answering to these numbers are not these checks ?—A. No, sir.

Q. That is the reason why No. 2361 seems to have been at the bottom of the book instead of at the top ?—A. Those were loose checks that are had in sheets.

Q. Where are the stubs of these checks ?—A. They had no stubs ; they were in sheets.

Q. The checks originally drawn were checks corresponding to these numbers on these stubs, were they ?—A. They were ; those checks have been destroyed.

Q. Do you know the amounts of each one of the checks that were destroyed ?—A. The same as those—the same dates, same numbers, and same amounts.

Q. If they differed in any respect, state what the difference was.—A. I was ordered to draw them out first to the order of A. B. Stockwell. I was ordered by Mr. Bellows, the vice-president of the company, and they were so drawn.

Q. What was done with those checks after they were drawn—were they delivered to anybody ?—A. They were delivered to Mr. Bellows.

Q. Give the history of them.—A. They were delivered to Mr. Bellows, who carried them to the president's room. He returned with them in a few minutes or in a short time, and stated that they were to be drawn to the order of Richard B. Irwin ; that these checks were to be destroyed, and other checks of the same numbers, dates, and amounts were to be drawn to the order of Mr. Irwin. I accordingly drew them—took the loose checks that were in sheets, got the numbers, and numbered and dated them the same as the original checks and for the same amounts, and made them to the order of Richard B. Irwin.

Q. Was the president in the president's room ?—A. He was.

Q. Was the entry upon those stubs, when the checks were originally drawn, precisely as it is now ?—A. No, sir ; it was put down in pencil, "A. B. S.," to await orders as to how the stubs should be written up. I asked Mr. Bellows about it when the checks were issued, the last series, and I was informed that I would be instructed how to write up the stubs in a day or two, and I think the next day, though I cannot be positive about that, I was instructed to write them up as you find them here.

Q. Was that after they had been delivered to Mr. Irwin?—A. I presume so; I don't know.

Q. Did you see them delivered to Mr. Irwin?—A. I did not. I never saw the checks until now, after I delivered them to Mr. Bellows; that is, these checks.

Q. Did you see Mr. Irwin after they were originally drawn payable to Mr. Stockwell's order?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. When did you next see him, if at all?—A. It was after bank-hours when I drew these checks, perhaps about four o'clock in the afternoon, or half past three, and it was understood that he was going to leave that afternoon, or the following day, for San Francisco, where he occupied the position of the company's agent. I am not positive whether I saw him the next day, but I am inclined to think that he was in the office the next day, though I am not certain.

Q. Did you hear anybody give him a reason why the checks were changed in form?—A. I did not.

Q. Did he, to your knowledge, ask anybody to let him see how the stubs were written up?—A. Not to my recollection. I have no recollection of his asking me.

Q. Were you and Bellows together with him at any time?—A. We might have been, the following day. He was in the office the next day, I think.

Q. Did you see any other checks destroyed besides the ones that belonged to these stubs?—A. None others. I destroyed those myself.

Q. Are there any stubs of checks that were signed by Mr. Stockwell in his private capacity in this book?—A. No; he never signed the company's checks, that I am aware of.

Q. He never used the company's checks for his own purpose; is that what you mean?—A. Yes, sir; he never did, that I am aware of.

Q. If there were any checks which, though in form private checks, were in reality for the company's business, would they be upon that book?—A. Yes, sir; all the company's checks would be on these books.

Q. Understand my question: If he should draw his own private check for any business of the company, would that check be upon that book?—A. No, sir.

Q. Although it might be for the company's business?—A. Although it might be for the company's business.

Q. We should be obliged to look elsewhere for such a check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are there any erasures upon those stubs?—A. There appears to be one upon the first one.

Q. Is that your work?—A. I think it is.

Q. Can you explain it?—A. Yes, sir; my recollection is that I was given a memorandum of these checks upon a piece of paper, and that in filling up the checks rapidly, I filled the first check in for $10,000, when I should have begun with $5,000, because that was the memorandum given to me. That is my recollection of how that occurred.

Q. Is there any other erasure?—A. No, sir. I think that was put in as ten at first and changed to five; or it might have been put in as one hundred and changed to five; I am not certain which, but that is the way in which the erasure arose.

Q. Is this entry of these stubs, "A. B. Stockwell, president, charge Eldridge and Irwin," the form of the entries throughout the book?—A. No, sir.

Q. I do not mean to ask, are the words the same; but is it the same style of entries throughout the book?—A. The words should conform to the account in which the item should be entered in the books.

Q. Will you translate that stub?—A. When I drew these checks to the order of Richard B. Irwin, I then said to Mr. Bellows, "I must make the margin to conform." He said, "Mr. Stockwell will inform you in a day or two what to make the margin," and when I got that information I wrote the margin as it is.

Q. Translate that stub; what is the English of it?—A. The English of it is that the checks were drawn for the amounts stated, by order of the president, to be charged to Eldridge and Irwin, agents of the company in San Francisco.

Q. What is the English of stub 2266?—A. That is an account on the ledger called "outfits and supplies," to which account is charged all merchandise purchased for the use of steamers; and the names "Brinckhoff, Turner, and Polhamus" are the names of the persons to whom I drew that check; "sail-duck" means that it was for sail-duck.

Q. Take stub 2265.—A. That is the same form precisely; that is not my writing; that means that the steamship "Rising Star" was charged on that day $62.14, paid to the Sweitzer Patent Bolt Company for bolts.

Q. 2268.—A. That is a check issued and charged to "outfits and supplies," part of it, and the rest of it to the steamship "Henry Chauncey."

Q. All through the book, until you come to these stubs, is it not the rule that the first entry upon the stub is the account to which the check is to be charged?—A. It is, sir.

Q. And the purpose for which it is drawn follows the name of the person to whom it is charged?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now on the stubs of these six checks do you find the same order observed?—A. The same order.

Q. Is that [indicating stub] charged to the person whose name appears first?—A. It was charged to the person whose name was filled in to the original checks, "A. B. Stockwell," president.

Q. Is it charged to him in the books?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why didn't you follow precisely the same form in this case that was followed elsewhere in the book, and put first the name of the person or persons to whom it was to be charged?—A. Because I was instructed to make that entry in that way.

Q. Then that is a departure from the usual mode of business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After leaving these six checks did you follow that new plan, or did you change back to the old method?—A. I changed back to the old method.

Q. Are these six checks the only ones that are entered on this new plan?—A. The only ones that I know of.

Q. You observe in large figures the number 21 on some of these checks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What does that mean?—A. I do not know; I presume it is a bank or a clearing-house stamp.

Q. Do you presume that it is the number of the bank in the clearing-house?—A. It is probably the bank-stamp.

Q. On these two checks, Nos. 2360 and 2361, which are indorsed "For deposit, Richard B. Irwin," you do not find it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you familiar with the book in which these are charged?—A. I am not.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. At the time you made out the checks, or at any other time, was it stated to you by an officer of the company what the object of this disbursement was?—A. It was not.

Q. That fact did not come to your knowledge through your connection with the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you examined to see whether these checks were charged up in the cash-book?—A. I have not examined for that purpose.

Q. What book is this?—A. That is cash-book No. 12, for the year 1872; it is open before me at the month of May, and at the date May 24th.

Q. State whether you see an entry there having any relation to these checks?—A. I do not; I see an entry of the several amounts of these checks.

Q. But charged against no account and no person named?—A. No, sir.

Q. And no indication whatever, except the mere figures of the amounts?—A. No, sir.

Q. What book is this?—A. That is the journal for May, 1872, on page 197 of which I find charges for May 24th.

Q. Do you see any entries upon that page of that book having any relation to these checks?—A. Yes, sir: $5,000, $10,000, $10,000, $25,000, $50,000, $650,000, amounting in all to $750,000.

Q. What name is in the margin?—A. "Eldridge and Irwin, agents."

Q. State whether the names "Eldridge and Irwin" were the original names entered, except in the last charge of $650,000?—A. The last charge is to "Harriott and Noyes, May 24th, $650,000;" the others are to "Eldridge and Irwin, agents."

Q. Were the names "Eldridge and Irwin" the original names entered there?—A. I don't know, sir; there appears to have been an erasure.

Q. Look particularly and see whether you can say positively that there has been an erasure.—A. There has been an erasure.

Q. Tell me if you know what was the original name entered there.—A. I do not know.

Q. By whom were those entries made?—A. I think these entries are in the handwriting of Leonard D. Walker, then assistant book-keeper of the company.

Q. Please look at that erasure against the light, and see if you can recognize any letters that indicate the original name entered there.—A. I cannot.

Q. Are there any other entries on those books in respect to these checks of which you have any knowledge?—A. There are none of which I have any knowledge.

Q. By whom were the entries made on the cash-book where only the figures appear and no names?—A. By Mr. John Roundy, the accountant of the company at that time.

Q. You mentioned the names of Harriott and Noyes, against whom the entry of $650,000 is made in the journal; did they have any connection with the business of the company?—A. They were brokers, to whom the company at various times made loans.

Q. Are they still in business in New York?—A. I understand they are.

Q. State the circumstances under which a check charged to the order of R. B. Irwin and indorsed by him could be charged against the firm of Harriott & Noyes.—A. By the orders of A. B. Stockwell, president of the company.

Q. What mode of business of the company, so far as you know, would have justified an entry of that sort—a payment being made to one party and charged to another not appearing in the transaction?—A. No mode, sir.

Q. No explanation has been made to you of the reason for charging that to Harriott & Noyes?—A. No explanation.

Q. Have you any knowledge of a transaction between the company and Harriott & Noyes at that time involving any such amount?—A. There were many transactions continually between the company and Harriott & Noyes or between Mr. Stockwell and them—loans made to them at different times—but I am not conversant with any other loan of that amount.

Q. Did the company, as a company, have business relations with them as brokers, or was it only officers of the company that had such relations with them?—A. The company, as a company.

Q. What did they do for the company?—A. The company, having a surplus of funds, made them loans when they applied to them, and they put up collateral, stock, and securities from time to time.

Q. In such cases they afterward returned the loans?—A. They afterward returned the loans and we returned the securities.

Q. Is there any entry upon the book of such a sum returned by Harriott & Noyes?—A. There is not.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any collaterals deposited by them at that time representing any such amount?—A. Of my own knowledge I have not.

Q. You did not see any collaterals representing this amount at the time the check was issued?—A. I did not, because the vice-president, Mr. Bellows, received and took care of the collaterals.

Q. Look again at the journal, page 197, and see whether there have been erasures in the column of figures.—A. There have been two.

Q. State what they are.—A. The footing of the first five checks now stands $100,000, covering an erasure. The other single check for $650,000 is extended into the second column, covering an erasure.

Q. Does that indicate that the entire six checks were originally carried out in one sum of $750,000, and afterward separated?—A. I think it does.

Q. So that the result is that the entry to Harriott & Noyes, under date of May 24, is carried out separately, and all the others entered against Eldridge and Irwin, agents, are carried out in a total?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you judge from the appearance of the ink whether the entry against Harriott & Noyes was made at the same time that the entries preceding and following it were made?—A. It is a very delicate matter to judge of, but the ink in the second entry above "Eldridge and Irwin, agents," appears to be blacker; but there is almost no difference that I can see.

Q. What do these figures preceding the names of the persons charged refer to?—A. The folio of the account in the ledger, to which the item is debited from this journal.

Q. [Ledger F of the books of the company here exhibited to the witness.] Please state if you see an entry on this ledger relating to either of these checks, and, if so, on what page.—A. On page 81 of the ledger I see an entry to Harriott & Noyes, taken from page 197 of the journal, debiting them $650,000, under the head of "loan-account." The date in the ledger is the 31st of May.

Q. Turn now to page 207 of the ledger, and state whether you find on that page any entry corresponding with charges made in the journal of the company to Eldridge and Irwin, agents.—A. I find on the 24th of May $100,000; it is from page 197 of the journal.

Q. Is anything further charged against Eldridge and Irwin, agents, representing either of those entries in the journal to which you have referred?—A. No, sir; I find nothing.

Q. The date of the charge against Eldridge and Irwin given in the ledger is May 24?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The date of the charge against Harriott & Noyes is May 31?—A. Yes; both appearing in the journal under date May 24.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do the books disclose whether Harriott & Noyes's account is closed or not?—A. They should disclose it. If the account is closed, there should be a credit opposite the amount debited.

Q. Will that book show it?—A. It should show it.

Q. Turn to the account and see whether it is closed or not.—A. There is no corresponding credit.

Q. So Harriott & Noyes stand to-day charged with that amount?—A. They do.

Q. They are debtors for that amount?—A. They are.

Q. The books of the company show that check to be a loan to Harriott & Noyes, which is still unpaid?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What claim have the company then upon Mr. Irwin for it—I mean according to forms?—A. I think the company have no claim on Mr. Irwin, sir.

Q. How is it that Eldridge and Irwin's account is not closed?—A. We have traced it so far: on this page (Ledger F, folio 207) there is a balance of $138,629. That is correctly carried forward to Ledger G; there is a balance to the debit of that account of $606,565.27. The agency was closed at that time, and a new agency opened, and of course the balance to their debit was carried into the account of the succeeding agency of S. K. Holman & Co.

Q. The account against Eldridge and Irwin was closed by carrying the balance against them into the account of their successors, S. K. Holman & Co.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the account itself was balanced in that way, as against Eldridge and Irwin, agents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Turn to S. K. Holman & Co.'s account, and see how it stands.—A. The same amount is debited there to S. K. Holman, agent.

Q. Have S. K. Holman & Co., agents, settled for it and balanced their books?—A. It is carried forward to Ledger H, folio 91.

Q. What does that stamp upon those two checks, numbers 2360 and 2361, indicate?—A. It indicates that those checks were deposited in the American Exchange Bank by Richard B. Irwin.

Q. There is no such stamp upon those other four, is there?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then the books of the American Exchange Bank would show to whose credit those two checks passed?—A. They should do so.

Q. If No. 21 is the number of the American Exchange Bank in the clearing-house association, and that number is stamped upon those other four checks, that would show, would it not, to whose credit in the American Exchange Bank those checks were put?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, if those marks stamped upon the checks are correctly interpreted, the accounts of the American Exchange Bank would show to whose credit those checks were placed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If this $650,000 check was an actual loan to Harriott & Noyes, it would appear upon the books of the American Exchange Bank to their credit?—A. Yes, sir; and with their indorsement upon it.

Q. The fact then that it does not have their indorsement upon it, goes to show that they did not have the avails of it?—A. It does.

Q. And the books of the American Exchange Bank will verify that fact?—A. They should.

Q. How often do the by-laws of the company require the agency of San Francisco to render accounts?—A. At the close of every month.

Q. Did the agents conform to the by-laws in that respect?—A. They did, always.

Q. What was the course of business upon their rendering the account?—A. They rendered their accounts for the whole month, with all the vouchers, every voucher signed by the agent, and a general account. That account was taken up by the company's accountant, analyzed, examined, and entered into the company's books; except such items as were on both sides the same, like a receipt from a purser or a draft, which were not necessarily entered in our books at all, because the transaction was closed; but all unclosed transactions were entered in the company's books. That is the course of business from month to month.

Q. Suppose there is any item in the account about which the company is not satisfied, what is the course of business?—A. The course is for the accountant of the company to write a letter stating the items and asking for an explanation.

Q. And the account is kept open until the explanation is satisfactory?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long were Eldridge and Irwin the agents of this company after the 24th of May, 1872?—A. Until the 31st of December following.

Q. At the end of each one of the subsequent months they rendered their account, did they?—A. They did.

Q. Do you know whether any item in any of those accounts was the occasion of any correspondence between them and the company?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any open account between the company and them as to any item of their account when they left the company's service on the 31st of December, 1872?—A. Only that item.

Q. Was that item a matter of correspondence?—A. Never to my knowledge.

Q. What I ask is, was there any item which, to your knowledge, was an open question between them?—A. No, sir.

Q. When they left the company's service was there any action of the company in reference to the character of their transactions and of their service; any commendation or disapproval of their service as agents?—A. There was no official commendation.

Q. Was there any by the president or any other officer of the company?—A. Not to my recollection.

Q. Is there an executive committee of the board of directors?—A. There is.

Q. Do they keep minutes of their proceedings?—A. They do; and their minutes form part of the minutes of the board.

Q. Who is the clerk of the executive committee?—A. I am the secretary.

Q. Have you those minutes?—A. I have not the minutes here, because the board of directors meet two or three times a week, and they are liable to call for them at any moment; but I have an attested copy.

Q. Are the doings of the executive committee of the board of directors brought before the full board of directors and ratified, or otherwise?—
A. They are; always at the first meeting of the board succeeding the meeting of the executive committee. The proceedings of the executive committee are submitted to the board and approved and ratified and adopted as the proceedings of the board.

Q. And there is a record of such action?—A. There is.

Q. Please refer to your copy of the minutes and state whether there was any action of the executive committee touching any expenditures for procuring the subsidy here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please read what that action was.—A. (Reading.) "Fourteenth February, 1872. Resolved, That the president, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to employ counsel and incur such other necessary expense as may be necessary in connection with the measures for additional subsidy now pending before Congress."

Q. That was the action of the executive committee on the 14th of February, 1872?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, if anything, was done at the next meeting of the directors?—
A. On the 21st of February, 1872, the minutes of the meeting of the executive committee on the 14th were unanimously approved, ratified, and adopted as the proceedings of the board of directors.

Q. Who were the executive committee?—A. The executive committee consisted of five members: Mr. Masterton, Mr. Stockwell, Mr. Smith, Mr. O. P. C. Billings, and Mr. Lockwood. They were all present at that meeting, except Mr. Lockwood.

Q. At that time, who were the directors of the company?—A. The directors of the company were Mr. A. B. Stockwell, Mr. James D. Smith, Mr. H. H. Baxter, Mr. O. P. C. Billings, Mr. Alexander Masterton, Mr. Henry Clews, Mr. George L. Kingsland, Mr. R. G. Rollston, and Mr. C. J. Osborn. There were present at the meeting on the 21st of February all the members of the board except the three last named. Mr. Bellows was at that time vice-president of the company.

Q. If this $650,000 check was passed to the credit of Mr. Irwin at the American Exchange Bank, and by him checked out, there would be no reason for entering it in the account of Harriott & Noyes?—A. Not unless Harriott & Noyes gave their check for the amount of the money.

Q. But this is a check payable to the order of Irwin. If he took it to the American Exchange Bank, where it was payable, passed it to his own credit, and himself checked it out, why should Harriott & Noyes have anything to do with it?—A. They should not have.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. State what you find on the stub of the check-book under date May 9, 1871, check No. 2252, drawn to the order of R. C. Parsons.—A. "To pay a draft through Jay Cooke & Co., $2,000." That is not in my writing; it is in the handwriting of a clerk in the office, named Charles Wyman.

Q. To whose account is that charged?—A. It is charged to the account of A. B. Stockwell.

Q. Turn to Mr. Stockwell's account, Ledger F, page 81, and see if you find it entered.—A. I find an entry in the loan-account charged to A. B. Stockwell, Pr., (which stands for president,) $2,000, dated on two days, apparently, the 9th and the 13th. I find an entry here in the cash, under the head of "loan-account," a debit on the 31st of May to A. B. Stockwell $23,481.52; that being, I presume, the amount of all the items of every kind during the month.

Q. Do I understand you that you find no entry in the cash-book of the $750,000 included in these checks?—A. Nothing except the entry in the cash-book of the amounts on the same date; no names.

Q. On the check-book, on the 11th of May, on the stub, I find a memorandum which please read.—A. "No. 2273, 11 May, 1872. Eldridge & Irwin, order of P. M. S. S. Co."

Q. What is the meaning of that?—A. That should be charged to Eldridge & Irwin's account, according to that stub.

Q. Was it an order drawn by them upon the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I don't recollect that, but it is apparently a check drawn to the order of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. I find a draft or a check, "A. B. Stockwell, loan, special, $20,000;" do you know in whose handwriting that is?—A. That is in my writing.

Q. Will you explain what is meant by "special"?—A. I can only state that I was ordered to enter it as special; for what purpose I don't know.

Q. What entry was made in the cash-book; to whose account was it charged?—A. It was entered in the cash-book "A. B. Stockwell, loan, $20,000."

Q. [Exhibiting a book to witness.] Does this check correspond with the stub for the check of $500,000 on the 7th of September, which you have spoken of?—A. I have not spoken of that check.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. Did Mr. Stockwell use the checks or funds of the company without accounting therefor at any time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did that frequently occur?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. On what occasions did you know him to so use the funds?—A. On one occasion only, when he ordered me to draw those checks to the order of Richard B. Irwin, amounting to $750,000.

Q. That was the only occasion on which you ever knew him to use the funds of the company for his own use without accounting for them?—A. I do not say that was for his own use; I say without accounting for it; I don't recollect any other occasion.

Q. You were present at the meeting at which the resolution was adopted, authorizing the president to employ counsel and incur such other expenditures as might be found necessary in Washington; was there any statement made on that occasion?—A. Yes, sir; there was a general statement by the members of the committee and the board; Mr. Stockwell was asked the question: "What do you consider necessary expenses?" "Well," said he, "five, six, seven, or ten thousand dollars;" that I recollect was the utmost sum that Mr. Stockwell mentioned as the probable expenditure arising out of the bill.

Q. Did he state what the character of the expenditures was likely to be?—A. The expenditures were to be for getting statistics from San Francisco and from all the ports of Japan, China, and India, tabulating them, having them printed for the information of Congress, sending a person here in charge of them, and keeping the public press informed in regard to the increased trade and commerce with those countries. In general terms, that is my recollection of what would constitute the expenses.

Q. Did any other member of the board indicate a necessity for a larger sum of money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it at the meeting of the executive committee or at the meeting of the board that approved the action of the executive committee that that statement was made?—A. At the meeting of the board which approved the action of the executive committee. At that time I was not the secretary of the executive committee; Mr. O. P. C. Billings was; he was one of the directors.

Q. Was there ever any report made to the board of the amount of money expended in that way?—A. No report was ever made to the board as to the expenditure of money, and, moreover, no report was ever made to the board of the appointment of the counsel which that resolution provides for. That resolution does not provide for the appointment of any agent; it provides only for the appointment of a counsel. The company's counsel at that time in Washington was Mr. Charles Abert. Mr. Stockwell never reported to the board the appointment of Mr. Irwin to act as agent for the company, and it never came up in the board officially.

Q. I understood you to say that the greater part of that $650,000 was repaid.—A. It does not appear to the credit on the ledger, where it should appear.

Q. Look at this check, No. 3023, for $500,000, dated September 7, 1872, and indorsed by Harriott & Noyes.—A. That check is drawn to the order of A. B. Stockwell; consequently it should be debited in the loan-account to A. B. Stockwell. It would appear by that that A. B. Stockwell was indebted to Harriott & Noyes $500,000, and that he paid it by the company's check, (perhaps by an exchange of checks, I don't know,) and that Harriott & Noyes returned it to the company to be credited to their loan-amount.

Q. How is it charged and credited in the book?—A. It is entered on the stub to Eldridge and Irwin, agents.

Q. See if it is charged to them and credited.—A. Yes, sir; it has been charged and credited.

Q. Having thoroughly examined the books, please give us the plain English of that transaction.—A. I cannot give you the plain English of what I don't know.

Q. Can you understand the books sufficiently to determine where that $500,000 went? What is the proper interpretation of the entries you find there in those books? Can you tell whether that money went to the account of the company or to the account of Stockwell; what use was made of it; I do not mean from your personal knowledge; I ask for the conclusion which you, as an accountant, have come to from such information as you have derived from the books.—A. I cannot see but it balances the account. It balances the account of Harriott & Noyes. It appears to be charged to the account of Eldridge and Irwin to balance their account. I only see these items now for the first time. I have not charge of the books in any way or shape, though I am an accountant.

Q. Does it appear to you, then, from the books, that it was a return to the funds of the company of any part of that $650,000?—A. Well, it was not an uncommon thing to exchange checks for the same amounts. Mr. Stockwell, in his various operations, would order a check to be issued for so much money, and would hand us another check for the same amount; that was in his transactions in the street, which I did not understand. It was not an uncommon thing at all for him to order checks to be issued in exchange for other checks. That check appears to have been issued to the order of A. B. Stockwell. Of course, if it stood in that way, it would be debited to A. B. Stockwell; but it is indorsed by A. B. Stockwell over to Harriott & Noyes, and by them indorsed back to the company. Now, if that check was received from Harriott & Noyes, then it is to the debit of Stockwell.

Mr. HATCH suggested to the witness that the indorsement, "for deposit," on this check meant for deposit in Harriott & Noyes' bank.

The WITNESS. Certainly, on its face it is a payment of $500,000 to A. B. Stockwell.

Q. Were Stockwell and Irwin intimate in their financial transactions at that time?—A. I think they were.

Q. Exchanging checks and so on?—A. I don't know that Mr. Irwin kept any regular bank-account. I don't know whether he did, or where.

Q. I mean in general business or in any special business?—A. I am not aware of such transactions between them to my own knowledge. I can state one thing from recollection, and that is this: Mr. Irwin informed me that Stockwell had offered him a call on thirteen thousand shares of Pacific Mail, and that he had refused it. I have forgotten the prices at which the offer was made; but he said he had refused it. That is the only transaction between them of any nature or kind that I know of.

Q. Did their kindly relations continue uninterrupted?—A. I do not know.

Q. Recurring to my first question: Do you know of Mr. Stockwell taking stock or bonds belonging to the company, selling them, and using the funds in stock speculations?—A. I do not know of his taking stocks or bonds and selling them, and using the funds in stock speculations; but I know of his having received bonds of the company to be used as collateral security.

Q. In his own personal transactions?—A. In what he claimed to be the company's transaction, and what was admitted to be the company's transaction.

Q. Not for his own personal transactions?—A. Not that I am aware of.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. Who was counsel for your company in Washington in May, 1872?—A. Charles Abert.

Q. Turn, in the check-book, to date May 15, 1872: to whom was the first check on that day issued, according to the stub?—A. "Check 2302, May 15, to Charles Abert. Charge Eldridge and Irwin $50,000."

Q. What is the interpretation of that stub?—A. I don't know; it is in my writing, but I don't know the interpretation of it; it was written according to orders.

Q. That check for $50,000 was drawn by you?—A. The stub is written by me, and I presume the check was.

Q. Have you any recollection by whose direction you drew that check?—A. By direction of A. B. Stockwell.

Q. What do you understand by the reading of that stub; for whose benefit was that check issued?—A. It was drawn to the order of Charles Abert; that is all the knowledge I have about it.

Q. To whom was it charged?—A. It was charged to Eldridge and Irwin, according to this stub; I have not seen the entry.

Q. Does not the stub indicate that the check was drawn to the order of Charles Abert?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why should $50,000, drawn on a check to the order of Charles Abert in the city of Washington, be charged to the San Francisco agency? What connection is there between the two accounts?—A. I don't know.

Q. Is there any possible connection between the two accounts?—A. There may be; I don't know.

Q. Can you imagine or state any reason why $50,000 on a check drawn to the order of Charles Abert, of the city of Washington, should be charged to Eldridge and Irwin, agents, at San Francisco?—A. I cannot, sir.

Q. Has any account been rendered to the company by Charles Abert, or by Eldridge and Irwin, agents, covering the amount of $50,000 included in that check?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Were there any accounts ever rendered by Mr. Abert, as counsel for the company, containing the items of his expenditures in connection with his position as counsel?—A. There were sundry items for years—not large amounts—at various times for services rendered to the company in Washington; services of various kinds; claims on the Departments, for instance, for the collection of which he charged a small commission; and if there were any expenditures in any way, he charged the expenses.

Q. Was any account ever rendered by him of an amount equal to that check?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. In May, 1872, were all checks drawn to the order of Mr. Stockwell alone, or did the executive committee exercise any authority over the drawing of the checks?—A. None that I know of.

Q. You were entirely under the control of Mr. Stockwell so far as the drawing of checks was concerned?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. FOSTER:

Q. What were those $2,000 paid to Mr. Parsons for?—A. I don't know, sir. The first time I ever saw it was to-day.

Q. Was there no account rendered by Mr. Parsons?—A. I don't know of any.

Q. Was he the attorney of the company?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did he ever render any account to the company for services?—A. None that I ever saw.

Q. You don't know of him then as the attorney of the company?—A. Not to my knowledge. I have heard that he had personal relations with Mr. Stockwell, but I don't know it. I don't even know Mr. Parsons.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know whether Eldridge and Irwin ever had any notice that any of these checks were charged to them?—A. They never had any notice from the company that I know of. As to whether they knew it or not I cannot testify; other witnesses may.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. Is Mr. Abert still counsel for the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where does he reside now?—A. I think in Georgetown, in the District of Columbia; he has a residence in Washington.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you counsel here in Washington now?—A. We have no regular counsel; we have an agent to attend to any details of business, Mr. William P. Tisdale, not a counsel.

Q. How long has he been here?—A. I should think about a year attending to business.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Where is Mr. Stockwell now?—A. I don't know, sir; I wish I did know.

Q. Is his place of residence a secret, so far as you know?—A. No, sir; not at all, so far as I know. I hear he is in Europe. I know he has large interests in Europe. He has a factory in Glasgow and a business in London.

Q. How long has he been absent from the country?—A. I don't know.

Q. It was stated by other witnesses that he ceased to be president of the company in May, 1873.—A. Yes, sir; he was president eighteen months.

Q. We were also informed, I believe, that he was largely indebted to the company when he ceased to be president, and I suppose that the company would feel an interest in keeping the run of him as well as possible?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is it a matter of doubt whether he is in the country?—A. I think not, sir. I have heard from every one who is acquainted with him that he is in Europe.

The WITNESS. I would like to qualify my testimony in one respect, as to our having now an agent in Washington. The gentleman is a clerk of the company that we send in any direction where we need his services—Central America, Mexico, California—and if we have any business in Washington we send him here.

Q. He is not consecrated to this Washington business?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. FOSTER:

Q. Do you know anything about a bill having been presented by a Mr. Corwine, of Washington, for legal services?—A. I know that Mr. Corwine wrote a letter making a claim against the company, and I know that claim was rejected. The company never employed him in any shape whatever, and I may be allowed to state that we have never employed Mr. Richard B. Irwin. A. B. Stockwell employed him. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company never employed him. That resolution that has been read here is the only resolution that has ever been adopted.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Authorizing the employment of some person?—A. Of counsel, sir. Mr. Irwin is not a lawyer. I have always looked upon Mr. Irwin as an employé of A. B. Stockwell, personally, not of A. B. Stockwell, president.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1

F. W. G. BELLOWS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your connection, if any, with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company now and during the time of this application for the subsidy.—Answer. I am not connected with the company at this time. My connection ceased in June, 1873, I think. My position before that was vice-president of the company, and I was chosen a director in May, 1872, and continued a director until the following May.

Q. You were vice-president of the company pending the application at Washington for a subsidy?—A. I was.

Q. Do you recollect the occasion of the draft by Mr. Johnson of the six checks which have been presented here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State all that transpired at that time.—A. Mr. Stockwell called me into his office and gave me a memorandum that he wanted those checks drawn, giving the amounts, and told me to direct the treasurer to have them drawn. I took them to him with the memorandum, telling him what Mr. Stockwell's orders were. The checks were drawn and brought to me by Mr. Johnson for signature, and I signed them. I am not sure whether I carried them to the president or returned them to Mr. Johnson, but at any rate they went to the president and then were brought back as having been erroneously drawn, and others, to the order of R. B. Irwin, were drawn in their places.

Q. Was it your business or that of the president usually to sign checks?—A. Both; but Mr. Stockwell rarely signed any checks or certificates or letters or anything. He requested me to sign them.

Q. How soon after they were drawn did you take them to Mr. Irwin?—A. Immediately, if I took them. I am not sure whether I took them myself or not.

Q. After taking them to Mr. Stockwell, you returned the checks to Mr. Johnson, to be drawn in a different form?—A. I do not recollect whether I brought them back to Mr. Johnson to be corrected, or whether Mr. Irwin brought them back.

Q. What was your next connection with the checks, if anything, after they were drawn payable to the order of Mr. Irwin?—A. I cannot state positively whether I handed them to Mr. Stockwell or Mr. Irwin.

Q. Do you know whether they were handed to anybody before the next day?—A. Yes, sir; my impression is that Mr. Irwin took them that afternoon.

Q. Did anything pass between you and Irwin at that time or any subsequent time, as to the form of the checks?—A. I have no recollection of anything.

Q. At any time did Irwin ask to see the stub-book?—A. Not of my knowledge.

Q. Do you remember of any private individual checks of Mr. Stockwell in the hands of Irwin?—A. He had some checks which were returned. Whether they were Mr. Stockwell's private checks or the company's checks to the order of Stockwell, I do not recollect.

Q. At what time did he return those checks? At the time these were given?—A. No, sir; I think it was before.

Q. How long before?—A. I am unable to state, because they were not returned to me; they were returned to Mr. Stockwell; but I should think it was a month or six weeks before.

Q. How came you to know they were returned to Mr. Stockwell?—A. He told me so.

Q. You have no personal knowledge of their being returned to him?—A. It is so long ago that I am not clear in my recollection as to it. I may have seen them in his hands, but I do not recollect.

Q. Can you state the size of the checks?—A. The checks which I refer to amounted to about $400,000 or $500,000; not all in one check.

Q. Do you know whether any other checks were given for them?—A. I do not know.

Q. Were those checks sent here to Washington?—A. I think they were.

Q. Did they come back from Washington?—A. I am unable to say whether they came back.

Q. If they were sent to Mr. Irwin here at Washington there was some letter accompanying them, I suppose?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Have you any letter-books which will disclose that fact?—A. There are the company's letter-books.

Q. Have you any recollection of writing any letter inclosing Mr. Stockwell's private checks to Mr. Irwin here at Washington?—A. No, sir, I have not; but I have a letter-book, and if I did write such a letter it is in that book.

Q. Do you recollect any correspondence between Mr. Irwin, while here at Washington, and Mr. Stockwell, either official or private, in respect to any checks previous to that of the 24th of May?—A. There was a private letter, which Mr. Stockwell had from Mr. Irwin. I do not recollect when it was.

Q. Was there any indication that the checks were not in amount what was agreed upon?—A. Yes, sir; I think he stated that they were not drawn for the amount which he expected.

Q. The purport of the letter was that they were not drawn according to the understanding?—A. I do not know the reason given. I think they were asked for by letter.

Q. Were those exchanged for other checks on the receipt of this letter from Mr. Irwin?—A. They were not sent back at that time.

Q. At any time?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Then you do remember a correspondence between Mr. Irwin, at Washington, and Mr. Stockwell, concerning certain checks which Mr. Irwin had received from Mr. Stockwell, complaining that they were not what he expected?—A. I would not say that it was in the form of a complaint, but saying that they were not what he had asked for.

Q. You say you think those checks may have amounted to $500,000?—A. I think the amount was $400,000, and that the amount asked for was $500,000.

Q. Was there any check among them for $110,000?—A. I do not remember the amounts.

Q. Do you remember anything about a check for $110,000 being returned and a portion of it remitted in cash, and the balance in another check?—A. No, sir. I think that $50,000 check you inquire about was drawn to Mr. Abert.

Q. You think the $50,000 was what is represented by the Abert check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then the Abert check would show by its date about when this conversation took place?—A. No, sir, not necessarily; because we may have held it for some time. It would show about the time of the return of the checks, but not the time when they were sent originally.

Q. Do you remember any one giving a reason to Mr. Irwin why these checks were changed, that it was because Mr. Stockwell was out of town and could not indorse them?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you remember through what bank they got cashed?—A. No, sir. I only know where Mr. Irwin kept his bank-account. It was at the American Exchange Bank.

Q. Were there any directions given you by Mr. Stockwell, when he ordered you to draw those checks, to have any of them charged differently from the rest?—A. No, sir; not at that time.

Q. He gave you a memorandum of so many checks to be drawn, and you first had them all drawn to his order, all alike; and they were taken in to him, and he directed that all of them should be made payable to the order of Richard B. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And all of those six checks were drawn at that time with no directions from Mr. Stockwell as to any of them being charged differently from what would appear on the paper?—A. No, sir; no directions at that time.

Q. When first, if at all, did Mr. Stockwell give any directions that any of them should be charged differently from what appeared on the face of the paper?—A. Soon after. The treasurer pro tempore said that it was within two days; and I know it was within a very short time.

Q. Do you recollect telling Mr. Johnson, when he drew the checks, that Mr. Stockwell would in a few days tell him how to write up the stubs?—A. I think I do.

Q. Mr. Stockwell gave you no intimation as to how the stubs should be written up when he directed you to have the checks drawn?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you think it was several days after that that he did give directions?—A. It was within a few days.

Q. When the checks left the possession of the company, the stubs contained nothing but a memorandum in pencil, A. B. S.?—A. I cannot say, because I did not see them.

Q. But there were no directions from him that they should be charged otherwise than their face would indicate?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you anything to do with the examination of the accounts of the San Francisco agency?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whose business was it to examine them?—A. The accountant's.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any open question in the accounts of the San Francisco agency at the close of Eldridge & Irwin's services as agents?—A. I think the objection was made by Mr. Irwin that there was $500,000 charged to the agency.

Q. What $500,000?—A. The check of September 7 for $500,000.

Q. You think there was an objection made on his part to that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it the subject of correspondence?—A. Not that I am aware of.

Q. To whom was the objection made?—A. I do not know that it was made to anybody other than Mr. Stockwell.

Q. In your hearing?—A. No, sir.

Q. You understand that it was made between him and Mr. Stockwell, but you do not know of your own knowledge?—A. Not of my own knowledge.

Q. You understand that there was some question about the propriety of that check of September 7, but of your own knowledge you know nothing on that subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any other item in that account, when they left the service of the company as agents, which you know was left an open question?—A. There was nothing that was left open. There were some charges which the company objected to, but nothing that was open.

Q. Anything in reference to those matters?—A. No, sir; other matters; fire-extinguishers.

Q. Nothing except that matter of fire-extinguishers?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was a transaction in Chicago?—A. No, sir; in San Francisco; they were sent from Chicago.

Q. Do you confirm Mr. Johnson's statement that the mode of transacting business with that agency was as he had stated it?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. At the time that Eldridge and Irwin went out of the service of the company as agents, their debit was charged over to their successors?—A. They were carried to balance the account, and the amount of the balance was debited to their successors.

Q. What is the interpretation of that?—A. That there were unsettled accounts between the agency and the home-office.

Q. Why should these unsettled accounts between Eldridge and Irwin and the home-office be charged to their successor?—A. For him to balance. They would naturally be so charged in the course of business.

Q. That balance covered in amount this $500,000 item?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the fire-extinguishers?—A. No, sir; they were not paid for.

Q. There was an account of $29,000 with vouchers, which was discussed?—A. That was not until afterward. There was such a voucher.

Q. What did the voucher relate to?—A. It covered sundry expenses in Washington, &c., for a term of months. It was signed by Mr. Irwin.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. It covered several months?—A. I think so. It was for various expenditures. I do not recollect the months it covered.

Q. [Paper shown to witness.] Please state if this is the voucher you refer to.—A. I think it is the one.

$29,053.46.

SAN FRANCISCO, November 30, 1872.

Cashier Pacific Mail Steamship Company pay to ———, or bearer, twenty-nine thousand and fifty-three forty-six one-hundredths dollars, and charge to account of Pacific Mail Steamship Company, for sundry payments on account expenses Washington, elections, &c., 1871 and 1873.

ELDRIDGE & IRWIN, Agents.

Q. State if there is a pencil-memorandum on this voucher, showing what was done with it.—A. Yes, sir; there is a memorandum on the margin of the receipt in pencil, "Charge to profit and loss." I do not know in whose handwriting that is.

Q. There were no details as to those items other than such as appear on that voucher?—A. None that I am aware of.

Q. That appears on the books of the company?—A. It appears in the San Francisco agency account as a debit to the home-office. I do not know how it is entered on the books of the company. I have not seen the entry.

Q. This, in addition to the six checks, embraces all the items that, so far as you know, have been in any way suspended in the accounts between the San Francisco agency and the company?—A. That check and the check for $500,000 are all that I have any knowledge of being disputed.

Q. You were a director of the company in May, 1872?—A. The last Wednesday in May was the day of the election.

Q. Were you present at the meeting of the board of directors when they ratified the order of the executive committee for the employment of counsel at Washington?—A. No, sir; the dates are wrongly stated. That was in February, 1872, and it was ratified immediately after. I was not chosen to the board until the following May.

Q. Had you any connection with the company before?—A. Yes, sir; I was vice-president, but not a member of the board.

Q. Were you present at the time of that ratification?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Have you any knowledge from the president, or from any officer of the company, of the object of this alleged disbursement at Washington?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no knowledge from Irwin of what disbursements were made here?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you know yourself whether the company had a counsel at Washington during the first few months of the year 1872?—A. Mr. Abert was the gentleman employed for various business, making collections, &c., and obtaining information which was wanted from time to time. I never regarded him as the counsel of the company; but he was the man that was always employed.

Q. He was paid by a salary?—A. No, sir.

Q. His accounts were returned for services, and when approved paid?—A. Yes, sir; he received a commission on the drafts which he collected. That was his compensation, except sometimes when we would send to him to obtain information from the different Departments and he would charge us a small fee, $50 or $100; but he would render his account always.

Q. Was he the only agent known to you as representing the company at Washington except Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it understood in the board or by the officers of the company that Mr. Irwin specially represented the company in Washington in connection with the subsidy?—A. Yes, sir; I do not know as it was understood by the board, but—

Q. Did you, as an officer of the company, understand that fact in May?—A. I did.

Q. Did you see any correspondence between Irwin and any officer of the company pending that agency?—A. I saw two or three letters to Mr. Stockwell, which he handed me to read. The correspondence, I think, was between Mr. Irwin and Mr. Stockwell, and was private, not official. I did not see all the letters.

Q. From that correspondence can you state whether the president of the company, Mr. Stockwell, was informed of the amount of the disbursements made, or required to be made, in connection with that matter?—A. No; as I have stated in reply to a question of the chairman of the committee in respect to those checks which were sent.

Q. You know of no other information in respect to those disbursements?—A. No, sir.

Q. Either as to the object of them or the amount of them?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. Do you know anything of the circumstances which attended the drawing of that check for $50,000, on the 15th May, to the order of Charles Abert?—A. I think that Mr. Abert came to New York and that check was given to him there. I think it was the time that the chairman refers to when one of those checks was returned and this was given in place of it.

Q. From your familiarity with the business of the company, can you give us any reason why a $50,000 check given to Mr. Abert, who was then a resident of the city and your counsel here, should be charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. That check and some other smaller checks, which were sent or given to Mr. Irwin, were charged to this agency, as Mr. Irwin was the agent at San Francisco; and until he had finished this business, they were charged to the San Francisco agency.

Q. Is that the only reason you can assign why that charge was made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you regard that as a reasonable excuse for making the charge in that way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then the charge, under the circumstances, does not strike you as a proper one to be made on the books?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has the attention of your company ever been called to that item heretofore?—A. I do not know, sir, since I left the employ of the company.

Q. During your connection with the company, was any explanation ever demanded with reference to that charge?—A. Not that I recollect.

Q. Has any account ever been rendered by Mr. Abert to cover that $50,000?—A. Not that I am aware of.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Was Mr. Irwin present at the time those checks were first issued to Mr. Stockwell and returned by him, and others issued in their place, payable to Mr. Irwin?—A. Do you mean the ones that the chairman first asked me about?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I think they were sent by letter.

Q. I inferred, from something you said, that Mr. Irwin was in the office at the time?—A. No, sir; I referred to the last ones which were drawn in May.

Q. I mean those six checks?—A. O, yes; he was then in New York.

Q. They were first issued by Mr. Stockwell, and then afterward, by his request, they were canceled, and others issued to Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Irwin was in the office then.

Q. He was in the office then in consultation with Mr. Stockwell?—A. I cannot say that he was in consultation, but he was there.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. Are you aware of Mr. Stockwell's ever having taken the stocks or bonds of the company and sold or hypothecated them to his own use?—A. No, sir; he took some stocks, but there was a question about it. He claimed they were for the use of the company.

Q. What were the circumstances attending that transaction?—A. The circumstances were that the company had twenty-six thousand and some odd hundred shares of their own stock, worth, at par, $2,600,000. The board of directors gave Mr. Stockwell authority to sell that stock at not less than par, and he commenced to sell the stock. There was a sale of 15,000 shares. There were 26,666 shares altogether, and the whole amount of money for the 26,666 shares was paid to the company. The money was paid in as the stock was delivered. Some time after Mr. Stockwell claimed that 12,000 shares, or nearly 12,000, (I speak in round numbers,) had not been sold; he had expected to sell it, and he took the Panama stock to margin that stock; it seems he was carrying it on a loan.

Q. What was the Panama stock?—A. The company's assets; stock which the company owned.

Q. What amount of this stock did he take?—A. 9,500 shares, worth at par $950,000.

Q. Did the company admit that the transaction was in that form and settle with him on that basis?—A. They settled with him, but they did not admit it. They settled with him and he secured the company. They would not admit that it was not a sale, because he had reported to the board that it was a sale, and they had got the money.

Q. He not only reported the sale to the board but he returned the funds, did he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of his having used the checks or funds of the company without accounting therefor?—A. I do not.

Q. Or in violation of the by-laws?—A. No, except in making expenditures of over five thousand dollars without the authority of the executive committee or the board.

Q. Then there was a regulation prohibiting the president from making an expenditure of over that sum?—A. Yes, sir; unless authorized by the board.

Q. Well, in view of that fact, how did you gentlemen come to give him checks for $650,000?—A. I suppose he had authority for that by the resolution.

Q. The resolution authorizing him to employ counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were a director of the company?—A. Not until May following.

Q. Were you present at the meeting of the executive committee, or at the meeting of the board, at which the question of meeting those necessary expenses were discussed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you or were you not aware of the fact that Mr. Stockwell had proposed at the time of the preliminary arrangement for these checks, amounting to $650,000, to use for these expenses five, six, seven, or at most ten thousand dollars?—A. No, sir; I never heard any sum mentioned.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I did not quite understand your answer in reference to the $50,000 check to Mr. Abert. What explanation did you give of the fact that a check to Abert's order was charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. Because the money which had been given or sent to Mr. Irwin was charged to that agency, he being the agent of the company at San Francisco.

Q. Mr. Irwin was at the time in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Abert was at the time in New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the check was given to him in person?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Abert was your attorney?—A. I do not think he was considered the attorney of the company, but he was employed by the company, as I have stated.

Q. Then when you were employing Mr. Abert here in Washington, why did you charge the money you gave to him to the San Francisco agency?—A. I suppose the fact was that Mr. Abert came for that money and took it back to Mr. Irwin.

Q. To be used in the San Francisco agency?—A. No, sir.

Q. To be used in what?—A. I do not know in what he used it.

Q. I did not ask you that. I asked you if you supposed that he took it back to be used in the business of the San Francisco agency?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you not suppose that he took it to be used in some way here in procuring the subsidy?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Didn't you understand that whatever was expended here for that purpose was for the time being to be charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this check, being as you supposed a part of that, was on that account charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Therefore whatever was to be expended here, it was understood in the beginning was to be charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. I do not know that it was so from the beginning, but I understood it so afterward.

Q. Do you understand that whatever was expended here in procuring the subsidy was charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. I think the most of it was.

Q. Do you know of any item of it which was not?—A. I do not call to mind any at the moment.

Mr. BURCHARD called the attention of Mr. Johnson to a check to pay a draft of R. C. Parsons, $2,000; was that charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you understand that that was used here?—A. I do not know anything about that, excepting the fact of its being paid.

Q. To whose account was that charged?—A. I heard Mr. Johnson read it—charged to the account of A. B. Stockwell, president, I think. I never saw the charge.

Q. The claim of Mr. Corwine, you say, has never been paid?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Are there any other items of payments on account of being at Washington on the book to your knowledge?—A. I cannot say without going over the books, but I think not.

Q. So far as you know, whatever was expended in procuring the subsidy here is found in the account of the San Francisco agency somewhere?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then do you know of anything, which was expended here in behalf of the subsidy, which is not in the San Francisco agency account?—A. I think there were some expenses charged to profit and loss.

Q. How much in amount?—A. I cannot say. I suppose $50,000 or $60,000.

Q. Then in addition to what was expended here in procuring the subsidy, and is in the account of the San Francisco agency, there is about $50,000 or $60,000 also in the profit and loss account?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If you saw the profit and loss account could you turn to those items?—A. I do not know whether I could or not. I might. I find one item "January 29, 1872, profit and loss, R. B. Irwin, Washington, expenses $25,000." I find another item; I do not know whether it applies to this or not, but I presume it does. It is a charge to "Mr. Stockwell loan, special, February 14, 1872, $40,000."

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of the expenditure of those items?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. Did you receive any vouchers for those two items to which you have just referred?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were any vouchers of any kind presented?—A. No, sir.

Q. The items were passed on the mere credit of Mr. Stockwell, the president?—A. They were drawn by the order of Mr. Stockwell, the president.

Q. When you testified that those large sums of which you spoke, charged to the San Francisco agency, were expended here, you meant to say simply that they were intended to be expended here?—A. I did not mean to be understood as expressing any opinion as to where they were expended, for I do not know.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Only you understood that to be the case?—A. No, sir; they were paid to Mr. Irwin. I did not know what was to be done with them.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. I understood you to say that it was your belief or supposition that they were for use here, though charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. If you understood me so, I did not mean so to state. I was referring to those items in the profit and loss account.

Q. But in your testimony some time since, in answer to Mr. Dawes, who put the question, why these amounts were charged to the San Francisco agency if they were to come here to Washington, I understood you to make that statement.—A. It was after the act had passed Congress. It was in May when those large checks were drawn, and I had no knowledge what was done with them. So you misunderstood me in reference to them.

Q. You knew they were coming here, however?—A. No; I did not.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. What did your answer refer to, the whole $750,000, or the $25,000?—

A. My answer referred to those two checks which were charged in the profit and loss account.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 18, 1874.

GEORGE S. SCOTT sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. State what relation, if any, you have held to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and during what period.—Answer. I have been a director of the company since May, 1873, and was elected vice-president last May, which office I now hold.

Q. Prior to May, 1873, you had no connection with the company?—A. None whatever.

Q. You had no knowledge of its affairs during May, 1872?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you been in Europe during the past year?—A. I have been in Europe during the past seven months.

Q. Did you, while in Europe, meet Mr. Richard B. Irwin?—A. I did, sir.

Q. Did you have correspondence with any officer of the company in New York, while you were in Europe, touching the affairs of the steamship-company?—A. Well, hardly on the question of the affairs of the company. I had a correspondence with an officer of the company in reference to the suit which they had brought against Mr. Irwin, but I do not think any question as to the business of the company came into it.

Q. Do you know for what sums or what account that suit was brought?—A. I did not know anything about the suit until I was informed of it by Mr. Irwin.

Q. Do you understand the suits to be for the sums alleged to have been expended in Washington?—A. Only from the case which the company made and swore to; that was the only information I had on the subject.

Q. You had a conversation in Europe with Mr. Irwin touching that suit?—A. I had.

Q. Did you derive information from Mr. Irwin in respect to the disbursements made by him or by the company in Washington?—A. None, whatever, sir. I declined entering at all on that subject.

Q. Didn't he tell you what the company was suing him for?—A. He did.

Q. What did he tell you they were suing him for?—A. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, if I recollect the sum correctly.

Q. Did he state further what that $750,000 was—what was involved in the expenditure of that sum—or any of the points involved in it?—A. None whatever, that I am aware of.

Q. Didn't he state to you what points of defense he had to that suit?—

A. Only generally; only his general line of defense, which he told me of, and which I candidly and cordially approved of.

Q. I do not want to ask you anything that he said about that suit, or about his personal relations with the company independent of the object of the alleged disbursement of that sum of money. If that statement which he made to you about his defense involved any statement respecting the disbursement of the sum sued for, then it connects itself with this investigation, and we will ask you to state it.—A. It did not, except by implication. The very fact of the company bringing a suit against him for a sum of money of this kind would indicate that the belief was that the money had been used by him improperly, or had been expended by him improperly, and only so far as that construction could be placed upon his conversation was there anything in it relating to his relations with this business.

Q. That does relate to the point. He stated to you that that money had been honestly expended by him, did he not?—A. I don't think he said anything directly bearing upon how it was expended.

Q. You say he told you his defense and you thoroughly approved of it?—A. Yes, sir; when I say his defense, I mean as between himself and the company. I should be glad to state what I refer to, if you will permit me to do so. Mr. Irwin, when he came to see me in Paris, informed me that this suit had been commenced against him, and showed me the bill of particulars, or whatever it might be termed, that the company had furnished him with. In connection with the statement which he then made to me, he first said that he had been in New York, had seen the officers of the company, and had had a full and, as he supposed, frank conversation with them upon this subject, and that they had not indicated to him that they were going to trouble him, but had afterward brought this suit. He naturally felt very sore upon the subject, and stated to me that he thought that it was very wrong to make him liable for the acts of his superior officer, in which I fully agreed with him. He stated to me that he had volunteered to furnish the board of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company with every information in his possession as to the disbursement of this money, and he repeated the offer to me, as he had done upon a previous occasion. I told him if that was the case, and he was ready to state to the company how it had been expended, and by whose orders it had been expended, I would be responsible that the board should appoint a committee that would be acceptable to him to meet with him after he returned to America, and hear what he had to say, and if his statement was correct that he was not responsible to the company for this expenditure, or, rather, that he had made the expenditure under the order of his superior officer, I believed that the board would not pursue him, but would look to the party who was liable for the expenditure. Accordingly, on my return to America, I called the attention of the board at its first meeting, which was held a week ago yesterday, to the statement that Mr. Irwin had made to me, and his offer to make this frank and free statement of the matter, and requested the board to appoint a committee, of which I, as mover of the resolution, would probably have been chairman, but of which I declined being a member, in consequence of my having had this interview with Mr. Irwin, and because I did not wish to have it supposed that I favored him in any way. The committee was appointed, consisting of Mr. Guion, Mr. Talcott, and Mr. Park, and Mr. Irwin was notified of it by the secretary, I believe, on Friday last. These are the circumstances connected with my interviews with Mr. Irwin.

Q. Did he state under what officer of the company his action had been taken?—A. Yes, sir; he always frankly spoke of Mr. Stockwell in connection with it.

Q. But you state now that he did not tell you the parties to whom the money was disbursed, or the objects for which it was disbursed?—A. No, sir; that was a subject that I never would discuss with Mr. Irwin, or with anybody; nor do I suppose that he wished to discuss it with me. It would have been eminently improper.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Why would not you discuss with him, or with anybody else, the question, what that large sum of money had been disbursed for?—A. For two reasons, Mr. Chairman: in the first place, the company had then brought a suit against Mr. Irwin, and I was a party to that suit; that is, I was simply an officer of the company abroad; I had no official connection with the matter.

Q. That would be a reason, perhaps, for not discussing it with him, but you said you would not discuss it with him or anybody else.—A. I mean anybody else who had been a party to this disbursement.

Q. Why would not you discuss it with any person who had been a party to the disbursement of the money?—A. To be very frank, I did not want to know anything about it, as these charges were brought against the officers of the company—as it was charged that bribery had taken place; I did not want to know it; I was not a party to it, and I did not want to know it.

Q. Was the reason that you did not want to discuss the matter with anybody because you had some suspicion about it?—A. I would rather you would not ask me that question.

Q. Well, I take it back; but it was a fact that you would not discuss the matter with anybody?—A. I always declined to do so.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Have you had any conversation with Mr. Stockwell on the subject?—A. I have, sir; in Europe.

Q. Did you learn from Mr. Stockwell, who was the president of the company at the time of the procurement of the subsidy, any fact connected with the means by which the subsidy was obtained?—A. None whatever, sir. Mr. Stockwell, upon one or two occasions, has discussed the claims that the company had against him; said that he did not know about it; that this matter was charged in and out of the books of the company, and God only knew where it went to, for he didn't.

Q. In his conversation, did he profess to be ignorant of the manner in which the charges were made in the books?—A. That was a point that we never discussed further than the remark that I have stated.

Q. But in that remark you spoke of charges. I supposed you referred to charges in the books?—A. No, sir; it was simply in relation to a settlement of his made with the company, arising from his misappropriation of some $1,000,000 of their securities; that subject has frequently been referred to by him and myself in conversation.

Q. Has not the subject of this subsidy been frequently mentioned?—A. No, sir; it has been carefully avoided.

Q. Nothing has been said to you by Mr. Stockwell in respect to the obtaining of the subsidy?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. Nothing has been said to you by him respecting his appearance or non-appearance before this committee in the winter of 1873?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. When seen, where did you last see Mr. Stockwell?—A. I saw him in London in the month of November last.

Q. What was the condition of his health?—A. Very good, I thought.

Q. How long has he been there?—A. I think he went last April.

Q. As far as you are concerned, you know nothing of the books or otherwise touching the disbursements made, or alleged to have been made, at Washington for the procurement of the subsidy?—A. Of my own knowledge I know nothing about it at all.

By Mr. KELLEY :

Q. You spoke of a misappropriation of the property of the company by Stockwell to the amount of a million dollars or more. What did you refer to?—A. I referred to the fact that he received from the treasurer of the company and its secretary upward of nine thousand shares of very valuable stock, which the company held as part of their assets—Panama Railroad stock it was. It would appear that these gentlemen, custodians of the property of this company, not only gave Mr. Stockwell, whenever he demanded them, any of its assets that he wanted, but gave him also all the money that he required for his own purposes. As the evidence presented before your committee shows, it was only necessary for him to demand from them the issuance of $600,000 or $700,000 of their money in checks, and it was done, without any questions being asked on their part how that money was to be applied. That was done in contravention of the by-laws and the charter of the company, I believe, and in contravention of the known usage of the company, the rule being that no officer has a right to expend over $5,000 of the money of the company without the explicit consent and approval of the board. There can be but one construction put on the part of these gentlemen—but one explanation of it—that Mr. Stockwell, an exceedingly arrogant man, would have dismissed them instantaneously from their positions if they had questioned his acts for a moment.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. If the board of directors expressly authorized Mr. Stockwell to expend, in his discretion, any amount of money, in what he deemed to be necessary expenses here at Washington, would not he be authorized to call for those checks?—A. I don't see anything in this resolution that could possibly excuse an officer of our company in furnishing a check or checks for any such amount.

Q. Does not your answer to my question depend upon the fact that you cannot see any necessity for such an expenditure?—A. No, sir. It is very clear what is meant by the "necessary expenses" mentioned there; it certainly does not mean bribery. The authority to employ a counsel and the "necessary expenses" are connected too closely for anybody to suppose that the board meant to give him a right to expend an unlimited amount of money here or anywhere else.

Q. I only wanted to call your attention to that view of it.—A. I cannot take that view of it.

By Mr. KELLEY :

Q. Go on with what you were stating about the 9,000 shares.—A. In addition to those large sums of money that were furnished to Mr. Stockwell on his demand, this enormous sum of money, amounting to nearly or quite a million of dollars, was also furnished to him by the officers of the company. The pretext that he set up, that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company were engaged in a stock-jobbing speculation, was too ridiculous to be sustained by him when he came to meet the board and make a settlement, and the settlement was made by his giving to the old administration, (not this one,) to this very board under whose acts and by whose authority he pretends to have spent all this money, a mortgage on his property, and notes, amounting, I think, to about $11,000. Some one or two of those notes were paid, and the balance went to protest; and then this administration of the board, finding that the mortgage was worthless, or nearly so, its validity in law being questioned, made a compromise which realized to the company about $480,000; so that the company really lost by this transaction of Stockwell's between $350,000 and $400,000, I should think, over and above the amount they realized from the compromise and the notes that he paid.

Q. Mr. Stockwell was a very large stock-operator at that time?—A. An enormous operator; probably the largest in New York; and his losses were said to be enormous.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know Harriott & Noyes?—A. Yes, sir; they were one of his principal brokers.

Q. Are they now in New York?—A. They are, sir; they are a very responsible and respectable house.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. They are gentlemen who deal for others, and not on their own account?—A. Yes, sir; brokers altogether.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. I understand that the accounts between Mr. Stockwell and the company were closed up by that compromise.—A. No, sir; we do not admit that at all.

Q. You claim to have further demands against him?—A. The position that I take—I can only speak for myself—is that this very large sum of money, which is unaccounted for on the books of the company, Mr. Stockwell is liable to the company for; and not only that, but anything else that we can find against him.

Q. I infer from what you say about the impropriety of his issuing checks, &c., without authority, that these large loans were in violation of his duty and his powers as president.—A. Well, hardly. It was the duty of the treasurer to see that if those loans were made there was proper security furnished; and I do not know that he was going beyond his authority in making those loans when the company had money on hand.

Q. If by the by-laws and usage of the company neither the president nor any officer can spend more than $5,000 at a time, he would not be authorized to make such loans, I suppose. Would not that be expenditure?—A. No, sir; not at all. That has been the habit of the company for a great many years: when they make a loan of one, two, three, or four hundred thousand dollars, collaterals to the amount of the loan and 20 per cent. additional are always pledged in the hands of the company for the money.

Q. Is that a custom or a law?—A. It is a custom which is law in Wall street.

WASHINGTON, December 18, 1874.

JAMES D. SMITH sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. State your connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and the dates covering the period during which you have been connected with it.—Answer. I was elected, on the 16th of November, 1871, as a director, and have since been a director of the company up to the present time, and am now.

Q. You were connected with the company, then, during all of 1872?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you present in New York and usually attending the meetings of the board pending the question of obtaining additional subsidies from Congress?—A. I was generally present.

Q. Were you present at a meeting of the board when the question of the action of the executive committee was up, in respect to authorizing some disbursements through an agent in Washington?—A. I think I was.

Q. State what took place at that meeting.—A. The minutes of the executive committee were read before the board, and were adopted and confirmed as the action of the board.

Q. Including that minute which you read here this morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any statement made to the board as to what disbursements were intended to be provided for under that resolution?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please repeat them.—A. It was stated first before the executive committee; I was a member of the executive committee and was present at that meeting. Mr. Stockwell stated in executive committee that we had a mail-contract measure pending before Congress, and that we should have to have some resolution passed which would enable the company to meet such legitimate expenses as we should have to bear, and Mr. Billings, who was also a member of the committee, (now Alderman Billings of New York,) offered that resolution, which was adopted; but before it was adopted, I asked Mr. Stockwell what he meant by necessary expenses, and said that I should not be willing to have that resolution passed unless I had some limit put to the amount. He said he meant that there would be hotel expenses in Washington; perhaps lavish expenses; he could not tell; and some little entertaining, and some counsel fees, in order to get this bill in proper shape. I said, "There is a resolution that you cannot spend more than $5,000, and if it ain't over that, you need not have the resolution passed." Well, said he, "we may spend five or six, but certainly not over ten thousand dollars." Those are the conditions on which I consented to the adoption of that resolution. These statements were made over again the subsequent week, before the resolution was approved by the board.

Q. Was there no communication made to the executive committee or the board, pending these proceedings in Washington, of the progress that was being made?—A. There never was.

Q. Was there any notice given to the committee or the board, or to any member of it, of the amounts as they afterwards appeared in checks?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was there no conversation in the meetings of the executive committee, or of the board, touching what their agent was doing?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. Under whose direction did you understand that all these proceedings in Washington, whatever they were, were going on?—A. Mr. A. B. Stockwell, the president, had the entire direction of the matter.

Q. After the subsidy measure passed, was no communication made to the executive committee, or the board, of the expenses which were incurred at Washington?—A. None.

Q. Either by Mr. Stockwell, or anybody else?—A. No, sir; it never was mentioned to the board at all, and I did not hear of it at all until a good many months afterward.

Q. Did the board or the executive committee institute any inquiry into it?—A. I don't think they did; I don't recollect of the subject ever having been introduced.

Q. How long after that was it before Mr. Stockwell went out of office?—

A. He went out of office in May, 1873.

Q. You never heard of any voucher among the papers he presented to any officer of the company touching the disbursements connected with Washington?—A. I never did, sir.

Q. Was any question ever raised touching the condition of the accounts of the San Francisco agency—any question as to any considerable sum?—A. There never was.

Q. Have you examined the entries in the books relating to this question?—A. I never have; I never have looked at the books at all, excepting the books of minutes. I looked over them to see where some resolutions were passed, to see what the resolutions were, and what my action was; but they did not refer to the subject of this inquiry. I don't know of any resolution that was ever passed or offered before the board having any reference to the subsidy, except the one which has been read before this committee to-day.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Didn't you ever inquire of Mr. Stockwell about the amount it cost to get the subsidy?—A. I never did.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. When was your attention first called to this subject of the alleged expenditure for the subsidy?—A. I cannot state exactly, but it was a good many months afterward. We were discussing with some of the large stockholders what we had better do with it, and the first I knew of it, I heard publicly on the street that there had been a large amount expended in obtaining it, and I went to look into it, and it became a question before the board that it should be looked into to see who was accountable for it. I forget the exact date, but the resolutions would show.

Q. What was the question that arose among you?—A. Well, it came out upon the street that Stockwell had in some way spent a very large amount of the company's money in obtaining this subsidy; about the date I cannot tell you. I think it was eight or nine months afterward—a good while afterward, any way.

Q. But what was the question among you; was it as to how the money had been expended, or whether so much had been expended, or what?—A. I think the first action was to refer the facts to the counsel of the company to see what we should do, to hold whoever had spent that money to a legal account, so that we should proceed in a legal, orderly, and legitimate manner.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did it afterward come before the committee appointed for that purpose?—A. My impression is that it was put in the hands of a committee. I would not be positive upon that point, but that is my impression.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. Then the sum total claimed to have been expended in this way was a surprise to the board of directors?—A. Utterly and entirely to every man of them. I have talked with every one of them, and there was not a man of them that ever dreamed of it.

Mr. THEODORE T. JOHNSON again appeared before the committee and made the following statement: I desire to make a brief statement to the committee. Since the 1st of January, 1865, I have had no charge of nor access to any of the company's securities. Prior to that I had from two to four millions of dollars continually under my charge and that of the president; but since the 1st of January, 1865, I never had possession of or access to the securities of the company.

Mr. S. D. SMITH. I would like to state, on behalf of Mr. Hatch, that he was mistaken when he told the committee that I was the only member of the direction of the company in 1872 who is still a member of the board. There was one other gentleman whom he did not recollect, Mr. C. J. Coborn, who was a member of the board then and is now. He was a member up to May 29, 1872, while all these proceedings were going on.

Mr. KELLEY. When you began that examination, Mr. Smith, was it specifically an examination relating to this alleged expenditure, or relating also to such transactions as Mr. Scott spoke of—the appropriation of the Panama stock and so on?

Mr. SMITH. It was relating to the money that had been taken by somebody for some purpose, but it was not regarded as having been taken for the subsidy or used in Washington at all. It embraced the sums said to have been expended here.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it also embrace this Panama transaction?—A No, sir; it did not.

The CHAIRMAN. It was confined, then, to this $750,000?

Mr. SMITH. Yes, sir.

Mr. RUFUS HATCH again appeared before the committee and said: Gentlemen of the committee: I am here at your request and by your order. You directed me to bring certain checks, and I have brought them. You asked me, after a public examination, at which Mr. Irwin's attorneys were present, to bring you the books and papers, and I did so. Now, as a witness that you have summoned, and as the only party here representing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, I have to ask you that when Mr. Irwin's testimony is taken, I may have the same privilege that his attorney had, of being present at the examination, so that I may know just what his testimony is.

The CHAIRMAN. I will tell you, sir, and the whole committee, just what the purpose of this subcommittee is in regard to that. When we have got done taking the testimony of Mr. Irwin in private, we will read it here to the whole committee, and to such other gentlemen as desire to hear it, and then any member of the committee can put to the witness any questions that they desire, or any questions that are suggested by any gentleman outside. It is, of course, proper that the whole committee should have the opportunity to put any questions they please to him, after having heard the testimony, which the subcommittee has taken, read publicly here.

Adjourned until Monday, December 21.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 16, 1874.

Dr. WILLIAM P. JOHNSTON came before the committee again and made the following statement as to the condition of Richard B. Irwin:

While I was here yesterday, Mr. Ordway handed me a dispatch from his assistant, stating that Mr. Irwin was much worse. On going up to his room I found that he had had a nervous chill and was very much excited; indeed, I thought, when I went into the room, that he was delirious. This condition of his seemed to have been caused by two dispatches which he had received. Supposing that they had come from Mr. Ordway, (although I afterward found that they came from his friends,) I telegraphed Mr. Ordway that no more dispatches should be sent to Mr. Irwin. In the course of the evening, however, he became very calm, and this morning I think he is decidedly better and fully able to come before the committee. He thinks so himself, but he thinks (and I believe it to be a fact) that, if he came before the committee, he would break down. He is very impressible—very easily excited. This injury that he received has unquestionably made him more so, and the moral causes have made him very impressible and excitable. If the committee would think proper to see him at his room, or to send a subcommittee to see him, and open the subject, whatever it may be, I think he will be able to stand the examination a good deal better to-morrow. If he were to come here to-day I could not guarantee that he would not break down. I think that what disturbs him more than anything else is what he calls the arrest and the contempt in which he is held. That seems to be really oppressing him more than anything else.

The CHAIRMAN. Would you advise that the committee go to his room and take his testimony?

Dr. JOHNSTON. I would, decidedly.

The CHAIRMAN. Either to-day or to-morrow?

Dr. JOHNSTON. I would prefer that the committee should go to-day. I rather think that he will be no better to-morrow or as long as this thing is hanging over him. I think he will be as fully able to make his statement to-day as he will be to-morrow.

The committee, after consultation, decided that a subcommittee should proceed to Irwin's room and take his testimony; and the chairman and Messrs. Kasson and Beck, having been appointed such subcommittee, immediately proceeded to Wormley's Hotel for that purpose, and there Mr. Irwin made the following statement:

Before the committee put any questions, I should like to make a preliminary statement, in order to purge myself of the alleged contempt. There seemed to be two grounds for my arrest by the committee—two grounds which formed, in the minds of the committee, the basis for the alleged contempt. The first was, that they had once summoned me during a prior session of Congress, and had looked for me and could not find me. Now, the first information that I received that I ever had been summoned was from reading Mr. Dawes's speech in the House the day after it was made. Until I read that I never knew that I had been summoned at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Well, it was not literally true that you had been summoned, but we had tried to find you.

Mr. IRWIN. I was at my residence in San Francisco from the 4th of June, 1872, until the 4th of September, 1873. I have lived in San Francisco since 1869, and have no other place of residence; and I was there from June, 1872, until September, 1873. I merely state that to show that by remaining at my place of residence I could not have been attempting to evade the process of the committee. On the 28th of January, 1873, I was thrown out of my carriage and seriously injured; my skull was fractured, and a very severe concussion of the brain followed. It must have been after that that the proceedings of this committee began. I was not allowed by my physician to see the newspapers for a long time, and I was in bed for a month, and therefore I do not know the date at which this examination began or anything about it; but I do know that I was at my residence at the time, because I was there from June, 1872, until September, 1873. Then the second ground upon which the committee was induced to believe (what I could not be very easily induced to believe) that I was attempting to evade the process of the committee was the assertion of Mr. Sage that he had had me arrested, which assertion I may just as well say here was not true. Whether he knew that it was true or not I don't know, but it was not true. I never was arrested by anybody until I was arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms under the warrant of the House, and my impression is that I never shall be arrested by anybody again. Then Mr. Sage so stated it in his testimony as to cause at least one member of the committee, Mr. Kasson, to believe that the Saturday upon which I was about to leave for Europe was in December——

Mr. KASSON. August.

Mr. IRWIN. In the debate, Mr. Kasson said, "The evidence before the committee is that after he returned from Europe he was going back on the steamer which was to sail on the following Saturday." Now, I sailed from New York for England on the 11th of October, 1873, with the full knowledge of all the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and I returned to this country in July, 1874, and remained here, in New York and San Francisco, until the 29th of August, 1874. On Monday, the 24th of August, 1874, I went to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and asked Mr. Sage, in the presence of numerous witnesses, including his secretary, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Rufus Hatch, the managing director, and Mr. E. B. Crowell, one of my counsel, whether he had anything against me; for if he had, I would like to explain it or to furnish any vouchers that the company wanted. It was a long interview, and I only state the essential parts of it. Mr. Sage said that he had nothing against me; that he had never said anything against me; that all the statements purporting to come from him were newspaper-rumors; and that he thought I was a very foolish man for taking any notice of what I read in the newspapers. I then said, "Mr. Sage, if you wish to find me at any time, here is my address. If the company wishes to see me, I shall be here until Saturday morning at 7 o'clock, when I sail on the Oceanic." Mr. Sage said, "We are extremely busy with the trial-trip of the City of Peking now, and we haven't time to look into the matter." Said I, "This is a matter that involves $300,000, or $600,000, or $750,000, or $1,000,000, or $1,600,000, according to your various statements; but whatever the amount is, it seems to be of sufficient importance to suspend the presence of one or two of the officers of the company from the trial-trip of a steamer; but if it should not be, I will wait until next week." He said he would not put me to that trouble; that he should then be very busy with the meeting of the Saint Paul Railroad Company. "Very well," said I, "I will wait a month." "It isn't necessary; I don't want this matter stirred up any more." Then, said I, "Mr. Sage, let me come right to the point at once: I will stay here all the rest of my life, if the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or any of its officers, have anything against me; but if it has not, I don't want you to go to blackguarding me in the newspapers the next Monday after I am gone." Well, they did come out in the newspapers, and did precisely what I told them they would do, and then I did what I also told them

I would do; I came back here for the purpose of destroying them—not for the purpose of destroying the company, for I have no grudge against the stockholders, and not for the purpose of destroying these men individually, but for the purpose of separating them from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, where they were abusing their trust for the purpose of persecuting me and deceiving the stockholders; and in the two weeks I was in New York I so far succeeded that Mr. Sage is no longer president of the company, and there is virtually a new directory, and he is also out of Panama, and those two interests are now at variance. I do not refer to Messrs. Scott, Alexandre, Guion, Fogg, and Talcott, who are highly respectable gentlemen, who have never injured me, and against whom I have no enmity, but to Park, Sage, and Hatch, by whom I have been persecuted for their own ends. Then your committee was induced by Mr. Sage to believe that they did not know where I was. He also told you that Mr. George Scott, the vice-president of the company, had asked him to keep on friendly terms with Irwin for the purpose of getting out of him what became of this money. Now, I will quote what Mr. George Scott said to Mr. Sage in a letter which Mr. Sage does not know that I have seen, but I will abstain from quoting the more decided language that Mr. Scott used to me in Paris. Mr. Scott wrote to Mr. Sage, “I protest against the action of the company as unwise, as likely to result in the destruction of the company, and as an unjust persecution of an innocent man. I further insist on my right to be heard as a director and as vice-president of this company, before the company takes any further action in the matter.” I said to Mr. Scott, “I am tired of this business, this child’s play.” This was all in Paris, in the month of October, 1874. Said I, “I am tired of this child’s play; I wish you would telegraph to Mr. Sage that I sail for New York on the Adriatic on the 12th of November.” Said he, “What is that for?” I said, “I don’t want them to say that they did not know when I was going to arrive there, and that that was the reason that they could not arrest me. I want them to know all about it, and for that purpose.” He said, “I will do it.” And he went right around to the telegraph-office, wrote the telegram, showed it to me, sent it, and paid for it himself. The Adriatic was injured by the collision with the Parthia in New York, so that she could not leave Liverpool at the time appointed, and I and all the other passengers were compelled to lie over for the Celtic, which sailed on the 19th of November; of which fact I immediately notified Mr. Scott in London before he sailed. He sailed from London in the Algeria on the 21st of November, having previously requested me to call at his office, No. 36 Broad street, immediately after I arrived in New York. I arrived in New York on Monday, the 30th, and went directly to the Hoffman House, where I always stay in New York. My name was registered there and appeared in all the newspapers. I then went to my father-in-law’s place at Englewood, New Jersey, leaving my address at the Hoffman House, and remained there until Friday morning. The following Friday I again came down to New York and went to the Hoffman House again, and my name being again registered, it appeared a second time in the newspapers very publicly. For instance, one of them had it in this way: “Speaker J. G. Blaine, and R. B. Irwin, of San Francisco, are at the Hoffman House.” It is proper to say, parenthetically, that I did not see Speaker Blaine there, nor know of his being there, until after he was gone; but I merely mention that my name was announced in this way to show how public it was. Mr. Whitelaw Reid, the editor of the Tribune, and Mr. L. J. Jennings, the editor of the Times, were personally aware of my address during almost the whole of this period. Everybody else in New York that knew me, or had any occasion to see me, knew where I was, particularly the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, with whom I had various communications after Mr. Scott's arrival, and from whom I received, just before I received the subpoena of the committee, this letter with this address:

[Mr. Irwin here exhibited an envelope addressed "Col. Richard B. Irwin, Hoffman House," and marked "Immediate;" and also the letter contained in it, which was read as follows :]

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,
New York, December 10, 1874.

DEAR SIR: The board of directors this day directed that the suit against you be postponed, and appointed a special committee of three to meet you and hear your statements pertaining to the questions involved. The chairman requests me to inform you that the committee will meet you upon this business at any hour of the day you may name between now and next Tuesday.

Yours, very truly,

THEODORE T. JOHNSON,
Secretary.

I received that letter late on the evening of its date, December the 10th, and the next morning I sent to Mr. Scott, the vice-president of the company, a message requesting him to call at the Hoffman House on his way down. He did so. I asked him, referring to a previous conversation, whether Trenor W. Park was still a member of the board of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and he said he had handed in his resignation. I said, "All right; that saves me the trouble of asking for that." I then asked him if Rufus Hatch was still managing director, and he said he was. I then said, "I believe I have heretofore remarked that I would not meet any board of which Trenor W. Park and Mr. Hatch were members; but as he will be out in about ten days, and there is no hurry about this matter, we can postpone it. So then, having been served with a subpoena of the committee, I wrote the following letter:

HOFFMAN HOUSE, September 11, 1874.

DEAR SIR: Your valued favor of 10th reached me at a late hour last evening and the contents have my respectful attention. Kindly say to the chairman that I trust he will not consider me discourteous in stating that other engagements beyond my control will necessarily defer my meeting the committee for a few days to come. When those engagements permit I will promptly communicate with your good self.

Meanwhile, I remain yours, respectfully,

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

THEODORE T. JOHNSON, Esq.,
Secretary P. M. S. S. Co.

Then the day before I got this, feeling that our fight with the company was substantially won, my nervous system, which up to that time had been kept up by the excitement of the occasion, broke right down. There was nothing more to keep it up. I didn't know of these proceedings in Washington, or it would probably have kept up longer, but it broke right down, and then I began to receive these telegrams and messages, which I did not understand at all, because it never occurred to me that the committee, or anybody else who knew the facts, (as I thought the committee did, though I have since learned that they did not,) would suppose for a moment that a man who had just come from Europe to meet this thing would immediately run away to dodge it; and, further, I did not think that anybody who knew me would believe that I would ever think that the world was large enough for me to run anywhere to dodge anything. I saw of the appointment of the Ways and Means Committee to investigate this matter in the papers, I think it was on Thursday morning, but there was an editorial paragraph in the Tribune some days previously, stating that Irwin was at the Hoffman House; that if the committee wanted him they could find him there; which notice was the result of a personal interview between Mr. Whitelaw Reid and Mr. Irwin, at Mr. Reid's residence. He asked me then to come down and testify, and I said I would. He also asked me to tell him what I was going to say, but I never crossed a stream before I got to it, and I wasn't going to do it at that interview. He told me they would force me to do certain things, and I told him we had better wait until they had got to that point. Now I think I have said enough to satisfy the committee that I have made no intentional attempt to evade its summons. If I did not come immediately on receiving the first summons, it was because it did not occur to me that the committee would think I was going to run away, and knowing how many witnesses they had subpoenaed, I did not think they would need me until Tuesday, and in the meanwhile I wanted to see the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to know what their case was against me, because, although they have howled in the newspapers about me, yet whenever I have seen them they have never had anything against me. The "other engagements" that I referred to in my letter to the secretary, Mr. Johnson, was merely this engagement here, which has proved to be more pressing than at the moment I expected it would be. I will add that I have instructed Mr. Center, who is my right-hand man in this business, to take these rooms until the 4th of March. I am going to stay here until this fight is over—I am going to stay here during the war.

Mr. IRWIN was now sworn as a witness, but before any questions were put he said: I wish to make a preliminary statement. Since I came down here I have had no opportunity whatever to consult my counsel. I would not ask for an opportunity to consult my counsel on any question before the committee, were it not for the fact that there is a suit for $750,000 pending against me in the city of New York, and I wish to have an opportunity of consulting him with special reference to that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. When we put a question that you desire to consult him about, then that point may come up.

Mr. IRWIN. I wished to say this in advance, so as to be perfectly frank with the committee. Further, I will say that I have sent to San Francisco and to New York for my different bank-accounts and papers, and as soon as they arrive here I shall be able to answer any questions of the committee, if I decide to do so, much better than I can now.

Mr. KASSON. It may be that we shall not put any questions that will conflict at all with your interests in that suit.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Have you ever been in the employ of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; if so, when did that employment commence, and when terminate?—Answer. It began in October, 1864, and terminated on the 31st of December, 1872.

Q. What was the character of that employment, in general terms?

Mr. CHAPMAN, (of counsel for Mr. Irwin.) Now, if the committee please, I object to Colonel Irwin's answering that question until he can have an opportunity of consulting with his counsel. One of the main issues in the civil suit now pending against him in the supreme court of the city of New York is as to the nature and character of his employment by that company; and further, as I understand it, a portion of his employment was in the form of a written appointment; the other portion I don't know the nature of so as to be able to state it.

The CHAIRMAN. O; I think that Mr. Irwin can trust himself to state what his employment was.

The WITNESS. I will state a portion of my employment not involving anything as to which there is any question.

Mr. BECK. Before he goes on, would it not be well for the committee to say that it is only when the witness himself feels that a question is put to him that he cannot answer that it is proper for counsel to interject objections during his examination?

Mr. KASSON. Not only that, but I suppose that in the courts of New York Mr. Irwin is subject to examination, even in a suit where he is a defendant, and therefore there is no question of law arising.

The WITNESS. I am going to be guided by Mr. Chapman's objection, so far as it goes. I was assistant accountant in the company's office in New York from the time I first entered it until the autumn of 1865, except during two months, when I was off duty; and I was assistant agent at San Francisco from the 11th of June, 1869, until the 16th of December, 1869. I was one of the agents of the company at San Francisco—a member of the firm of Eldridge & Irwin, who held the agency of the company—from the 16th of December, 1869, to the 31st of December, 1872; besides which I had another and separate employment from the company, under a special contract, during the year 1872.

Q. Were you in the employ of the company in any capacity except what you have stated, and under this special contract, during the time covered by your last answer?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you been in the employ of the company in any capacity since that date?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you state to the committee what was the character of your employment under this special contract?—A. Yes, sir; I was to come to Washington and get that subsidy for them.

Q. How much time did that contract cover?—A. Five months; beginning in January, 1872, and ending in May, 1872.

Q. Where was that service performed?—A. In Washington and New York.

Q. As general agent, you were a partner with Eldridge?—A. I was.

Q. All the time that you were general agent?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the character of your duties as general agent?

Mr. CHAPMAN. That is in writing.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not—

A. We had the general management of the business of the company's steamship-lines running to and from San Francisco; we were, under a written contract, the agents of the company at and near San Francisco. This special contract also included the general agency of the company on the Pacific Ocean from Panama to Hong-Kong, and the general management of the business of the China line, including the supervision of the Asiatic agencies. Those were the terms of the contract.

Q. Did it include receipts and disbursements to that point?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had any one else authority to receive and disburse at San Francisco?—A. No, sir.

Q. The entire business of that character was under the control of Eldridge & Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the business which you transacted for the company terminate when this special contract began?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did your business as general agent cease?—A. On the 31st December, 1872.

Q. And your business as special agent under the written contract began when?—A. I was not special agent under that written contract I was not an officer or agent at all under that contract.

Q. What was your compensation as general agent?—A. I received $10,000 in gold and certain commissions outside of that.

Q. You or the firm?—A. I, personally. The salary of each of the agents was fixed under an independent contract between himself and the company; all receipts outside of that were divided.

Q. With whom did you settle your accounts as agent at San Francisco?—A. With the head office of the company, in New York.

Q. In what manner did you make those settlements?—A. We forwarded, shortly after the end of every calendar month, an account-current, accompanied by vouchers in detail, made up to include the last day of the preceding month. When they took any exception to any item of the account, they notified us; and when they did not so notify us, we took for granted that the accounts were right; and they were written into the books in the New York office from those accounts.

Q. How often did you balance accounts with the company?—A. I do not think we ever balanced accounts with the company in the sense of an actual discussion of the accounts. It was always taken for granted that the accounts were right in every respect in which, during the next month, they failed to take exception to them.

Q. Have your accounts as agents been balanced?—A. My impression is very strong that they have been. We have never heard to the contrary.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge of that fact?—A. No, sir. When we left the agency, on the 31st of December, 1872, we took from our successor, who had been previously our assistant, a receipt in full for the amount of cash due the company as per our balance, and for all other cash in our hands, because we were not only the agents of that company, but also of other companies.

Q. Has your firm any evidence of a settlement between you and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir; none other than the fact of their never having taken any exception to our accounts.

Q. You have no voucher indicating the fact of a settlement?—A. We forwarded that receipt, and when they did not object to that, we took it for granted that that was final. That is the way that those accounts with agents have always been settled from 1849 up to the time when I left the company.

Q. Have your firm in your own possession any evidence that you stand acquitted of any charge as agents of the company?—A. None, other than the fact that no exception was taken to that receipt.

Q. Have you ever, yourself, since you ceased to be agents, seen your account with the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. What were the terms of your special contract with the company to come here and prosecute the passage of the subsidy?—A. In general words, the terms of that contract which was made between Mr. Stockwell, the president of the company, and myself, he acting under the authority of the board of directors, were that I should come to Washington and get that subsidy for them—that could be made longer, but it is just as well to make it short—and that they were to pay me for my services a gross sum, which gross sum I was to state at a certain period before the completion of the service; and that contract was carried out by them.

Q. When was that contract entered into between you and Mr. Stockwell?—A. That is a difficult question to answer. It was entered into at various times.

Q. But when was it reduced to writing?—A. It was never wholly reduced to writing. It was partly in writing and partly verbal, and its terms were settled, and re-adjusted, and finally settled, at various periods between the middle of January, 1872, and the latter part of May, 1872, and were finally adjusted at the time when this payment was made.

Q. Was there any period in which it was a contract in writing between you?—A. Yes, sir; but it was afterward modified in regard to the amount.

Q. But was there any period when it was a written contract?—A. There was.

Q. When was that period?—A. That I cannot tell without referring to the letters. Just allow me to read these letters in answer to that question:

OFFICE OF PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,
New York, February 1, 1872.

DEAR SIR: Yours of the 31st to hand. I am sorry to hear you are so indisposed, and hope to hear soon of your entire recovery.

I am satisfied that you are better posted on what it is necessary to do in our matter than any one else, and I will therefore trust it entirely to your judgment. The most important thing with me is success, and I want nothing left undone to secure it.

Please write often.

Yours, respectfully,

A. B. STOCKWELL.

R. B. IRWIN, Esq.

In reference to this letter, I have only to say that the subject of the contract, and the amount, had not been discussed up to that time.

On the 14th of February, 1872, I received from Mr. Stockwell the following communication:

“OFFICE OF PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

“Very respectfully, yours,

“A. B. STOCKWELL.

“RICHARD B. IRWIN, Esq.”

In reply to this, I stated to Mr. Stockwell that my understanding was $500,000 instead of $250,000, and that I should, at the proper time, call upon him for his checks for the additional amount. On the 5th of May I received the following communication from Mr. Stockwell:

“OFFICE OF PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

“DEAR SIR: Yours of the 3d to hand. We are much encouraged by the result of yesterday, were it not for the demands of to-day. When we were defeated in the 'House,' you said to me there was some good to come of it; that if we did get our bill 'twould cost less. I don't think it wise for the company to give their checks in this matter. Notwithstanding, I now inclose the four checks for $100,000 each, as your desire; but if they must be used, I would prefer my checks to be substituted for these, but, as I say above, I send them because I want to do everything to insure success. Of course, you will return me my checks for $250,000, previously sent you.

"Yours, very respectfully,

"A. B. STOCKWELL.

"Mr. R. B. IRWIN."

Indorsed upon that, in pencil, in my writing, I find three notes. One is, "Answered May 6." Then, as I kept no copies of my correspondence, and never have done so when away from my clerks, I made two memoranda in pencil opposite the different paragraphs of the letter, which indicate to me the character of my answer.

Opposite the paragraph in relation to what he says I said about some good to come of it, I find a memorandum "No," which means that I did not say so; and opposite the paragraph in which he says, "of course, you will return me my checks," I find another memorandum "No!" with exclamation-mark, meaning that I was not going to return them, and did not return them. These letters are in Mr. Stockwell's own handwriting.

Q. That written agreement was subsequently modified verbally?—

A. Only in regard to the amount.

Q. When was the first modification of that written agreement as to amount?—A. That I do not remember.

Q. Was it ever modified in writing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it modified as to amount more than once?—A. Well, I ought to say here that it was never made perfectly definite as to amount until the latter part of May, 1872. In other words, the substance of the contract, which was partly in writing and partly verbal, was this: that I was to pay for the services of all those whom I employed to assist me in the matter, (for of course the company supposed I must have some one to help me;) that I was to pay for all those services; and that, when I knew how much it was going to cost, I should specify how much that would be, and the company would then decide whether to go on with it; and that decision was finally made, and the contract consummated at the time that money was paid, $750,000 I believe. I am not sure about the amount, but they call it $750,000, and for the sake of argument we will call it $750,000.

Q. Do you mean to say that the company was to decide, when you told them how much it would cost, whether they would go on with the application for the subsidy or not?—A. There was no express understanding to that effect.

Q. Was that what you meant in your last answer?—A. Yes, sir; I mentioned it because, until the amount was definitely fixed, of course there was nothing by which the company was bound in the matter; and as a matter of fact, at the time when I stated to them the amount which it was going to cost, I not only offered to release them from the whole thing, and return to them all the money which had previously been expended, but I also urged them, as I had done before they went into the thing, to drop it.

Q. When the amount was ascertained, were you paid by check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The check will show the date, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you spoke of the amount of this check a moment ago?—A. The amount of all the checks I only remember by the statement made in the complaint against me by the company; and I stated the amount from their testimony, subject to correction when I see the checks. My impression is that the amount is substantially correct; but, of course, I would not like to swear to anything that I do not know.

Q. It is stated by the company to be how much?—A. It is stated by them to be about $750,000.

Q. And you believe that to be correct?—A. I believe that to be correct.

Q. That sum was to embrace your own personal services and your expenses?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What expenses were you to incur here?—A. It was to cover all expenses incurred here.

Q. Your personal expenses while living here and pressing this application for a subsidy?—A. Yes, sir; and my personal expenses in New York, my traveling expenses to and from San Francisco, and the services of all persons employed by me, and I was to protect the company against any claim which might be made by those persons directly.

Q. Did all the money paid out by the company in securing the passage of the subsidy pass through you?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Was it understood that it was to pass through you?—A. That was the agreement between Mr. Stockwell and myself. The agreement was that I was to have entire charge of the matter. I, of course, continued all the arrangements previously made by Mr. Stockwell as president so far as they were communicated to me, and employed all persons whom he afterward directed me to engage. * * * *

Q. This $750,000, if that is the right sum, covers those expenditures by you?—A. Yes, sir. Wait a minute. I understand you by the word "covers" to mean to ask me was it all.

Q. I do not mean that. Does that sum cover anything else?—A. It covers nothing else but what I have stated.

Q. It covers nothing but money expended by you in obtaining the passage of the subsidy?—A. That and my personal expenses.

Q. You mean that it covers nothing but those expenditures and your personal expenses in that matter?—A. No; it covers all my personal expenses in New York and in Washington, and my traveling expenses to and from San Francisco.

Q. You mean your personal expenses in and about the matter of the subsidy?—A. It covers all, sir. It was understood that if I came here I was to have all my expenses paid.

Q. I want to understand whether it covered your personal expenses in anything not connected with this matter?—A. I virtually had nothing else to attend to, but whatever expenses I did have, they paid.

At this point, Mr. Irwin, who had previously warned the committee that he was too ill to be examined much longer, said he was unable to go any further, and the examination was suspended, with the understanding that it should be resumed at 10.30 o'clock a. m. on Thursday, the 17th, unless he should then be so ill as to render it dangerous, in the opinion of his physician, to proceed.

WASHINGTON, December 17, 1874.

The WITNESS. Before you proceed with the examination, I wish to make a slight correction in my testimony of yesterday. I stated that my employment in connection with the subsidy matter extended over five months, from January to May, 1872, inclusive. Without any qualification, that would convey rather an erroneous idea. I was really employed by the company upon this special business at various periods between 1869 and 1872; that is to say, during each of the sessions of Congress, 1869-'70, 1870-'71, and 1871-'72. I had previously to that time had the entire charge of all the company's Washington business, from the year 1865 up to 1869, so that in fact I had continued charge of the company's Washington business, in whatever capacity I was employed by the company, whether in New York or in San Francisco, from 1865 to 1872, inclusive, and it was always a special employment. I originally undertook this subsidy business at the earnest request of the former president of the company, Allan McLane, who was not only my warm personal friend, but my benefactor. I was under greater obligations to him than to any other living man, and I served him as I never would serve any other living man, and never can again; with my whole heart. He had only to call on me to do anything and I was ready. When Mr. McLane offered me the San Francisco agency, which I think was in April, 1869, my principal inducement to accept it and go to California, where neither I nor my family at that time wished to live, was to escape from this very Washington business, and I so stated distinctly at the time. In December, 1869, my first intimation that this business was coming up again was received, in the form of a telegram from Mr. McLane, requesting me to come to New York. On my arrival here, in January, 1870, I found that Mr. Robert McLane, his counsel, and Mr. Phelps, one of the company's vice-presidents, had caused to be introduced in Congress a bill to increase the China mail-service, by direction of the company, and that they had got just so far with it and could not get any further, and didn't know what to do, and Mr. McLane asked me to come to Washington and take charge of it. After coming to Washington I represented to him that I did not believe any such bill could be passed through Congress, and we spent the whole of that winter substantially in reconnoitering the ground and doing nothing else. That was the winter of 1869-'70—from January to June, 1870. On leaving New York in August, 1870, I again urged Mr. McLane, as I had done previously, to abandon this subject and, whether he abandoned it or not, to relieve me from any further connection with it. He promised to reconsider the subject, but decided to continue it, and I was again called East in November, and remained in Washington and New York the whole of the succeeding session of Congress, 1871-'72, during which session again we did very little except to review the position and make some slight formal progress with the bill. In April, 1871, just before I returned to my home in California, I had a long and earnest private interview with Mr. McLane, in which, after soliciting his undivided attention, I submitted a number of points which struck me as being of the highest importance to the company's interest. One of them was the abandonment of the Panama line, another the re-organization of the company's Asiatic agencies, and another the abandonment of this subsidy matter. I represented to Mr. McLane that, in my opinion, it would cost at least $500,000 to pass this bill, and that it would cost a large portion of that sum to try to pass it, even if it failed, and I urged him to consider whether, first, if we succeeded, it would be worth what it cost; secondly, whether he could afford to take the responsibility of failure; and, thirdly and chiefly, whether it were not better for the company, even if they should get this bill passed without spending any money whatever, to drop it, and to go over to England, build their ships there, and run them under the English flag, if Congress should refuse to nationalize those ships; the question of the flag being one entirely for the Government to consider, and the only question open for the merchant to consider being the question of profit and loss. I represented what I then believed and now believe, that our ships could be built so much cheaper in Great Britain, and that, when we considered the fact that, owing to the greater perfection of English ships and machinery, we could perform with two steamers the work of three, the balance of the profit and loss account at the end of the year would stand better with those English ships without a subsidy than it would with American ships with a subsidy, even if that subsidy cost us nothing. I referred Mr. McLane, at his request, to two or three or four gentlemen who could substantiate my estimate as to the amount that the passage of this bill would cost. I urged him to think over the matter during the recess of Congress, and talk it over with his brother Robert, with whom I had previously fully discussed the question, and who I believe entertained the same opinions that I did, he having been with me here in Washington as my counsel. Mr. McLane did not seem to be at that time so fully impressed with the difference in cost and economy between English and American ships, but I suggested that he should send to England Captain Baby, or some other expert in whom he had confidence, to examine the subject, and get plans, specifications, and estimates. Some time during the succeeding autumn I received a private letter from Mr. McLane, stating that he had fully considered this question, and had decided to adopt substantially this policy, and in pursuance of it had sent Captain Baby to England for the purpose of getting plans, specifications, and estimates, and that he should drop the subsidy-matter entirely; and, as a matter of fact, Captain Baby was sent to Europe to do this work, and did it. In November, 1871, by a stock-combination, an entirely new board of directors was elected, and Mr. Alden B. Stockwell was made president. He immediately decided, as he informed me in January, 1872, to renew the subsidy-question, and, in accordance with that decision, although without my knowing the reason at the time, he wrote early in December to Eldridge and Irwin, stating that he would like to have one of the agents, either Captain Eldridge or myself, come to New York immediately for consultation, and that as Mr. Irwin had a more general knowledge of the company's business, and had had the more particular management of the China line of steamers, and supervision of the Asiatic agencies, he would prefer to see the junior partner. I telegraphed in reply that I could not come for three weeks, as I was just moving into my new house; to which telegram no reply was received. Immediately on my arrival in New York, in January, 1872, Mr. Stockwell opened this subsidy-question—told me that he had decided to go on with it; that he had made all his arrangements to carry it on; and that he expected to pass the bill in the course of a few days. He did not tell me what his plans were at first, but I took the first opportunity to repeat to him, only more earnestly and more decidedly, if possible, the objections that I had urged in my last interview with his predecessor, strengthened by the additional consideration that whereas the administration of his predecessor was a quiet, conservative steamship-administration, carried so as not to be constantly before the public, the Stockwell administration was a speculative administration, with no knowledge or experience of the steamship-business, having already developed a desire to be constantly before the public in the newspapers, so that it would not only be much more difficult to carry such a bill then than theretofore, but it would necessarily cost a great deal more money, by attracting the rapacity of the race of men known as "strikers."

As I referred yesterday to my several resignations, I would like to read them to the committee, and, if there is no objection, have them made a part of the record. The first letter that I shall read is one which I wrote to Mr. Stockwell, the president of the company, on the 23d of April, 1872, as follows:

"NEW YORK, April 23, 1872.

"A. B. STOCKWELL, Esq.,

"President Pacific Mail Steamship Company :

"DEAR SIR: I have recently felt it to be my duty to you, to the company, to my associates, and to myself to make certain very grave criticisms upon the action and representations of the vice-president, regarding coal and other matters.

"In my judgment, what I have said makes it impossible and undesirable that Mr. Bellows and myself should both remain in the service, for it seems to me that if my statements are believed, the company cannot afford to keep Mr. Bellows; while, if they are not believed, I ought not to stay. Furthermore, the harmony which is indispensable between the assistant executive officer and the principal agency of the company cannot exist after what has passed, especially since its previous disturbance by the very irritating correspondence carried on by the vice-president during the past year or so.

"After having taken time to reflect, you decide that no action need be taken by either of us.

"I have given your opinion due consideration and weight, but self-respect seems to me to dictate that I should act upon my own judgment, which I find myself unable to modify

"With great reluctance and regret, I therefore feel compelled to retire, at the very dawn of its new prosperity, from the service of the company for whose interests I have labored with so much zeal, with so much pride, with so much affection.

"I beg you will have the kindness to cancel my contract as agent at San Francisco, which would otherwise expire December 15, 1872, and to permit me to retire from the company as early as may be convenient and agreeable to yourself.

"Wishing you and the company continued success and prosperity, I remain,

"Very respectfully, yours,

"RICHARD B. IRWIN."

This letter was handed to Mr. Stockwell in person. He requested me to withdraw it, and I, in reply, asked him to put anything he had to say on the subject in writing. He accordingly addressed me the following letter; which, although it is addressed to me in Washington, was delivered to me in New York:

"OFFICE OF PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

"New York, April 23, 1872.

"DEAR SIR: Upon full consideration of your letter of this date, I have to ask you to postpone your resignation until next June or July, when I intend to visit San Francisco, and will then more fully understand the situation, and if at that time you still continue of the same mind, I will interpose no obstacles to your retiring, and do all I may to assist you in any new enterprise in which you may engage.

"Yours, very respectfully,

"ALDEN B. STOCKWELL.

"RICHARD B. IRWIN, Esq.,

"Washington, D. C."

After considering the matter for several days, I wrote him on the 27th of April the following letter:

"WASHINGTON, April 27, 1872.

"DEAR SIR: Having carefully considered your letter of 23d instant, I have concluded to withdraw my resignation as requested, in deference to your wishes and to your expressed judgment of the company's interests.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"RICH'D B. IRWIN.

"A. B. STOCKWELL, Esq.,

"President Pacific Mail Steamship Company."

In regard to the criticisms upon Mr. Bellows, referred to in my letter of April 23, I wish to state that they related to matters involving differences of opinion and action between himself and the firm of Eldridge & Irwin, and did not in any manner affect Mr. Bellows's integrity; they referred to matters long since past, having no reference to the subject-matter of this inquiry, and having no interest at the present day.

When Mr. Stockwell came to San Francisco, in July, 1872, just before his return I requested him to appoint my successor at his earliest convenience, and stated distinctly that I should in any event retire at the end of December, 1872. I will mention incidentally, in order to show Mr. Stockwell's continued confidence in me after this subsidy matter was all over, that during the month of July, 1872, he discussed with me the question of organizing a national gold-bank in San Francisco, with a capital of from $500,000 to $1,000,000, of which he was to supply $300,000 himself, and which I was to manage in his interest, according to his suggestion; a proposition which I peremptorily declined. On the 23d of September, 1872, I addressed Mr. Stockwell the following communication:

"SEPTEMBER 23, 1872.

"DEAR SIR: Although subsequent reflection gives me no ground for abandoning or changing the positions taken by me in the correspondence and conversations that preceded and followed the tender of my resignation last April, yet having withdrawn it at your request, I do not feel that those circumstances demand any present action on my part.

"Regard, however, for the company's best interests, no less than my own, would make it impossible for me, with the light and experience I now have, to enter into a new engagement with the company—even if such should be your desire, as to which I am, of course, ignorant—without more considerable and material changes than I have any reason to believe you would wish to consider.

"In order, moreover, to leave you quite unembarrassed in any re-organization of this agency which you may desire to make at the expiration of my present contract, I now respectfully renew the tender of my resignation, which, for convenience of business and accounts, I suggest should take effect December 31, 1872, instead of December 15th, which is the date of the expiration of my contract.

"Here, perhaps, I ought to stop; but my affection for the company must plead my excuse if I go further and state frankly some of the measures I deem essential to its welfare. In my judgment, the successful management of this agency, upon which depends so large a part of the sum of the company's prosperity, absolutely demands unity in the internal organization; greater freedom of action, particularly in emergencies; and the transfer hither of the administrative control of the entire business of the company on the Pacific Ocean.

"In other words, I think efficiency, economy, and harmony would be vastly promoted by having a single head, responsible to you, directly, for results, instead of two officers entirely independent of each other, and each separately answerable to you for comparatively unimportant details; and by extending this responsibility to the whole business of the company from Panama to Hong-Kong. The functions of your representative here would then resemble those of the superintendent of a railway acting at a distance from the directors. Practically this would be the organization agreed upon when I accepted this agency, as shown by the correspondence of that period, but which was by degrees entirely neutralized by causes to which I will not again allude further than to say they were quite beyond my reach.

"Besides the results I have pointed to, namely, efficiency, economy, and harmony, which would directly flow from such a re-organization, (and premising the wisdom of your choice of a person to exercise this trust who should be able to unite all his forces in cordial co-operation and conciliate the regard of merchants, instead of arraying every element in hostility, as we have seen done,) you would thus, and thus only, in my opinion, revive that spirit and zeal which once existed in this service, but which has been worn out by disjointed, uncertain, and remote administration.

"In the same view, I would also recommend you to compensate your superintendent not by a fixed salary, but by a commission on the gross and net receipts of all the business under his charge, so that he will feel a direct interest in activity and economy throughout the line; that you leave to him the appointment and removal of agents, officers, and employés, and the regulation of pay, which, as far as practicable, should be contingent like his own; that, as before remarked, you hold him answerable for results; and that the arrangement be terminable by either party at short notice.

"I would also briefly renew the recommendation heretofore submitted on several occasions, that the whole system of accounts be remodeled so that they may be really and effectually audited and controlled in your office, and all the agencies and steamers be relieved of a great load of unnecessary accounts and documents now kept and rendered, for no practicable purpose, at vast expense, and, by their very mass and complexity, to the entire defeat of any actual supervision.

"If you care to know them, I shall be glad to present my views again in detail, with an estimate of the reduction of force and expenses that such a reform will render possible.

"With my continued wishes for the company's prosperity, and hoping to retain its good-will in the new employment which I shall be now obliged to seek, I remain, very respectfully, yours,

"RICHARD B. IRWIN.

"A. B. STOCKWELL, Esq.,

"President Pacific Mail Steamship Company, New York."

After the date of this letter, and before the receipt of Mr. Stockwell's reply, I received an informal communication, which I had reason to believe came directly from him, asking upon what terms I would be willing to renew my engagement with the company; to which I replied, jestingly, that I would consider an offer of $100,000 a year, my conviction really being that it would be impossible to harmonize our relations. This was merely a verbal communication. About the close of November I received the following letter:

"OFFICE OF PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

"59 and 61 Wall Street, New York, November 14, 1872.

"DEAR SIR: Your letter of September 23d was duly received on the 1st of October, and would have been more promptly replied to, had not the pressure on my time been such as prevented me from giving it the consideration which it was entitled to, and I must ask you to accept this, and the fact I write few letters, as my apology for the delay. For the reasons given by yourself, and under all the circumstances, I will offer no further objection to your withdrawal from the service of the company, and therefore accept your resignation, to take effect at the time fixed by yourself. I have read with attention the suggestions which your experience enables you to offer regarding the manner in which you think the San Francisco agency should be conducted, and am obliged to you for them, and, before making the change which I now have in contemplation, I should be pleased if you would send me your views in detail in this matter, so kindly offered in your letter, including the simplification of the accounts.

"In conclusion, allow me to thank you for your personal endeavors to promote the company's interests, and for your earnest desire for its welfare; and though our connection is to be dissolved, you will carry with you, in whatever you may engage, my good-will and best wishes.

"Yours, very respectfully,

"ALDEN B. STOCKWELL.

"Mr. RICHARD B. IRWIN,

"San Francisco.

"P. S.—Should be glad of any suggestions about Australian Line."

All these letters from Mr. Stockwell are in his own handwriting.

I had not leisure before my injury, in January, 1873, to submit this plan of the reorganization of the company's accounts, which I should have done as a matter of duty, although I had retired from the company's service. The only action taken by me, in reply to Mr. Stockwell's letter asking for suggestions in regard to the re-organization, was to suggest that he should appoint Mr. Samuel K. Holman, our assistant agent, as our successor, and give him an opportunity to show what was in him, at least until Mr. Stockwell could find somebody else that suited him exactly; and I recommended him, if he had no confidence in anybody who understood the steamship business, to find somebody who understood some other business, and who also had his confidence, and to send him out.

In order to show that this confidence in me was not confined to Mr. Stockwell personally, I will lay before the committee a letter which was communicated to us officially by our successor during January, 1873:

"AGENCY PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,

"San Francisco, January 21, 1873.

"GENTLEMEN: We take pleasure in laying before you the underwritten extract from official letter No. 5914, received at this agency from the vice-president and secretary of the company :

"Change of agents.—We note the action of the late agents, Messrs Eldridge & Irwin, in putting into effect their resignation and turning over to your good self as acting agent ; and we part with those gentlemen with our best wishes for their future welfare and prosperity.

"Yours, truly,

"F. W. G. BELLOWS, Vice-Prest.

"THEO. T. JOHNSON, Sec.'

"Joining most sincerely in the very kind sentiments expressed therein, we are,

"Yours, very truly,

"S. K. HOLMAN, Acting Agent.

"Messrs. ELDRIDGE & IRWIN."

Mr. Stockwell left the company in May, 1873, and was succeeded by Capt. George H. Bradbury, who was, and is to day, one of my warmest personal friends. In fact, our relations to-day are closer and more affectionate than they ever were. Captain Bradbury left the company partly on account of differences between himself and Mr. Rufus Hatch, who had just been elected vice-president in November, 1873, while I was in England. Up to that time, and, in fact, until about February, 1874, I had not the slightest idea that there was a single point of difference between myself and the company except the Babcock extinguisher matter, previously referred to, and noticed in Mr. Sage's testimony, all of which occurred and was settled by Captain Bradbury after I left the company, and had nothing whatever to do with the subject of this inquiry ; and Captain Bradbury has since told me voluntarily that no difference ought to have arisen on that subject ; that he was perfectly satisfied about it. In fact, immediately on his election, I wrote him a letter placing the entire matter in his hands, and told him to do just what he pleased about it. The first that I knew of these charges against me was some time in April, 1874, when I was ill at Ventnor, in the Isle of Wight, whither I had gone for the purpose of getting a complete rest. Shortly afterward I received a copy of House Mis. Doc. No. 255, Forty-third Congress, first session, which contains the testimony of Trenor W. Park, John Roach, and George S. Scott before the Committee on Post-Offices and the Committee on Appropriations, reflecting on me in various matters, and particularly asserting that I had stolen $300,000 of the company's money, and invested it in real estate in Philadelphia in my sister's name. These statements were made at different dates, the first, I believe, on the 5th of March, 1874, but they were kept quiet, and were not given to the press until on or about the 14th of April, 1874, when they were given to the press, as I have been informed and believe, by Mr. Rufus Hatch. Just before that date, Mr. Alden B. Stockwell had left New York for Europe, with the full knowledge of the officers of the company, and, as I have also been informed and believe, to escape the bullying and persecution of Mr. Hatch and others, by which he had been driven to a point of excitement that he was no longer able to endure. I get this information not only from Mr. Stockwell himself, but from others. Immediately after the 14th of April, a concerted attack was made against me through the newspapers along the whole line. I will not trouble the committee with extracts from the various papers, but I wish to show them my answer to those statements, which was published in the New York Tribune on the 28th of April, 1874, and I would like to have it made a part of the record in this case, for the reason that it has never been answered by anybody. I contradicted every assertion that they made against me, and I especially called upon them to say where that real estate in Philadelphia was. I now make that answer a part of my testimony, and re-affirm under oath the entire correctness of every statement contained in it.

To the Editor of the Tribune :

SIR: I have just seen extracts from the New York papers of April 14 and 15, giving the substance of an "argument" by Mr. Trenor W. Park, before the Post-Office Committee of the House of Representatives, in support of the application of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for a continuance of its subsidy, notwithstanding its failure to comply with its contract with the Government; also a further "statement" of an "interview" with Mr. Russell Sage.

These gentlemen seem to labor under the strange delusion that the incompetency and inattention to its legitimate business, which has left the Pacific Mail Company in default upon its Government contract, in the vital matter of building the necessary steamers, can be atoned for, or that the attention of Congress and the public can be diverted therefrom by frequent and plentiful abuse of all the company's former officers and agents, while, at the same time, their own daily and consuming thirst for newspaper notoriety is partially assuaged. To this craving I am, for the first and last time, reluctantly compelled to minister by the necessity of noticing the gross and outrageous libels with which they have availed of my absence to assail me.

To any one, especially in California, who knows Mr. Trenor W. Park and myself, or, perhaps, either of us, no reply would be necessary to the charges he has launched from behind his shelter as a director and counsel of the company before a congressional committee. But the case is otherwise when the same statements are adopted and enlarged by the figure-head president of a once respectable corporation.

First. Messrs. Park and Sage are reported to have said, and have not denied saying, that "it has already been discovered that $300,000 out of an alleged famous corruption-fund of $600,000, placed at the disposal of an agent of the company," afterward spoken of as "the culprit," and identified by name as "Irwin," or by number as "one Irvin," was "transferred by the agent to his sister and invested in real estate in Philadelphia," that "the company are taking measures to recover the $300,000," which measures are described by saying that "the company have already attached the land." Each and every part of these statements, and the whole of them, are absolutely false and without a shadow of foundation, and many of these falsehoods relate to matters within the knowledge of the utterers.

To be explicit, I have not, and never had $300,000 worth of real or of real and personal property in Philadelphia, or in the world, in my own or anybody else's name. I have no property in Philadelphia or elsewhere in the name of any sister or any person other than myself, and to the best of my knowledge and belief neither of my sisters has any property there or elsewhere in her own or anybody else's name. Loth to bring my own affairs before the public, I will say that my entire property in Philadelphia consists of a house and lot in my own name, costing and valued at about $8,000, currency, above the purchase-mortgage. As a conclusive test between my accuracy and theirs I accept the precise issue they have themselves selected, and challenge Messrs. Park and Sage to say exactly where these lots are. It was so easy for them to have known from the records of the Philadelphia courts the utter falsehood of their statements before publishing them, that their action would have been sufficiently and outrageously wicked if aimed at myself alone. The infamy of their conduct in thus going out of their way to utter a foul slander against innocent and unprotected women, I remit to the scorn of every right-thinking person. It is also false that any property of mine in Philadelphia or elsewhere had been attached by the company, and this falsehood also was obviously within their own knowledge.

Secondly. I now come to the statements made by Mr. Russell Sage, singly, of his own knowledge and as alleged quotations from Mr. Stockwell. If Mr. Stockwell ever said these things (which I doubt) he had to forget many things, including his own sworn statements. Whether he did or not is immaterial, because they, as well as Mr. Sage's own statements, are false, and it is Mr. Sage and not Mr. Stockwell who has used them to assassinate my character. Mr. Sage says, "Mr. Stockwell told his successors in office that he had been induced to make this application by one Irwin, the company's agent at San Francisco," &c., and that "having become alarmed he employed Irwin to go to Washington," &c. In fact Mr. Stockwell made his application for the subsidy immediately after his accession to office; not only before I ever saw him, but actually before he and I had held any communication whatever. Instead of inducing him to make the application I opposed it, being warmly in favor of his predecessor's plan of building their new ships in England and doubtful of the success of any application to Congress. So far from wishing to be employed to go to Washington, as is insinuated, I refused to go there and tendered my resignation at my first interview with Mr. Stockwell, as well as several times afterward, and was only induced to go on by the repeated appeals and pressure of friends, whom I could not refuse, seconding Mr. Stockwell's requests. I learn for the first time from Mr. Sage's statement that "$600,000 was blindly charged to the San Francisco agency." Certainly that agency was never told of it, and neither the quarterly nor annual statements of the company showed it, nor their sworn statements before Congress and the legislature. Mr. Sage says, and this time of his own knowledge, that "when the Sage administration came into power they asked for a bill of items, but Irwin suddenly left for Europe and has not since appeared here." The facts are, first, the Sage administration (meaning, I suppose, the direction of which Mr. Russell Sage is the figure-head, while the administration is performed by another) has never asked me for a bill of items or for anything else; secondly, I left New York on the 11th of October, 1873, not after the "Sage administration came into power," but when it was unborn and unexpected; thirdly, not "suddenly," for the state-rooms of myself and family were engaged about two months beforehand, and our intended departure had long been known, not only to my friends and acquaintances generally, but also to the officers of the Pacific Mail Company in New York and San Francisco. "And has not since appeared here." This is, perhaps, the meanest form of that vilest of weapons, innuendo. I do not live in New York; I have no business there any more than in Bagdad, and nobody has invited me to "appear" in either place. I "appeared" in and about New York for about four weeks last fall, with a knowledge of the company's officers, without hearing anything from them.

To meet squarely the general insinuation which underlies all these details, I say that everything I have, which in any way represents money that ever belonged to the Pacific Mail Company, I own by virtue of written contracts (of which the company has or ought to have copies) for services rendered.

This being the only occasion on which I propose to trouble the public, I avail of it to deny once for all the idle and unsustained, but oft-repeated gossip in connection with this so-called "famous corruption-fund." I know nothing of any "corruption-fund." All the money paid me by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in connection with the subsidy was applied by me precisely in the manner and for the purposes intended by the company, namely, in compensation for services which resulted in the donation to that company of $5,000,000, and which were rendered by many persons, including a number of gentlemen of talent and experience, who were necessarily engaged during three or four years. Nobody has ever suggested that these gentlemen performed or ought to have performed these successful and valuable services gratuitously, or even cheaply, any more than do the enterprising gentlemen who now serve the corporation as officers, counsel, or otherwise, in New York, Washington, or elsewhere, or than those who have similarly labored for every company or individual who has ever had any private measure before Congress, or any legislature. That the Pacific Mail Company has always been satisfied of these facts I confidently assert, because no request or demand of any kind has ever been made of me by either of the three successive administrations of Messrs. Stockwell, Bradbury, and Sage, although nearly two years have since elapsed, and my final accounts have long since been settled, and written into the company's books.

It is so easy for Messrs Sage and Park to prove their charges, if they be true, as they say, and not the foul and wicked libels I pronounce them, that I shall not occupy the public attention with the refutation of any fresh calumnies they may again take advantage of my absence to circulate till these shall have been disposed of.

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

VENENOR, ISLE OF WIGHT, April 28, 1874.

From that day to this no one has attempted to specify the location of those Philadelphia lots.

In my answer yesterday in regard to the auditing of the company's accounts, I may have caused a misunderstanding in the minds of the committee. The accounts of the company are audited according to the by-laws, and, as a matter of fact, during the months of February, May, August, and November of every year. The auditing-committee consists of three directors. They make their report to the board, and their report is acted upon by the board, either accepted or otherwise, at the regular monthly meeting ensuing. Therefore, when the agents of the company receive no communications from the company respecting any discrepancy in their accounts, or any charge against them not contained in their own accounts, especially when the next regular period for the auditing of the company's accounts by the committee has passed, they naturally take it for granted that there is no exception to them, and, as a matter of fact, which I state on my own personal knowledge, this auditing by the committee has always been regarded by the company itself and by all its officers and agents as a final disposition of all the matters included in the accounts for the next preceding three months.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say that in your conferences with Mr. McLane, in which you advised the abandonment of the application for the subsidy, you gave, among other reasons for that advice, the amount which it would cost to obtain it, and you referred him to four gentlemen for their opinion as to the cost; who were those gentlemen?—A. I do not decline to answer that question, but I want to say just this, that they were not members of Congress, and not any one in position in Washington. They were business-men in New York, friends of the company, who had no connection whatever with the obtaining of this subsidy, and no official position. I read in Mr. Hatch's evidence that, although he did not know me and had never seen me until August, 1874, and did not know that I was in Washington for the company, and did not know that the company had any agent in Washington except by rumor, (as to which I propose to submit some points to the committee at a future day,) yet he has sworn that my relations with Mr. Stockwell were most intimate and friendly. Now, I wish to state here that my relations with Mr. Stockwell, except in so far as they were purely official, were most unfriendly during the entire period. In my opinion, Mr. Stockwell was earnestly and honestly endeavoring, after his own fashion, to build up the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; and although it is the fashion to-day to throw mud at him, especially by those who were once his friends, I, who was once his enemy, and could never be his friend under any circumstances, believe that it was neither his intention nor desire to injure the company in any way whatever. He erred because he attempted to manage a business that he did not understand; he attempted to manage a steamship-business like a speculation in Wall street.

Q. The letter of Mr. Stockwell to you, of May 4th, contained an allusion to "the action of yesterday;" what was "the action of yesterday," alluded to in that letter?—A. The action referred to was the passage of the Post-Office appropriation bill by the Senate, containing the amendment making this appropriation for the company.

Q. After it had once been defeated in the House?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From these letters it appears that the check for $110,000 was changed into cash $50,000 and a check for $60,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did these checks undergo any other change up to the time of the final payment?—A. No, sir; not previous to the final payment of the alleged $750,000.

Q. You held, then, how much in the form of these various checks?—A. On or about the 6th of May I held checks for $560,000, as nearly as I can remember.

Q. Did you receive from the company any other checks but these after the 6th of May?—A. Do you mean between that and the final payment of the $750,000?

Q. Between that and the final payment of the $750,000, did you receive any other checks?—A. I will not swear positively, but I think not.

Q. After that date, May 6th, did you, at any time, receive any other checks?—A. I did.

Q. Will you describe them?—A. May I ask whether you have got the checks?

Mr. BECK. The checks are all dated on the 24th of May.—A. Then on the 24th or the 25th of May, I don't remember which, I received certain other checks which the company say amounted to $750,000, and which I believe amounted to that sum, but I cannot tell accurately until I see them. I received those checks from Mr. F. W. G. Bellows, vice-president of the company, in the president's room; and at the time of receiving those checks, I returned to Mr. Bellows all of the checks which I had previously received, and which had not yet been cashed, amounting, as nearly as I can remember, to $560,000.

Q. You say you returned him all of the checks already described, except such as had been previously cashed; how much in amount of those checks had been previously cashed?—A. I returned checks amounting in all to about $560,000, the balance of the $650,000 which I have previously described.

Q. What was done with those checks that you returned?—A. Mr. Bellows tore them up.

Q. What, if anything, did you receive in exchange for them?—A. The checks which I have already stated, amounting to about $750,000.

Q. Are those the checks which are now exhibited to you which have already been introduced in Mr. Hatch's testimony, being Nos. 2360 to 2365, inclusive, and all dated May 24, 1872?—A. They are. The stamps on two of these checks to wit, Nos. 2360 and 2361, prove that they have passed through the American Exchange Bank, where they were deposited by me to my credit. The stamp "21" in large figures, on the face of each of the checks, Nos. 2362 to 2365, inclusive, indicates, in my opinion, though I cannot state so positively, that those checks have also passed through the American Exchange Bank, where they were deposited by me to my credit; for I think that "21" is the number of the American Exchange Bank in the clearing-house association.

Q. All of those were passed to your credit in the American Exchange Bank?—A. I think so, but I cannot be positive until I see my bank-account.

Q. Were they received for the same purpose for which the checks that you gave up had been received?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. And that was the purpose you have heretofore stated, in accordance with the contract to procure the subsidy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company took no action as a company in relation to furnishing you this money?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If so, state what action.—A. As I stated yesterday, Mr. Stockwell acted in this matter under the orders and by authority of the board of directors, and all the payments made to me by the company in this behalf were made by and under the order and authority of the board.

Q. At what date did the directors take that action?—A. In February, 1872.

Q. What was the precise date?—A. On the 7th of February, 1872, at a meeting of the executive committee of the company, (the executive committee being by the by-laws invested with the full powers of the board,) the executive committee passed a resolution (of which I cannot give the precise terms, but they will appear by the minute-books of the company when produced) authorizing the president to expend such sums as in his judgment might be necessary for counsel-fees and other necessary expenses to procure this subsidy. On the 14th of February, at the regular meeting of the board of directors, with a full board, the proceedings of the executive committee of February 7 were duly ratified by the board, in accordance with the usual custom of the company. Then I believe, but I do not know positively, that other action, subsequent to the final payment to me, and ratifying Mr. Stockwell's action under that, has been taken by the board. This, however, I do not know positively, but the minutes of the company will show.

Q. How soon after the receipt of these last checks did you put them into the bank to your own credit?—A. My impression is that I deposited those checks to my credit on the 27th of May; and my reason for that impression is that I have a distinct recollection of having kept them for two days before I deposited them. That recollection may or not be corrected when I see the bank-account, but I kept them about two days, I am sure. Then, I think, another interval of two days elapsed before the money was drawn; and the bulk of it was drawn, I think, on or about the 29th of May, as near as I can remember.

Q. Were you in New York when you drew the money?—A. I was in New York when I deposited the checks, and I was in New York when I drew some of my own checks against this money. I was in Philadelphia when I drew other checks, and I was in San Francisco when I drew still other checks against this money. I do not remember, though, where I drew the bulk of it, whether in New York or in Philadelphia; but I know I was in the East. I can tell where when I see the bank-account.

Q. The whole of this money was put in your hands for the purpose of paying the expenses of procuring the subsidy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Including your own personal services and the services of all persons who worked under you in that business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it all so used?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any portion of it used for any other purpose?—A. No, sir; for no other purpose whatever.

Q. How soon after its receipt from the bank by you was it so used?—A. I think, as near as I can remember, that the bulk of it was drawn out by me from the American Exchange Bank about two days after I had deposited it there to my credit. I can tell positively when I see my bank-account.

Q. Do you know to what account on the books of the company those checks were placed when they were given to you?—A. The original entry on the company's books (the books of original entry) of the checks for $750,000, shown to me this morning, was to Alden B. Stockwell individually, and was made by his initials, "A. B. S." Before I left the company's office, on the morning on which I received those checks, I went to Mr. Johnson, the secretary, then acting as treasurer, (his name is signed to these checks as treasurer pro tempore,) and asked him to show me the stubs of these checks, amounting to $750,000, in the check-book, in order that I might see who was going to have to account for this money. He showed them to me, and I read on each of them Mr. Stockwell's initials, "A. B. S." At that time those stubs, which I can see distinctly now in my mind, contained simply the date, the initials "A. B. S.," and in the dollar and cent column the amount of each. At the same time, Mr. Johnson informed me that, either that morning, or the night before, I forget which, another set of checks, corresponding precisely in amount to these six, had been drawn by him to the order of A. B. Stockwell individually, and that Mr. Bellows had instructed him to destroy them, stating that it was in accordance with Mr. Stockwell's wishes, and to draw other checks to the order of R. B. Irwin. I asked him why that was done, and he said, "I don't know." I then looked again at the stubs of the checks, to make myself certain that I was not going to be called upon to account for this money after I had expended it; and Mr. Johnson made this statement to me for the purpose of accounting for the fact, which he knew, that I would at once notice that the numbers of the checks were in red ink and in manuscript, instead of being the regular stamped numbers on the company's regular series of checks. The numbers on the stubs were printed numbers, in their regular places, but the numbers on the checks were in red ink and in manuscript. Mr. Johnson knew perfectly well that I would notice that at once, and would ask why it was so, and therefore he told me himself.

Q. When you were informed that these duplicates of the original checks had been drawn payable to your order in the place of those payable to the order of Mr. Stockwell, what did you do, if anything?—A. I asked Mr. Bellows why it had been done, and he told me that it was because Mr. Stockwell was going out of town that day, and would not be there to indorse them, and supposed that I needed the money immediately. This explanation satisfied me, and I thought nothing more about it, and as a matter of fact Mr. Stockwell was absent from the office during the whole time when I was there that day, and I did not see them until the next day.

Q. Do you say that the regular check of the company has the printed numbers corresponding to the printed numbers on the stubs?—A. Yes, sir, invariably. Both numbers are printed at the same time. Manuscript-numbers would not appear on any check of the company in the ordinary course of business, unless the clerk or officer who made out the check had accidentally happened to destroy the number, or for some reason of that kind.

Q. Then this check with a manuscript-number (referring to one of the six checks heretofore identified) does not fit into the place where the corresponding number is in the book, but is another check?—A. Another check, taken from a different place. It does not belong to that place in the book of blank checks.

Q. How do you know that to be so if you have not seen the stub-book?—A. I am only speaking as to what would happen in the usual course of the company's business, which I know from having frequently had charge of the check-books, and made out the checks myself, in the absence of the treasurer, while I was in the New York office, prior to 1869.

Q. Do you know of a firm of the name of Harriott & Noyes?—A. No, sir; I know there was such a firm.

Q. What was their business?—A. I know them by reputation as a firm of stock-brokers in New York. I know nothing of them or about their business except by common report.

Q. Have you ever had any business with him?—A. None whatever.

Q. Is there any reason why a check payable to your order, and indorsed by you, should be charged to that firm and indorsed by you?—A. No reason that I know anything of; I should think there was every reason why it should not.

Q. If any such thing as that has been done, has it been by your order?—A. No, sir; not only not by my order, but entirely without my knowledge. The first information of it that I have received is this to-day, except by a rumor which I saw yesterday in the newspapers.

Q. When you drew this money from the bank in two or three days after you deposited the checks, what kind of money did you take; can you tell the size of the bills?—A. I don't think that I drew any of that money in currency; if I did, it must have been a comparatively small amount.

Q. In what manner did you draw this $750,000 from the American Exchange Bank?—A. Mostly in the form of my personal checks.

Q. Payable to somebody's else order?—A. Some of them payable to somebody's else order, and some of them payable to my own order, and indorsed in blank.

Q. Have you the stubs of those checks?—A. I think not; I don't know, but I think not; I looked for them the last time I was in San Francisco and I could not find them.

Q. Have you any memoranda of those checks?—A. I have none.

Q. Can you tell the size of them?—A. I can when I see my bank-account; that is the only way I can tell.

Q. Will the accounts of the American Exchange Bank disclose how that money was drawn?—A. I think they will simply give the amounts. If any money was paid in cash over the counter, the accounts in the bank will show it, I think, though I can't speak positively as to that; but they will show the amount and the date.

Q. Will they show, also, the several items, or only the aggregate?—A. They will show the several items in detail. The usual course of a bank in New York in keeping an account is to furnish its customer with a pass-book containing memoranda of every deposit which he makes, to his credit, and now and then this pass-book is sent to the bank and "written up," so that he is advised of the condition of his account. Every entry to his debit or credit is made in detail, but as a rule there is no specification of names, only just of amounts.

At this point Mr. Irwin informed the committee that he felt unable to proceed further to-day; and the examination was suspended until Friday, the 18th, at 10.30 a. m.

FRIDAY, December 18, 1874.

Before the examination was resumed Mr. Irwin exhibited certain papers to the committee, which he desired to have made a part of the record, accompanied by explanatory remarks, as follows:

Mr. IRWIN. As Mr. Sage has sworn that he had me arrested, I submit the following documents. The first is a letter received by me in New York, August 27, 1874, viz:

"LAW OFFICE OF HENRY S. BENNETT,
"14 & 16 Wall street, New York, August 25, 1874.

"DEAR SIR: I am directed by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to bring an action against you for an accounting. The particular transactions to which this accounting refers are, of course, known to you; and, as I am informed, in an interview which you had with two of the directors yesterday, you, in anticipation of this action, gave them your address. I now ask you to either inform me where, in this city, you can be found so that I may serve upon you the proper papers, or what attorneys may be authorized by you to appear in your behalf and on whom I can make the requisite service.

"Yours, &c.,

"H. S. BENNETT,
"Attorney Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

"Mr. RICHARD B. IRWIN."

I at once took a cab and went from my hotel to my counsel's office, where I wrote the following note:

"CHAPMAN, SCOTT & CROWELL,
"ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELORS AT LAW,
"No. 33 Wall street, New York, August 27, 1874.

"DEAR SIR: Being in the city yesterday I have this moment received your favor of the 25th, in reply to which I beg to say that Messrs.

Chapman, Scott & Crowell are authorized and instructed to appear for me in any actions your clients may be pleased to bring against me.

"I am, dear sir, yours very respectfully,

"RICHARD B. IRWIN.

"HENRY S. BENNETT, Esq.,

"14 Wall St., New York"

I gave this to one of the clerks to take a press-copy. He had just returned it, and I had it ready to send, when a boy handed me the following summons in a civil action:

(Copy.)

"Supreme Court of the State of New York.

"THE PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO., PLAINTIFF,	}	Summons for relief.
"against
"RICHARD B. IRWIN, DEFENDANT.

"To the defendant above named:

"You are hereby summoned and required to answer the complaint in this action, which will be filed in the office of the clerk of the city and county of New York, and to serve a copy of your answer to said complaint on the subscriber at his office, number 14 Wall street, in said city of New York, within twenty days after the service of this summons on you, exclusive of the day of such service; and if you fail to answer the said complaint within the time aforesaid, the plaintiff in this action will apply to the court for the relief demanded in the complaint.

"HENRY S. BENNETT,
"Plaintiff's Attorney.

"NEW YORK, August 25, 1874.

(Indorsed:) "Copy. New York Supreme Court. The Pacific Mail Steamship Co. against Richard B. Irwin. Summons. H. S. Bennett, plaintiff's attorney, 14 Wall street."

On the 5th of October, my counsel were served with the following complaint in this civil suit, and the next day the company caused its publication in the New York Tribune, and afterward telegraphed it to San Francisco, and had it published in extenso there:

"Supreme court. Trial to be had in the city and county of New York.

"THE PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY, PLAINTIFF,	}
"against
"RICHARD B. IRWIN, DEFENDANT.

"The complaint of the plaintiff, who appears in this action by Henry S. Bennett, its attorney, respectfully shows to this court—

"First. That during the period within which the transactions hereinafter set forth took place, it was, and is now, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of New York.

"Second. That on the 24th day of May, 1872, at the city of New York, there came into possession of the defendant, while acting as confidential agent of plaintiff, and as its trustee, and in the course of his duties as such trustee, the aggregate amount of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, in six different installments, in amounts as follows, to wit :

“ One installment of $650,000; one installment of $50,000; one installment of $25,000; one installment of $10,000; one installment, of a like amount, $10,000; one installment of $5,000.

“ That said money, and the whole thereof, was and is the property of plaintiff, and that the defendant had and has no lien upon, nor interest in, nor right to it, or any portion of it, except as custodian for the benefit of plaintiff.

“ Third. That plaintiff has duly demanded the same from defendant; but that defendant has refused to pay the same, or to account to plaintiff for said money or any portion thereof.

“ Fourth. That defendant has appropriated said money to his own use, and that plaintiff has been damaged thereby to the amount of $750,000 with interest thereon from the 24th day of May, 1872.

“ Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment against defendant :

“ I. That he may be compelled to account to plaintiff for the aforesaid amount as money received by him in a fiduciary capacity.

“ II. For the misapplication and embezzlement of the sum of $750,000 on the 24th day of May, 1872.

“ III. For judgment in its favor against defendant for the aforesaid sum of $750,000, and interest thereon from the 24th May, 1872.

“ IV. For such other and further relief as the court may deem plaintiff entitled to by reason of the matters and facts set forth in said complaint, together with the costs and disbursements of this action.

“ HENRY S. BENNETT,

“Plaintiff's Attorney.

“ CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK, ss :

“ Theodore T. Johnson, being duly sworn, says that he is the secretary of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, the plaintiff in this action, and that the foregoing complaint is true of his own knowledge, except as to the matters stated on information and belief; and as to those matters he believes it to be true.

“ THEO. T. JOHNSON.

“ Sworn to before me this 5th day of October, 1874.

To show the animus with which this matter has been pursued, I show you the following documents :

“ Heavy suit against R. B. Irwin.

“ NEW YORK, August 31.

“ At an interview to-day by the agent of the Pacific Press Association with the managing director of the Pacific Mail Company, the following information was obtained :

"R. B. Irwin, former agent of the Pacific Mail Company at San Francisco, who it is alleged misappropriated the funds of the company, has been detained in his proposed trip to Europe by a suit brought by the attorney of the company, for the recovery of $1,000,000. Mr. Irwin was to have sailed on Saturday last, but the papers in the case being served on Friday, it is probable he will forego his trip. The company are fully aroused in this matter, especially as Mr. Irwin has been in this city some days and challenged the directors to a suit, and they propose to prosecute Irwin both criminally and civilly.

On the 8th of October, 1874, the complaint was telegraphed to San Francisco, including the notarial certificate, and was printed in the Alta California of October 9.

"RICHARD B. IRWIN. }

"RICHARD B. IRWIN & Co.,
 "200 Sansom St., San Francisco, Sept. 2, 1874.

"DEAR SIR: [Extract.] * * * Trenor W. Park stated yesterday that Irwin had been asked to give an account of the moneys expended by him in Washington, but had refused doing so, and when further asked to select any one member of the board of directors and give him a statement, which would be satisfactory to the board, if satisfactory to the member so selected, he also refused, and the company have no alternative but to bring suit. You know how little of truth there is in this statement, but it was made to Mr. Ralston.* * * * *

"L. CHAPMAN, Jr., Esq.,
 "New York.

"NEW YORK, September 10, 1874.

"DEAR SIR: My partner, Mr. Chapman, has just handed me your letter to him of the 2d instant, with the request that I would answer it, as I accompanied Colonel Irwin to the office of the Pacific Mail Company, and was present at the only interview, I believe, which was had by Colonel Irwin, after his return from California, with any officer of said company.

"The interview to which I refer was at the office of said company, where I called with, and at the request of, Colonel Irwin. It was on the 24th August,† I think. The only persons present (and taking part in the interview) were Mr. Russell Sage and Mr. Johnson, (an officer of said company or of the Panama Railroad,) Colonel Irwin, and myself. I was present during the whole interview, and heard everything said, and can and do confidently assert that Colonel Irwin was not asked by any one to give any account whatever; that he was not asked to select a member of the board of directors, and give him a statement; that he was not asked to give a statement to any person whomsoever; and that, on the contrary, Colonel Irwin at the very opening of the interview stated, and repeatedly thereafter reiterated, to Mr. Sage that he was ready and willing, and then offered to make any statement or explanation that was necessary, or that Mr. Sage or the company desired, and that neither Mr. Sage nor any person stated or intimated that any statement or explanation from Colonel Irwin was desired.

* Note by Mr. Irwin: President of Bank of California.

† Note by Mr. Irwin: Monday, 25th.

"And I am satisfied that no other interview occurred between Colonel Irwin and any officer of said company, as I saw him the day before he sailed, and am confident that, if any further interview had taken place, he would have mentioned it to me.

"Yours truly, (in haste,)

"E. B. CROWELL.

[Extract.]

"SEPTEMBER 9, 1874.

"DEAR SIR: Your favor of the 1st instant, with inclosure of slip cut from your daily paper, was received this morning.

"In reply, I have to say that when Mr. Irwin returned from California I was absent on my summer trip, and did not see him while he was here.

"My partner, Mr. Crowell, however, called upon Mr. Russell Sage with Mr. Irwin. Mr. Sage then denied to Mr. Irwin that he had ever made the statements attributed to him.

"Mr. Irwin then told Mr. Sage that he was prepared to render any account or make any explanation which the company wished; that he intended to sail shortly for Europe; informed Mr. Sage of the date and the name of the steamer on which he would sail, and gave him his card containing his address, so that Mr. Sage could communicate with him if he desired. This was immediately after his return from California, and the interview was had at the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in this city. Subsequently, on the 26th [27th] August, Mr. Irwin received a note from Henry S. Bennett, esq., the attorney for the company, saying that he (Bennett) was instructed to commence suit against him for an accounting, and asking where a summons could be served on him, or if he would authorize some one to appear and accept service for him.

"In reply, Mr. Irwin wrote from our office, and upon one of our letter-headings, a letter, of which we inclose a copy. Just as this letter was taken from the press, a boy from Bennett's office came in and served on Irwin a summons in a civil action against him.

"Mr. Irwin delivered the letter to Bennett's boy to be taken to his office, and afterwards called upon Mr. Bennett, when he (Bennett) informed Mr. Irwin that this action was brought because the company was afraid that he would make some further publications and wished to anticipate it, and that in all probability the suit would be dropped.

"The summons simply requires Mr. Irwin to appear in a civil action; no complaint was served, and we do not believe any ever will be.

"The fact is, so much has been said and threatened, that when Irwin was here the company felt obliged to save themselves as much as possible by going through what we believe to be the form of commencing suit.

"The next day Mr. Bennett also gave Mr. Crowell to understand that the suit would not be prosecuted, but was merely in anticipation of some action on Irwin's part, which they were induced to fear from his coming on and 'bearding the lion in his den.' This is Bennett's expression.

"Mr. Bennett also informed Colonel Irwin and Mr. Crowell that there was no necessity of Mr. Irwin's delaying his trip on account of this suit.

"After the service of the summons Mr. Irwin left the matter in our hands, gave himself no further concern about it, and quietly sailed for Liverpool in the steamer Oceanic, on the 29th August, in pursuance of his original intention.

"Our time to appear in the action will expire on the 16th instant, when we shall enter an appearance and demand a copy of the complaint.

* * * * *

"No criminal proceedings have been taken, and, in my opinion, there is no foundation for any.

"The officers of the company knew when Mr. Irwin was to sail. There was no concealment on his part, and the company had every opportunity, if they desired, to prevent Mr. Irwin from leaving; they had the power to do so.

"I think, therefore, it would be perfectly proper for you to insert a card in your local papers to meet the telegrams of the 31st ultimo, and that you can readily do so from the facts contained in this letter, and you may use the name of my firm as your authority for your statements.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"LEBBEUS CHAPMAN, JR.

"WM. N. OLMSTED, Esq.,

"San Francisco, Cal."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Have you your check-book which you used in checking money out of the American Exchange Bank?—Answer. I have not, sir.

Q. Where is it?—A. I looked for it the last time I was in San Francisco, but could not find it, nor any of my other check-books prior to the organization of the firm of Richard B. Irwin & Co., in January, 1874.

Q. What was the last thing you did with it?—A. I put it away somewhere; it and my other old check-books all together.

Q. Do you remember putting this one away?—A. I don't think, in fact, that those checks were drawn from the check-book at all; I think they were drawn on loose checks, or else from a temporary check-book, I cannot remember which, but I think on loose checks. I was under the impression when I was looking for the check-book that those checks were drawn from the book.

Q. You mean to state, then, that you do not think the checks which checked this amount out of the American Exchange Bank were drawn from a check-book?—A. I think the checks for the bulk of it were not; although at the time I looked for the check-books I was under the impression that they had been.

Q. What leads you now to think that they were not so drawn?—A.

Simply that I have thought the matter over since and can recollect some circumstances more clearly than I did then.

Q. Do you think that any part of it was drawn from any regular check-book?—A. Yes; I am sure some of it was.

Q. About how much?—A. An inconsiderable amount. I should say that the total amount drawn out of a regular check-book would not exceed somewhere between $50,000 and $100,000, comparatively small items.

Q. Why was that sum drawn from the regular check-book more than the other?—A. After I got back to San Francisco, of course I resumed my regular check-books. In referring to the drawing out of this money I of course refer to the $750,000; all my checks up to about the 25th of May, as well as all after my return to San Francisco, were drawn from either a temporary or a regular check-book; and the only reason why these checks, as nearly as I can remember, were not, was that I did not have the regular check-book with me. I was quite ill at that time, and I was not able to unpack things.

Q. Was the portion of the $750,000 which you say was drawn from a regular check-book the balance which was left to your credit when you returned to California?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. All except that balance had been previously drawn out on irregular checks?—A. Don't say irregular checks—upon checks not belonging to any regular check-books.

Q. Have those checks been returned to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got them?—A. No, sir, I have not got them at all.

Q. Where are they?—A. They are destroyed.

Q. When were they destroyed?—A. They were destroyed in August, 1873, I think, just before I left San Francisco. They were destroyed in San Francisco.

Q. When were they returned to you at San Francisco?—A. Some of them were returned to me before I got to San Francisco, and when the transactions were large they were returned every few days, so as to adjust the balance of the account. The final checks were returned to me at different periods in San Francisco until I finally closed my account with the American Exchange Bank before leaving for England.

Q. How long did you keep them before you destroyed them?—A. I can't answer that, except by stating the date when I think I destroyed them. I think I can answer the question by looking at the bank-account and seeing when they were sent to me. I observe from the account-current just received by me from the American Exchange Bank that they returned vouchers to me—that is to say, canceled checks, on the following dates: About May 27, 1872, 10 vouchers for about $380,000; at some time between May 30 and June 22, 4 vouchers, amounting to about $400,000; between October 1 and October 23, 1872, 14 vouchers, about $20,000.

Q. The returned checks you have been testifying about were from the $750,000?—A. Some of them; they also include moneys belonging to me personally, and not in any way connected with the subject-matter of this inquiry.

Q. You hold in your hand your account with the American Exchange Bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any objection to showing it to the committee?—A. I have no objection to its being put in evidence ultimately if the committee wish to have it; but it includes a large number of transactions which have nothing to do with this matter. In order that the committee might be thoroughly satisfied, I have sent for my account from the end of 1868 down to the end of 1872. I reserve, of course, my right to decline to put these accounts in evidence, after showing them to the committee, except in so far as they relate to the subject-matter of this inquiry.

Q. Will you cause to be taken from this account with the American Exchange Bank so much of it as covers the period about which we are making this inquiry?

The witness said he wished to consult his counsel before answering the question, and the answer was reserved.

Q. Had you an account or accounts with any other bank or firm in New York, covering the period we are inquiring about?—A. Yes, sir; I kept an account for a time with Musgrave & Company, bankers at 19 Broad street, which account I now show the committee, though it has no relation to this inquiry.

Q. Any other accounts?—A. I kept accounts with the National Metropolitan Bank in Washington, and the Bank of California in San Francisco.

Q. Have you the accounts with those two last-named banks?—A. I have sent for them, but have not yet received them.

Q. When received, will you exhibit them to the committee if required?—A. I will show them to the committee so far as they pertain to the subject of this inquiry, and I will allow the committee to examine them informally and decide for themselves what belongs to this inquiry.

Q. State the nature of your account with Musgrave & Co.—A. It is entirely a private account of the purchase and sale of stocks held by me as investments only, and not for speculation; it embraces no speculative transaction whatever. The aggregate amount of the transactions involved was $58,994.46, covering the period from April, 1872, to October, 1872. Neither this account nor any portion of it, nor any of the funds embraced in it, bears any relation whatever to the subject-matter of this inquiry.

Q. Whom did you employ to help you here in procuring the subsidy?—A. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like the committee to allow me until Monday to answer that question, so that I may have gone over all these accounts and separated the items, and prepared such a statement as will enable me, if I should decide to answer the question, to answer it not only intelligently and accurately, but in such a manner that my answer will stand the cross-fire of criticism from every quarter whatever; because the committee will easily see that it is neither for the interest of the public, nor of this inquiry, nor of the committee, nor of myself, that any statement which I make should be broken down, and that it is desirable, for every reason, that if I do make a statement to the committee, (which I should like to do if I possibly can,) it shall be a statement that will stand every test to which it may be subjected. For example, should I make, without due preparation, a statement which I should afterward be obliged to correct by a few thousand dollars more in this direction, or a few thousand dollars less in another direction, it would be met by contradictions and denials from various quarters, based either upon imperfect memory on their part, as against my imperfect memory, or upon something else; or, even should I be literally exact in my statement, but fail to fortify it properly, the committee will easily see what an immense advantage will be given to those who deny my statements, and at what an immense disadvantage not only I, myself, but the committee and the public, will be placed in the matter. I have had no opportunity of dissecting these accounts. It is necessary to have them all, for the purpose of comparing them, and it is necessary that I should have the services of Mr. Center, who is an expert book-keeper, which I am not; for, although I was in the accountant's department at one time, I never could get a balance right at the first trial in my life, and for that reason I left it. With Mr. Center's aid, however, I think that by Monday or Tuesday, at the outside, I can get up such a statement as will be satisfactory to everybody, if I should finally conclude to submit it.

Q. My inquiry does not embrace any money that you paid to anybody, but only the persons whom you employed to aid you in procuring the subsidy; can't you tell that to-day?—A. I would like to have until Monday to think over that whole question. That is not asking too much of the committee. I scarcely have had any time to think of these questions. When I began upon the subject my mind was almost a blank, owing partly to my injury and partly to my not having given any thought to it for a long time; and if the committee can grant me the indulgence I ask, I think it will be for the interest of everybody concerned. I think I have shown, so far, a desire to do all that the committee wanted, to the extent of my power, and I would like to do so now.

[The committee having spent some time in consultation,]

The CHAIRMAN. This subcommittee, Mr. Irwin, are disposed, so far as possible, to meet you in the same spirit in which you appear before them. They have been gratified at the disposition you have manifested so far, and they would wish to grant what you ask, but they are embarrassed in this way. They have spent a good deal of time upon these preliminaries; the general committee is somewhat impatient about it; we have a short session of Congress at most; we have a recess that will begin, probably, on Wednesday next; we did hope to get through with the whole examination, if possible, before the recess; we do not want this to run over and be the subject of shuttlecock and battledoor in New York during the recess; we want to close the matter up before that time, and we do not see how that can be done if we wait for you until Monday, because the other witnesses must be examined before Wednesday. We are willing, however, to wait until to-morrow morning; and we think that, having your counsel and your accountants here, you can be prepared by that time to answer us these questions.

The witness assented to the arrangement, and promised to do the best he could to get ready; and accordingly the examination was suspended until Saturday, the 19th instant, at 10.30 a. m.

WASHINGTON, December 19, 1874.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Whom did you employ to help you here in procuring the subsidy?—Answer. A number of persons, but not any one subject to the jurisdiction of this House to the extent of this question.

Q. Please give their names.--A. I shall be obliged, very reluctantly, Mr. Chairman, to decline giving the names of those persons, upon several grounds. I have endeavored up to this point to give the committee every information and every assistance in my power; and I wish now, for my own sake, as well as to please the committee, that it were in my power, consistently with what I conceive to be my duty, to give these names; but after careful reflection I have satisfied myself that I have no right to do so. I decline to answer the question upon several grounds, which I am prepared to state; but before stating them, I declare that I did not employ, in this connection, any Senator or any member of Congress, or any officer of the present Congress. I decline to answer upon the grounds—

First. That the resolutions referring this matter to the committee do not give the committee jurisdiction over the subject-matter to the extent of requiring an answer to that question, (that, of course, I do not know; I make that point only formally;)

Secondly. Having stated that I did not employ any person under the jurisdiction of this Congress to the extent of this inquiry, and there being nothing in the testimony, as far as I am acquainted with it, to negative that statement, and it being impossible in fact to negative that statement; and, moreover, there being already sufficient testimony in possession of the committee, furnished by myself and others, to convince any reasonable man, (and consequently to convince the committee, composed exclusively of reasonable men,) that a large sum of money was appropriated by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the purpose of procuring the subsidy, and that the money was used for that purpose, I decline to answer upon the further ground that neither the committee nor the House of Representatives has any jurisdiction over the subject-matter; and that if the committee had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, that jurisdiction has now been exhausted by reaching the point in the testimony which I have stated;

Thirdly. I decline, upon the ground that this entire matter having arisen and been completed in a prior Congress, so far as my connection with it is concerned, the committee and the House of Representatives are without jurisdiction over the subject; and Fourthly. I state what is, in my mind, the gravest and the controlling reason for my declining to meet the wishes of the committee, which is, that I have no right, as an honorable man, to disclose the particulars of any confidential relation existing between myself and any other person whatever, and especially in relation to a subject not within the jurisdiction of the House of Representatives, as I have already stated that this subject is not.

I submit these points to the committee with great deference. I wish, as I have said already, that it were in my power to answer as they wish.

[The first paragraph of the foregoing answer having been read over to the witness, at his own request the witness, after consulting his counsel, said:]

I desire to correct my answer by adding after the words "or any officer of the present Congress," in the second last sentence of the first paragraph, the words "who was a member or officer of the Forty-Second Congress;" so that the last clause of that sentence will read: "I declare that I did not employ, in this connection, any Senator, or any member of Congress, or any officer of the present Congress, who was a member or officer of the Forty-Second Congress."

Q. Do you insist upon declining to answer the question put to you?—

A. I do so, Mr. Chairman, most respectfully.

Q. Without waiving that question, and insisting upon its answer, I desire to put another: Will you state to the committee what portion of the $750,000, which you have testified you received from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to use in procuring the passage of the subsidy, you put in the hands of other persons to aid you in that work?—A. I paid the whole of that $750,000 to other persons.

Q. Will you state what was the largest sum you paid to any one person for that purpose?—A. Mr. Chairman, I think I shall have to decline answering that, for the reasons stated.

Q. Without waiving these questions, but insisting upon them, I ask you to state how many persons you employed to aid you in procuring the passage of the subsidy?—A. I think I would answer that question if I could recollect the number, but I really don't remember; quite a large number; I should say, off-hand, as many as twenty or thirty.

Q. Do you mean to say that your engagement of persons to aid you in procuring the passage of the subsidy through Congress for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was of such a secret and confidential character that you cannot honorably disclose it?

Mr. CHAPMAN, (of counsel for Irwin.) I object, at this stage of this proceeding, and instruct the witness not to answer that question, as it is outside of the jurisdiction under which this inquiry was directed.

The WITNESS. I decline to answer that question, upon the ground that it is beyond the jurisdiction of the committee, under the resolution by which this inquiry was ordered; and upon other grounds.

Here the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 21, 1874.

RICHARD B. IRWIN re-examined, before the full Committee of Ways and Means.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Whom did you employ to help you in procuring this subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—Answer. I never paid, nor agreed to pay, nor had any understanding with any other person that he was to pay, any money to any member or officer of the present Congress and of the Forty-second Congress, or to any person under the jurisdiction of this House to the extent of this inquiry.

Q. Please give the names of those whom you did employ to aid you in procuring this subsidy.—A. I shall be obliged, very reluctantly, to decline to answer that question, for the reasons which I gave on Saturday, and for additional reasons, which I desire to give this morning.

Q. Do you adopt as part of your reasons the answer which you made on Saturday last?—A. Yes.

Q. What other reasons do you desire now to give besides those which you gave on Saturday?—A. I wish to add to the preliminary declaration which I made on Saturday this clause: I have never paid, or agreed to pay, or had any understanding with any other person that he should pay, or agree to pay, any money in this connection to any member or officer of this House who was a member or officer of that House, and I have no knowledge of such payment being made or agreed to be made.

And now, having seen four papers furnished to me by the committee, to wit: A resolution passed February 20, 1873—that is to say, during the Forty-second Congress; a resolution passed March 3, 1873—that is to say, during the Forty-second Congress; a resolution offered by Mr. Milliken on the 3d of April, 1874, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and not passed by the House of Representatives, and upon which no further or other order was taken by the said House; all of which documents or resolutions are now communicated to me by the Committee on Ways and Means, at my request, as being the resolution or resolutions, order or orders, under which the said Committee on Ways and Means are, or profess to be, acting, I now desire to add to the above four reasons a fifth reason for declining to answer, all of the other reasons remaining valid and binding.

Fifthly. I decline to answer this question for the reason that the Committee on Ways and Means is not authorized and empowered by any resolution or order of the House of Representatives, or otherwise, to ask it.

Q. You insist on declining to answer the question put to you?—A. I do insist on declining.

Q. Without waiving that question, but insisting on it, I desire to put another question: State to the committee what portion of the $750,000 which you have testified you received from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to be used in procuring the passage of the subsidy, you put in the hands of other persons to aid you in that work?—A. In the form in which that question is put, it is impossible to give a categorical answer to it. I paid the whole of that $750,000 to other persons, whom I employed, in consideration of their services.

Q. State what was the largest sum which you paid to any one such person for that purpose.—A. I must decline to answer that question on the general grounds stated before, and on the special ground that it relates entirely to private transactions between myself and other persons, not under the jurisdiction of this House to the extent of this inquiry, and relates to a subject-matter which is not now under the jurisdiction of this House.

Q. Without waiving these questions, but insisting on them, I ask you now to state how many persons you employed to aid you in procuring the passage of this subsidy.—A. I think I answered that question before to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Q. What is your answer to it now?—A. It was quite a large number of persons. As nearly as I can recollect, without going through papers which are not now in my possession, I should say perhaps twenty or thirty persons.

Q. Are there any papers in existence which will show the number of persons so employed, or the character of their employment?—A. I think not.

Q. Have there ever been such papers in existence?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. What did you mean by saying that, without being able to refer to papers not now in your possession, you were unable to answer the question?—A. I suppose that by referring to papers which are in my possession somewhere—that is to say, some of them in San Francisco and some of them here—I could refresh my memory to such an extent as to be able to make out a complete list of all the persons employed by me. I cannot do so to-day.

Q. What are the papers to which you allude?—A. To answer the question would push my memory beyond its limits.

Q. Can you give us the character of the papers to which you allude?—A. Yes. I would give my bank-account, which I showed to the committee the other day, as one of the papers.

Q. Will your bank-account disclose the number of persons and the character of the engagements, or either?—A. I cannot tell without an examination of it. I should think it would give an approximation to the number of persons. [After reflection.] But, no; it would not do that. It would not give even an approximation to the number of names, because some of the gentlemen whom I employed also employed other counsel to assist them. Suppose, for example, that one counsel employed five others to assist him, that would make six persons, and my check would simply show the one person.

Q. Have you any memorandum or writing anywhere that gives the names of the persons so employed?—A. I have no memorandum which gives the names, but I have recently seen one which gives a portion of them.

Q. Will it show the amount of money which you put in the hands of those persons, respectively?—A. I object to the phrase "put in the hands of" in any other sense than as payment for services. I do not think the phrase is justified by the testimony.

Q. Will you produce before this committee papers showing your transactions to any extent with any person so employed?—A. The only paper I have seen of the character alluded to is a memorandum in the possession of one of my counsel, made by him, he being attorney and counselor-at-law, who is not now and never has been an officer or member of this House; and it contains a list of persons who are not subject to the jurisdiction of this House to the extent of this inquiry.

Q. Are they persons who were employed to expend any portion of this money?—A. No, sir; they are persons who were paid for their services.

Q. Are they persons into whose hands came any portion of the $750,000 received by you from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the purpose stated by you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will that memorandum show what portion of that $750,000 came into the hands of each of those persons, respectively, as far as it goes?—A. It will show the amount paid to each of those persons for his services, as far as it goes.

Q. Will you furnish the committee with that memorandum?—A. I cannot furnish that memorandum, for the reason that it is not in my possession, and never has belonged to me, but only to my counsel. None of the persons named on it are under the jurisdiction of this House, to the extent of this inquiry, to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Q. Do you mean to say that your engagement of persons to aid you in procuring the passage of the subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was of such a secret and confidential character that you cannot honorably disclose it?—A. No, sir; I mean to say that my relations with the attorneys and counsel whom I employed were of such a confidential character that—they and each of them and I being outside of the jurisdiction of this House so far as this inquiry is concerned—this House has no right to compel me to answer.

Q. Do you mean to say that you employed no person but an attorney-at-law?—A. No, sir; I think I employed others.

Q. Were your engagements with such other persons of such a secret and confidential character as that you cannot honorably disclose them?—A. They were precisely of the same character as that with the others.

Q. Will you disclose those relations to this committee?—A. I decline to do so for the reasons which I have stated.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we will excuse you for the present.

The WITNESS. I am in a very weak condition; and I most respectfully submit that the committee has crowded my memory this morning, and I would like very much, as a special favor, to be allowed to revise this portion of my testimony, because I may desire to correct it. Some phrases that I have used may be a little too strong.

The CHAIRMAN. Such portions of your testimony as the committee may desire to submit to the House you will be permitted to revise.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Are you an attorney and counselor-at-law by profession?—A. I am not.

NEW YORK, FIFTH AVENUE HOTEL,
December 28, 1874.

The subcommittee of the Committee of Ways and Means met at 10.30 a. m. Present: Mr. Burchard, the chairman, Mr. Beck, Mr. Kasson, and Mr. Niblack.

Mr. Clark Bell, at his own request, was permitted to appear as the attorney of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

GEORGE S. COE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you president of the American Exchange Bank?—

Answer. I am.

Q. How long have you been president of the American Exchange Bank?—A. I have been an officer of the bank nearly twenty years, and president some fourteen years.

Q. Do you know Richard B. Irwin?—A. I do, sir, very well. I have known him, I think, five or six years.

Q. Has he, during that time, had an account with the American Exchange Bank?—A. He has had during part of that time. I hold in my hand an abstract of his account. It is not the whole of his account, but it goes back to 1868, and it shows that he had an account in the bank anterior to 1868. The balance is brought here from November, 1868.

Q. Did he have an open account with the bank during the year 1872?—A. He did.

Q. Prior to the month of February, 1872, was that account closed and balanced?—A. As these inquiries are naturally tending to the details of Mr. Irwin's account, I think it is proper that I should make a remark to the committee. As you, gentlemen, are aware, there is a confidential relation between a banker and his customer which would ordinarily prevent any gratuitous exhibition of the customer's account. But as I have looked over the testimony of Mr. Irwin as it is printed in the newspapers, I perceive that he has already either offered to show or shown this abstract to the committee, so that I am relieved from any embarrassment of that kind. I merely make this remark, so that I may not appear to show a too willing disposition to exhibit this account.

Mr. KASSON. Not only that, but, under the law as it stands, a witness under oath must answer as to such matters.

Q. Was the account-current of Mr. Irwin with the American Exchange Bank closed prior to February, 1872, and then re-opened by deposits?—A. [Referring to the abstract.] This account, like all other accounts, is closed from time to time by a balance, which is carried to the new account, and I see the account goes on until it is closed by a new balance carried down to March, 1871, and it was again balanced and vouchers returned on February 13, 1872.

Q. What balance remained to the credit of Mr. Irwin on the 13th of February, 1872?—A. The balance carried down on February 13th seems to be some $15,000.

Q. Prior to that time had the account been balanced—that is, the amount that was to his credit drawn out?—A. Not at all, sir; there remained a balance of that sum. Our desire in the bank is to have accounts closed frequently, in order to test the accuracy of the accounts. It is rather a rule of ours.

Q. But I understand you to say that, during that period, there remained a balance to his credit?—A. Yes, sir; on the 13th of February I perceive that the vouchers prior to that were all returned—forty-five vouchers returned, and a balance shown of some $15,000.

Q. Was his account with the bank closed at any time subsequent to that period between then and now?—A. This abstract shows that the account was closed on December 19, 1872, by a remittance to San Francisco of some small amount. The account reads “balance invested in San Francisco funds by direction of his letter of 7th instant.”

Q. What was the balance?—A. Some three or four hundred dollars. That was after he left New York.

Q. Will you hand the committee a copy of the account between R. B. Irwin and the American Exchange Bank, embracing the period from February 14, 1872, to December 19, 1872?

The WITNESS. I submit to the committee whether, as a matter of official propriety as a banker, I ought to do so.

Mr. BELL. I suggest that the account be limited to the period ending on the 14th of February, 1872.

Mr. KASSON. The attorney of the steamship company will please not to interrupt the committee at present, as he is here only by courtesy.

The WITNESS. This is a copy of the abstract of the account which Colonel Irwin himself requested—from whatever date he requested—and in sending it to him we took care to take a copy of it, and this is the copy, which I believe has been carefully verified.

The CHAIRMAN. In reference to your objections in answering these questions about this account, I will state that the same question has arisen before the committee heretofore, and we have unanimously decided that a witness was bound to answer such questions.

The WITNESS. The decision of the committee is quite sufficient for me.

Mr. KASSON. Will you then submit to the committee a copy of the account of R. B. Irwin with the bank of which you are president, covering the period from February 14, 1872, to December 19, of that year?

The WITNESS. I will, sir; here it is.

[For account see appendix, Exhibit A.]

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Look at the checks now submitted to you, (being the same checks which were shown to Mr. Hatch and Mr. Irwin, Nos. 2360 to 2365, inclusive, and dated May 24, 1872,) and state whether they were deposited in your bank?—A. As president of the bank I do not think I am personally able to answer that question. I wish the committee to understand that it is not my official business to attend to the details of this sort of thing. I can only say that that number, “twenty-one,” which appears on one of those checks, is the number of our bank in the clearing-house. On one of these checks that number appears very distinctly; on another it seems to be dim, but I believe it is the same number.

Q. That number is on four of the checks?

A. It is on two of them, that for $650,000 and that for $50,000. Here is one that has the “1” on it, but the “2” is obliterated, or at least indistinct, and I should not undertake to testify positively to that. This check for $10,000 has no stamp upon it.

Q. Look carefully.—A. This one [number 2361, $10,000] has upon it “May 29, 1872, American Exchange National Bank, paid.” That shows that it went through the hands of a different teller from these other numbers, 2363, 2364, and 2365. Here is another of the same kind for $5,000, [number 2360,] and it has upon it “American Exchange Bank, May 29, 1872, paid;” that went through the same department as the $10,000 check. This one, [number 2362, $10,000,] has the number "21" upon it, which indicates that it passed through our bank.

Q. The total is how much?—A. Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Q. Look at the account and see whether Mr. Irwin did not deposit $735,000 on the 25th and $15,000 on the 29th of May, 1872.—A. Here is the $25,000; it has the "1" on it without the "2." Undoubtedly the "2" is there, but you see it is not sufficiently distinct. Here is the $10,000, which has the "21" upon it very clear. That makes $35,000. Now here is the $650,000, which is marked "21," and the $50,000; that makes $735,000. I can only say that he deposited that sum, which appears there, and I believe these to be the checks which constituted it.

Q. Give the numbers and amounts of the checks.—A. Number 2364 is $50,000; number 2365 is $65,000; number 2362 is $10,000, and number 2363 is $25,000. Those four checks make an aggregate of $735,000. The other two checks came through a different teller of the same bank. The only way I can identify those checks is by the "21" upon them; but these, the $5,000 and the $10,000 checks have the stamp in print, "American Exchange National Bank." They went through the bank on the 29th, the day they were paid to our account, and the day of their credit, and therefore I have no doubt whatever that these two checks constitute that sum of $15,000. Number 2360 is the $5,000 check, and number 2361 is the $10,000 check.

Q. From your knowledge of the course of business in the bank, or in the banks of New York, can you state to the committee in what manner those checks were presented to your bank, as you say they came through different departments?—A. Those marked "21" were presented in the regular way to the deposit-department—the receiving teller—whose business it is to take regular deposits from city customers.

Q. Those went through the clearing-house?—A. Well, they all went through the clearing-house; but the other two checks were deposited in another department of the bank, with an officer whom we call the note-teller. He receives remittances from out of town.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge whether these checks were deposited by Mr. Irwin in person, or by some one for him?—A. Yes, sir; I can tell you a circumstance which enables me to answer that question. Colonel Irwin came into the bank one day, as I distinctly recollect, and came into my room and made some remark to me of an ordinary character, having no reference to business at all, and then went out, and as he passed the receiving-teller's desk, in a very cool, nonchalant way, threw down his bank-book with this deposit of $735,000, and passed out. After he had gone the receiving-teller reported to me the fact of this deposit, remarking that it was an extraordinary sum to be deposited by Colonel Irwin, and I was quite startled. It was about the time when there was a great deal of excitement prevailing in respect to locking up greenbacks; and I inferred, without knowing anything about it, that this had some relation to some stock operation, and possibly some relation to a trick of that kind—a thing that is very odious to me—and I asked the young teller why he had not notified me promptly when the deposit was made. He replied that, seeing Colonel Irwin come from my own room, he supposed that I knew all about it, and that answer I thought was quite sufficient to excuse him, for it seemed very natural. As I have said, I was startled at the largeness of the deposit by Colonel Irwin; but the deposit had been made and the man had gone, and I did not think there was any official propriety in my pursuing a customer and seeking to know more about it, as the bank in its regular course of business had taken the money. Therefore, I said to the teller, let it pass now, but be very careful and watch the operation of this check. See who draws the money, so that we may avoid complicating this bank with any such operations as are now going on in the street. And with that remark I dismissed the subject for the day. The next day I directed the tellers—all of them—to report to me how that money was drawn, whether in bank-notes or in any other form. The next day passed away, and none of it was drawn at all; and the next day, I believe—I am not quite sure about the time, but if you will let me see the account-current I will tell you the number of days—there was nothing drawn against this large sum, and it still remained to the credit of Colonel Irwin, which was quite mysterious to me. The deposit was made on the 25th of May, and nothing was drawn against it except a small sum, and it gave an unusual significance to the transaction in reference to the financial interests of the country. I heard nothing about it at all. It appears by the account-current that there was a check drawn for $125,000 on the 27th of May, and another for $100,000, and another for $100,000, making $325,000 drawn on the 27th. In this statement I am not going into the small amounts. In looking over the book to see how these were drawn, I found that these three checks, for $125,000 and $100,000 and $100,000, were drawn over the counter by the presentation of checks made payable in money, to whom I have no possible means of ascertaining. I looked over our books and I simply saw that those checks were paid in money, paid in what we call the “afternoon,” after the clearing-house operations, through which large exchanges of checks are made. After that is the period of the day when we make no exchanges with banks, and these three checks must have been paid over the counter in money, but to whom we have no means of ascertaining. The checks for $125,000 and $100,000 were paid by the regular paying-teller in money, and the other one for $100,000 was paid by the note-teller, the teller whose business it is generally to receive rather than to pay. I cannot at present explain how it happens that this $100,000 check was not paid like the other two checks. But so it is. The records of the bank show that to be the fact.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Does that indicate that that check went to pay any other paper?—

A. That would be the natural supposition, sir; but I do not find that it did. I presume the only explanation of that thing that I can make is that there are times in the bank when a large accumulation of notes and currency occurs in one department rather than in another; that is to say, the paying-teller may not have received in the regular course of business a large enough sum to pay checks of this magnitude, which are, of course, very unusual, for it is a very rare thing that you pay $100,000 over the counter in any bank in New York. My inference, therefore, is that the note-teller, having received a large amount of money, must have been applied to to pay this check. At all events, it appears to have been paid by him, and it is quite proper that it should have been so paid, only that it is not according to the regular routine of business. In these three large checks I find the sum of $325,000, leaving out of account the smaller, which are of no consequence. This brings us to the 29th of May. These payments were made on the 27th, the deposit having been made on the 25th. Then on the 29th of May two strangers came into the bank, gentlemen unknown to me or to any one there. They presented themselves first at the paying-teller's desk and handed him two checks, one for $275,000 and another for $115,000. I saw those checks at the time, and to the best of my recollection they were drawn by Col. R. B. Irwin, either to his own order and indorsed in blank, or drawn to his own order with an indorsement over his own indorsement "pay to bearer" or "payable to bearer." My impression is that they were drawn "R. B. Irwin, pay to my own order," and indorsed in blank, which made the checks payable to bearer. The two gentlemen presented them and demanded payment in currency. The teller, startled by the largeness of the sum, was unwilling to pay them without some identification, which the gentlemen refused to give. The teller then referred them to the officers' room in the rear of the bank, and they went to the assistant cashier, who sits by me, and he also had the same apprehension or reluctance to pay these large amounts without some identification of the gentlemen who presented the checks. The two gentlemen were then referred to me, and hearing them very emphatic, for I had overheard part of the conversation, I asked them to sit down and explain to me what the matter was. They said in substance—for of course it is impossible for me to recollect any words that were used—they said in substance, we have two checks on your bank, and they refused to pay them. Said I, "Let me look at them, gentlemen." They handed the checks to me, and I looked at them. One of them was for an amount over $200,000—as to that my memory would serve me without any assistance—and the other was over $100,000. I see by the account-current that one was for $275,000 and the other for $115,000. I said, "Now, gentlemen, you know these are very large sums of money," and one of the gentlemen remarked, that is not a large sum. I said, "Sir, $275,000 we consider in New York to be a very large sum;" and he answered, "We handle larger sums than that," or something to that effect. I then said to them, in substance, "Now, gentlemen, there is a courtesy due between gentlemen, and there is a certain obligation which every man owes to the community in handling large sums of money, and which men who are engaged in these large transactions owe to each other to take care of each other, and on that general ground I ask you to identify yourselves, simply that I may be sure that I am not paying a forged check." The answer of the gentlemen was something like this, or to this effect, that they had reasons for not wanting to be identified, and they declined to be identified. I saw that I was officially in a corner, because I could not fail to recognize the right of any man to preserve his incognito if he chose to do it, nor the right of any man to demand money for a check payable to bearer. That, of course, is an unquestionable right, and the only ground on which I could refuse was by saying these checks are forgeries, which I was not prepared to do. I had looked at them and at the signatures with unusual attention, and I was perfectly satisfied that they were genuine; and I did not want to belittle myself by being unnecessarily hypercritical, so I resolved to do the next best thing that I could to protect the bank. Therefore I said, "Gentlemen, how do you propose to use this large check? If you are going to use this in a bank, you can relieve me from all embarrassment." And the gentleman who had presented the large check said, "Yes, I am going to use it in a bank." Said I, "Then have it certified, and you can deposit it, which will save you and us the trouble of counting this large amount." And he assented. So I directed the check to be certified, which accounts for its being drawn on the 29th of May. Then turning to the other gentleman, I said, "How do you want yours?" He said, "I want mine to-morrow morning in money." I said, "Come in to-morrow morning, and you shall have it." As to the first check I felt this assurance in certifying it, that if it were deposited in another bank and it proved to be wrong in any way, I could discover the forgery if it was a forgery; and my action was simply an extraordinary precaution in paying an extraordinary sum—the whole thing was very exceptional. The next morning the two gentlemen came in, (I think they came in together,) and without any hesitation at all I said, pay this check to this gentleman, (the check for $115,000,) and at the same time, for the purpose of protecting myself as much as possible, I directed the police officer whose business it is to go around among the banks in this particular district, to see this gentleman and bring me word where he went. I had had an opportunity of reflecting upon the matter over night, and the bare possibility of our paying a forged check of this magnitude was, of course, a little startling to me; so I said to this officer, Mr. McDougall, whom I knew to be a very discreet man, when we pay a check this morning, as I will tell you, you ascertain whether the party who receives it is a respectable man, so that we may know that it is not a forgery. Bring me that assurance; that is all I want. And he said I can do that. The check was paid and the gentleman went out, and Mr. McDougall, the officer I speak of, took such a course as he chose to take in order to be able to bring the assurance I wanted, and in fifteen or twenty minutes he came back and informed me that that gentleman to whom this $115,000 check was paid went from our bank into the Park Bank, and there went to the officers' room and had some conversation, and went thence to the note-teller and paid a note, and then went down street and into the Equitable Insurance Company's building, and went up in the elevator, where he lost him. I said that is all I want you to tell me, and I dismissed him, he having performed his duty.

Q. Which of the checks do you now speak of having traced in this way?—A. The $115,000 check, which was paid in money. I then directed our assistant cashier, who sits by me now, to go to the Park Bank with a note which I gave him, requesting the president of the bank to answer a confidential question which our assistant cashier would ask, in order to assure me that a certain check which we had paid was paid to a respectable man. The assistant cashier came back and reported to me that the gentleman who had come into that bank, gone to the officers' room, and afterward around to the note-teller, as detailed by the police officer, was named King, and that he had been postmaster, or something of that kind, to the House of Representatives formerly.

Q. That was added in the conversation?—A. That was the report made to me at the time. I remarked to our assistant cashier, "This relieves us, I think, of any solicitude in respect to those checks; and that is all our interest in it. You had better take a memorandum of this name, so that if it should by any possibility be required at any time you may know it." And with that remark I dismissed the whole thing, and my connection with the matter ended. In some way, I cannot now recall how, the name of the Northern Pacific Railroad was brought to my notice in connection with these men; and before the police-officer left, he stated that this gentleman had gone up in the elevator in the Equitable building, and that he, not desiring to go into the elevator with him, went up the stairs, but failed to see him again, and, therefore, supposed that he had gone into some office. In some way the name of the Northern Pacific Railroad was mentioned to me just at that time, and in that way the name of the office of that company was suggested to me in connection with that gentleman; so I said to the officer, "Go up to the Northern Pacific Railroad office and see if the gentleman that is paid this check to was there;" and he went, and came back and reported,

"The gentleman is sitting there reading a newspaper." With that report I dismissed the whole subject from my mind, so far as the $115,000 check was concerned. Now, I will go back to the $275,000 check. Having, as I have already informed the committee, certified the check for $275,000, the next thing was to ascertain the following morning how it was paid; so I inquired what bank had sent the $275,000 check in, and the answer of the clerk was, "the Marine Bank of New York." I then requested our assistant cashier to go down to the Marine Bank and ask the officers from me (I think I gave him a note to the officers, as in the case of the Park Bank) whether the person to whom that $275,000 check was paid was a respectable party; whether the officers of the bank knew him, so that I might feel assured that it was all right. The word came back to me that the party was a very respectable party; that the cashier knew all about it, and if it was necessary he would tell me, but that I could be assured that the check was all right. I then dismissed the whole subject from my mind, as it was none of my business to pursue it further.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. What officer of the Marine Bank sent you that word?—A. The assistant cashier of our bank, who sits here, came back with that report. It was a verbal communication, but it was satisfactory. What I have now stated to the committee disposes of the whole $735,000, or the bulk of it. These smaller checks, one of $8,000, one of $19,000, and one of $16,000, I do not remember anything about; I gave them no attention, because the amounts were comparatively unimportant. I see that two of these checks were certified, that for $19,000, and for $16,000. That letter C means that the check was certified.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Are there any data accessible that would give you, or give the committee, any information as to how those checks were paid?—A. I do not know. I have not examined that subject; our books would simply show an entry, "R. B. Irwin," showing that those checks were certified on that day, and that they came in through the clearing-house on the following day; I do not know whether we could ascertain how they were paid—how possibly we could. They were presented at the paying-teller's desk for certification. It is his business alone to certify checks. No other person certifies them.

Q. What is the name of the cashier of the Park Bank?—A. J. L. Worth.

Q. Had Mr. Irwin any business with the bank in the discounting line?—A. We never had discounted paper for him. I think I did explain how that might be. It is not perfectly clear to my own mind yet, until I investigate it further. The explanation satisfied me from my knowledge of the routine of business.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. You have explained particularly with reference to these two checks, one for $275,000 and the other for $115,000, which make $390,000. Can you, by reference to the accounts or by resort to your memory, give us any information as to any particular payments made out of this large deposit besides those you have spoken of?—A. No more than what I have stated. It is impossible. I can only infer from the records of the bank that they were paid at the counter, and we must have taken the ordinary precaution to identify the parties to whom they were paid, whoever they were. My inference would be, if that is of any consequence, that Mr. Irwin must have drawn that money himself.

Q. For example, under date of May 27, 1872, two days after the deposit appears to have been made, there is a payment of $125,000, which is also a large sum. Have you any recollection about that?—A. None at all, sir.

Q. Nor of the payment of the $11,500 following, nor of the $100,000 following that?—A. No, sir; of neither of them.

Q. Nor of the $10,000 check again following that?—A. No, sir; nor should I naturally be informed as to any of those payments from my official position in the bank except for the unusual circumstances that I have detailed.

Q. There appears by this account to have been paid on May 27, two days after the deposit, $375,000. State what part of that sum appears to have been paid in cash over the counter, and what by certified check or otherwise. I ask now in reference to the two items appearing there under date of May 27.—A. You include the $19,000?

Q. All the payments made on May 27.—A. Those payments amount to $379,000 in all. I can only tell you that a check of $19,000 was certified, and, of course, was not paid in money. The others must have been paid in notes over the counter. That seems to be the record of the bank, and I believe it was so, but I have no knowledge of it whatever.

Q. You have no recollection touching any of those payments particularly?—A. None whatever. The routine of the bank would not require it.

Q. You speak of two strangers who appeared on May 29 with two checks, respectively, of $275,000 and $115,000. State, as nearly as you can, the appearance of those men.—A. Well, that is a difficult thing, sir. It is nearly two years since, and their appearance has faded from my memory somewhat. I should say they were pretty stout, burly men. My impression is that they were both quite stout men.

Q. Was one taller than the other?—A. Not very much. Neither of them could be characterized by anything striking, except general robustness, as if they had been well kept. They were not of your kind or mine—nervous, lean men; they were rather stout and burly.

Q. What should you judge as to their weight?—A. I could hardly tell you anything about that.

Q. Was there any difference between the complexions of the two that you can remember?—A. I do not think that my power of delineation is equal to the task of describing them. I should hardly like to venture upon it before a committee so grave as this.

Q. Can you say anything as to the color of their whiskers or of their hair?—A. No, sir; but I think that I remember one of the gentlemen, and would recognize him if I saw him again.

Q. You cannot further identify them than to say that they were stout, burly, and a healthy character of men?—A. Not particularly. I think one of them was a little shorter than the other, and my impression is that one of them was younger than the other.

Q. The man who got the $115,000, was he the younger or the older of the two?—A. He appeared to be the elder of the two; I think he was a little more conciliatory than the other; the other was more abrupt and determined.

Q. Which of these gentlemen was it that said that this was a small sum, or not a large sum?—A. The one that had the largest check, I think. He protested that this was a small sum. I want to say to the committee one thing, that in the whole course of my experience, which has been of a great many years, I have never had occasion to resort to means like this to identify a man, nor should I have done so in this instance, but for the peculiar circumstances of the case. It is not a very gentlemanly way to pursue an inquiry, but it was necessary for me to protect the bank against the possibility of these large checks being forged, and inasmuch as it was not gentlemanly on their part to refuse to identify themselves, I thought that I was justified in taking the course that I did. My justification lies in the fact that my action was taken for the protection of the bank. There was nothing inquisitorial in the proceeding at all; it was simply for the purpose of protecting the bank.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. On their part, then, it was a very unusual proceeding?—A. Very unusual indeed; I never heard of such a thing.

Q. I believe you have stated that it was your custom to require identification of persons presenting checks for large sums?—A. A check payable to bearer, I conceive, is a check payable to whoever presents it, and I really have no right to inquire into the matter any further than he is disposed to tell me from gentlemanly courtesy. If you present a check payable to bearer at a bank, they have no right to challenge you, as I think; "bearer" is your name; but if a check is of extraordinary magnitude, and the dangers of handling large sums in this city being what we all know them to be, I considered it proper that the party taking the responsibility of paying the check should guard himself, and secure the bank by every proper and possible means.

Q. You regarded these as sums sufficiently large to require that some such protection should be taken?—A. I did.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Even if a check is presented, payable to bearer, and the man who presents it has the right to be "bearer," still, of course, it is your duty and privilege to see that the name of the drawer of the check is genuine?—A. That is so, because it is a well-settled principle of law that a bank has no recourse for a forgery—that a bank is always understood to be responsible for the genuineness of its signatures.

Q. To protect the bank against forgeries you are careful?—A. Yes, sir; that is all that I know of this case. The matter would not have gone to the lengths it did, but for the refusal of those gentlemen to do what I thought reasonable and fair to the bank.

Q. I observe that the account of Mr. Irwin, from 1868 up to this time in 1872, was comparatively small.—A. It was nothing approaching its magnitude after this deposit, and, as I have already stated in my previous answers, I was somewhat startled on that account.

Q. And the sums drawn out against his deposits, up to that time, were comparatively small?—A. Yes, sir; and it was that known fact that drew my attention to this matter.

Q. That made his large deposits and large drafts significant?—A. Yes, sir; and also the manner in which it was done was very significant.

Q. His account was converted by that large deposit from an ordinary to an extraordinary account?—A. That is it, sir.

Q. I think you stated there was something in the manner of Irwin's original deposit of this large sum which was out of the ordinary course. I think you said that in making the deposit he laid it down in a nonchalant way?—A. Well, as I said before, it is an extraordinary thing for a man to make a deposit of $750,000 in this city, and I thought it was remarkable and significant.

Q. He had called on you a few moments before making that deposit, but had failed to mention the fact that he was going to make it?—A. Yes, sir; he made no remark that was unusual. A man having $700,000 in his hand to deposit would probably be very much absorbed by that fact; at least I should myself.

Q. You did not personally see any of the men who drew the first three large checks of the 27th of May?—A. I did not see either of them. We have inquired of our teller whether he could recall either of those men, and he says he cannot; that he would not be able to recall anything about it.

Q. I understood you to say that you thought those sums were paid out in money; is there anything in your bank-books to show whether they were paid out in money or in checks?—A. Yes, sir; it is shown in this way: the operations of the clearing-house, through which large checks go, are performed early in the morning; we get our clearing-house checks in by 11 o'clock, and after that there is nothing paid otherwise than in money. These checks appear by our record to have been paid subsequently to that time. They were what we call "afternoon work," showing that they must have been paid in notes and currency.

Q. Those payments appear on your regular books in such a position, relative to that day's work, as to show that fact?—A. Yes, sir; in such a position as to indicate that very positively to me. I wish you to understand, though, that I speak from an examination made since you asked the question on Saturday, not my own personal examination, but from an examination made and reported to me. I believe Mr. Clarke had it made. Quite remarkably, Mr. Clarke alone, except myself, has had all to do with this transaction.

Q. Do you know whether there is anything on your books that will indicate whether that money was drawn by Mr. Irwin on his own check, or by somebody else on a check payable to bearer, or to order?—A. There is nothing. These checks were very carefully withdrawn. If you will look at that account, you will see one thing that is a little exceptional. This deposit was made on the 25th of May, and the account, you observe, is closed on the 27th of May, and ten vouchers returned. All checks embraced in that category are returned with those ten vouchers, returned as early as the 27th.

Q. Returned as early as the 27th?—A. The balance brought down on May 27th is $389,000, consequently the books were balanced and the checks returned at that time.

Q. That was done within two days of the deposit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And simultaneous with the drawing of the large amounts?—A. Before the large checks were drawn. It was all drawn out except $389,000, which stands to the credit of the new account.

Q. Then the account is balanced on May 28th, and it is balanced again on the 30th, and four vouchers returned? This statement shows the facts. It is pictorial. Is there any other instance in the history of Mr. Irwin's account with the bank where he had his checks withdrawn so promptly?—A. I perceive no other instance. The account shows you that there were none.

Q. You speak of that instance as showing an unusual promptness in withdrawing the checks after the payment of the money upon them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those checks were not allowed to remain in the bank, even over night; the checks drawn on the 27th?—A. Yes, over night; you see how long, sir.

Q. They appear to have been withdrawn on the same date?—A. I did not observe that before; they must have been taken away as quickly as possible. They were withdrawn as soon as it could be done with any propriety. It is not usual for a gentleman to want his account made up so very promptly.

Q. Accounts, I suppose, are not made up with that rapidity unless by special request of the person who has the account with the bank?—A. No, sir; our rule is to make them up once a month; that is the ordinary custom; but when specially requested, we make them up at any time. It is the right of any gentleman to ask to have his account made up.

Q. And the right was exercised in this case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where a check is drawn payable to order and indorsed by the person who draws it do you make any memorandum on your books which shows that fact?—A. No, sir; we pay no attention whatever in our records of indorsers of checks.

Q. So that there is nothing in your bank-records that would indicate who drew the money, even if the check had been drawn payable to a third person and indorsed by that third person?—A. No, sir, nothing whatever. It would be impossible to make such records. We hold the vouchers as long as it is necessary in order to justify our payments. When they are given up we are discharged. It would be impossible to conduct our business upon the other plan.

Q. Was the $275,000 check, which was drawn on the 29th, returned by the Marine Bank to your bank the next morning?—A. Yes, sir. I will give you what we call the "clearing-house slip," which will show where the check went. All checks that came to us for payment through the clearing-house are listed upon slips of paper, with printed headings, indicating the bank from which they come. Those slips contain simply a list of sums of money, with no particulars; sums of money added up, showing the amount that each bank sends in; and this slip, which I now give you, is the slip received from the Marine Bank. It is taken from this package of slips of all the banks on that day, and the date is May 30th, 1872.

Q. The fourth entry on that slip is $275,000?—A. Yes, sir, that is the fourth entry; that identifies that particular sum as belonging to the checks that I have spoken of.

Q. The two men who came to your bank together, demanding the payment of the $275,000 check, and the $115,000 check, respectively, were they not evidently acquainted with each other?—A. O, yes, they seemed to be; they came together, and talked together.

Q. Mr. King, then, would probably know who it was that accompanied him?—A. O, they were evidently acquainted.

Q. The money paid to Mr. King was carried to the Park Bank the same morning, as your officer informed you?—A. I did not use those words. These gentlemen, you observe, when they came in together, as I have stated, came in on the 29th of May, and I disposed of the large check by certifying it, and that check subsequently was deposited in the Marine Bank, and I do not know anything about that. The other gentleman said it would be necessary for him to have the money the next morning; that was the very point I wanted made, for it gave me the advantage of time. The next morning he came in and the money was paid to him, and then the other circumstances that I have detailed occurred, but I did not go to the Park Bank, and consequently I cannot answer that question.

Q. The report made to you by the assistant cashier was made to you on the 30th of May, the same day of the payment?—A. Immediately, within a very few minutes after the payment—fifteen or twenty minutes.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Those two persons called at the bank together in the first instance, did they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did they call together the next morning?—A. I think they were together next morning; I am very sure they were.

Q. Did they act as if they were interested in both checks?—A. That I could not say; there was nothing to indicate that.

Q. Did the party who had had the $275,000 check certified participate in any way in anything that occurred the next morning when the one with the $115,000 check came to get the currency for it?—A. I have no knowledge of that. I desired to dispose of them with great rapidity, and did so.

Q. Did I understand you to say that next morning you proposed to certify the $115,000 check?—A. No, sir; because the day before he had told me when I certified the other check that he wanted the money.

Q. But I understand you to say that, when you proposed to certify the checks, one of them said that they had reasons for not wishing that done.—A. No; that they had reasons for not wishing to identify themselves.

Q. Was it the one who received the certified check, or the one who received the currency, that made that reply?—A. I cannot distinctly state, but my recollection is that it was the gentleman who had the largest check, the one for $275,000. He was the shorter and the younger of the two.

Q. Could you recognize him if you saw him before you now?—A. No, sir; I do not think I could.

Q. Or either of them?—A. I think I could recognize Mr. King. There is a reason for that, because I have seen him since that time.

Q. Ah! then you have no doubt that it was Mr. King?—A. I have no doubt, sir. About a year after that, I think it must have been, two gentlemen came into the bank, one of them a citizen here, whose name I cannot now recall; this gentleman said to me, "I want to identify Colonel King," (or "General King," or whatever the title was;) "he has a check on your bank;" and Mr. Clarke, who sits within sight of me, steps up to my side and says, "It is not necessary to identify General King; we know him; we have dealt with him before." I then identified him as some man whom I had seen on this prior occasion, and Mr. Clarke could identify him also.

Q. Was Mr. King the shorter of the two men who presented the checks for $275,000 and $115,000, respectively?—A. I think not, sir; if there was any difference in that respect, my impression is that he was the taller of the two.

Q. Was there anything peculiar in the appearance of the other one?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing about his whiskers that struck your attention?—A. No, sir; nothing that struck my attention. I should fail utterly if I attempted a description of either of them, excepting as I have already told you, that they were stout men, with rotund faces.

Q. But as to one of them being Mr. King, you have no doubt?—A. I have very little doubt.

Q. He was the one that had the check for $115,000, which was paid in currency?—A. I think so. Understand, gentlemen, that I make a great distinction here between my memory of what was done, and what this record shows to have been done. I know from memory that that check was for over $100,000, and this slip fully confirms my recollection, and shows just what it was.

Q. Is there anything in that occurrence, aside from your duty as president of the bank, to guard the bank against imposition or loss by fraudulent checks, which attracted your attention particularly?—A. I do not know that there was, particularly. When that deposit was reported to me, I asked what Mr. Irwin had deposited, and the answer was, "checks of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company;" there was nothing else than that. If I were asked if I knew what was going on at the time, that is, that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company were trying to get a subsidy, of course I knew it, as I knew of all things that were going on within my proper range of observation; but there was nothing in the matter that would have attracted my attention. You can see, gentlemen, that throughout the whole matter, I was actuated, not by any inquisitorial spirit, but by a desire to protect the American Exchange Bank.

Q. But the object of my inquiry was to ascertain whether your curiosity was sufficiently excited to induce you to ascertain the character of the deposit that Irwin had drawn against.—A. I certainly was not unmindful of that.

Q. You did ascertain that the deposit was checks of the "Pacific Mail Steamship Company?"—A. Yes, sir; that was reported to me.

Q. Was there anything in your mind at that time in connection with any proceedings in Washington?—A. Well, sir, it is impossible to say what train of thought passed through my mind at that time, it is so long ago, but probably there was; however, there was nothing special that I am aware of.

Q. What conclusion did you reach, what inference did you draw, when you ascertained that Mr. King, who was then the Postmaster of the House of Representatives, had drawn the money upon that large check?—A. Well, sir, not a pleasant one.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. You say that about a year after this occurrence Mr. King came in again to draw a sum of money upon a check?—A. I said the gentleman came in again.

Q. Well, then, some gentleman, who had had the $115,000 check cashed at your counter, came into your bank about a year afterward to draw money upon a check?—A. Yes, sir; I do not know how long afterwards, but quite a long period of time.

Q. And, without any question or suggestion on your part, he brought in another gentleman to identify him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And was in the process of making himself known to your bank when you and your officers discovered him to be the same gentleman who had had the $115,000 check cashed?—A. Yes, sir; the assistant cashier stepped up to me at the moment. As the identification of persons presenting checks was a usual occurrence, I do not know whether I should have recognized the gentleman if the assistant cashier had not stepped to my desk and spoken to me.

Q. Your attention was called to him by the assistant cashier, and you then recognized him to be the same gentleman who had received payment in currency of the check for $115,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell how large the check that he drew up on this second occasion was?—A. No, sir, I cannot; an ordinary check, nothing unusual about it.

Q. Do you remember who the gentleman was that came to identify him?—A. I do not; I have tried to tax my memory upon that point, but cannot remember.

Q. When it was suggested to this gentleman and to the citizen who came in with him to identify him, that Mr. King was already known in that bank, what reply was made?—A. He made no reply to me. The assistant cashier will tell you what reply was made. The gentlemen did not delay with me more than a moment.

Q. Some reply was made, then, to the assistant cashier?—A. He will inform you whether there was or not.

Q. Was there any reply made to you, or in your hearing?—A. None.

Q. Is that the only subsequent transaction with Mr. King that you know of?—A. I never saw the gentleman before the first, nor since that second transaction.

Q. Does his name appear on your books?—A. Not at all, sir; I did not know of the existence of the man.

Q. Do you know whether he has been in your bank lately, within a fortnight?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know that he has been in the city here within a week?—A. I have never set eyes on him since.

Q. And you have no knowledge from any of the officers of your bank of his having been here?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Who certifies checks in your bank?—A. The officer that we call the first teller; he does it invariably.

Q. And a record is kept of that certification?—A. A record is kept of every certified check in a book; and that accounts for the fact that that check is debited there when it is certified, and not when it is paid. If you have an account, and I certify your check, it is tantamount to accepting your check, and therefore I charge you with it.

Q. Who was your first teller at that time?—A. The same gentleman who is first teller now, Mr. Pinkney.

Q. This is the account that you submit?—A. Yes, sir.

[See appendix, Exhibit A.]

DUMONT CLARKE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your occupation.—Answer. Assistant cashier of the American Exchange Bank. I have been in the bank twelve or thirteen years, and have been assistant cashier six or seven or eight years. I was assistant cashier during all the period embraced in this account which the company has presented here.

Q. Have you heard the statement of Mr. Coe, the president of the bank, in regard to the transactions embraced in this account?—A. I have.

Q. State to the committee what personal knowledge you have of the transactions connected with either the deposit of those checks to the credit of Mr. Irwin, or the drawing and presentation of the drafts on which he obtained the money.—A. I have quite a distinct recollection of Mr. Irwin's coming up on the day on which those large checks were deposited, and speaking to Mr. Coe, as Mr. Coe has told you, and afterwards making the deposit; and then I recollect the teller's coming to our room with the check to show it to us, as is the custom when any unusual transaction takes place. This was an unusual transaction in Mr. Irwin's case. His account had been an ordinary account up to that time, and these large checks were something unusual.

Q. State what transpired in connection with the deposit of those checks; give a narrative of everything you know that was done in that connection.—A. Mr. Irwin came in and deposited those checks after having had a little conversation with Mr. Coe, and after he had made the deposit the receiving-teller brought the checks up to our room, and told us that as they were unusual in size he would like to show them to us and refer the matter to us. I examined them, and afterwards took them in to Mr. Coe to show them to him as something unusual. Then the check was taken back to the receiving-teller's desk, and passed through the exchanges as usual. That comprises all that can be said about the deposit.

Q. Can you read the certification of those checks?—A. Yes, sir. That is "Sherman," the paying-teller of the Bank of Commerce; that was certified at Mr. Irwin's own request; we did not have it done; he brought it there certified. Of the ten checks which are entered there, three were paid by the paying-teller in money—to whom paid we cannot positively say. But there is an indistinct recollection in my mind of their having been paid to Mr. Irwin in person, though I cannot say positively. The last $100,000 check, the last of those four, was paid through the note-teller, for what reason it is a little difficult to say. The only way that it can be accounted for is that it must have been wanted in large bills, and our paying-teller must have gone around to the other tellers to get the large bills. That is how we may account for its coming through the note-teller's department. The following day, or the day after, two gentlemen came in and went to the paying-teller's desk, and presented, one a check for $275,000, and the other a check for $115,000. It is our instruction to the teller not to pay any large sum of money, even if the check is payable to bearer, unless the parties presenting it are identified, because we have got into court once or twice by paying forged checks, and therefore the teller told these gentlemen that he would be unable to pay the checks unless they were identified. They then came up to my desk and I had a little conversation with them, and told them the reason why we did not care to pay those large checks without identification, and that I thought it was right and proper for them to give us some clew to their identity. They refused; one of them quite lustily. I then referred them to Mr. Coe, and went into his room with them.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. You know Mr. William S. King now?—A. I do.

Q. Was it Mr. King or the other that refused in that way?—A. It was the other. Mr. Coe went over the matter with them and told them that he did not think it was a proper thing for them to ask that such large sums of money should be paid by the bank without some identification of the parties. He told them that all we wanted to know was that the money went into the proper hands—that the checks were genuine; that while we were supposed to know the signatures of the drawers of our checks, still we thought we were justified in taking even greater precautions in order to protect the bank. This other gentleman (not Mr. King) remarked that he did not think this was a very large sum of money; that he had seen very much larger sums, and did not think it worth while to make a fuss about such things. Mr. Coe still refused, and asked the man how he was going to use the money, whether he was going to use it in a bank, and he said that he was. Mr. Coe then told him that we would certify the check for him, which would answer his purpose, and thereupon we had the paying-teller certify his check. That was the check for $275,000. The other gentleman stated that he wanted to use the money on the following day, and Mr. Coe told him that if he would come in the next morning we would pay him the money; knowing that if the other check passed correctly through another bank we would have some clue if there was anything wrong about this one. In the mean time we had communicated with a detective, and engaged him to be present on the following morning. Next morning this gentleman bearing the $115,000 check came in and took it to the president, who authorized its payment. We had instructed the detective beforehand how to proceed, and I told him that was the man, and to keep a lookout for him. The detective followed him out of the bank, and in the course of ten, fifteen, or perhaps twenty minutes, he came back and reported that the gentleman had gone to the Park Bank, had there held a short conversation with the cashier, and had then gone to the note-teller's desk, taken out a large amount of greenbacks, and had a transaction with the note-teller of the Park Bank. He said he had then followed the gentleman down town until he went into the Equitable Building, corner of Cedar street and Broadway, and got into the elevator to go up-stairs. The detective, of course, did not care to follow him into the elevator, but thought he would intercept him by going up-stairs. He failed, however, to do that, and he came back to the bank with the report that the gentleman had gone into some office in the Equitable, and he had lost him. Then Mr. Coe gave me a little note to Mr. Worth, the president of the Park Bank, asking if he would not, as a matter of favor, give us some account of the man that I should inquire about. Mr. Worth said that he would do it willingly, and I described the man, and told him that it was but a few moments ago that he had come in and had gone to the note-teller's desk, and he said I think that was Mr. William S. King, the postmaster of the House of Representatives. He said that Mr. King had paid a note at the note-teller's desk; "but," says he, "I will go and see." So he went to the note-teller's desk and came back with a report that it was so, that the gentleman was Mr. King, and that he had paid a note, I think he said of the Northern Pacific Railway Company. I have got the facts which he told me in a memorandum, but I neglected to bring it up with me. On my return to the bank I reported to Mr. Coe, and he directed the detective to go to the office of the Northern Pacific Railway Company and see if the gentleman was there, and the detective came back and said that he was in the office of that company with some other gentlemen reading the newspapers. In the ordinary course of things the $275,000 check should have come in from the Marine Bank (or some bank, we did not know what bank) the next day. But it did not make its appearance. But on the following day it did come in from the Marine Bank, having lain out one day more than it would have done in the ordinary course. By Mr. Coe's instructions I also went down to the Marine Bank and saw Mr. Delamater; I think that was the gentleman's name. I waited quite a long time for him to come in, and when he came in I told him the circumstance that we had paid this large check to a man who was unwilling to identify himself, and we wanted to know whether it was all right before we discharged it from our minds, and that I would like him to tell us from whom he had received it. He was unwilling to state; "but," said he, "for your satisfaction, I will tell you that it was all right. I know the party well, and it is a straight transaction." I told him that was all we wanted to know, if he could assure us of that, and I then came back and reported that conversation to Mr. Coe, and from that time the matter rested. That closed the transaction.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who was the note-teller of the Park Bank?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Who was the cashier of the Park Bank?—A. Mr. J. L. Worth.

Q. Have you seen the gentleman who presented the check for $115,000 since that time, to recognize him?—A. Yes, sir. About a year after that date he came into bank with another gentleman, and went immediately to Mr. Coe's room, and this other gentleman said to Mr. Coe, "I want to identify this gentleman, Mr. King." I sat near by Mr. Coe, and I saw that he looked at this other gentleman, apparently not recognizing him; so I said, "Mr. Coe, Mr. King does not need any identification; we know him; we remember him." "O, yes," said Mr. Coe, "I know Mr. King." The check was certified, and Mr. King turned off with the remark, "It is not always well to have too long memories."

Q. Will you describe the other man who was with Mr. King?—A. He was a man a trifle taller than Mr. King, with a clean-shaven face, with the exception of the mustache, which was brushed down in rather a bushy manner at the ends. He had no whiskers—nothing but a mustache. I think I could identify him.

Q. Do you recollect how he was dressed?—A. Well, sir, he was dressed in an ordinary walking-dress, a walking-coat—there was nothing peculiar about his dress.

Q. Were his clothes dark or light?—A. If I remember right Mr. King was dressed in a black suit; but the other man, I think, wore a light suit. However, I did not remark either of them.

Q. What was the condition of Mr. Irwin's account at the commencement of the year 1872?—A. It was small; indeed it never had been large; never had been anything more than an ordinary account, until this large deposit. I should say that there was a balance of probably $900 or $1,000, or somewhere about there, which apparently ran along to the latter part of January, or the first part of February, of that year.

Q. Were the deposits to his credit in large or small amounts, immediately following that balance?—A. The first deposit was $25,000, which was larger, I think, than he had ever before deposited.

Q. What was the date of that deposit?—A. It was on the 27th of January, 1872.

Q. Have you any recollection of the return of the vouchers, or of furnishing him a statement of the account at that time?—A. His account was on the ledger, and he had a pass-book, and this is only a transcript from it.

Q. How long does his account run up to the time of the first balance and the return of the vouchers?—A. It probably ran two or three months—it ran from November to January. Two months before there was a balance made, and the next balance was in three months.

Q. Commencing in 1871, how long did the account run before it was balanced?—A. There was no balance from March 23, 1871, to February 20, 1872—a whole year.

Q. How many vouchers were returned at that time?—A. Forty-eight.

Q. When was the next balancing of the account and return of the vouchers?—A. On March 14 there were fourteen vouchers returned; the next was May 2, eleven vouchers returned; the next was May 22, but the number of vouchers is not stated; and the next was on the 27th of May, when there was a balance, with ten vouchers returned, and on the 30th of May, four vouchers returned.

Q. Who was the book-keeper?—A. I think it was a man by the name of Bennett. We rotated our book-keepers at that time, once in every six months.

Q. Have you a personal recollection of Mr. Irwin being in the city at that time?—A. O, yes, sir; he was here.

Q. Do you know whether he presented any of those checks in person to the bank?—A. I really cannot say. The inference is that he must have done so, because the paying-teller would not have paid them to anybody he did not know well.

Q. In the ordinary course of business the account would be written up by the presentation of the pass-book, the balancing of your books on a comparison with the pass-book, and then the return of the vouchers?—A. Yes, sir. When we make up a pass-book, we rule our ledger to correspond.

Q. If checks were drawn upon you and forwarded from Washington, could you ascertain whether they came by mail to your bank?—A. I don't think we could without having possession of the checks, which, of course, we have not. You could only do it circumstantially by seeing if there came from Washington, or anywhere else, $10,000, or any particular sum; but that would not identify the check, because sums of that kind are very numerous, and I don't think it is possible that the check could tell anything about it.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. You took uncommon precautions to identify Mr. King and the man who was with him when they drew the two checks of $115,000 and $275,000. Were there any precautions taken, that you know of, to identify the person who drew the first three checks on the 27th?—A. If Mr. Irwin had presented those checks we should have known him at once and it would have passed out of our memory; but had there been anything unusual about those checks we should have taken precautions and probably remembered the matter.

Q. Does the fact that there were no precautions taken, that you now remember, tend to verify your impression that Mr. Irwin himself drew those checks?—A. Very much, sir. I feel very confident of it, because it is a very unusual thing for us to pay over the counter in money any checks of an amount like that.

Q. Your subsequent action as to the two other checks would indicate that there was no particular reason for caution as to the first three?—A. It would, sir.

Q. Mr. Irwin was in the city at the time, you are confident?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the bank take any means to see Mr. Irwin, to inquire of him anything about those checks that were drawn or presented at your bank?—A. No; I do not know that he was in town on that day; I merely know that he was here a day or two before. He resides at Englewood, N. J., and he may not have been in the city of New York that day.

Q. I am referring more particularly to the day when those two men presented those checks. I thought it possible that Irwin could have satisfied the bank, if you had inquired of him, and I wished to know whether any effort was made to see him upon the subject.—A. We made no effort of that kind.

Q. Your books show that on the same day that the first three checks were drawn his account was balanced?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would not the person who balanced the books for you on that occasion, seeing three such large checks as those drawn on that same day, be very apt to recollect the circumstance?—A. No, sir; I think not. A book-keeper in a bank is not much more than a mechanic.

Q. But on that occasion he had a very unusual book-account before him, showing a deposit of $735,000 two days before, $235,000 drawn out two days afterward, and a balance struck on the same evening. Would not that call his attention to it?—A. It might; but then we have on our books other accounts as large as that.

Q. But you recollect that Irwin had been a customer in a small way prior to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. By Mr. DAWES. You never had had the account of any one who had found it necessary to draw out his checks the same night that the money was paid, before?

Q. By Mr. BECK. Irwin never had had occasion to draw out his checks before on the same day that he had drawn the money on them?—A. No, sir.

Q. And having done it on that day, is it not probable that the officer of your bank who balances the accounts would remember it? Tell us who that officer was.—A. The book-keeper; I cannot tell you what his name was. My impression is that it was a young man who has since left our employ. We could tell the name of the man by looking at the books.

Q. Will you examine the books, and inform the committee who it was that settled that account that evening, and where he is now, if you know?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I thought that perhaps the unusual character of the transaction would enable him to remember it; is it not probable?—A. We have five book-keepers in city business, and we rotate them; one keeps one ledger six months, and then another takes it up; and they do not know the peculiarities of each other's accounts. We rotate them so as to keep from having any fraudulent transactions.

Q. But this whole occurrence took place within three days?—A. That is true; but the book-keeper would not have known what the man's habits were before. The book-keeper had occupied that place, at the outside, only three months, and he would not know what Mr. Irwin's habits were as to his accounts before he took the ledger. If he had been the book-keeper who had kept the accounts previously he might have come to some conclusion.

Q. Did Mr. Delamater, cashier of the Marine Bank, give you any reason for refusing to give the name of that man who had deposited the $275,000 check?—A. I did not know Mr. Delamater, and he was not there when I went down, and I sat in his private office and waited. Presently a man came in, and some of the attendants said, "That is Mr. Delamater, the cashier," and I spoke to him. He gave me no special reason for not stating who the man was, except that he did not think it was necessary, and that he should prefer not to do it.

Q. You told him the reason why you wanted him to do it?—A. Yes, sir; I told him that the check was unusually large.

Q. But he told you at the same time that he knew the man perfectly well?—A. Yes, sir; perfectly well, and that the transaction was straight entirely.

Q. Was there anything in his general manner or conversation that you thought indicated that he was desirous to keep it secret?—A. His very refusal to give the name was an indication of that, sir.

Q. You put the question to him directly?—A. I did; and his very refusal was an indication of his purpose to keep it secret; but how deep that purpose was, I do not know.

Q. The cashier of the Park Bank did not hesitate to tell you who the other gentleman was?—A. Not at all, sir; he was very prompt in answering my inquiry; exceedingly so.

Q. So that whatever were the motives of the men, the one answered you promptly, and the other refused to answer?—A. Yes, sir. Remember, however, that there was a little difference between the transactions. Mr. King's transaction with the Park Bank was that of an outside party, whose interests the bank had no reason to protect, while the Marine Bank was guarding the account of one of its depositors. They had a reason for declining, which the Park Bank had not.

Q. You state that the check for $275,000 which went to the Park Bank was held up for a day?—A. Yes, sir; the clearing-house paper indicates that that check was certified on the 29th, and if it had been drawn immediately the date on the slip would have been the 29th, but it was held out and deposited the following day, the 30th, and came into our bank on the morning of the 31st. The check was presented for certification on the 29th, was then certified by us and charged to Mr. Irwin's account, and credited in the account which we call "certified checks." In the ordinary course it would have been deposited in some bank on that very day, and would have reached us on the morning of the 30th, but it was held out and not put in any bank until the 30th, and then was deposited in the Marine Bank, and reached us through the clearing-house on the morning of the 31st, and was debited to "certified checks."

Q. Was it on the morning of the 29th or on the morning of the 30th that you had the conversation with the cashier of the Marine Bank?—A. It was on the morning of the 31st, because we had no idea where the check would come from until it was presented. As soon as it came into our bank we discovered, of course, where it came from, and I then went down to the Marine Bank.

Q. Is it usual or unusual for a man having a certified check of this magnitude, $275,000, to hold it up beyond the ordinary course?—A. No, sir; it is a very rare thing. It does not occur once in a good many times.

Q. Did you call the attention of the cashier of the Marine Bank to the fact that that check had been held out longer than usual in the ordinary course of business?—A. I think not.

Q. Did not it strike your mind as unusual for a check of that kind to be so held out?—A. Well, sir, the whole thing struck us as very peculiar from first to last, and I do not think that that struck our attention as anything remarkable, for we did not know but he intended to take it out of town and have it come to us by mail.

Q. It was certified early enough on the 29th to be deposited on that day?—A. It was in the afternoon, but there was abundant time. Still, the fact that it did not come in on the 30th was not remarkable, because, as I have said, it might have gone out of town.

Q. What is the name of the note-teller of your bank?—A. John S. Carr.

Q. And the name of the note-teller of the Park Bank?—A. I do not know that I have ever heard it.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Do you think you could identify the other gentleman who was with Mr. King on the first occasion, if you saw him?—A. I think the chances for it would be very good.

Q. If he was in this room do you think you could identify him?—A. Yes, sir; I think I could if his mustache was on, but if he had shaved that off I do not think I could.

SAMUEL J. HARRIOT sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your occupation and place of business.—
Answer. Banker and broker. I am a member of the firm of Harriot & Noyes. I have been about ten years in the business. The firm has been doing business as a firm about five years.

Q. Do you know A. B. Stockwell?—A. I do.

Q. Do you know R. B. Irwin?—A. I do not.

Q. During the year 1872 did you have business dealings with A. B. Stockwell?—A. I did.

Q. To any large amount?—A. To a very large amount.

Q. Will you state what those transactions related to?—A. Buying and selling the stock of the Pacific Mail and buying Panama Railroad stock at times.

Q. Had you been doing the same business for him prior to that year?—
A. Yes, sir.

Q. Up to what time did you continue that?—A. That I would be unable to state unless I looked at my books.

Q. Look at that check [No. 2365] and state whether you have any personal knowledge of it?—A. No, sir; I never saw it before.

Q. Did you at that time, or about that time, receive $650,000 or any large sum of money from A. B. Stockwell or Richard B. Irwin, or from any one for him?—A. What is the date of that check?

Q. The date of that check is May 24, 1872.—A. I cannot answer that question without referring to my books.

Q. You may refresh your recollection by referring to your books.—A. [Referring to book.] On the 24th May we did not receive any money of Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Nor from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Nor from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Did you receive any during that week? Suppose you look from the 20th to 30th.—A. On the 21st May I find a credit to A. B. Stockwell of $228,750.98, for 4,700 shares of Pacific Mail. We delivered him 4,700 shares of Pacific Mail, and he gave us a check. That is all I find up to the 1st of June.

Q. You have examined from 20th May to 1st of June?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is the only credit you find to either A. B. Stockwell or the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. It appears by the check-book of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company that a check was issued by that company on the 24th May for $650,000, which, in the margin, indicates a charge to Harriot & Noyes. It is entered in the journal as against Harriot & Noyes under date of May 24, and in the ledger as against Harriot & Noyes, under date May 31; state whether, during any part of that period, you received that amount, or any part thereof, from A. B. Stockwell or the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or Richard B. Irwin.—A. There is only this one credit which I have stated.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That is the only entry of a credit to them you find on your books during that period?—A. That is the only one. There is none between May 21 and May 31, nor on those dates.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Look a day or two further, up to the 3d June.—A. I have looked up to the 4th of June, inclusive.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. You state, then, that no sum of money was received in any way by your firm from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or R. B. Irwin, or A. B. Stockwell, from May 24, 1872, to June 4, 1872, inclusive?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you look and see whether there are any entries to either Stockwell, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or Irwin, during the month of May prior to the 21st May?—A. On the 15th May, I find that we delivered 5,000 shares Pacific Mail, for which was received checks of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for $433,000. The check was dated 15th May.

Q. Do your books show on whose account you purchased those shares or to whom you delivered them?—A. It shows that we got the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's check. I presume the stock was delivered to Mr. Stockwell individually.

Q. On his own account?—A. I presume so. That is all that I see here.

Q. Those two entries are all that you find in the month of May, up to the 4th June?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Examine and see whether you find any during the first week of June.—A. I have looked up to the 10th June, and find nothing further up to that time.

Q. Look at this check [No. 3023] of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on the National Bank of Commerce, New York, and state whether you have seen it before.—A. Yes, sir; that has passed through our hands; that is our indorsement.

Q. Who received the money or the credit on that check?—A. It was passed to our credit in the bank in which we kept our account.

Q. Do you recollect the circumstances connected with the receipt of that check?—A. I find that we gave an exchange check for $500,000. Here is the entry. We received the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's check and gave our check.

Q. Read the check in connection with the entry.—A. [Reading.]

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY,
New York, September 7, 1872.

National Bank of Commerce of New York, pay to order of A. B. Stockwell, esq., $500,000.

(Signed)
(No. 3023)

HENRY SMITH,
Treasurer.
F. W. G. BELLOWS,
Vice-President.

Indorsements:

A. B. STOCKWELL,
For deposit to the credit of Harriot & Noyes.
HARRIOT & NOYES.

Q. Now read the entries which you find on the books in this connection.—A. [Reading.]

September 9. Pacific Mail Steamship Company; exchange $500,000.

Q. Is that the whole of the entry in connection with that transaction?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you explain that transaction?—A. Well, I see that on the same date we gave a check to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for $507,547.95 on the Continental Bank. There is a credit for the balance the next day. The $500,000 was an exchange.

Q. Read the entry for the balance.—A. [Reading.]

Panama Railroad Company, cr. Pacific Mail Steamship Company, $7,547.95.

By Mr. DAWES :

Q. That last entry and the check just entered balance what?—A. They balance the amount of the check of the day previous; $507,547.95. On that day we received a check for $500,000, and the day after we received the balance, making altogether $507,547.95; that closed the transaction.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Do you recollect the circumstances connected with those entries?—A. I do not; though I had an indistinct recollection that we made this exchange when my attention was called to it by Mr. Hatch this morning.

Q. What was the object of that exchange?—A. I do not know, sir. I did not ask.

Q. Was the business done by yourself?—A. No, sir; my partner did that. I see his indorsement on the back.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. In the transaction of May 21, 1872, wherein you received a check for $228,756.28 in payment for 4,700 shares of Pacific Mail stock, were you dealing with A. B. Stockwell individually?—A. I presume so; I cannot tell positively.

Q. Was the check that you received the check of A. B. Stockwell individually?—A. It was the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's check.

Q. So that in both those transactions the checks were the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you draw the money on those checks?—A. No, sir; I see this is marked "exchange;" if you will allow me, I should like to state what that means. We received that stock from another broker, and delivered it to Mr. Stockwell, I presume, and got the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's check.

Q. How was the check collected?—A. By depositing it in our bank—the Continental Bank.

Q. And you were credited with it on the books of the Continental Bank, and that much money put to your credit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which, of course, you drew?—A. Yes, sir; that was a part of that day's transactions.

Q. Do you remember how those checks were signed, whether by A. B. Stockwell, president, or by some of the other officers of the bank; have you any means of knowing?—A. No, sir.

Q. If it had been a check to A. B. Stockwell alone, not signed officially, it would have been entered to them individually on your book?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Therefore that appears on your books to have been an official transaction by Stockwell as president of the company?—A. It appears so upon our books, but I presume it was not.

Q. Why do you so presume?—A. Well, we were in the habit of delivering him stocks from day to day. He was changing his stocks from one place to another, and I presume this stock he was going to put in another place, and we sent it to him and he gave us the check of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That, however, is only a presumption.

Q. Which check was collected through your bankers from the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The transaction of May 15, you spoke of as being originally a transaction of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; that also shows upon its face that it was one of their transactions?—A. That was 5,000 shares Pacific Mail.

Q. The checks were in the name of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember to whom the stock was delivered?—A. I do not, sir; I did not deliver it. I presume to Mr. Stockwell or his clerk.

Q. Who delivered the stock?—A. Our young man.

Q. What is his name?—A. We have quite a number of them, and I do not know which one did it.

Q. In your exchange of checks of September 7, 1872, was there any indication that they drew the money upon your check or received credit for the amount of that check in some bank, or why did you make the exchange?—A. I cannot tell you; I suppose at Mr. Stockwell's request; that is all I know.

Q. Have you any recollection upon that subject?—A. I have not, sir; I have an indistinct recollection of something of that kind occurring, but what it was I do not know.

Q. Was that much money drawn from your account and put to his credit, and how were you paid back? Do you remember any of the details of the transaction?—A. We were paid by a check of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on the same day. We drew on our bank, and we deposited the same amount with the exception of $7,000 and odd.

Q. Was there not a difference of two days between the checks—the difference between September 7 and September 9?—A. It appears so there; our check is drawn on the 9th.

Q. When was theirs drawn?—A. On the 7th.

Q. Theirs appears to have been drawn to you two days anterior to yours; if it was an exchange of checks, for whose accommodation was it?—A. Mr. Stockwell's, I presume. We received their check on the 9th.

Q. You did not receive it the day of its date?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was either held up a couple of days after its date, or it was dated back?—A. We received it on the 9th, and gave our check on the 9th.

Q. Can you account for why it is dated on the 7th?—A. I cannot; Monday was the 9th, and the 7th would have been on Saturday.

Q. I understood you to say that you did not know Richard B. Irwin at all?—A. I do not, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. I understand you to say that although you were paid for stock by the check of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, in point of fact the purchase went to Stockwell individually.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you buy or sell stock, so far as you know, at any time for the benefit of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I did not.

Q. So that when you received payment in the funds of the company, the consideration for it was an individual consideration moving to Stockwell?—A. It was, sir, entirely.

Q. Have you ever bought or sold any stock for Mr. Irwin?—A. I never have.

Q. His name does not appear upon your books?—A. I do not know anything about that.

Q. So far as you know?—A. No, sir.

Q. State whether the $500,000 check, and the seven thousand and odd dollars check, together, equaled the exact amount due for the stock then purchased for Stockwell.—A. That was an exchange of checks.

Q. What did that seven thousand and odd dollars represent?—A. It represented the check of the Panama Railroad Company, to make up the amount that we had given a check for the day before; we gave a check for five hundred and seven thousand and odd dollars, and received a check for $500,000 first, and afterward that seven thousand and odd dollars to make up the balance.

Q. You state, then, that you gave Mr. Stockwell that check for that precise amount at his request?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time that you gave it he handed you a round check for $500,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He afterward brought you an additional check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had that transaction any connection whatever with the previous transaction between your house and Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir, it had not.

Q. It was an independent transaction, an accommodation exchange?—A. That was all, sir.

Q. It may be useful to some of us, if you will state what is the advantage of an exchange of checks. If a man draws his check, why does he not go and get the money on it instead of borrowing another man's check and getting the money on that?—A. It would be impossible to tell what was Stockwell's object in getting exchange.

Q. What does such an operation signify in business; does it signify that the man is "short;" that he has not the funds himself, but will have them soon, or what does it signify?—A. It does signify that, in some cases, but I should not think it did in this case.

Q. Can you give any earthly reason for his exchanging checks with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. His check was paid when you presented it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yours was paid when he presented it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you can give no reason at all for that exchange?—A. I cannot.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. May not this exchange have been for the purpose of mystifying the transaction, so as to make it more difficult to trace?—A. I cannot say; I have not the slightest idea what Mr. Stockwell's object was.

Q. Were his dealings in stocks pretty heavy?—A. Yes, sir; he did a very large business with us.

Q. Have you any objection to stating whether his investments were profitable or unprofitable in the aggregate result?—A. It is impossible to say. He made money in our office.

Q. Can you tell us how it was in that respect in the month of May, 1872?—A. That would be impossible to tell, because his accounts remained unclosed for a long while, two years; it would be impossible to say whether he made money in that particular month or not, without examining our books.

Q. How long after this was it before your accounts with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company were finally closed with Mr. Stockwell?—A. We did not have any accounts with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. How long afterward was it before your accounts were finally closed with Mr. Stockwell?—A. I will look on the books and see. It seems by this ledger that his account was closed with us on the 2d November, 1872, but he may have opened another account on another ledger.

Q. His accounts of the previous spring, summer, and fall closed in November, 1872?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Can you state from the books or from your memory the market-price of Pacific Mail stock at any time between May 15, 1872, and June 15, 1872?—A. Yes, sir; I think I can tell by our books.

Q. State what the market-price was on May 15, 1872.—A. As far as I can judge, I should think the price of the stock was between 80 and 90.

Q. Glance along and see whether it was falling or rising up to May 21st, or give the price on May 21st.—A. I should think it was about the same price, between 80 and 90; 82 or 83, probably.

Q. Please give the figures a little more precisely for May 15.—A. This book is our journal, and some of these transactions might have occurred a week previous.

Q. What was the highest price of stock on the 15th of May?—A. The highest price we have here is 85½.

Q. What is the highest price on May 21st?—A. The entry here is 83½. That stock, however, might have been bought the day before; I cannot tell exactly whether it was cash stock or stock bought the day previous.

Q. What is the highest price on your books for May 24th?—A. 81¼.

Q. For May 27th what is the highest price?—A. 77½.

Q. What is the highest price for May 31st?—A. 75¾.

Q. And for June 15th.—A. 69.

Q. Then from your books you are able to state that there was a general fall in the price of the stock from May 15, 1872, to June 15, 1872, from 85½ down to 69?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Were your transactions with Mr. Stockwell unusually large, comparatively, during that month of May, 1872?—A. I have no recollection about it.

Q. Was he the only customer of yours who dealt largely in that stock at that time?—A. He was not the only person.

Q. Will you name the others, if you please?—A. If it is necessary; but I do not want to disclose the dealings of other parties with our office, unless it is absolutely required.

Q. Were there any persons connected in any way officially with the Government at Washington, who bought or sold that stock at that time through you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are quite sure of that?—A. I am sure of it.

Q. If you have your ledger here, please refer to it, so as to answer my other question, whether your transactions with Mr. Stockwell were much larger at that date than before?—A. [Referring to book.] They seem to have been pretty large, but I do not think any larger than usual.

Q. You had frequent conversations with Mr. Stockwell at that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you, or did you not, understand that these operations of his were on his own account or on the account of others, or was he interested with others?—A. He was interested with others.

Q. You so understood?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any objection to state who those other parties were?—

A. I have the names on the ledger here; but I would rather not state them.

Q. I would like to know who they were.—A. Would it be just as well if I should let the committee see them without having them published?

Mr. DAWES. You can show them to us, and if the committee do not deem it proper to make them public, of course they will not do so.

The reporters having withdrawn, the witness submitted to the committee a list of persons in whose names he, said Mr. Stockwell, had opened accounts with the firm of Harriot & Noyes, and said: I wish to state to the committee that, to the best of my recollection, none of these parties were ever at our office. I think that Mr. Townsend did introduce himself, though I am not certain; and the accounts were all opened by Mr. Stockwell.

The committee having examined the list, the doors were re-opened, and the examination proceeded as follows:

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. Of the list of accounts opened by Mr. Stockwell in your books, the committee after having examined it find that there are only two or three that can by any possibility have any connection with the investigation, and about those two or three they direct me to put a few questions. The first is that of R. C. Parsons. Will you tell the committee by whom that account was opened on your books?—A. To the best of my recollection, by Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Had you anything to do with Mr. Parsons himself in making that account?—A. I have no recollection of ever meeting Mr. Parsons.

Q. Will you state that whole account; the date of it, and all about it?—A. On the 10th of February, 1872, there was bought, for the account of Mr. Parsons, one thousand shares of Pacific Mail, at 58 $\frac{3}{4}$. On the 2d of March, eight hundred shares of Pacific Mail was sold at 60 $\frac{1}{2}$, and on the 6th of March, two hundred shares at the same price, making a profit of \$1,255.39, that was balanced by a check drawn to the order of R. C. Parsons. Whether we gave it to him or not, I do not know. That closed the account.

Q. One other account that we wish to inquire about is that under the name of "mysterious account—A. B. S." Will you state what that account is, beginning with the date?—A. That was another account opened by Mr. Stockwell, for whom I do not know, on the 25th of October, 1872. It was opened by the purchase of four hundred shares of Pacific Mail, at 102, and six hundred shares at 102 $\frac{1}{2}$. That account was closed by the transfer of a debtor balance of \$29,827.73. That was transferred to Mr. Stockwell's individual account of loss. The date of that was March 1, 1873.

Q. That balance was transferred to the account of Mr. Stockwell, and disappears from your books on March 1st, 1873?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you know about that account; for whose benefit was it opened?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. Do you know for whom that title "mysterious account, A. B. S.," stands?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you told us all you know about that account?—A. I have, sir.

Q. There is another account there that we wish to ask about; that of Noah Brooks. Who is Noah Brooks?—A. He is one of the editors of the New York Times, I understand.

Q. What was he at the time that that account was made?—A. He was one of the editors of the Tribune.

Q. What is the date of that account?—A. It was opened on the 11th of May, 1872.

Q. State the entire account.—A. It is a pretty long one.

Q. Well, when did it close?—A. June 4th, 1872.

Q. How was it closed?—A. By crediting him, Noah Brooks, individually with that amount, $5,186.96.

Q. So much gain as the result of the account?—A. Yes, sir; as far as I can judge; I cannot tell exactly.

Q. How large transactions did that account cover in the aggregate?—A. About five or six hundred shares of stock.

Q. These are all the names that, so far as the committee are able to determine now, can by any possibility have anything to do with our investigation. If the committee should find hereafter that any of the other names are connected at all with this investigation they will resume this line of examination. I desire now to ask you one or two questions about your own account. Do you know that a check for $650,000 of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, of date May 24, 1872, payable to the order of R. B. Irwin, was charged to Harriot & Noyes, your firm?—A. Only from hearsay.

Q. When did you first hear of it?—A. I think Mr. Hatch was the first person who told me about it.

Q. When?—A. A long while ago; soon after Mr. Stockwell left the company.

Q. When you heard that that was charged to your account what did you do?—A. I did not hear the amount stated. I heard Mr. Hatch say that there had been a number of things charged to us.

Q. When, if ever, did you make any investigation of any such charge against your firm?—A. I think that since the proceedings in Congress have commenced we looked over our books to see if there was anything of that kind.

Q. How long previous to that was it that Mr. Hatch communicated to you the fact that such a charge stood against you on the books?—A. A number of months.

Q. And you let the matter rest until Congress took it up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do then?—A. I looked to see.

Q. Did you look anywhere else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you find it stand on your own books?—A. I did not find anything at all.

Q. Did you communicate that fact to any one?—A. I may have done so. I may have consulted my partner or our cashier.

Q. Did you communicate with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or any person representing that company, about any such charge?—A. I did not.

Q. Did it excite any surprise in you?—A. It did at first.

Q. Did it excite any apprehensions lest a charge of that kind might be enforced against you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company claimed that it was properly charged against you?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did you read the account of Mr. Hatch's testimony in Washington; the statement that it was so charged against you, and that the money had gone into stock operations?—A. Yes, sir; I read that.

Q. Did that startle you any?—A. Not very much; because I knew it was not so.

Q. You have made no inquiry of him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever examine the books of the company upon that point?—A. No, sir.

Q. On what do you rely as security against such a claim being set up by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company against you?—A. Well, I knew that money had never gone through our books, and I thought we were perfectly safe.

Q. Do you know whether the account of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company with your firm is balanced to date?—A. We never had any account with them.

Q. On their books, I mean?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. You have never inquired?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know whether they have a charge of that $650,000 standing against you or not?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. What transaction had you on the 15th of May with that company?—A. I believe I have answered that already. I find that we had a check of $232,200 and one of $210,412.50 from them, making $442,612.50.

Q. What are the entries in connection with it?—A. It is "P. M. S. Co.," and then those amounts.

Q. Are they credited with those checks?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who is credited with them?—A. Mr. Stockwell is credited with that amount; those two amounts were for five thousand shares of Pacific Mail, which we delivered to him, making $442,612.50

Q. In point of fact, that was a stock transaction between you and Stockwell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For stock valued at that amount you received those checks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What transaction, if any, had you on the 21st of that month?—A. I find that we had one check for $228,725.83, and another for $21.15.

Q. What was the large check for?—A. The two together were for 4,700 shares of Pacific Mail delivered to him.

Q. Did you have any dealings with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on the 21st of May, otherwise than as you have stated?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any dealings with a man named Markham on that day?—A. I see we have a check here—three, four, checks of Markham's; do you wish me to state the amount of the checks that we received from him?

Q. Yes.—A. These checks that we received from Markham were for stocks that we delivered to him.

Q. Give each of them, and the aggregate.—A. One check for $334,000; one for $248,250; and one for $249,000; making, in all, $831,250.

Q. Had those checks any connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Can you help us to explain this entry on their books: "F. C. Markham Dr. to Harriot & Noyes. Transfer from former to later account, sundry checks, May 25 and 21, erroneously credited, $622,175?"—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any account with Markham of the date of May 15 except what you have read? I find this has been gone over before by the committee, but if you know anything of any of those entries explain them.—A. I don't know anything about it.

Q. Have you any account with "Eldridge & Irwin, agents?"—A. No, sir.

Q. On May 12, 1872, did you have any dealings with them?—A. No, sir; not any.

Q. Here is "Harriot & Noyes (May 12) Dr. to Eldridge & Irwin," sundry items, $40,000, $35,000, $20,000, $5,000; carried out, $100,000.—A. That never went through our books or office. The 12th of May was on Sunday.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Look at that entry of May 24, a charge to Harriot & Noyes of $650,000; is that a true or false entry, so far as your books show?—A. So far as our books show it is a false entry.

Q. So far as you know anything about it, is it a true or a false entry?—A. So far as I know anything about it, it is a false entry.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. There was no loan of that sum made to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. In the check that you drew for $507,000 and some odd dollars, in favor of the Continental Bank, what was the $7,000 for?—A. I cannot tell you; that was an exchange; the one balances the other.

Q. There is an entry on the books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, that this was for interest connected with that loan of May 24, a payment made by you as interest on that loan of $650,000?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. You made no such payment?—A. No, sir.

H. E. MERRILL recalled and further examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. Please examine the price-list which you hold in your hand, and state in whose writing it is, and what it purports to be.—Answer. It is in my writing, sir, and it purports to be the quotations of Pacific Mail stock, the highest and lowest prices on each day from May 15 to June 15, 1872, inclusive.

Q. Is it a correct transcript of those prices during that period of time?—A. It is, sir; taken from the Financial Record; I think that is the name of the paper.

Q. Will you append that list to your testimony and make it a part thereof?—A. Yes, sir.

Witness submitted the list, as follows:

	Highest.	Lowest.		Highest.	Lowest.

JAMES DELAMATER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you the cashier of the Marine National Bank?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you occupied that position?—A. Since 1861.

Q. Look at this slip and see whether it is a clearing-house slip.—

A. It is a clearing-house slip, dated May 30, 1872.

Q. Do you find upon that an entry of $275,000?—A. I see there is such an entry.

Q. Do you recollect the presentation of that check to your bank?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you recollect being called on by the assistant cashier of the American Exchange Bank in reference to that check?

[By the direction of the committee, the official stenographer here read to the witness from the testimony of Mr. Dumont Clarke his statement of the conversation that he had with witness. The committee also informed the witness that the other man who had accompanied the one who presented the $275,000 check was already identified.]

A. I would like to say to you, gentlemen, that I know something about this, but the whole matter has passed from my mind—I don't really know why.

The committee allowed the witness until to-morrow morning to refresh his memory.

J. L. WORTH sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you the cashier of the Park National Bank?—Answer. Yes, sir; and have been since 1863.

Q. You were the cashier during May, 1872?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know William S. King, who was then Postmaster of the House of Representatives?—A. He was introduced to me by or through the State National Bank of Minneapolis, and I saw him two or three times for five minutes at a time.

Q. Do you remember his bringing to your bank on or about the 29th of May, 1872, an amount of money, and paying a note to your paying-teller?—A. All the rest of what I know, gentlemen, I simply have known within a day or two through our note-teller. All the business was done through him and not through me. I have learned that Mr. King took out some three or four certificates of deposits, amounting to over $100,000, that he deposited the money or the representative of the money, and took out those certificates. That, I believe, was about the 30th of May, 1872.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Dumont Clarke, the assistant cashier of the American Exchange Bank, having called to see you upon that subject at the time?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the name of your teller?—A. Thomas Ellis. It is only since this investigation began that my attention was called to the subject, and what I know I know of his statements to me.

Q. Had Mr. King an account in your bank?—A. No, sir.

Q. He had simply this one isolated transaction?—A. Yes, sir.

THOMAS ELLIS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your occupation.—Answer. I am note-teller of the Park National Bank.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. The committee desire to get all the information that you are in possession of relative to the payment by William S. King of a considerable sum of money to your bank about the 29th or 30th of May, 1872. Tell all you know about it, in your own way, without waiting to be questioned.—A. I have a little memorandum. On the 30th of May, 1872, I received from W. S. King $112,000 to be used as follows: $40,000 to be placed to the credit of the State National Bank at Minneapolis, Minn.; $15,000 to pay a note of Mr. King's that had matured on the 16th day of May, together with $40.03 interest, the amount due up to 30th of May; and $1,000 to be placed to the credit of the First National Bank of Saint Paul, Minn. Also, I issued to his own order six certificates of deposit as follows: No. 2547, for $25,000; No. 2548, for $10,000; No. 2549, for $10,000; No. 2550, for $5,000; No. 2551, for $5,000; No. 2552, for $1,459.17; making a total of $112,500.

Q. The certificates of deposit amounted to how much?—A. Fifty-six thousand four hundred and fifty-nine dollars and seventeen cents.

Q. How was the money drawn on these certificates of deposit—in what form?—A. I have the certificates in my possession, [producing them.] They were issued to the order of W. S. King and deposited by him. No. 2547 is the first; it was issued to his own order, indorsed "W. S. King," and paid June 8. There is no other indorsement than that. That indorsement indicates that they were paid to him individually directly.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Have you a recollection how this came back to you—through your bank exchanges, or how?—A. It was brought back by Mr. King individually.

Q. You recollect that distinctly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the money was paid to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Take the next number, 2548.—A. That is for $10,000; it is indorsed "W. S. King." That one we received from our Washington correspondent: "Pay National Park Bank or order, for account of Lewis Johnson & Co., Washington, D. C.," and it is indorsed: "Lewis Johnson & Co." We received that in a remittance by mail from Lewis Johnson & Co., bankers, in Washington, on the 7th of June, and put it to their credit.

Q. They drew against it?—A. Yes, sir; they have a regular account with us, and this was probably with other items.

Q. Take the next, No. 2549?—A. That is for $10,000, and indorsed "W. S. King" in blank.

Q. Have you any recollection how that came back?—A. Nos. 2547 and 2549 amount together to $35,000. There was $30,000 paid on June 8; $5,000 of it went to the credit of the First National Bank of Saint Paul, and the other $30,000 was given to Mr. King in cash.

Q. No. 2550, for $5,000, indorsed, "Pay Darling, Griswold & Co., or order; W. S. King;" also, indorsed, "Darling, Griswold & Co.;" state who they are, and when that was paid.—A. That was paid June 1, 1872. We received it through the clearing-house.

Q. Are Darling, Griswold & Co. bankers in New York?—A. No, sir; I don't know that they are. I was told two or three days ago that they were the proprietors of the Fifth Avenue Hotel.

Q. Was it paid to them or put to their credit?—A. Mr. King indorsed them over to Darling, Griswold & Co., and they deposited them in their bank. I don't remember the bank, but I can ascertain; they are stamped with the number of the bank, "63." No. 2551, for $5,000, is indorsed "Pay John H. Rice or order. Wm. S. King." John H. Rice indorses it, and then it reads: "Pay to the order of Jay Cooke & Co." Jay Cooke & Co. indorse it, and it is deposited by Jay Cooke & Co. in the Bank of Commerce, New York. The other indorsement is merely a stamp, "For deposit to credit of Jay Cooke & Co., New York City." It was originally drawn to their order in Washington, D. C., and they forwarded it to Jay Cooke & Co. in New York. The indorsement shows that Jay Cooke & Co. received the check from Rice and then forwarded it to the house of Jay Cooke & Co., New York, to whose credit it was deposited in the Bank of Commerce. That was paid on the 4th of June.

Q. Do you know anything about John H. Rice?—A. No, sir.

Q. Take No. 2552, for $1,459.17, indorsed "Pay Darling, Griswold & Co. or order. Wm. S. King;" and then "Darling, Griswold & Co;" these gentlemen, you understand, are the proprietors of this hotel.—A. Yes, sir; from hearsay.

Q. That appears to have been paid to them. Is the clearing-house number on it?—A. No, sir; they appear to have got the cash on it from some bank; it does not look as if it had gone through the clearing-house at all.

Q. Do you know anything more about it?—A. I don't know anything more about it. That is from A to Z of the whole transaction.

Q. I think you said that Mr. King had no other account in your bank?—A. No other.

Q. Had he had any transaction with your bank before this?—A. Well, I am under the impression that Mr. King had notes maturing, payable at our bank. I have seen him since.

Q. You know him personally?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When was this note of King's given—the one that was paid?—A. I cannot tell you when it was given. It was given on the 16th of May. It was regularly protested, and, I think, was returned regularly to the State National Bank of Minneapolis, and they returned it, stating that Mr. King would call and pay it, which he did, with $40 interest.

Q. To whom was the note drawn—to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recollect where it was made?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Did any one accompany Mr. King at the time he made this deposit?—A. No, sir; he was alone.

Q. Were you acquainted with him personally before the time that he made this deposit?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was the first that you saw him?—A. The first time that I had ever seen him.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. During this transaction with Mr. King, did he give you any explanation or indication of what uses he wanted to put those certificates of deposit to?—A. No, sir. He merely just stated to me his wants, and I supplied them, and he went his way.

Mr. J. L. Worth stated that the president of the Park National Bank had requested him to say that he was willing to come before the committee at any time they might require him to do so, but that he knew nothing relating to the subject of the investigation beyond what had been testified to by Mr. Worth and Mr. Ellis, and nothing at all personally. The committee informed Mr. Worth that if they desired the attendance of the president of the bank hereafter they would summon him again.

NEW YORK, Tuesday, December 29, 1874.

GEO. S. SCOTT, vice-president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, recalled and examined:

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Please state whether you were advised from the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company of any charge made against your house under date of May or June, 1872, and, if so, state whether such account existed.—A. There was what purported to be a transcript of the Pacific Mail Company's books presented to me, in which the firm of Scott, Strong & Company appeared to have been a borrower, I believe, of several large amounts. I remember one large amount, and, I think, several. On examination of the books of our firm, and from my own memory, we found that we never had borrowed any such amount of money from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. In other words, were those entries that were reported to you true or false?—A. They were false.

Q. Who furnished you that transcript?—A. Mr. Rufus Hatch, then managing director of the company.

Q. Do you recollect the total amount of those false entries?—A. I do not; but they amounted to quite a large sum of money.

Q. Hundreds of thousands, or less?—A. Over a hundred thousand, considerably.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. Were they balanced by corresponding entries?—A. That I don't know; I never looked into the books.

Q. You don't know whether you stand debtor on their books for that amount or not?—A. I do not.

Q. You did not examine the books, but only took the transcript shown you by Mr. Hatch?—A. That was all.

Q. At the time the transcript was shown to you he was the managing director, but he was no officer of the company when the entries purported to have been made?—A. He was not.

Q. He called your attention to it after he became managing director?—A. Yes, sir; I was also a director at the time that Mr. Hatch showed me this transcript.

Q. Were you a director at the time that the entries against your firm purported to have been made?—A. I was not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. State as well as you can the period of time covered by the account in which those false entries appeared.—A. I really cannot define the time, but I think it was in the spring of 1872.

Q. Has that account of Scott, Strong & Co. with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company not been settled or furnished to you?—A. It has never been furnished to me or to any member of our firm.

Q. Why are accounts allowed to remain open so long as that?—A. I don't know that they are open; I presume they are not. It simply appeared as a loan of money to our firm.

Q. It must have been met, if it was settled, by corresponding credits?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Didn't that occur more than once in your account?—A. I think there were several entries; as many as two or three.

Q. Was not there one sum as large as $300,000?—A. No, sir. I think there was one of $150,000 and one of $50,000; that is my recollection.

Q. Can you furnish us that account and make it part of your testimony, and indicate upon it the false debits and credits?—A. Yes, sir; I can get it from the company. We have no such entries on our books.

Q. You are entitled to your own account on demand?—A. Yes, sir; I will get it, and I will note upon it whether any such, by or to our firm.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Are you or your firm now indebted to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on that account?—A. We are not, sir.

Q. A portion of those entries were correct?—A. Not that I am aware of; I don't think there was an entry there that was correct—there may have been.

Q. I understand you to say that if there are any entries on the books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company charging your firm with money loaned, they are false entries?—A. No, sir; I would not like to say that; it is barely possible that our firm may have borrowed money from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, at some time; we are large borrowers of money, and we may have borrowed of them; but my attention was called to two or three entries which I compared with our books, and I found that we had never got any such loans.

Q. Then there are some entries of loans to your firm that are false entries?—A. There is no question about that.

Q. Have you examined the books of the company?—A. I have not seen the books; but I have seen the transcript furnished by Mr. Hatch.

CHRISTIAN B. MCDUGALL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside, and what is your occupation?—Answer. I reside in the city, and am a police officer.

Q. Do you know Mr. Coe, the president of the American Exchange Bank?—A. Yes, sir; George S. Coe.

Q. Do you recollect his sending for you in May, 1873, and calling your attention to a gentleman who would appear at the bank at that time?—A. He did call my attention to something of that kind; I think it was in 1872.

Q. Did you make any inquiry about him? If so, state what you did.—A. I followed the gentleman, at Mr. Coe's request. Mr. Coe called my attention to a gentleman who had presented a check for a large sum of money, I think. My impression is that Mr. Coe felt very anxious about it, as he could not learn who the man was. He refused to give his name, or at all events he did not give it. In accordance with Mr. Coe's request to learn as much as possible of him, I did so.

Q. Where did you see this gentleman first?—A. In the bank.

Q. Mr. Coe pointed him out?—A. I suppose he did.

Q. Was he alone at that time, or did anybody accompany him?—A. Well, my memory don't serve me; I don't remember.

Q. Was any one with him when he left the bank?—A. That I don't remember; my attention was called entirely to him.

Q. When did you last see, and where, the gentleman whom you followed?—A. I last saw him sitting in an office in the Equitable Building.

Q. Was his name mentioned to you?—A. Yes, sir; I was told his name.

Q. And what was it said to be?—A. A Mr. King.

Q. Anything else?—A. And that he had formerly been connected with the House of Representatives as postmaster.

Q. You bore that message to Mr. Coe?—A. No, sir; I learned that from Mr. Coe. I don't know how you receive this testimony, but in the courts we are not allowed to say anything except of our own knowledge.

Q. There was no one else with him that you now recollect?—A. I don't remember any one else, because my attention was called only to him.

Q. Well, don't you recollect, as you followed him to this building, whether he was alone or had somebody with him?—A. My impression is that there was nobody with him when he went up to the Park Bank.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Was your attention called to anybody, who was apparently with him, having a heavy mustache?—A. No, sir; I don't recollect any one at all.

JULIUS M. NOYES sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you a member of the firm of Harriot & Noyes?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you been connected with it?—A. Nearly five years.

Q. Where are you doing business?—A. No. 19 New street.

Q. Do you know A. B. Stockwell, the former president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Richard B. Irwin?—A. I don't know Mr. Irwin; I have never seen him.

Q. In May, 1872, did you have any business transaction with A. B. Stockwell or with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, as brokers, for Stockwell?—A. We did, sir, with A. B. Stockwell.

Q. There appears upon the books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company an entry on May 24, 1872, under "loan account," of a charge against Harriot & Noyes of $650,000; have you any knowledge of that transaction?—A. No, sir.

Q. Here is a check for $650,000, indorsed by R. B. Irwin; have you any knowledge of that check or of the transaction?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Did you have the avails of that check?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you examine this check of the Pacific Mail-Steamship Company, No. 3,023, drawn September 7, for $500,000?—A. That check has passed through our hands; it has my indorsement.

Q. Will you state to the committee what you know of this transaction?—A. That check is what we call an exchange check; for that check we gave our check on the Continental Bank for that amount.

Q. Explain why that was done.—A. I cannot, except for the accommodation of Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Simply for his accommodation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you give in exchange for that?—A. The transaction is on our books on September 9; this check is dated the 7th; we gave a check on the Continental Bank for $507,547.95.

Q. Did he give you anything for it besides the exchange check?—A. Not that day, he didn't.

Q. Upon the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's books is there an entry that the $7,547.95, in the memorandum, is interest paid on a loan of $650,000 on May 24?—A. We find that this $7,547.96 was paid on the next day by the check of the Panama Railroad Company.

Q. Could that have been a payment of interest—that extra amount?—
A. No, sir; there was no such transaction.

Q. There was no $650,000?—A. No, sir. The entry says, "Panama Railroad Company credit Pacific Mail Steamship Company."

By Mr. BECK:

Q. So far as that $650,000 is concerned, any entry upon the books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company indicating that that was paid to you is false; all entries in relation to it to that effect are false, you say?—A. False. I do not know anything of them.

Q. There was no right in any business transactions, so far as you know, to charge that to Harriot & Noyes?—A. No, sir; not so far as I know.

Q. For whatever purpose it was done, it was not done for a legitimate purpose?—A. Not so far as we were concerned.

Q. Have you ever given Mr. Stockwell, or any officer of that company, any authority to use your name to cover up false entries, or to cover up anything?—A. No, sir.

Q. The other transaction you explain as a simple exchange of checks for the accommodation of Mr. Stockwell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And it was settled up in a day or two?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not a real transaction bearing upon the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's business, but simply an accommodation-loan to Mr. Stockwell?—A. That was all.

Q. He having been a large customer of yours from time to time?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. What is the interest on $650,000 from May 26 to September 10?—
A. $13,778.

Q. As this appears by the indorsement to have been a transaction between Stockwell and yourself, personally, won't you tell us why you gave him, in exchange for a $500,000 check, your own check, on the same day, for $507,547.95?—A. I cannot tell, unless it was because he requested it.

Q. Do your books show which transaction first occurred in the giving of the checks, or were they given simultaneously?—A. Simultaneously, I should say.

Q. Have you any knowledge why the exchange was made, and a check of $500,000 of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company given for your check of $507,547.95?—A. No, sir.

Q. The difference of the two checks was made up when?—A. The next day, by the check of the Panama Railroad Company.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the reason why these two checks of the company, dated on two different days, one of $500,000, and one of $7,547.95, were given you on two different days, for your check of $500,000?—A. I have not.

Q. You have no knowledge at all?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know whether your account is balanced on the books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I do not.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Was Mr. Stockwell an officer of the Panama Railroad Company?—A. Yes, sir; I think he was president at that time.

Q. Did you receive in exchange for your large check one of the Pacific Mail Company's and one of the Panama Railroad Company's?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does this indicate that this loan had any connection with the business of one company or the other, or both, or is it no indication at all?
—A. It indicates nothing, sir.

Q. Why was the check you gave him, carried out into cents, instead of being in round numbers?—A. He gave me those figures.

Q. And he left you those two checks, or did he give you one of them at a subsequent time?—A. He left us the $500,000 check, and the next day he gave the check for $7,547.95.

Q. Did you exchange checks with him frequently?—A. No, sir, not that I know of; I am not aware that we did.

Q. Is this the only transaction that you remember in which checks were exchanged?—A. I should say it was. I cannot tell without my books.

Q. Have you any reason to believe that there was any other approaching the magnitude of this?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was done in just these figures because he requested it to be done?—A. Yes, sir; that is my recollection of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you any business dealing with Eldridge & Irwin in May, 1873?—A. No, sir.

Q. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company's accounts have an entry of Harriot & Noyes, debtor to Eldridge & Irwin, agents, for $100,000, made up of $40,000, $35,000, $20,000, and $5,000.—A. I have no knowledge of that; it is the first I ever heard of it.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. I want to get this $650,000 loan exactly in my mind. Mr. Stockwell wanted to borrow from you $507,000, with some odd dollars and cents; he wanted the sum for which you gave him your check for some purpose unknown to you, and at the time you gave him the check he gave you the check of the company for $500,000, even money, and the next day brought you the check of the Panama Railroad Company to balance your check.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is the whole transaction?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He needed that particular sum, dollars, cents, and all, as you gave him your check, and only having the $500,000 check then with him, he made the balance good the next day; is that the whole thing?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Assuming the charges on the books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company just mentioned to you—the Eldridge & Irwin charges—if those entries exist, are they true or false entries?—A. They are false.

Q. No such transaction took place with which Harriot & Noyes were connected?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Had you ever received any notice of that entry being made against you until this investigation?—A. No, sir.

Q. No account has ever been presented to you based on these entries?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Were you in any way interested with Stockwell in his operations?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. You acted simply as brokers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had no interest in his transactions nor in the transactions of any of these other parties that he opened accounts for?—A. None whatever.

JOHN P. ILSLEY sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where is your residence?—Answer. Philadelphia.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Your name has been associated with some alleged information about a portion of the money said to have come from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and with the name of one Mr. King. I wish you would state what you know in respect to Mr. King's handling any of that money, and what your source of information is.—A. I know nothing at all about it, except that I repeated the statement of Mr. Coe, president of the American Exchange Bank.

Q. Did you make any statement except that based upon the information derived from Mr. Coe?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any other information than that which you derived from Mr. Coe?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no knowledge derived from any persons connected with the handling of that money, or connected with it in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did what you heard differ from what Mr. Coe said here yesterday?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. King?—A. Yes, sir. I live in Saint Paul in the summer, and Mr. Coe was there last summer, and he made this statement to me; I repeated that statement substantially, and that has made me, I suppose, to be connected with it.

Q. You never had any conversation with Mr. King about it?—A. None whatever.

Q. You say you live in Minnesota?—A. I do in summer.

Q. Do you happen to know in what bank Mr. King keeps his account in Minnesota, or kept it at that time?—A. I do not.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. You have seen in the papers Mr. Coe's statement here?—A. I have, sir; that is substantially the statement that he made to me.

CHARLES W. GRISWOLD sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you a member of the firm of Darling, Griswold & Co., the proprietors of the Fifth Avenue Hotel?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Look at the indorsements on the certificates of deposit shown to you, Nos. 2550 and 2552.—A. Those are our indorsements.

Q. Describe those certificates by numbers, dates, and amounts.—A. No. 2552 is dated May 30, 1872, for $1,459.17; it is drawn in favor of W. S. King and indorsed payable to Darling, Griswold & Co.'s order, "W. S. King," and then there is my signature for Darling, Griswold & Co. The other is dated May 30, 1872; the number is 2550, and the amount $5,000; it is made in favor of W. S. King, and is indorsed by him and by Darling, Griswold & Co.

Q. State what you know in reference to the presentation and cashing of those checks.—A. I have no remembrance of the matter, only what I find from our books. I suppose our cashier, Mr. Gage, who made the entries, will identify the transactions more closely than I could myself.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. All you know, then, of your own knowledge, is that you indorsed that check as it appears there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you do not know how it was paid out—what consideration you gave for it?—A. I know nothing about it, except what I see from the books.

Q. Do you find that this amount was disbursed by you to Mr. King?—A. Yes, sir; it is all stated here in the books in the sums paid out.

Q. Was it paid out in one sum?—A. No, sir; in various sums.

WILLIAM B. GAGE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Please state your business.—Answer. I am the cashier of this hotel. I was the cashier in May, '72.

Q. Look at the certificates of deposit just identified by Mr. Griswold, and state in your own way what you know in regard to them.—A. I find these two certificates, No. 2550 and No. 2552, bearing our indorsement. In looking at the checks I suppose that Mr. King presented them at our desk and requested that they should be placed to his credit, which, according to our books, was done. The first check, for $1,459.17, was deposited on the 31st May, 1872, and the check for $5,000 was deposited on the 1st June, '72.

Q. When, how, and to whom was the money paid?—A. He drew against it in different sums. I can tell you by our cash-book whether I paid it to him personally, or I paid it to different persons here in town. The first charge here is $800, paid on the 31st of May. That was paid to himself; and the next charge of $500 was paid to him on the 31st. Then there was $2,750, paid on the 1st June, to Tiffany & Co., jewelers; and on the 1st of June there is a charge here of $125, which was paid to G. A. Brackets—paid to him personally. I do not know who he is. On the 2d day of June, according to our cash-book—(I may state that our "days" here commence at noon, so that we may have two dates actually on the same day)—on the 2d of June, according to our books, there is a charge of $25, which was paid to Mr. King himself. On the 2d of June there is $38, paid to Tiffany & Co.; and on the 2d of June, $68.93 was paid to himself; then on June 2d we gave him our check for $2,900 to balance his account, and he went away on the 31st.

Q. Was he a guest at this hotel at that time?—A. He was a guest at the hotel from the 29th of May until the evening of the 31st.

Q. Do you know him personally?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. Do you remember whether at that time, when Mr. King was a guest at this house, and those moneys were passing through your hands, he was in company with anybody?—A. No, sir; I do not. It was some time ago.

Q. I did not know but some friend had come with him and had associated with him while here.—A. I do not remember who was with him; he never seemed to be with anybody in particular; he never remained in the hotel long.

Q. I am asking particularly about those three days from May 29th to May 31st.—A. I do not remember who he was with.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you the register of the Fifth Avenue Hotel of May 29, 1872?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Please state whether William S. King was a guest of this house at that time.—A. He arrived at dinner-time on May 29, 1872.

Q. Do your books indicate the day of his departure?—A. The ledger-account does.

Q. Do you recollect when he left?—A. He left on the 31st of May, after dinner.

Q. Mr. King's name is entered upon the hotel-register in his own handwriting, I understand you to say?—A. Yes, sir; in his own handwriting.

JOHN ROACH sworn and examined.

The WITNESS. I would ask permission to read a statement that I have prepared in regard to my knowledge of this subject before answering any questions. It is entirely bearing on the subject under consideration, and I believe it will lead the committee to ask questions which will throw some light upon the subject, and which they would not ask were I not to read the statement.

The committee declined to hear the statement at this time, and the examination of the witness proceeded.

By Mr. DAWES:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In the city of New York; my business is building iron ships and engines; I have been in that business of iron-ship-building less than three years; before that, building steam-engines was my business.

Q. Have you had any transactions with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did they commence?—A. I could not give you the exact date, but I think it was in the latter part of 1871 or the early part of 1872.

Q. Are they closed up now?—A. No, sir.

Q. In 1871 what was the character of your business with them?—A. I was building for them, in the fall of 1871, one vessel for the trade between here and Aspinwall.

Q. Up to the 1st of June, 1872, what did you do for them?—A. I built another vessel for the same trade, of the same character.

Q. You built two vessels prior to June 1, 1872?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any other business with them up to that time except building these vessels?—A. That was all, sir. At the time when these contracts were made other persons had the preference of their business, because I thought that—

Q. We do not desire to go into the detail of your business relations with them, any further than it may be necessary for our investigation. You know the purpose of our investigation, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know at the time that they were applying to Congress for a subsidy?—A. No, sir; I had no knowledge of that of any kind, further than what I saw in the public press.

Q. When did you first know of that?—A. Not till they came to talk with me about building those large ships.

Q. After or before the 1st of June, 1872?—A. After the subsidy became a law.

Q. After the subsidy became a law was the first you knew anything of it?—A. Yes, sir; the first thing I knew of it, anything more than by common rumors in the press.

Q. Had you anything to do with them while the matter was pending—A. Neither directly nor indirectly had I anything to do in regard to it. I don't know that I ever spoke to a public man, in or out of Congress, on the subject.

Q. Did they ask you to aid them in procuring the passage of the subsidy in any way?—A. No, sir; I stated at one time before——

Q. Answer my question: No one in behalf of the company asked you to aid them in any way in procuring the passage of the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you aid them in any way in procuring its passage?—A. No, sir; neither directly nor indirectly. I had no knowledge even of its details.

Q. Did you speak to any member of Congress in their interest?—A. No, sir; I never spoke to a member of Congress on the subject. I doubt very much whether I was in Washington at all during the time.

Q. Did you know who was employed by them there to aid in procuring the passage of the subsidy?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did you know of any one individual?—A. I will state one transaction, and probably it will explain. I did state before one of the committees in Congress——

Q. No matter about that; please confine yourself to this question. Did you know of any one who was employed to aid them in procuring the subsidy?—A. No, sir; I had no knowledge of any one.

Q. Did you see any individual there previous to the 1st of June in the business of aiding them?—A. No, sir; I had no conversation with anybody in Washington on the subject.

Q. Did you see any money pass between any individuals there for the purpose of aiding in procuring the subsidy?—A. No, sir; I never saw any.

Q. Did you know of any?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Do you know now of any?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you now know of any individual who was employed there to aid in procuring the passage of the subsidy?—A. No more than by common rumor that Mr. Irwin was the man. That is all I know.

Q. Did you know Mr. Stockwell previous to June, 1872?—A. Yes, sir; I met him three or four times in business transactions in regard to our contracts.

Q. Did anything pass between you and Stockwell prior to June, 1872, in respect to the subsidy?—A. Not a word.

Q. Or between you and Mr. Irwin previous to that time?—A. I remember saying, when asked if I knew Mr. Irwin, that I had no knowledge of the man; and I say the same thing to-day, with this explanation: In a busy life, thousands of persons are introduced to me; I see them once and they go away, and I probably would not know them again if I met them. I think Mr. Irwin came to me once in New York, introduced by somebody, but I did not remember it. I think he came to ask me for some statistics in regard to the China trade, because I was a man known to be posted in that. I gave him the statistics, and I had no more knowledge of him after that than before. I do not think I would know him to-day from any other gentleman in this room.

Q. Where were you during the winter and prior to June, 1872?—A. I was in New York.

Q. Were you in Washington on any business?—A. Not particularly; I may have been there, but I had no knowledge of this business, of any kind.

Q. What you have to do in connection with the subsidy is under some arrangement entered into between you and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company since June, 1872, is it not?—A. No, sir; I have had nothing to do with the company that would influence me one dollar.

Q. That I do not inquire about. You say you knew nothing about the subsidy, and had nothing to do with it prior to June, 1872; you knew nothing about it, except what the newspapers told you?—A. That is all.

Q. If you know anything about it now, and have anything to do with it now, it is because of some arrangement between you and the company which has been made since that time? I do not ask you what that arrangement is; I only ask for the fact.—A. I will tell you, sir; I had a contract——

Q. No matter about that; you understand my question. If all you knew about the matter up to June, 1872, was what you got from the newspapers, then if you know anything more about it to-day, or have any connection with it, that knowledge or that connection is the result of some arrangement made between you and the company since June, 1872, is it not?—A. I have no arrangement.

Q. I do not ask you what it is.—A. I am not going to explain what it is, but I am going to say that I have never made any arrangements with the company in any shape or form that altered my position with the company; but there is one thing that I will explain——

Q. I do not ask you to state it; but whatever it is, it has occurred since June 1872, has it not?—A. It has.

Q. Then, up to June, 1872, you had no arrangement with the company that had anything to do with the subsidy?—A. Not at all.

Q. And whatever you have or have had to do in connection with the subsidy has arisen since then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it with Mr. Stockwell that the arrangement was made, whatever it is?—A. I cannot call it an arrangement, sir.

Q. No matter what it is—your dealings of any sort in connection with the subsidy?—A. I have had no dealings with them.

Q. Who represented the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the transactions with them into which you have entered since June 1, 1872?—A. The present board of directors. If there was any arrangement of any kind, it must have been with them.

Q. Whatever arrangement you made was not made with the old board, with Mr. Stockwell at its head?—A. No, sir.

Q. You made your arrangement with the board that succeeded Stockwell's board?—A. I cannot say that there was any arrangement at all.

Q. Well, whatever dealings you have had of any character since that time have been with the present board?—A. Entirely so.

Q. Have those dealings which you have had with the present board since June, 1872, had any reference to any charge or expenditure before June, 1872?—A. No, sir.

Q. No reference to it whatever?—A. Not a particle.

Q. Is there any element in this present contract of yours that has reference to any expenditures prior to June, 1872?—A. No, sir, not a dollar; nor an idea on the subject has ever been suggested to me.

JAMES DELAMATER recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Have you examined in reference to the check about which we inquired of you yesterday?—Answer. I have, sir.

Q. State to the committee what you have ascertained in regard to it, all that you know about it.—A. I hold in my hand a ticket of deposit, showing that there was deposited by the Brooklyn Trust Company, on May 30, 1872, $275,000, in one check. The trust company kept an account in the Marine Bank, and this is the ticket of deposit:

Deposited by B. T. Co. in the Marine National Bank, May 30, 1872.

Specie

Checks	$275,000

I will take now what we call our credit-book and refer to the entry there. I find here an entry to the credit of the Brooklyn Trust Company (with the title abbreviated) $275,000, on the 30th of May, 1872. Now, I will take the ledger and read from it the entry there made. On the 30th of May there is credited to the Brooklyn Trust Company $275,000. This is the only deposit that we had of that exact amount on that day. We had other deposits larger and smaller.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. How did you pay that out?—A. It passed to their credit, and we must have paid it on their checks.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was this particular amount drawn against?—A. No, sir, not in whole.

Q. Did you have a general account with the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. We had.

Q. And this was passed to their credit in that general account?—A. It was.

Q. Were there any drafts upon your bank connected with those transactions?—A. I cannot say that there were any, but it is fair to presume.

Q. Are you now, by examination of the books of your bank, or by conversations, or by recalling the circumstances connected with transactions, able to state what occurred in regard to the presentation or receipt of that check?—A. The only thing that I know of it is the evidence that I have produced to you, what we term the "ticket" making the deposit, and of the credit to them on our books; beyond that I know nothing.

Q. Was there a deposit of another check for that amount upon that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. On the preceding day?—A. No, sir.

Q. And this is the only credit on that date, of that amount, on your books?—A. All the information or knowledge that I possess on the subject is now laid before you, gentlemen.

Q. Mr. Clark testifies that he had a conversation with you in regard to this check; what do you say about that?—A. Well, I have read his statement in the newspapers, and the stenographer here read it to me yesterday. He stated, it appears, that he called upon me and inquired in reference to this check, and that I made inquiry and told him it was entirely right, so far as we knew. The Brooklyn Trust Company was a responsible institution at that time; its stock was 125, or perhaps more, and I may have made the statement upon that ground. Beyond that we knew nothing.

Q. Do you recall the fact that you told him that the check came from the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. No, sir; I do not think I did tell him that; I told him that the deposit had been made with us by parties who were responsible. I could not at that time say that the check was on the American Exchange Bank ; but I am led to suppose so from the fact that I see on their statement the charge, and that is the only such charge on that day.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. Who was the president of the Brooklyn Trust Company at that time?—A. E. S. Mills.

Q. Who was secretary?—A. M. P. Rodman. Mr. Mills is dead and Mr. Rodman has gone into disrepute somewhere.

Q. Do you know whether he is still living in Brooklyn?—A. I do not know.

Q. Is the company in existence still?—A. It is re-organized.

Q. Is it carrying on business at the same place?—A. At the same place.

Q. Did the check come to your bank by a messenger of the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. Possibly; I cannot say; very likely it did, and yet I do not know; of that I have no knowledge at all.

Q. What officer in your bank would have received the check when it came?—A. The receiving-teller.

Q. No individual saw you on the subject of that check during 29th or 30th May?—A. Not to my knowledge. I have no recollection of seeing Mr. Clarke, though he says that I did see him.

Q. Turn to your account with the Brooklyn Trust Company, covering the dates May 30 and 31, and June 1. What is the largest sum drawn up to and including June 1 by the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. I find there is a debit of $150,000 on the 30th May. There were three checks, however.

Q. Give the checks of that date.—A. The amount of the three is $150,000.

Q. In what sums?—A. That does not appear.

Q. Are they spoken of as three checks?—A. As three checks.

Q. Specific sums are not given?—A. Not at all; that was on the 30th May, the day of the deposit.

Q. Does it appear what drafts were made on the 31st May?—A. There appears to be a charge, $38,750 on June 1; but none on May 31.

Q. What is the amount of those drafts on your book on 29th May?—A. I have no charge at all.

Q. On 28th?—A. No, sir.

Q. On 27th?—A. None.

Q. On 26th?—A. None. I may as well go back further. There was a charge on the 11th May of $50,000, and on the 13th of $50,000, and on the 30th of $150,000.

Q. How long after May 30th was it before that amount of $275,000 appears to have been drawn?—A. I have got to go into a little figuring there. So far as the account goes, I make it that by the 12th June $512,000 was drawn out, which would include the entire amount of their deposit, and it ran along up to the 20th June, but in the mean time there were other deposits made.

Q. What was the date of the next following settlement between your bank and the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. The next balance in the book was on the 5th September, according to the ledger here.

Q. That was the first time the accounts were balanced after May 30?—A. There was a balance on 17th April preceding the 30th May, which we are now speaking of, and the next balance was on the 5th September.

Q. All the checks covering a period between the dates of those balances have been returned to the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. They have.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that particular check indorsed by the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. I am sorry to say that I cannot inform you. I presume it was, though, from the fact that it came from them. If not requiring an indorsement, it may not have been. When a check is negotiable, that is all we look for. Of course we ascertain where it comes from.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. If it was payable to bearer it would not have to be indorsed?—A. not necessarily; we have no entry of from whom we obtained it.

Q. Where is that check now? Where ought it to be in the regular course of business?—A. If the check which we are now speaking of was the check drawn on the American Exchange Bank, it would be charged to them, and they would deliver it to the drawer.

Q. Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir; if it was drawn by him. I do not know anything about that.

Q. So that in the due course of business it should now be in the possession of Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When was your attention first called to this matter?—A. Yesterday.

Q. From the time of the deposit till yesterday, nobody had made any inquiry about it; has anybody since you were here yesterday?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nobody has called your attention to it?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. The interpretation of the whole thing is, that you received this check from the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no personal knowledge of the individual from whom those checks came?—A. None whatever, sir.

Q. You have never at any time had any interview with, or knowledge of, the individual from whom this check came?—A. No, sir; none at all.

Q. If you stated to Mr. Clarke, the assistant cashier of the American Exchange Bank, that you knew very well the person from whom this check came, you referred to the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. I did. I do not recollect, however, that I ever said anything to him about it.

Q. If you did, had you any reference to, or any knowledge of, the person from whom it came, beyond the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. None whatever.

Q. At any time have you ever received any communication in respect to it which reaches beyond the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you ever had occasion to inquire of them about it?—A. None.

Q. You received it on the second day after it bears date?—A. We received it on 30th May. I do not know the date of it.

Q. If it was deposited with them, what particular occasion was there for them to transmit it to your bank?—A. They were not a banking institution, and therefore they kept their accounts with us as a bank.

Q. If it was a business transaction with them, it would naturally find its banking resort at your bank?—A. It would.

Q. The first bank it would reach would be likely to be yours?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You turned it over to the clearing-house, and it found its way back to the American Exchange Bank through you and the clearing-house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It passed through no other bank?—A. None.

Q. Have you any other knowledge in respect to it except what you have testified to?—A. None whatever.

Q. You have never had any communication with anybody respecting it beyond what you have testified here?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not know who had the avails of it?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. In the ordinary course of business would the books of the Brooklyn Trust Company disclose to whom the avails of it went?—A. I can tell you all about the Marine Bank books, but I cannot tell you about the Brooklyn Trust Company. I never have had occasion to examine their books, and do not know what their course of book-keeping was.

Q. You had occasion to keep an account with nobody else in respect to that check?—A. The Brooklyn Trust Company were dealers with us. In other words, they were on the same footing as merchants. They came to us with their deposits, and drew their checks, just as an individual would.

Q. And therefore you had no occasion to have any account with any person on your books except the Brooklyn Trust Company, in connection with this charge?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. Whoever it might have come from originally, your account would be precisely the same?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Can't you, by a little examination, inform us in whose favor the money was checked out? You say that one sum of $150,000, which was drawn out, was composed of three checks. Can you not, by referring to your journal, tell us in whose favor that money was drawn?—A. We keep no record of anything of that sort; nothing but the checks for the amounts. We never take any cognizance of an indorser. Our records give no details of how the money was checked out beyond the amounts.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. I want to know the amount and the date of the last deposit made by the Brooklyn Trust Company prior to that deposit of $275,000?—A. The Brooklyn Trust Company deposited that $275,000 on the 30th May. On the 29th, there is $173; on the 25th, $200; on the 18th, $615; and on the 14th, $2,467.

Q. What was the balance of their account at the time this $275,000 check was deposited with you?—A. It was $150,000 prior to that deposit.

Q. So that when this deposit was made they had $275,000 and $150,000, in round numbers, to their credit?—A. They had $300,000 there on the 30th May—no, $150,000 was drawn on the 30th May; on the 29th, previous to making that deposit, they had $151,000.

Q. And when they made that deposit of $275,000, that made $426,000?—A. Yes, sir; but they immediately drew out $150,000 on the 30th May.

Q. So that, on the 30th May, at the close of business, they had that $275,000 alone to their credit?—A. Yes, sir; they had as much as that. They had about $375,000 in the bank on the 30th May.

Q. I thought you said that, on the day before that deposit was made, they had $151,000?—A. No, they deposited $275,000 and drew out $150,000.

Q. But they had $151,000 before they made that deposit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If they had $151,000 and drew out $150,000 and deposited $275,000, would not that leave just $276,000?—A. Yes, sir; that is it.

Q. Now, I want to know how that $276,000 was drawn out, dates and amounts.—A. I can only give you the statement that there was $150,000 paid on the same day that the deposit was made.

Q. But they had a balance of $151,000 to meet that?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, tell us how the remainder was drawn out.—A. O, I cannot.

Q. Give us the next payments, then.—A. I can tell you the items debited to their account. On June 1 we debited them $58,750; on June 3, $20,049.32; on June 6, $100,000; on June 7, $52,000; on June 12, $50,000; on June 18, $100,000.

Q. In the mean time what deposits had they made? State dates and amounts.—A. On June 3 they deposited $100,836.11; on same day they were credited $1,000, a collection; on June 5 there was another credit of $1,000; on June 8, a credit of $149.51; on June 11, a credit of $218.06; on June 12, a credit of $50.44; on June 15, a credit of $80,215.56; and again, on same day, a collection of $450; on June 17, $2,329.76; on June 21, $100,000.

Q. That is as far back as I care to go. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars, I understand you to say, was paid out on the same day that they deposited the $275,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you receive that money, the $275,000, from the American Exchange Bank—on the 30th or 31st?—A. We debited them on the 30th, and we got the money on the 31st, through the clearing-house.

Q. Had they a right to draw against it on the 30th?—A. They drew by presenting their checks for certification, and then we charged them; the checks did not go through the clearing-house until next day—we did not receive them until next day.

Q. That $150,000, which was drawn on the 30th May, do you know whether it was drawn against the $275,000 or against the former balance?—A. How could I know that?

Q. Don't ask me. I cannot answer how you know.—A. Well, I do not know.

Q. Mr. Clarke says, "The following day the check for $275,000 ought to have come from the Marine Bank, but it did not. It lay over in somebody's hands. When it came in I went to the cashier of the Marine Bank and asked him to whom we had paid that check. He was unwilling to state; but he said that he could assure us that it was all right; that he knew the man, and that it was a straight transaction; and that was all we wanted to know." Do you remember any such transaction as that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is that statement true?—A. I don't know that it is, and I don't know that it is not. I have no recollection of it whatever.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know Mr. Clarke?—A. I do not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Do you remember who brought you that check to the bank?—A. No; I do not.

Q. Do you remember your attention being called to it by any officer of the American Exchange Bank, at that time?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you remember anything unusual which occurred in connection with it?—A. Not at all.

Q. Had you received any check of Mr. Irwin's before that?—A. I do not remember to have ever seen his name.

Q. You took it, therefore, altogether on the certification of the American Exchange Bank that it was good?—A. The Brooklyn Trust Company deposited it.

Q. Do you remember whether it was payable to order or to bearer?—
A. I do not remember; I never saw it.

Q. Do you know the indorsement upon it?—A. I have not the remotest idea. I never saw it.

DUMONT CLARKE recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you know Mr. Delamater?—Answer. Only by sight; I never had the pleasure of seeing him before the day I went to call on him about this check, and I have never seen him since until to-day.

Q. Please state again what was the conversation you had with him on that occasion.—A. Well, sir, two years and a half have elapsed since then, and of course I can only give the substance of the conversation. I went there at Mr. Coe's request, with a letter of introduction to Mr. Delamater. I waited there some time, and finally he came in and I put the question to him whether he knew who had deposited the $275,000 check that had come in from their bank to us that morning; and I told him that it being a very large check, and having come in an unusual way, and being payable to bearer, we were anxious to know that it was all right, and that I had come for the purpose of asking him whether he could tell us who had deposited it. He said that he could tell me simply that it was all right, that it was deposited by parties (or "a party," I cannot say which) that were perfectly straight and correct.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. Did he say whether he knew the party or not?—A. O, yes; I think he did. That was understood, of course; of course he must have known the party who deposited it; he knows all his depositors, of course.

Q. State all that you recall that Mr. Delamater said to you.—A. I have told you all I know, sir.

Q. Are you still doing business for the Brooklyn Trust Company?—
A. No, sir; not now.

Q. For its successors?—A. They are not doing business with us.

Q. Do you know who has charge of the books of the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had occasion, in your accounts with that company, to treat with any representative of the company since it failed?—A. We have had no dealings with them since their failure, directly, to my knowledge. I know the present officers personally.

Q. Will you give their names?—A. Mr. Ripley Ropes—Alderman Ropes, as he is known in Brooklyn—is the president, and the secretary is Mr. Bunker.

Q. Have the assets of the old company gone into the hands of the new company?—A. I cannot answer that question.

Q. Do you know where the books of the old company are?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Have you settled with this present company any transactions that belonged to the old company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were your accounts with the old company closed up before it failed?—A. No, sir; they were closed up at or about the time. They probably drew out all their balance, but that I cannot tell.

Q. With whom did you finally settle?—A. We must have settled with the then trustees.

Q. Do you know who were the then trustees?—A. I do not.

Q. Can you tell us where we can get access to the books of the company at that period?—A. I cannot.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The entry of May 30 of $150,000 on the debtor side is in red ink. Is there any significance in that?—A. It means that they were certified checks paid that day.

O. P. C. BILLINGS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. I reside in the city of New York, and am a lawyer by profession.

Q. Have you been one of the officers or directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I have been. I was elected a director of the company on November 16, 1871, and held office until May 29, 1872; that is, until the next election.

Q. Do you remember the passage of a bill in Congress giving an appropriation of $500,000—the so-called subsidy?—A. I do.

Q. You were a director during that period?—A. I was.

Q. Do you know Mr. Irwin?—A. I believe I have seen him, but was never introduced to him.

Q. Do you know of his going to Washington, or being sent, to represent the company?—A. I do.

Q. Under what authority was he sent?—A. I don't know as I can state that. I simply know, as other people know, that he was down there.

Q. What was understood to be his business in connection with procuring the subsidy; what was he employed to do?—A. I can only state my supposition; I suppose he was sent to try and secure the passage of the bill.

Q. What do you know in respect to means being furnished to him to procure the passage?—A. I know nothing about it.

Q. Do you know of any other person employed by the company or its officers for the purpose?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know of any money being paid, either directly or indirectly, to any member of Congress, or to any officer or employé of Congress, at that time in procuring the passage of the bill?—A. I do not.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. Were you present when the resolution was adopted in the executive committee, and afterward ratified by the board of directors, authorizing Mr. Stockwell, in his discretion, to expend money in procuring counsel, and to incur other necessary expenses, to aid in the passage of the subsidy?—A. I was.

Q. State what took place at that meeting beyond the record, if anything.—A. It is such a long time ago that it is rather difficult to recall conversations had then; but, to the best of my recollection, the question was asked on the part of some member of the board, what was the intention in regard to the subsidy; and the reply was that it was expected to employ counsel, and possibly that it would require some money; that was the substance of the conversation; the impression on my mind was——

Q. I am not asking as to impressions upon individual minds, but as to what passed at the meeting of the executive committee.—A. I simply state that it is my recollection that Mr. Stockwell was asked with reference to the resolution and his action thereon, and that his reply was, in substance, that it was necessary to expend some money in order to prepare the bill, and generally to secure its passage.

Q. State as fully as you can what was said.—A. I don't think, Mr. Dawes, I can state it more fully than I have; I do not recollect that any particular amount was stated to be expended.

Q. At a meeting of the directors subsequently, at which this was brought up, what happened?—A. A similar conversation took place at that meeting; Mr. Stockwell answered in the same general way; Mr. Stockwell's reply was that it was a mere matter of $10,000 or the like.

Q. Was any other sum ever mentioned?—A. I think I can state of my personal knowledge that during the time I was a director no large sum, and no specific sum whatever, was ever set apart or appropriated to influence legislation.

Q. I am not inquiring as to the purpose; I am asking about amounts. I suppose the directors, the executive committee especially, had knowledge of what was being expended by the company from month to month for its various purposes?—A. I can only answer for myself, that I did not have knowledge.

Q. Answering for yourself, have you any knowledge of the way in which the company did its business that would throw any light upon the question that I have asked?—A. No more than attendance upon the meetings.

Q. Do you know of any man in the board of directors, except the president, who was aware from month to month of where the funds of the company were being expended?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any man in the board of directors who would know from month to month whether $650,000 of the funds of the company had been diverted one way or another, if it appeared on the books?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you think that if an entry of the diversion of $650,000 of its funds had been made upon its books, it could have passed unnoticed from month to month by the executive committee of the board without inquiry?—A. It certainly could not if a careful examination of the books were made.

Q. From the manner in which the board intrusted its business to the transactions of its agents, the manner in which it was done, could such an entry have passed without the executive committee knowing it?—A. I think it might.

Q. What was their manner of doing business which allowed $650,000 of its funds to be diverted without their knowledge, if entered on their books?—A. I believe the general management of the business was left to the president, vice-president, and secretary.

Q. Did the executive committee have occasion, in the ordinary course of business, to know how the funds were used?—A. Not unless they desired to examine the books for their own gratification.

Q. Did they have any such desire in connection with the subsidy?—A. I don't know that I can answer that question.

Q. In plain English, was it not a part of the policy of the board not to know what the president was doing in reference to the subsidy?—A. I think it was not.

Q. Was it a part of their policy to know?—A. I don't know exactly how to answer the question.

Q. I merely want the truth; that will be a sufficient answer; it was one way or the other; which was it?—A. I undoubtedly desired to know.

Q. You think, then, that it was a part of their policy to know?—A. Yes, sir; to know what was going on.

Q. It appeared on the books of the company that checks amounting to $750,000 had been drawn on one day in favor of the agent at Washington, whose business it was to procure the passage of this subsidy; if it was the policy of the board to know what the president was doing, don't you think they would be likely to notice that on the books?—A. They might or might not. I can only speak for myself.

Q. If it was their policy to know, would they be likely to know that, when it was on their books?—A. It would, if they made an examination of the books.

Q. If it was their policy not to know what the president was doing in reference to the subsidy, would it be easy for them to escape knowledge of that entry on their books?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. In point of fact, this entry on the books did escape knowledge?—A. I can only speak for myself.

Q. Did it escape you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So far as you know, no member of the executive committee knew of this entry?—A. None, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. So far as you know, no member of the executive committee knew that the funds of the company had been diverted to the amount of $750,000 for this purpose?—A. None, to the best of my knowledge.

Q. Then, if it was the policy of the company not to know what was doing in reference to the subsidy, that would be natural, would it not?—A. Yes, sir; but it does not follow that they did not wish to know.

Q. If it was the policy of the company to know what the president was doing in reference to the subsidy, it would have been the easiest thing in the world to have seen it on their books, would it not?—A. It would, probably, by an examination. I desire to state in explanation, that it was just at the close of my term; this was a short term, and I went out of office at that time.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. In justification or explanation of your apparent want of knowledge, may not the fact that you went out of office so soon after this have something to do with your not having had your attention called to it?—A. No, sir; I think not. We went out so soon after the passage of the subsidy because the time of the annual election was changed. Previous to that it had been held in the fall, but it was desired that the election thereafter should be held in the spring, as the Panama Company's election was held in the spring, and as the two companies were occupying the same office, and their interests were to a great extent the same. The time of the election was changed by an act of the legislature that same season.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. In order to be entirely fair and to cover every possible contingency, let me ask you if you know of a single inquiry having been made by the executive committee or the board of direction, of Mr. Stockwell, as to how he was using the funds of the company under this resolution, for the purpose of procuring the passage of the subsidy?—A. No, sir; but, if I may be permitted to add, it was just within a week of the time that I went out of office.

Q. The thing was consummated entirely before you went out of office?—A. I think it was.

Q. It was going on during two or three months, was it not?—A. I think it was.

Q. The funds of the company were being used somehow—over a period covering more than three months—from January to June?—A. I believe so.

Q. The company had authorized Mr. Stockwell to expend money in February, had not they?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went out of office in May, after the subsidy was, in point of fact, passed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, the occasion for expending any money in that behalf had already passed, and yet you are not able to call to mind a single inquiry propounded by the executive committee or the board of directors, to the president whom they had clothed with discretionary power in the expenditure of this money; you are not able to state that there was a single inquiry made of him as to the manner in which the money was expended, although you supposed that he was going to spend it in Washington?—A. I do not recall any such inquiry.

Q. And all the time, there stood on your books, charges of checks in a single day, to the amount of $750,000, to be used for this purpose?—A. It seems so.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. State again the date when you became a director of the company.—A. November 16, 1871.

Q. Did you come in with what was known as the Stockwell board?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you understand that at that time Stockwell owned or controlled a majority of the stock?—A. I did not.

Q. From your knowledge of the transactions of the company, what do you believe to be the fact as to whether Stockwell did own or control a majority of the stock at that time?—A. I have no special belief, because I have no means of knowledge on that subject.

Q. Do you know what the price of the stock was when you came in as a member of the board?—A. I do not remember exactly.

Q. About how much was it?—A. It may have been 44.

Q. How far did it advance after that, while you were a member of the board; what was the highest point it reached under the Stockwell board?—A. I cannot give the exact figure, but it went above par.

Q. About what time did it reach its highest point after you became a member of the board and while you were in the board?—A. That I cannot say.

Q. But it was above par, you think?—A. I cannot say whether it reached its highest point while I was in the board, or afterward.

Q. I asked for the highest point it reached while you were in the board?—A. That I am unable to state; I do not remember.

Q. You do not wish to have it understood that you say that it reached par while you were a member of the board?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the highest figure that you remember its reaching while Mr. Stockwell was president?—A. He may have been still president when it reached its highest point.

Q. But you were in until May?—A. Yes; six months.

Q. You do those six months; how high do you remember that stock to have advanced?—A. I am unable to state, because I cannot distinguish between the prices in the different months.

Q. Did you continue to have an interest in the stock after you withdrew from the board?—A. I do not think I did; I do not know; I may have had one hundred or two hundred shares.

Q. Don't you know, in point of fact, that for several weeks before the subsidy was granted the stock was declining, before you left the board?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Didn't you have any transactions in the stock which would enable you to remember about that period?—A. I had not, to any great extent. I was not sufficient of a capitalist to handle stocks largely.

Q. Did you ever, yourself, while you were a member of the board, make any examination into the books or accounts of the company?—A. No, sir; I think I can frankly say I never did.

Q. Did any associate member of the board to your knowledge examine the books or accounts of the company?—A. Not with me.

Q. Do you know of any one that did make that examination?—A. I am very sure there was an auditing committee that did examine the books and make their report.

Q. Did you ever see them do it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember the names of the auditing committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know personally of any one examining the books after the passage of the resolution which Mr. Dawes referred to?—A. I cannot say, sir; I can only speak for myself.

Q. Was it the habit of business of that company to leave payments and the drawing of all checks under the control of the president or the vice-president?—A. I believe it was, and it always has been, I think; of course there was a limit to the amount.

Q. Before you went out of the board, was there any call made upon the president to state what he had done under that resolution?—A. I don't recollect any.

Q. Was there any understanding between you and the president, or any director and the president, touching the operations of the stock-market pending this application for the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. You know of nothing of that kind?—A. I do not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Here is the resolution of February 14, 1872: "Resolved, That the president in his discretion is hereby authorized to employ counsel, and incur such other necessary expenses as may be necessary in connection with the measures for the additional subsidy now pending before Congress." That is on February 14, and on the 21st February the proceedings of the executive committee on the 14th were unanimously approved, ratified, and adopted by the board; so that, whatever may have been the talk outside, that was in fact done?—A. Yes; the executive committee adopted the resolution of the 14th, and on the 21st it was ratified by the board.

Q. Whatever authority that conferred upon the president, it was the only action that you know of officially?—

Q. It is testified to here, and your books show, I think, that as early as January $25,000 was placed in the hands of Irwin, $40,000 in February, $35,000 in April, $20,000 the 5th of May, $20,000 the 15th of May, and $10,000 the 23d of May, making a total of $150,000. Do you know what all those various sums of money were placed in his hands for, prior altogether to the $750,000?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did none of you directors, from February to May, either look into the books or make any inquiry as to why all these large sums of money were put into Irwin's hands?—A. I am not aware that we did.

Q. Did any of the board know that they were put there?—A. I repeat again—I can only speak for myself—I did not.

Q. Your books as furnished to us show those facts, in substance, and none of you, you say, knew, so far as you are aware?—A. Not so far as I know.

Q. You neither looked at them yourself, nor heard any member of the board indicate that he had done so?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor did you know of the $750,000 subsequent to that?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you know that there were other sums even beyond all those that Stockwell had used outside of the legitimate business of the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Does it not appear to you now like a deliberate shutting of the eyes to all these things? Could it have occurred with ordinary care?—A. That is a matter of opinion.

Q. What is your opinion? You were one of the directors, and you can tell whether, in your opinion, any man of ordinary prudence, either in the management of his own affairs or in the management of affairs for stockholders, could have shut his eyes and remained ignorant of these things, and have done his duty with even reasonable care for the interests intrusted to him?—A. I suppose I could answer to that, that it was undoubtedly the duty of the directors, as it is of the directors in any corporation, to look into the affairs of the company, and possibly, with a careful examination, these matters would have been traced out by the directors; but I simply repeat that it had grown into a custom in that company to leave the management of its affairs very much to its officers.

Q. Were not the board of directors officers?—A. I mean particularly of the president and vice-president, and then the auditing committee who examined the books and made a report.

Q. Who composed that auditing committee?—A. I am unable to tell.

Q. I see a gentleman named Frederick Billings referred to here. Who is he?—A. He is a brother of mine.

Q. Was he a member of that board?—A. No, sir; he became a director on the 29th of May; when I went out he went in.

Q. Has he continued a director since?—A. No, sir; he held the position before, a short time; I don't know that he ever attended a single meeting, and subsequently he resigned; I don't know just when he resigned.

Q. You speak of its being understood that Irwin was to use the money and to give entertainments; what do you mean by giving entertainments?—A. I suppose to give dinner-parties, if you please.

Q. Where?—A. In Washington.

Q. To whom?—A. I suppose to anybody who might have become interested in the passage of this bill.

Q. For the purpose of securing votes in favor of it?—A. I do not know; the moral view of it would be simply to explain matters.

Q. Did dinner-parties explain?—A. They are very apt to.

Q. You thought one of the ways to a man's heart was down his throat?—A. Well, it wouldn't do for me to state so, perhaps, if I really felt so.

Q. But you did expect entertainments to be given out of your money?—A. O! I cannot say that; I was asked the question what Mr. Stockwell said, and that was a part of his answer.

Q. And with that knowledge and information the board voted him unlimited discretion to use whatever money he pleased to procure the passage of the subsidy, the understanding being that entertainments were within his legitimate discretion; haven't you so stated?—A. I simply stated, when I was asked what was said when Mr. Stockwell was called upon for an explanation of the matter, he gave it in substance in that wise.

Q. And the board of directors approved that mode of proceeding?—

A. They certainly ratified the resolution.

Q. With the understanding, at least, that entertainments were to be part of the means used?—A. Well, perhaps they did not all expect that he would use it for entertainments. The point was that he should have discretionary power to expend the money.

Q. Explain to us what, in that company as organized, was supposed by the stockholders and others to be the duty of the board of directors, of whom you were one—what use were you?—A. I don't know that I was of any particular use; I can only speak for myself. I perhaps might add that if a searching investigation were to be made into a majority of the corporations of this country it would probably turn out that the boards of directors paid as little attention as the directors of our company did, and left the management principally to the president and secretary, or the president and cashier.

Q. So it was that neither yourself nor any other member of the board, so far as you were advised, inquired either as to the payment of the $25,000 in January, $40,000 in February, $25,000 in April, nor the $20,000 and $10,000 more, making $150,000, prior to the $750,000, nor into the payment of the $750,000 itself to Mr. Stockwell?—A. I did not.

Q. And your stockholders, who, I suppose, have some reason to rely upon the board of directors, were left entirely uninformed as to all these proceedings, so far as you or your board of directors were concerned? Don't you know that your president, Stockwell, was all that time gambling largely in stocks, growing out of the chances of getting this subsidy through?—A. No, sir.

Q. Don't you know that he was dealing with Harriot & Noyes, and others on the street; was not that notorious?—A. I knew that he was operating in stocks.

Q. But didn't you know that he was operating in your own stocks?—

A. Yes, I suppose I knew he was operating in Pacific Mail.

Q. Would not that have been an additional reason for a prudent board of directors to have looked into it?—A. Perhaps it would.

Q. And yet it did not have that effect in your case?—A. Well, I don't know that it would in New York.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. I infer, from what you have stated in regard to this matter, and from what others have stated since the investigation began, that the directorship under Mr. Stockwell's administration was almost a nominal matter; that he, in point of fact, transacted nearly all the business of the company, or almost all that was done.—A. Following the custom of his predecessors in the same office.

Q. Was there anything peculiar in his administration in that respect?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Has it been the custom ever since the company was organized to do that?—A. So far as I know, it has been done.

Q. Did I understand you that at any time Mr. Stockwell denied that any money had been used improperly?—A. No, sir; I do not think I made any such statement.

Q. You don't recollect that he denied that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you don't recollect that the inquiry was ever made of him?—
A. No, sir.

Q. In point of fact those three-quarters of a million which stood on the books, and which were diverted to the use of their agent in Washington, was charged round to different persons. When did you first know that fact?—A. After I ceased to be a director in the company; as a matter of hearsay.

Q. You did not know while you were a director?—A. No, sir.

Q. The accounts of the San Francisco agents, according to ordinary custom, were to be rendered once in three months?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They were to pass a board auditing once in three months?—A. They should.

Q. And if there was any item in them not satisfactory it was to be reported back, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were the auditing board to whom the accounts of this San Francisco agency were to be submitted once in three months?—A. I am unable to state who was on the auditing committee.

Q. Cannot you give us one of them?—A. No, sir, I cannot do it.

Q. Were you selected for any special duty that you were to perform in the board of direction?—A. No, sir.

Q. From your general interest in the welfare of the company?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Were you largely interested personally in this stock?—A. No, sir.

Q. How much did you have while you were a director?—A. Well, at different times I may have had a thousand shares—500 or 1,000.

Q. Is there a single thing about the proceedings of the company in reference to this subsidy that you had knowledge of while it was going on?—A. I knew there was a company there, and I knew we had meetings, and I knew the proceedings of the meetings.

Q. Did you know, in point of fact, that the company had applied to Congress for a subsidy of half a million a year annually for ten years?—A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. Did you know how they were getting on?—A. Yes, sir. I used to hear, in an off-hand way, that there was a prospect that it would go through, and then that there was a possibility that it would not go through—just the common talk on the street.

Q. You did not hear that from any agent having it in charge?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never heard it from him?—A. I do not think I ever did.

Q. You never heard it from any of the other officers?—A. Very likely I may have had conversations with the president and other officers.

Q. All the knowledge you had of the prospect of getting that five millions you obtained from the public prints?—A. I have no doubt that I made inquiries at the office of the company.

Q. What were your inquiries?—A. I have no doubt that I asked what the news was.

Q. What information did you obtain?—A. Nothing but a general reply that probably the bill would pass, or that it was in doubt.

Q. At any time while you were a member of the board did you have occasion to know personally where any of the funds of the company had gone?—A. I think I did, several times, of loans of the company or things of that kind.

Q. How did you get that information; by an examination of the books?—A. No, perhaps not; by interviews with the officers, and with the other directors.

Q. What officers did you have interviews with?—A. At different times with the president and the vice-president, and with the agents and the secretary.

Q. Those were the gentlemen who drew the checks, were they not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it ever occur to you to inquire how much it was costing to get this subsidy?—A. No, sir; or if I did, I did not get the information.

Q. Do you recollect inquiring and failing to get the information?—A. No, sir; I do not remember how it was now.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. If those expenditures were entered to the account of his unknown brokers would you have known the purpose for which the money was being used?—A. No, sir. I probably ought to have known it as a director; but with the management of the company in the hands of the president and of the other officers, and with the auditing committee to examine the bills, I did not.

Q. An entry appears in the journal on the 13th of February, to "A. B. Stockwell, president, loan, special, $40,000." Would not that have given you some clew as to how the money was being used?—A. Probably it would, if I had examined the books; but when we had our meetings the president would make a report, or statement, of what was being done, and any resolutions were adopted that were called for under the circumstances.

Q. What clew would that entry have given you?—A. I do not know as it would have given me any clew; but it would have been some ground for investigation, probably, to know what it meant.

Q. The $40,000, and $35,000, and $20,000, and $5,000 charged to the account of Harriot and Noyes, loan account: would that have awakened any suspicion?—A. Not necessarily. The company had been in the habit of lending money to bankers and brokers on the street.

Q. If these entries were made to Harriot and Noyes among other transactions, amounting in the aggregate to millions of dollars, would you have been able to have ascertained that this money was being disbursed at Washington?—A. No, sir; I would not.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. Had you any relation to the company except that of director?—A. During that period, I think not. But subsequently thereto, as a member of the firm of Morris & Billings, I have been one of the counsel for the company, and have done attorney work for them.

Q. Your firm stood in the relation of attorneys?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did that relation commence?—A. If my memory serves me right, it was not until that summer that we might be said to be regularly employed. There was no regular agreement.

Q. You drew the company's mortgage, I suppose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew then, I suppose, of its financial condition as much as was necessary for its attorneys to know, in order to mortgage its entire property?—A. I expect we did.

Q. A pretty serious mortgage, was it not?—A. I think it was.

Q. You stood then in the relation of attorney to the company?—A. Yes; but I was no longer a director.

THOMAS B. MUSGRAVE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your occupation?—Answer. Banker and broker—a member of the firm of Musgrave & Co.; my business was the same in 1872.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. Do you know Richard B. Irwin?—A. I do.

Q. Did he have any business with your firm during 1872?—A. He did; he bought some stocks—changed some of his investments—some stocks that he had—sold some, and bought in their place.

Q. Was it a general account of deposits and disbursements by checks?—A. Hadn't I better give you the account?

Q. I want, first, the general character of the business; was it a business of deposits and disbursements by checks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Also buying and selling through you of stocks on margin or otherwise?—A. I can hardly say that—no, it was not what you might call a general buying and selling of stocks.

Q. Was it more a personal account of deposits and disbursements?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you a copy of his account with your firm covering the months of May and June, 1872?—A. I have.

Q. Please exhibit it to the committee. [The witness exhibits the account.]

Q. State whether there was any deposit made with you by Mr. Irwin in the month of May, 1872.—A. There seems to have been a deposit of $9,000 on May 25, 1872.

Q. Give the various cash deposits made with you by him on or after May 24, 1872.—A. On May 25 there was one of $9,000; July 10, $13,000; and July 22, $5,800. That is all that I see here.

Q. Those are all the deposits that were made with you by him on or after May 24?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state what cash deposits were made with you, prior to the dates you have now given, after the 14th of February, 1872?—A. This is the only account he ever had with us.

Q. When did that "only account" that he ever had with you commence?—A. It began in April.

Q. And you have now stated the only cash deposits made with you in that account, whether made in money or by check?—A. Everything.

Q. The other items in the account represent stocks left with you, do they?—A. He bought in some stocks in April; I see here that he paid cash to the American Exchange Bank, $6,000.

Q. That is, he drew on you for that amount, payable to the American Exchange Bank?—A. Yes, sir; a draft.

Q. Did you see him personally during the spring and summer up to June 1, 1872?—A. I saw him quite often.

Q. Did you know the business in which he was engaged during that spring and summer up to June?—A. I knew that he was getting a subsidy at Washington.

Q. Did he tell you how he was doing it?—A. No.

Q. He gave you no information as to the manner in which he expected to obtain the subsidy, or the means he expected to use to obtain it?—A. I cannot say that he did. I had a general idea, though, that he was going to get it by the use of money.

Q. Did you derive that idea from what he told you, or was it a general impression simply?—A. It was a general impression that I had; I cannot say that I derived it from what he told me.

Q. Did you ever learn from him anything as to the amount of money that he had disbursed or expected to disburse for that purpose?—A. No, sir; I do not think he ever told me any amount whatever. I am almost positive of it.

Q. So far as you know, the transcript of his account which you have presented here contains no items that had any relation to those disbursements at Washington?—A. None that I know of.

[For transcript of account see appendix, Exhibit C.]

Adjourned.

NEW YORK, December 30, 1874.

The subcommittee met this morning at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, pursuant to adjournment. Present: Mr. Burchard, the chairman, Mr. Kasson, Mr. Beck, and Mr. Niblack.

Mr. BECK. In several of the papers I find this report of a portion of our proceedings here yesterday in the examination of Mr. Scott:

“By Mr. DAWES:

“Q. Do you know of any false entries to other parties in the Pacific Mail books? Witness gave Mr. Dawes a sly side-wink and whispered something in his ear in an undertone. The answer was not insisted on.”

If Mr. Scott can be found this morning I would like to examine him as to what he did say to Mr. Dawes, and I wish also to examine the gentleman who wrote this paragraph to see what was the intention of it and the foundation for it. Mr. Dawes is absent this morning, and I think it is due to him and to the country that we should know just what this statement means. If this committee, or any member of it, is mixed up with any rascality, I want to get at the foundation of it. It is reported here, and perhaps the gentleman who wrote it had some reason for making the statement. I do not know him, but whoever he is I think we ought to swear him this morning and hear what he has to say. I think that is due to Mr. Dawes. Mr. Dawes may have had some hidden purpose in doing this, if he did it, and as the statement has gone to the country I think we ought to get at the foundation of it.

Mr. KASSON. I do not give the statement that strong interpretation, but the occurrence it describes was utterly invisible to me.

Mr. BECK. The implication in the statement, of course, is that Mr. Dawes was endeavoring to hide something; that is the way the world will understand it.

Mr. KASSON. I think Mr. Dawes was on one side of the table and Mr. Scott on the other.

Mr. BECK. No; they were together. The fact is, Mr. Scott merely remarked to Mr. Dawes, “Don’t ask me about other people’s business,” or words to that effect. Will the gentleman who wrote this paragraph tell us who he is?

Mr. Henderson B. Owens, a reporter for several evening papers, avowed that he was the author of the paragraph. He was sworn by the chairman and examined as follows by Mr. Beck:

Q. Are you the gentleman who wrote the paragraph which appears in the evening papers of yesterday? I hold in my hand the New York Evening Express, in which I find it, and I believe that it appeared also in the Post and other papers.

The WITNESS. Will you allow me to see it?

Mr. BECK. Certainly; here it is. Read it aloud.

The witness read the paragraph.

Q. What did you mean by publishing that statement?—A. Why, it is just what I saw occur here.

Q. You saw Mr. Scott give Mr. Dawes “a sly side wink.” Did you mean to intimate to the world that Mr. Dawes was seeking to conceal some evidence which that “wink” indicated to him ought not to be made public?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. What did you mean, then, by that form of expression?—A. I did not mean anything more than that I saw the witness give Mr. Dawes a wink and whisper something to him, and there was no answer returned to the question.

Q. Didn't you hear the witness say to Mr. Dawes, "I don't want to interfere with other people's business," or "Don't ask me about other people's business," or words to that effect?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. But you did not intend, you say, to convey the idea that the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means was endeavoring to conceal anything wrong?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Don't you understand that the form of expression you used there was well calculated to make the country believe that he was doing so?—

A. Well, I don't know; I suppose some parties might infer so.

Q. Did not you in writing the statement intend that they should so infer?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Your intention was to give a truthful statement of what occurred here, without intimating that there was any attempt to suppress anything?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this is the language that you chose to do it in. Did you make the report of the testimony of Wm. Gage, the book-keeper of this hotel, which appears in the Tribune this morning?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who made it?—A. I suppose the reporter of the Tribune.

Q. But it appears, I believe, in several other papers, as well as in the Tribune?—A. I don't know anything at all about it.

Q. Is the reporter of the Tribune present?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Do you know him?—A. I do.

Q. Please state his name, so that we may call him.—A. I guess he will speak for himself.

Q. Please name the man if you know him.—A. Mr. Taber.

EDMUND B. TABER, a reporter for the New York Tribune, sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. Did you make this report of the testimony of Mr. Gage, the book-keeper of this hotel, which appears in the Tribune this morning?—

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me read to you the part of it that I have marked:

"By Mr. BECK:

"Q. State whether W. S. King was a guest of this house at this time?—A. He arrived at dinner-time on May 29, 1872.

"Q. Do your books indicate the time of his departure?—A. Well, his ledger-account does; this book does not.

"Q. Do you recollect when he left?—A. He left on May 31.

"Q. Is his name registered in his own handwriting?

"Mr. KASSON to Mr. BECK. Is your name near it?

"Mr. BECK. Yes; that is why I looked at it.

"The members had gathered around the register and found Mr. Beck's name just above Mr. King's. That fact and Mr. Kasson's remark called forth considerable laughter at Mr. Beck's expense.

"Mr. KASSON. Is his name registered in his own handwriting?—A. Yes, sir."

I want to know the foundation of that report?—A. That is what I saw and heard yesterday.

Q. You say that the hotel-register was examined and Mr. Beck's name found in it. I have before me the register of May 29, 1872, containing Mr. King's name. Now, look and see if Mr. Beck's name is there, "just above Mr. King's," or at all. Look all over the register and see if Mr. Beck's name is there at all during that year. There is Mr. King's name; is Mr. Beck's name near it?—A. [After inspecting the register.] I don't see it.

Q. Look carefully, and see whether you are not able to say that it is not there. Look over the register for a week before and after that time, if you please, and as long as you please.—A. [Having again inspected the register.] I do not see it.

Q. Then what was the foundation for your statement that "the members gathered around the register and found Mr. Beck's name just above Mr. King's?"—A. It was what I understood here from what was said and what was told me.

Q. Is that statement true or false?—A. It appears to be false.

Q. You drew upon your imagination for your facts?—A. No, sir.

Q. From what source did you get them, then?—A. I made that statement because I understood from the conversation here, which I did not hear very distinctly, that the name was on the register, and also because I was told so by another gentleman, who was nearer to the committee than I was.

Q. Don't you know that Mr. Kasson never asked me any such question as "Is your name near it?"—A. No, sir; I do not know that he did not; I understood that he did.

Q. And don't you know that I never made the answer that you have put down here: "Yes; that is why I looked at it." Where did you get the information you have printed there?—A. I thought I heard it here in the conversation, and so I put it down.

Q. You thought you heard me say that?—A. I saw three or four of you gentlemen standing over there and conversing; I could not hear very distinctly what was said, but I thought I heard that.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to say at this point that that is an entire misstatement of all that occurred here, so far as my name is connected with it.

Mr. BECK. And I want it to appear to the country that it is an entire misstatement of what did occur here.

The WITNESS. Mr. Beck, I assure you that it is not a willful misstatement. I certainly should not have reported it if I had not thought it was correct.

Mr. BECK. You see that you have done the committee great injustice; that your statement of what occurred here is not true.

The WITNESS. I see that I have made a false statement, owing to a misapprehension of what took place.

Mr. BECK. I want the country to understand, and your employers to understand, that when you gentlemen are here by the courtesy of this committee, while we want every fact to go upon the record, we do not intend that such misrepresentations as these shall go uncontradicted.

Mr. KASSON. I cannot imagine what pretext could have been found for such a statement. Nothing at all like what is reported there passed between you and me—not a word of it.

Mr. BECK. There was no possible foundation, no excuse for it, that I can see. I don't want to make any personal complaints, but when gentlemen are invited here by the courtesy of the committee I do not intend that they shall be allowed to misrepresent the committee.

ANDREW DEVINE sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. You are one of the House stenographers for committees, and the official stenographer of this committee?—Answer. Yes.

Q. Did any such thing take place here as is represented in these papers in the reports about which these gentlemen have been examined —A. No, sir.

Q. Does any such thing appear in your notes?—A. No, sir.

Q. You heard what did occur?—A. I did.

Q. And no such thing occurred?—A. Not at all.

Mr. TABER. I wish to assure you again, Mr. Beck, that there was no intentional misstatement on my part. I did not intend to misrepresent you in any way.

Mr. BECK. You can see very readily, sir, how the public would be misled by your statement, made without any foundation in fact, or any excuse, so far as I can see. Nothing whatever took place here that would, by any possibility, indicate or suggest that my name was on that register near Mr. King's, or that I was here in connection with him, or here at all at or about the time when he was here. I can see no other object in making such a statement but to misrepresent; and that is why I desired to have a full explanation here.

Mr. TABER. You were not thought of by me at all in any such connection.

JOHN ROUNDY sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. State what was your business during 1872.—Answer. I was the accountant of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; that was my title.

Q. At what place was your business carried on?—A. At the office of the company, 59 Wall street.

Q. At that time who were the president, the vice-president, and the secretary of the company?—A. Mr. A. B. Stockwell, I think, was the president; F. W. G. Bellows, the vice-president; and Theodore T. Johnson, the secretary.

Q. What was your special duty as accountant?—A. I had the general charge of the accounts of the company; that is, the monthly reports of all the agents which came into the office came to me.

Q. Reports from the San Francisco office, as well as disbursements here?—A. Yes, sir. The disbursements here were transferred into the cash-book from the check-book at various times during the month, as time allowed. Sometimes they would all be made out in the last part of the month, or after the month had closed, and in other cases at various times during the month.

Q. What particular books were under your immediate control, in which you made entries yourself?—A. The cash-book, journal, ledger, and sundry other small books.

Q. The check-book was not under your control?—A. Not at all, sir.

Q. Did you know Mr. R. B. Irwin at that time?—A. I did.

Q. Did you know about what business he was employed in the spring of 1872?—A. He was the agent of the company at San Francisco at that time.

Q. Had he any other agency, or was he acting in any other capacity anywhere else for the company during that period?—A. None that was officially known to me. His title was "Agent at San Francisco," and he was managing the company's business there.

Q. When you are under oath and answering questions, we do not ask for your official knowledge, but for your personal knowledge. Do you know that he was employed in any other capacity at that time?—A. He was employed on business of the company at Washington. I had no personal knowledge of it, however. My business was simply to keep a record of the transactions of the company after they occurred.

Q. I suppose you might, perhaps, have been able to know something outside of your official business. Whatever source your knowledge is derived from, did you know that he was employed as an agent of the company at Washington in connection with the subsidy?—A. Well, sir, I knew it, as I presume everybody in the office knew it. It was a common belief—a common understanding.

Q. Look at the cash-book, under date of May 24, 1872, and observe an entry there of six items, amounting in the total to $750,000, without any name being mentioned to indicate the account for which the checks were issued, and state in whose handwriting those entries are.—A. They are in my handwriting.

Q. State, if you know, why no name is mentioned indicating the account to which those items, amounting to $750,000, were to be charged.—A. I would say, sir, that the entry was made necessarily in copying from the stubs of the check-book. These stubs are marked simply "A. B. S.," so far as my memory goes; merely the initials, and of course I had no account with that title. Those entries were made there with the intention of afterward filling the name in. I can only account for the fact that it is not filled in, upon the ground that when it was put into the journal it was omitted.

Q. See if there is any other entry from which all is omitted except the figures.—A. I do not think there is.

Q. You think there is not?—A. I do not think there is any; in fact, I will say that I was not aware that that account was left in that way. It was the intention, of course, to fill it up.

Q. The explanation you give is that when you posted from the stub of the check-book to the cash-book, there was no mention of the name or the account to which they were to be charged in the stub?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not afterward refer to the stub to see if any change had been made in the stub in that respect?—A. I do not think I did, sir.

Q. Look at the stub-entries under the same date, and state whether you recognize the entries from which those items were posted.—A. [Referring to the stub of the check-book.] My impression is that that has been filled in since.

Q. And those are the stubs from which the entries in the cash-book were made?—A. Yes, sir; I think there is no question about that.

Q. And you think the names inserted on those stubs were inserted subsequently?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are those the corresponding sums from which the entries in the cash-book were made?—A. I should say they were, sir.

Q. In whose handwriting are the entries on the stubs?—A. The writing of Mr. Theodore T. Johnson, the secretary of the company.

Q. Read what the entries are.—A. "A. B. Stockwell, president, charge Eldredge and Irwin, agents." I am quite sure that when these entries first came to me, they were simply "A. B. S." I would not say whether in writing or in pencil.

Q. About how long after the date there did you make the entry upon the cash-book from those stubs?—A. That I cannot say. This cash-book was written up at the times when the check-book was not in use, and when I was not doing anything else.

Q. What was your custom?—A. My custom was to write it up, I should say, perhaps, during the latter part of the month, or perhaps not until after the beginning of the next month.

Q. Look at the entries more particularly, and state whether the entry 'Charge Eldredge & Irwin, agents,' does not appear to have been made at a different time from the entry of the name "A. B. Stockwell," and with a different pen and ink; and also whether the word "president" does not appear in some cases to have been written at a different time from "A. B. Stockwell."—A. Well, sir, I should not like to say that that is so; but it certainly appears so—this first one looks like it.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Is it not true that the ink in which "A. B. Stockwell" is written, and the ink in which "president," "charge Eldredge and Irwin, agents," is written are decidedly different?—A. It certainly has that appearance.

Q. Is it not evident that the word "president" was not written originally as part of the entry "A. B. Stockwell," in check No. 2362?—A. It looks like it, sir; and yet my evidence on that point of course is not worth much.

Q. Look at the journal under date of May, 1872, and state in whose handwriting the entries on page 192 are.—A. That is the writing of Mr. Walker, who was, at that time, my assistant.

Q. They are all in his handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Look again at the journal under date of May 24, and state whether you recognize some entries referred to on the cash-book.—A. I see entries amounting to $650,000; those are undoubtedly the same.

Q. State whether against one of those entries there does not appear an erasure and the substitution of a name or names.—A. Yes, sir; there is an erasure there. I remember it. I would not say positively, but my impression is that the whole of those entries were originally written in there "A. B. Stockwell."

Q. The whole of them you think were originally written in "A. B. Stockwell?"—A. Yes, sir; and subsequently they were changed by direction of the vice-president. Mr. Stockwell objected to having his name appear there in the books, and by his orders that correction was made. I judge that more particularly from the ruling here, which indicates that it was written in in the first place, the whole of it charged to one item, and it was ruled off and changed. Whether that "7" was erased I cannot say. "Eldredge and Irwin," of course, is over an erasure, which was originally "A. B. Stockwell."

Q. But the "650" is also over an erasure?—A. Yes, sir. I cannot state positively the course of those erasures, with this exception, that I think that was charged originally to Mr. Stockwell.

Q. What I want to get at is the original entry, and if you are not satisfied that that was originally "A. B. Stockwell" look through it at the light and you will see traces of the letters. I want you to be clear about that.—A. [Having looked through the paper.] Yes, sir; that looks like it. The "S" is further off than it would be in simply writing "A. B. Stockwell."

Q. Whose name is entered against the item, $650,000?—A. Harriot & Noyes.

Q. Does not it appear that that was written at a different time and subsequent to the original entry?—A. I think so. I am quite sure upon that point.

Q. Up to what time did you continue in the service of the company?—A. November 30, 1873.

Q. Under whose immediate direction were checks issued?—A. Under the immediate direction of the vice-president; but the supreme direction, of course, was with the president of the company.

Q. Was it necessary, under the by-laws and rules of the company, that the sanction of the board of directors or of the executive committee should be given to the issuance of a check where it was virtually a loan to some other corporation or on exchange of checks? In other words, had the president the right to issue checks without the sanction of the executive committee or the board?—A. That was the custom, so far as my knowledge goes.

Q. Mr. Johnson, the secretary of the company, made the entries on the ledger, you say?—A. No, sir; only upon the check-book; he was treasurer pro tempore at the same time that I was secretary pro tempore. When the treasurer was absent he attended to the duties of his desk, that is, drew checks; and it so happens that this stub-book bears the writing of Mr. Johnson; and by inference, it would seem that the actual treasurer was absent at that time.

Q. At the time that you transferred the sums of these six checks amounting to $750,000 to the cash-book, did you take them from the stub-check-book?—A. Yes, sir; those are my check marks.

Q. At the time that you made the transfer to the cash-book, the filling-up that now appears upon the stub-book had not been done?—A. To the best of my knowledge and belief it had not.

Q. If it had been, would not you, in making the transfer to your cash-book, have made the entries as they now appear on the stub-book?—A. I should have charged it simply to Eldredge and Irwin immediately.

Q. Would it not have been your duty to have made the charge to them, instead of leaving it blank, as you did on the cash-book?—A. Yes, sir; it would.

Q. Therefore, the fact that you have left it entirely blank is conclusive, is it not, that this entry now appearing on the stub-book, was not there at the time the transfer was made?—A. Yes, sir; there is no other explanation.

Q. When this was filled up you did not know?—A. No, sir.

Q. But it was filled up with these entries of yours?—A. Yes, sir; that would be the only explanation of the fact that there is no name in the cash-book.

Q. You will observe on the stub now shown you that the numbers of the checks are printed.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Examine the checks with corresponding numbers which were in fact delivered to Mr. Irwin, and see if in point of fact the numbers there are not written in red ink.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The number on the stub is printed; was not the check with the corresponding numbers also printed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not therefore evident that these are not the checks corresponding with these stubs?—A. Yes sir; that is very evident.

Q. Can you tell why that is so?—A. I never saw these checks before after they were filled in, and have no knowledge of them in any way or fashion.

Q. Was it not very unusual to take off the checks with the printed numbers corresponding with the stubs, and issue others with written numbers?—A. It was done only in cases of mistakes. There were blank checks like those in the office, which were to be filled up in case of a mistake. Sometimes a check would be drawn to the wrong order or for the wrong amount, and it would be taken out and destroyed, or at least before being presented for signature by the vice-president it would be submitted to him to show him that it was wrong, and he would order another to be drawn, and would sign that, and the first one would be destroyed or defaced.

Q. Therefore checks of the character of these that were delivered to Irwin were used in the legitimate business of the company only when mistakes had occurred?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what reason such checks were used in this case you do not know, but the fact is that they were used?—A. Yes, sir, that is the fact. These checks were taken from the blank checks that were kept on hand for such occasions as I have described.

Q. Does it not, therefore, appear to you in looking over the stub-book and cash-book and the erasures in the ledger, that the entries made relative to this $750,000 transaction were, in fact, false entries?—A. Well, yes; false in fact. So far as the actual fact of book-keeping is concerned, the making of the entry, it was charged to an account where it did not belong.

Q. What security can stockholders and persons interested in the affairs of the company have, when plans of this sort are done in the books?—A. A thing of that kind may be done very readily without at all injuring or deranging the accuracy of the books; as, for instance, we may open a certain account and charge it up to a certain person, but then we may give it another title which may mean the same thing; but, of course, the only protection for stockholders in any case is that their managers shall be honest men.

Q. And that the books of the company shall show the truth?—A. These books do show the truth.

Q. Is it true that Harriot & Noyes were chargeable with that $650,000?—A. They were charged with $650,000, to be sure; but then it was simply as a convenience for the time.

Q. Would not any stockholder have believed that Harriot & Noyes in fact owed the company $650,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if that was not true, and that money was in fact given to Irwin to spend in obtaining a subsidy for the company, would not the stockholder be deceived to that extent as to the value of the property of the company?—A. Yes, sir; except that he would have the same sort of information that I had. I had no real knowledge of the fact that Mr. Irwin ever had any of the money; it was charged to Mr. Stockwell.

Q. But assume the fact to be that the money was given to Irwin, as the checks now shown to you indicate, then, when it was made to appear on the books that that was a loan to Harriot & Noyes of $650,000, was not that entry a fraud upon the stockholders who might look at the books to get at the true condition of the company's affairs?—A. Yes, sir; there is no question about that.

Q. That is why I ask, whether, when these things are permitted, there is any safety for any stockholder, no matter how vigilant he may be in endeavoring to ascertain the real condition of the company's affairs.—A. I do not suppose there is ever any safety for a stockholder in any case unless he is as well acquainted with the affairs of the company as those who manage it. For instance, we charge Eldredge and Irwin with a certain item; who among the stockholders knew what the ordinary balance in the hands of Eldredge and Irwin was? Nobody. They never saw the books.

Q. But they could see the books?—A. Yes, sir; they could.

Q. We are called upon as the representatives of a great many poor tax-payers to furnish very large sums (which of course we must raise by taxation) to run this company; we did give you half a million a year, which is more than is required to carry on the State government of Kentucky; it is a small sum to New York men, but it is pretty large to us, and we want to know whether there is any security for the money that we give you—whether we can find out the truth about it by looking at your books.—A. Well, you certainly may be misled by them, if you trust to the entries.

Q. That is what I suppose, and we do not desire to be misled.—A. I take it that a set of books will partake very largely of the character of the men who manage the business.

Mr. BECK. I think that is very evident.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. If a book-keeper knows that his superior officer is bidding him make false entries, is it regarded as the duty of the book-keeper to obey such orders, knowing the entries to be false?—A. Well, sir, that is a question. If he does not obey, you know what the result will be.

Q. That may be, but—

The WITNESS. For instance, if he goes to make a complaint about it, to whom shall he go?

Mr. KASSON. The board of directors, I suppose.

The WITNESS. For example, I knew that the executive committee had had certain expenditures in Washington; it was a matter of notoriety; everybody in the office knew it, or, at least, I suppose they did, and I among others knew it. The amount of these checks, of course, struck me as very large. I went—I am very confident that I went—to Mr. Bellows, the vice-president, to inquire how they were to be disposed of, and it was after consultation with him that they were finally decided to be charged to Eldridge and Irwin, that being the place where the sum would be least likely to attract attention, although I warned him at the time that some disposition of that amount must be made before they could make any public statement, as it was sure to attract attention; and Mr. Bellows, to the best of my recollection, stated to me that it was Mr. Stockwell's intention to pay back that money.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. That statement would reconcile itself with the original entry to the initials "A. B. S."?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And with the subsequent change of the entry to the name of this agency?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Under the theory that Mr. Stockwell intended to treat it as a personal matter, and in some way to make it good?—A. Yes, sir; on this point I am speaking, perhaps, more from my ordinary method of doing business than from actual remembrance of the facts as they occurred.

Q. But what you say as to the statement of Mr. Bellows you say from memory?—A. Yes, sir; that is from memory, I should say, from the way these entries were made. I know that at the time I had the idea that the money should be charged to the person who received it, and my impression is that it was left blank in the cash book. I will confess it is a surprise to me to find it so, for I had supposed that I had filled it up afterward. My impression is that it was left blank to be filled up afterward, and that I thought it should be charged to Mr. Stockwell, as the stubs at that time showed; that was the only indication there was.

Q. I cannot help expressing, in the form of questions, my surprise at the freedom with which false entries seem to have been made in these books. I would like you to state whether, so far as you know, the moral sentiment of New York, in business concerns, requires book-keepers to make false entries under the instruction of the officers, or of one officer, of a company. Do you understand that to be the rule; that book-keepers must obey such instructions, even to the extent of falsify ing their books?—A. Yes, sir; I should say, so far as my knowledge goes, that it is.

Q. That they hold themselves to be mechanics merely, and not responsible at all for the accuracy of their books?—A. They hold themselves responsible for the accuracy of their balances. They cannot be held responsible for what other persons do with the money.

Q. Look at the ledger, page 81, under the head of "loan account," and see if you recognize the entry touching this $650,000.—A. It is put in there as a loan.

Q. Charged to whom?—A. To Harriot & Noyes.

Q. You observe that, while entered on the journal under date of May 24, it is entered in the ledger under date of May 31?—A. That would be a mere clerical error or carelessness. I should not attach any importance to that.

Q. Let us see if it was a clerical error. Does it not appear that there has been an erasure, and the figures "31" written over the erasure?—A. Yes, sir; but, at the same time, I know who did it, and I should not attach any importance to that.

Q. How do you explain the discrepancy in the date, and the further fact that, instead of being an accident, the right entry as to the date was originally made and then erased and the figure 3 inserted?—A. For the reason that I can see no possible difference that it makes, so far as the date is concerned.

Q. But it does make a difference in the accuracy of the book-keeping.—A. O, an error of date of that kind you will often find in posting books.

Q. Yes, but I have shown you that it cannot be an error when the correct date is erased and this carefully put in its place?—A. That was before it was posted.

Q. Well, you spoke of the book-keeper being responsible for the balancing of the books; are there entries made against that to balance it?—

A. It is carried down in that balance.

Q. Is it not carried on indefinitely as an unsettled balance?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Where is it balanced? I ask your particular attention to it because I have been unable to find any particular account where it is balanced.—

A. I see on page 47 that this is transferred to the next ledger.

Q. What is the date of the transfer?—A. August 1, 1872; it is transferred to the next ledger, page 42.

Q. So that up to August 1, 1872, it is carried forward as an unsettled balance?—A. Yes, sir. Those loans were matters of which Mr. Bellows, the vice-president, kept his own memorandums.

Q. But it has been already shown to you that this was not, in point of fact, a loan; that Harriot & Noyes had nothing to do with it.—A. Well, sir, it does not necessarily follow that any information came to me other than through the vice-president, who was the only authority—that is, who was my next in command; with Mr. Stockwell I never came in contact.

Q. As far as August 1, 1872, then, it appears you had no direction as to the manner in which that item was being balanced?—A. No, sir; not up to August, 1872. I do not think Harriot & Noyes ever paid that. Here is another charge, March 14-16, $593,759.

Q. Would not those things be explained in case Mr. Stockwell had used that much money and had to make an entry of some sort in the book, and thus carry it along for his own account until it was balanced by another check? Is not that a better explanation of it than that Harriot & Noyes held it on loan, in the absence of a corresponding entry showing that it was satisfied? In other words, is not the indication that that was not a bona fide loan? Judging from the course of business between that company and Harriot & Noyes, did Harriot & Noyes ever take money on loan to such large amounts?—A. I do not know about Harriot & Noyes, but I think there are some large loans that ran for a good while, so far as my memory goes. In fact, here are Harriot & Noyes charged with $1,200,000, with a credit of $789,000, and the balance carried down here. I think there is no trouble in tracing that entry of $650,000 and showing where the credit is.

Q. Take the other ledger and state where you next see any trace of that item of $650,000.

[The witness spent some time in attempting to trace the item, and before he had succeeded the examination was resumed as follows:]

Q. I will put a question to break the monotony. Is it difficult to trace that item of $650,000 after it is carried forward in August, 1872?—A. Somewhat difficult, sir.

Q. Why do you come back to the journal to trace how it is carried forward in the ledger?—A. It is not carried forward in the ledger.

Q. Then it is not always true that a book-keeper's absolute duty, irrespective of instructions, is to see that his accounts balance?—A. The books ought to balance.

Q. Then why cannot you trace that item that was carried forward from August?—A. I am very certain that I can, if I can have time. Perhaps you do not understand—

Q. I do not hold you responsible for everything, Mr. Roundey; but as you have charge of the books, I want to ascertain all you know about them.—A. I understand that.

Q. I will ask another question. In an ordinary regular business transaction of the company, would not you have been able to trace that $650,000 item in the balance?—A. Yes, sir; and I think I can trace it now. [The witness figured for some time on a piece of paper, and then answered:] It is here, sir; I knew it was here. There is $780,000 that ought to have been carried down to the debit of Harriot & Noyes the next time that this account was balanced; and here it is, on the 27th of May.

Q. So that in tracing it out you find it still charged to Harriot & Noyes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does it appear by the books to have been paid by Harriot & Noyes?—A. There was $780,000 debit; $280,000 was paid under date of June 2-7; then $500,000 was carried forward as still to the debit of Harriot & Noyes; then there is a credit, by cash $500,000, which closes the account.

Q. Then on the face of those books, tracing that item through the ledger, it would appear that Harriot & Noyes had repaid the whole amount, including the $650,000 charged from the check-book?—A. Yes, sir; and this last $500,000 is credited as "By cash, Harriot & Noyes," under date of September 7, 1872.

Q. Does that check of September 7 correspond in amount and date with the entry you now find balancing these charges against Harriot & Noyes?—A. That, according to the books, corresponds in date and amount.

Q. If it appears that the check just shown you was simply an exchange-check with Harriot & Noyes, and that no money was actually paid by Harriot & Noyes to the company, what would you conclude about the entry there discharging Harriot & Noyes from this liability?—A. That there must be an entry upon the check-book for it.

Q. Would that be a discharge of a bona fide charge against Harriot & Noyes, if this check is shown, as it is by the evidence here, to have been an exchange-check between Stockwell and Harriot & Noyes?—

A. That is a question with which I have nothing to do.

Q. But that is the evidence, that this was simply an exchanged check. Now, would that constitute this a bona fide entry of a bona fide liability of Harriot & Noyes, or would it indicate that Harriot & Noyes had not been liable for that amount?—A. That would be the impression, that they had not been liable for it.

Q. One thing further: did you learn by any statement made, to your own knowledge, by Mr. Stockwell or by Mr. Irwin, what amount of money was to be expended in obtaining this subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear from either of them any statement of the amount that had been expended?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you hear any instruction given by Stockwell to Irwin touching his line of action in procuring the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge, derived from papers, memorandums, or statements of either of those gentlemen, as to what was paid in connection with obtaining the subsidy?—No, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the amount that Irwin was to receive for his services in connection with obtaining the subsidy?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge from the instructions given to you in respect to keeping the books, or in any other way, of the manner in which this expense in connection with obtaining the subsidy, whatever might be its amount, was to be discharged; whether by the president or by the company, or by stock speculations, or in what way?—A. The only information I have upon that point was communicated to me by the vice-president of the company. In speaking of the large amount of money which was to be charged in, and which was all mixed up among, these loan-accounts, so that it was really a very difficult thing to keep the run of it—

Mr. BECK. That is evident.

The WITNESS. In speaking of that, the vice-president told me that it was Mr. Stockwell's intention to repay that money, and that the company were not to be at any expense in procuring the subsidy.

Q. That information was derived from the statement to you of the vice-president, Mr. Bellows, the gentleman who signed the checks?—A. Yes, sir. It was merely a personal statement, not an official statement, perhaps; but it was made in connection with our conversation in regard to the amount of money which purported to have been expended at Washington.

Q. I am reminded that there was an unexplained voucher of twenty nine thousand and odd dollars returned by the San Francisco agency at the close of their accounts in 1872, which has been spoken of in the evidence as not accompanied with satisfactory explanations. Here it is, dated November 30, 1872, from the San Francisco agency, and purporting to be "for sundry payments, account expenses, Washington, elections, &c., 1871 and 1872," signed, "Eldridge & Irwin, agents"—

Q. Have you any knowledge, more than what you derived from the face of that voucher, touching the expenses referred to?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you know what the San Francisco agency or Mr. Irwin himself claimed those expenses to have been for?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You have no knowledge of that voucher, further than you derived from reading its face, now?—A. No, sir.

Q. No knowledge of its having been paid, directly or indirectly, by a check?—A. No, sir; I have not. That voucher comes as having been paid by the San Francisco agency, charged in their monthly account.

Q. In what monthly account would it appear, it being of that date?—A. It should be in the account for November, 1872, according to its date.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. From what I have been able to hear of your testimony, I understand that these charges, which seem to have been false, in fact, were intended, or supposed by you, at least, to be mere temporary charges to be corrected in some way, or relieved of their false character before any publication should be made, or ultimately, at all events, before these accounts should be closed up?—A. The only reply to be made to that, is the statement made before as to what Mr. Bellows stated about Mr. Stockwell's intention, though I must confess that I had very little faith that it would be carried out. Still, of course, the money had been charged on the books, and had been charged there under the authority of the vice president, who, I presumed, had got his orders from the president to have the charges made in that particular way, and the charges were made in accordance with the orders given. The company had authority, as I understood, (although that was outside of my province,) to incur certain expenses; this amount, of course, was exceedingly large.

Q. Is it not very unusual in an important transaction like this, on the books of a company like this, or even on the books of any private firm, to erase one man's name and substitute another?—A. Yes, sir; it is.

Q. Is it not regarded, universally, so far as you know, as a circumstance which always casts suspicion upon the books?—A. Necessarily, sir.

Q. Your attention was drawn from time to time to these extraordinary entries in the books?—A. Yes, sir. Of course the original entries were made by myself; that is, the forms of the entries in the journal were by myself, and copied by Mr. Walker.

Q. You spoke about rumors in the office; was it your understanding, derived from those rumors or in any way, that these extraordinary entries upon the books of the company had some reference to this subsidy proceeding before Congress?—A. That was generally understood, sir; although, of course, nobody except myself or my assistants, or Mr. Bellows, knew exactly the shape in which these accounts had gone through the books, nor where the charges were. It was not intended that they should know.

Q. Did Mr. Irwin ever render any account that you are aware of to Mr. Stockwell in regard to his expenditure of this amount of money?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was any account of it ever required of Mr. Stockwell by any officer of the company?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BECK. "Addition, division, and silence" seem to have been the cardinal principles of that transaction.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Look at the check-book of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company with the National Bank of Commerce, and state what entry you find under date of January 29, 1872, stub No. 1526, and read it.—A. [Reading.] "Expenses in Washington, China, Richard B. Irwin, check to order of Pacific Mail Steamship Company, $25,000." The date is January, 1872.

Q. Is that entered upon the books of the company, the cash-book, journal, &c.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Read the entry in the cash-book.—A. [Reading.] "Profit and loss, R. B. Irwin's Washington expenses, $25,000."

Q. In whose handwriting is that entry?—A. Mine.

Q. Look at the check-book, check No. 1647, and read it.—A. [Reading.] "February 13, 1872. A. B. Stockwell, president. A. B. Stockwell, by order of the president, $40,000, check, A. Masterton."

Q. What entry of that do you find in the books of the company?—A. [Reading.] "A. B. Stockwell, president, loan, special, $40,000."

Q. Who was A. Masterton?—A. He was president of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Bank.

Q. State whether there were any checks, of the date of February 13, given on that bank for sums of $100,000 and $110,000.—A. There do not appear to be any for just those amounts.

Q. Mr. Stockwell's letter of February 13, 1872, put in evidence before this committee, reads:

"DEAR SIR: I inclose checks to my order, indorsed to your order, for $250,000; $100,000, $110,000, and $40,000, which are placed in your hands to be used, &c."

State whether the $40,000 entry, which you have read, is one of those checks.—A. That I am not able to say.

Q. Do you find any checks of the amounts $100,000 and $110,000?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Do you find on your books any entries corresponding to those in dates and amounts, or do you find any sums which added together would make those amounts? Do you find the amount of $110,000 entered on your books?—A. There is one entry of that amount dated February 8, 1872; that is charged to Kenyon, Cox & Co., as a loan. There is nothing about the entry indicating that it was anything more than an ordinary cash loan. On the 7th, there is a loan to Harriot & Noyes of $300,000; also a loan to Osborn & Chapin of $100,000. So far as those entries are concerned, I am quite confident that the transactions were ordinary business transactions—ordinary cash loans. They look like it, and there is nothing to indicate that they were not.

Q. Have you traced them to the journal?—A. I will do so.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Trace that one out; Kenyon Cox & Co., $110,000.—A. I will trace that in the ledger. It stands here to their debit, February 8, "Kenyon Cox & Co., $110,000," and was paid, apparently, on the 14th February, 1872. It is on page 79. There should be an entry in the books of that $110,000.

Q. With interest?—A. The interest would be charged as interest.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Read the entries in the stub-check-book in relation to the return of those loans.—A. [Reading,] February 14; Kenyon, Cox & Co. returned loan, February 8 $110,000 00

Interest account:

Interest to date 128 33

Total 110,128 33

Q. Read the stub of check No. 1651.—A. [Reading,] Osborn & Chapin, loan on demand..... $295, 000 00
Interest 408 33

Total 295, 408 33

Q. Look at check No. 2135, and read the entry.—A. [Reading,] "April 19. Eldridge & Irwin, agents, A. B. Stockwell, president, $35,000."

Q. How is that entered in the cash-book or the journal?—A. That is charged to Eldridge & Irwin, agents, A. B. S., special, $35,000. That, of course, was so that I might be able to trace it.

Q. Read check number 2263.—A. [Reading,] "May 10. A. B. Stockwell, loan, special, $20,000." In the cash-book: "May 10. A. B. Stockwell, loan, $20,000."

Q. Read number 2273 in the check-book.—A. "May 11, 1872. Eldridge & Irwin, order, P. M. S. S. Co., $20,000." In the cash-book, "Eldridge & Irwin, agents, May 11, agents, $20,000," with the words "special account" underneath.

Q. Read the entry in relation to the check 1370.—A. "January 10. Expenses in Washington, China, Charles Abert, on account, $1,000." That is charged to profit and loss.

Q. Will you explain what those expenses were?—A. "Profit and loss: Charles Abert, commission, collecting subsidy, $318.21." Then "Charles Abert, account, Washington, expenses, $1,000."

Q. State what you know in regard to that.—A. Mr. Abert was a gentleman whom I have seen several times in the office, though not having any acquaintance with him. He had formerly been employed by the company in collecting bills against the Government for mail-service, and he always received a commission for that work. I do not know what that $1,000 was for, but the presumption is that he was doing some service for the company, and claimed $1,000, and we paid him.

Q. The other payment was in pursuance of a contract?—A. Yes, sir, it is precisely what had been paid ever since I have been in the employ of the company, before the company ever had a subsidy.

Q. Look at number 2140.—A. "April 20th. Profit and loss. H. A. Nelson, $5,000."

Q. Who is H. A. Nelson?—A. Judge Homer A. Nelson. That was for legal services.

Q. Look at check 2137.—A. [Reading,] Bank of Commerce, returned Loan $100, 000 00

Interest account:

Interest 38 39

Total 100, 038 39

There is nothing to indicate that that was not an ordinary transaction, a temporary loan.

Q. Was the Bank of Commerce borrowing on interest from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Let me see. In the ledger-entry it looks as though we had borrowed $100,000 from the Bank of Commerce—"returned loan."

Q. Is that entered on the loan-account?—A. I will see. "Bank of Commerce, loan returned, $100,000." The loan was made on the 17th of April. We had it two days. The steamship company borrowed $100,000, and we will see by the balance that it was necessary.

Q. Read check number 2149.—A. Profit and loss, Bird, Perkins & Jones for services of C. N. Goulding, $50.

Q. Who is C. N. Goulding?—A. That is a question I cannot answer. I have got it charged, "pay to C. N. Goulding $50," but for what services I do not know.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. You are now given the account of Richard B. Irwin, with the American Exchange Bank. He deposited $25,000 on January 27, 1872. He drew from you $25,000 on the 25th, two days before?—A. Yes, sir; January 25.

Q. February 13, he drew from you $40,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. There appears a deposit of $40,000 in that bank on February 26?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He drew from you on the 19th April $35,000. Do you find a deposit of $35,000 in that account?—A. Yes, sir; the same day, April 19.

Q. He drew from you $20,000 on the 10th May. Do you find a deposit of $20,000 on the 11th May?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He drew from you on the 14th $20,000. Do you find a deposit of $20,000 on the 15th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The total, I believe, as it adds up here is $140,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now taking the entries on this book and taking these entries in his account with the American Exchange Bank and the entries on your check-book and cash-book, the total is $140,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Assume that he received on the 24th May, $750,000 in those other checks, which have been shown to you, and used all of that money in reference to that subsidy; does that indicate that he spent $140,000 more, in addition to the $750,000?—A. That would seem to be the indication.

Q. Is it not conclusively so to your mind? He had drawn $750,000, and if he received $140,000 afterward, and spent all of it, is it not clear that that amount also was furnished for the same purpose?—A. Yes, sir; it appears so. The books show those charges.

Q. They show that they were furnished to him during the period this subsidy was pending and when he was employed in the special agency?—A. Yes, sir; these were charged to Eldridge & Irwin, agents.

Q. But his own check-account and your books agree in showing that $140,000 had been furnished to him before the 24th May. Would not that indicate that from January 25, 1872, down to and including May 24, 1872, he did in fact receive $890,000 from the company?—A. So far as certain entries on the books are concerned, they would indicate that that amount or even a larger sum passed through somebody's hands, but there was afterward a credit, and the actual round amount charged out, for which there is no account, and for which the company never have had any account, is just $800,000.

Q. Those payments of $140,000 from January 25, up to May 15, in addition to the $750,000 that he received on May 24, make, in fact, $890,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If Irwin has ever paid any part of that back to the company, tell us in what form it was paid.—A. My record of certain entries which have been made upon the books, shows, in the first place, sundry charges, and it resulted in leaving Eldridge & Irwin's account at $600,000 debit as against them. Then there were $200,000 for which checks were exchanged with Mr. John Roach, as I understand, for which the company has no receipt. They were charged to the two China steamers.

Q. When was that?—A. I perhaps would not like to give you those, because I find that my memorandum is not so full and complete as I supposed it was.

Q. Was it before the 1st of June, 1872?—A. I cannot say; it was about that time.

Q. If there is anything upon your books that will show that Irwin ever refunded to the company any part of that $890,000 we want you to explain it.—A. Well, we did not know Mr. Irwin particularly; the refund came in certain—

Q. From Irwin's account with the bank, and from your books, it is clear that he received these sums, and we can see how the money was paid out of the bank. Do you see anything in his payments out, which indicates that any part of the money was ever paid back to the steamship company? Is there anything in all those entries of the paying out of this money by the bank, showing that any portion of that $840,000 came back to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir; but this is Irwin's account and the bank-account. The simple correspondence of amounts is no evidence, of course, on which I can swear that those were the same items.

Q. Look and see if you can find any entries of repayments by Irwin to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company from the 25th of January to the 24th of May, when the $750,000 was paid him, that correspond with any of those amounts drawn out of the bank by him?—A. I am very certain there are none; it is hardly worth while to look.

Q. Would not that indicate, therefore, that he had spent all that money otherwise than by refunding it?—A. Well, the $140,000, of course. As to the simple matter of correspondence of amounts, I cannot say anything about that; and in fact, except as the charges are made, I do not know, officially, that Irwin ever had a penny of the company's money.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. But this account with the bank shows that he actually deposited in the American Exchange National Bank $140,000, and your books show that he got that much from the company?—A. They show that it was charged to Edridge & Irwin as agents; but you must remember that those checks were drawn and given to Mr. Stockwell, as the account shows. What became of them afterward I do not know. The first time that I have ever seen them has been in this room to-day; and consequently, the fact that these credits to him by the bank correspond in amount to these sums is no reason for my saying that they were the same.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. When dates and amounts correspond clear through, is it not very significant?—A. When dates and amounts correspond clear through, it is, perhaps, ground for an inference, but it is not evidence.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It would be sufficient for a jury, would it not?—A. Well, strange coincidences occur sometimes.

Q. This memorandum from which you have refreshed your recollection, what is it and when was it made?

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Where did you get that?—A. This is a memorandum which I kept when I made certain entries.

Q. Was it made at the time the entries were made?—A. At the time.

Q. And you have had it ever since?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. That same paper; taken from the books of the company?—A. Yes, sir; I did it for the purpose of being able to trace those entries.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you keep a memorandum of the parties who had loans, &c.?—A. No, sir; I will tell you. These papers happened to be in my desk when I came away, and supposing they would be of no interest to anybody but myself, I took them. This, for instance, is Harriot & Noyes—the year does not appear to be put down here—$256,200. Harriot & Noyes ran through $1,194,000, and the balance at that time was $256,200. F. C. Markham had $850,000, of which he owed $150,000 at the time this memorandum was made out. Osborn & Chapin had $2,039,000, and the balance against them was $141,000 at that time. That is simply an indication. When we ruled off our books and brought our loans down we took them off in this way to indicate how the books were kept.

Q. Was it a part of your duty to make these abstracts of the accounts?—A. No, sir. If you look at the ledger, you will see how these accounts were brought down. This was intended simply for the purpose of checking those accounts, and as a private paper of my own.

Q. Did you keep such a memorandum for your private use, in regard to all the large accounts?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you select these particular accounts?—A. Because they happened at the time to be in my desk when I left the company's office, and as talk of loans, and subsidy investigations, &c., had been rife, and thinking the time might come when some question would arise as to how these loans were kept, I took the memorandum.

Q. You thought there was something suspicious in regard to these accounts?—A. O no, sir, not at all; because these accounts, so far as they go, and at these dates, were, as I think, correct. For instance, Mr. Rufus Hatch is down here as having received $941,900, as a loan, which he paid, and the account was closed. Here are Jamieson, Smith & King, Osborn & Chapin, F. C. Markham, Harriot & Noyes, and others. This is simply a memorandum of a number of accounts which at that time were represented as standing upon our books.

Q. Why did you take this particular memorandum, though, by which to refresh your memory?—A. Because it referred to these specific amounts of money, showing how the accounts stood when these matters were closed up.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. There is one little item here on the memorandum which you have handed in—the last item, “check A. Masterton, charge Eldridge & Irwin,” with no amount brought out.—A. I think that I referred to that entry.

Q. And yet you swore a little while ago that this Masterton entry was bona fide as you considered.—A. That is not the only Masterton entry. That entry was made in December, 1872.

Q. That is probably another matter.—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Masterton had made sundry loans.

Q. I see the last entry on the right-hand side of this memorandum is “E and I, (meaning Eldridge & Irwin,) debited to cash September (without date) $500,000;” does that refer to the $500,000 check dated September 7, which was shown awhile ago?—A. I think it does.

Q. Was not that entry made by you?—A. Yes.

Q. What did it mean—that Eldridge & Irwin had received that check which is charged to Harriot & Noyes?—A. No, sir; it was intended to show that Eldridge & Irwin were charged with it on the books finally—not with reference to where the check went.

Q. But were Eldridge & Irwin finally charged with it on the books?—A. Yes, they were charged with $500,000.

Q. That is, Harriot & Noyes were discharged, and Eldridge & Irwin were charged with this amount?—A. I do not know how it was done; Eldridge & Irwin were charged with $500,000 which they never had.

Q. In the books it appears as a charge to Harriot & Noyes.—A. Yes; but Harriot & Noyes are credited with it afterward.

Q. But you now say that Eldridge & Irwin appear charged with it, and that they never had it.—A. Yes.

Q. And yet your books show that it stood against Harriot & Noyes for whole months, and was afterward carried to the account of Eldridge & Irwin, and yet you say that Eldridge & Irwin never had it.—A. That check is not on my books. Had Harriot & Noyes actually and bona fide owed that $500,000, and had actually paid it back to the company, and then had that $500,000 been paid to Eldridge & Irwin as a check, the entry would have appeared precisely as it is in this book. I had no knowledge that the $500,000 was not actually loaned to Harriot & Noyes, but I knew that the charge to Eldridge & Irwin did not belong to them, and therefore I made the entry in that way. The Harriot & Noyes entry did not strike me as unusual.

Q. And yet that entry indicates that the entry to which I refer was a charge to Eldridge & Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet no such charge appears against Eldridge & Irwin?—A. Not until September; it was transferred through the check-books and would not necessarily attract my attention, because the credit to Harriot & Noyes would be in the ordinary course of business, and there would be nothing at all in it to attract any attention.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. You said something about an exchange of checks for $200,000 with John Roach.—A. That I have no memorandum of; I was told that there was an exchange of checks for $200,000.

Q. Told by whom?—A. By Mr. Bellows, vice-president, and it was well understood at the time by him and myself, although the company did not know it until a long time afterwards, that that $200,000, was to be charged to the two steamers that Roach was building—$100,000 to each. I understood that it was on account of subsidy business or Washington business, and that in making up any statement of the cost of these steamers, or in balancing with the contractor, Mr. Roach, $100,000 on each of these steamers must be taken into consideration; that if, for instance, the contractors wanted to know how much the company owed on each one of those steamers, that $100,000 must be deducted from the amount paid, because Mr. Roach had exchanged his checks for it. In alluding to that one day, Mr. Smith, the treasurer, told me that he had Mr. Roach's receipt for that item. I challenged him to produce the receipt and he could not do it. That is simply the history of that transaction.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Then an exchange of checks means that Mr. Roach gave his checks to the company, and that the company gave its checks to Mr. Roach?

—A. No, I do not understand it exactly in that way; I understand that the company gave its checks to Mr. Roach, and that Mr. Roach gave his checks to Mr. Stockwell, and that the company never got the benefit of them; in other words, that the company was $200,000 out of pocket.

Q. For the benefit of Mr. Stockwell?—A. For the benefit of Mr. Stockwell, or whoever got the money.

Q. Does not that follow legitimately, that where the company gave its checks to Mr. Roach and Mr. Roach gave his checks to Mr. Stockwell, (not to the company, but to A. B. Stockwell individually,) the money went out of the funds of the company into Mr. Stockwell's pocket?—A. Yes, sir, that is the fair inference.

Q. And that is what you call an exchange of checks?—A. It was an exchange of checks in that instance.

Mr. KASSON. Yes; but rather a fatal one for the company.

Q. State whether leaving the entries on the bank-book blank, and with only the initials A. B. S., did not indicate that the amount was ultimately to be charged to Mr. Stockwell, or to somebody else, as might be agreed upon between that somebody else and Mr. Stockwell, or else that an absolute false entry was to be made. Either of those things could be done, could it not?—A. Yes, sir; it could be charged to anybody. My instructions were to charge them. I was of course subject to the orders of the vice-president.

NEW YORK, December 30, 1874.

WILLIAM R. BUNKER sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. In what capacity are you employed?—Answer. I am secretary of the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Q. How long have you been such secretary?—A. Since August, 1873.

Q. Have you the books of the Brooklyn Trust Company prior to that date?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the books of the old Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. It has always been the one company.

Q. Have you the books of that company covering the months of May, June, and July, 1872?—A. I have.

Q. Produce the pass-book of the Brooklyn Trust Company with the Marine National Bank of New York.

[Witness produces it.]

Q. State what entry there is on this pass-book of a deposit in the Marine National Bank, of a large sum under the date of May 30, 1872.—A. There appears to be a deposit of $275,000 under that date.

Q. A deposit made by the Brooklyn Trust Company with the Marine National Bank?—A. Yes.

Q. Does that pass-book show from whom the Brooklyn Trust Company received that amount?—A. No, sir; the pass-book does not show it.

Q. Turn now to the entries in the cash-book of the Brooklyn Trust Company corresponding to that deposit, and state if that book indicates to whose credit this $275,000 went.—A. I read from the "cash-book of individual deposits," but I do not find any item as large as that on that day.

Q. State if there appear to have been some large payments made to an individual by the Brooklyn Trust Company on May 30; and, if so, read the entry, and then state if there was a large credit to an individual on the same date.—A. Yes; there appear here three entries of payments made by checks on the Marine National Bank.

Q. State the name and amounts.—A. There appear three checks of $50,000 each, drawn to the order of John G. Schumaker, dated May 30, 1872, amounting in all to $150,000.

Q. State if you find an entry of a large amount passed to the credit of any one on that same day.—A. The largest item is an entry of $125,000.

Q. To whose credit is that passed?—A. To the credit of the same man, John G. Schumaker.

Q. And the three checks and that credit amount to how much?—A. To $275,000.

Q. All under date of May 30, 1872?—A. Yes.

Q. What do you conclude from the entries which you have before you, in the books of the company, as to the account to which that $275,000 check passed?—A. It did not go to any one's account.

Q. To whose benefit did it go?—A. To the benefit of the same man I have mentioned.

Q. State whether the three checks that you have mentioned were the only checks drawn on the Marine National Bank on the 30th of May by your company.—A. They are the only checks drawn by the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank on that day.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. The cashier of the Marine National Bank was before this committee yesterday, and stated, in substance, that on the day of deposit of that $275,000 by the Brooklyn Trust Company there was a balance in the Marine National Bank to the credit of the Brooklyn Trust Company of about $151,000. Do the books show that?—A. That is about the balance that appears—$151,356.85; that was the balance in the books before this $275,000 check was deposited.

Q. He told us that on the same day $150,000 was drawn out of the Marine National Bank by the Brooklyn Trust Company.—A. The check-book indicates that by these three items.

Q. Three checks of $50,000 each, payable to John G. Schumaker?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there anything in the subsequent account of the transaction which indicates how this $275,000 was disposed of?—A. It was disposed of in the general way; that is, it was transferred to another book, where the account of the Brooklyn Trust Company with the Marine National Bank was kept.

Q. There was still $275,000 remaining to the credit of the Brooklyn Trust Company after these three checks were drawn?—A. There was $276,000 remaining.

Q. Is there anything to trace how that money was used?—A. It was merged in the general account, and was used just as the Brooklyn Trust Company needed it.

Q. So that there will be no further information relative to Mr. Schumaker's account given there?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Do you know Mr. Schumaker?—A. Yes.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. I believe he resides in Brooklyn.

Q. Do you know his street and number?—A. I do not.

Q. Who is this Mr. Schumaker?—A. He is a gentleman who has kept an account with the Brooklyn Trust Company, I do not know how long, but since before I have been there.

Q. What is his business?—A. I think he is a lawyer, and, if I am not mistaken, he is a member of Congress.

Q. Do you know that Mr. Schumaker, the member of Congress, is the same person that you speak of?—A. Yes, this is the Mr. Schumaker who is a member of Congress.

Q. Do you know whether he was a member of Congress at that time?—A. I do not. I do not know anything about him except by hearsay.

Q. Have you the books corresponding with the entry?—A. Not here, but I will produce them.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. Will you make a transcript of the account of this gentleman with the Brooklyn Trust Company, beginning with 1872 and continuing until the next settlement following this transaction?—A. I will do so. I wish to say here, in justice to the Brooklyn Trust Company, that that company never has failed, as was stated here. It suspended, or was in the hands of a receiver for twenty days, and then the company went on regularly with its usual business, and no depositor ever lost one cent by the company, in principal or interest.

By Mr. NIBLACK :

Q. Whom did you succeed as secretary?—A. Marvin T. Rodman.

Q. Do you know where Mr. Rodman is now?—A. I do not; he has been at one time in Philadelphia and at another time in Ohio.

Q. He is not in this city now, that you are aware of?—A. I do not know where he is.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. Who was president of the Brooklyn Trust Company at that time?—A. Mr. Ethelton S. Mills. He was drowned at Coney Island. It was his death which led to the suspension and temporary trouble of the company.

Q. Mr. Schumaker's checks have been all returned to him?—A. Yes; that is always done when accounts are balanced. Mr. Delamater, the cashier of the Marine National Bank, stated, yesterday, that that bank had no transactions with the Brooklyn Trust Company since its suspension. That is a mistake. Mr. Delamater must have referred to special transactions, not to general dealings, because our account has been kept there all along, and we have been depositing and drawing, and are still depositing and drawing, with the company. He must evidently have referred to special transactions, because he could not possibly have referred to the ordinary business of the company.

Q. Then the Brooklyn Trust Company has an account with the Marine National Bank?—A. Yes, sir; that evidently must have been a misapprehension on the part of Mr. Delamater. I simply desired to say this in justice to the company.

Witness was requested to produce to the committee the original checks drawn to the order of John G. Schumaker, and he subsequently appeared before the committee and presented three checks, each for $50,000, each dated May 30, 1872, and each payable to the order of John G. Schumaker. The following is a copy of one of the checks, the other two being exactly similar :

"BROOKLYN TRUST COMPANY, 193,
"Brooklyn, N. Y., May 30th, 1872.

(In pencil, H. D. C.)
"$50,000.]

"The Marine National Bank of New York :

"For deposit to the credit of Jay Cooke & Co.

(Stamped.)

"FORCE."

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. Do you know the signature of John G. Schumaker, on the back of these checks?—A. I am not familiar with it at all. I have seen Mr. Schumaker's signature, but I am not sufficiently familiar with it to identify it. My impression is that this is his signature, but I cannot swear to it.

By Mr. NIBLACK :

Q. One of these checks is indorsed to the order of Riggs & Co. Is that Riggs & Co. of Washington?—A. I cannot tell. The house has an office in New York and also one in Washington.

Q. Jay Cooke & Co. also had offices in each city?—A. Yes, they had offices in New York, Philadelphia, and Washington. I see that two of these checks are indorsed by the Washington house of Jay Cooke & Co., and are also indorsed by what I suppose is the New York house.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. Does check No. 191 indicate by which house it was indorsed?—A. The only thing on that check to signify it is the stamp for deposit by Riggs & Co. in New York.

Q. From that what do you infer?—A. I see the number 6 stamped upon it, which is the clearing-house number of the Bank of America. I infer from that that this check was deposited by Riggs & Co. of New York, in the Bank of America, New York. No. 6 is the clearing-house number of the Bank of America.

Q. Is there any such number on check 192?—A. Yes, No. 23, which is the clearing-house number of the Bank of Commerce. That indicates that it was deposited by Jay Cooke & Co. in the Bank of Commerce, of New York, to their credit. Check No. 193 also bears the clearing-house number of the Bank of Commerce, and it indicates that it was deposited by Jay Cooke & Co., of New York, in the Bank of Commerce of New York.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Do these checks indicate the day on which they were deposited?—

A. They do not indicate what day the banks received them.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. These are the checks of the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank of New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Payable to the order of John G. Schumaker?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they were charged up to him on the same day?—A. The books appear to show that we received a check for $275,000, credited him with 125,000, and gave him three checks amounting to $150,000, on that same day.

Q. How were these entered on your books?—A. The Brooklyn Trust Company received a check for $275,000, returned him $150,000 in these checks, and put the balance to his credit. These checks were deducted from the deposit made. It was as if Mr. Schumaker should say, "Here is a check for $275,000; I wish you to return me $150,000, and to credit me with $125,000."

Q. And this $150,000, was it entered up as cash?—A. Yes, it was credited as the Brooklyn Trust Company's cash returned, or deducted from the amount deposited. We credited him only with $125,000, and gave him these checks for $150,000. The only amount that goes into the ledger of Mr. Schumaker's account is the $125,000.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Look on these two checks indorsed by Jay Cooke & Co., and say if you do not see the initials H. D. C. on each of them?—A. Yes, sir; I see those initials in pencil in the upper left-hand corner of the check.

Q. Those initials would stand for Henry D. Cooke?—A. They would if there was a Mr. Henry D. Cooke.

Q. Do you not know that Henry D. Cooke was the manager of the Washington branch of the house of Jay Cooke & Co.?—A. I do not know that there is such a person as Henry D. Cooke. I see a pencil-mark there of H. D. C.

Q. Do you know that Mr. Tenney is one of their Washington officers?—A. I do not.

The witness also submitted, by the instructions of the committee, an abstract from the ledger-account of the Brooklyn Trust Company with John G. Schumaker.

Q. Does this abstract which you have furnished to the committee contain the entry of the $125,000 to which you have been testifying?—A. It does.

Q. Can you inform the committee by anything indicated by the entries on your books as to whom these payments were made?—A. That would be entirely impossible. When the accounts of a customer are balanced, the checks are returned to the party keeping the account, and the payment would only be indicated by the indorsements on the checks. It would be wholly impossible for us to say to whom the checks were paid without the checks being produced.

NEW YORK, December 30, 1874.

DUMONT CLARKE recalled.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Look at the statement of the account of the American Exchange Bank with Richard B. Irwin, which you furnished to the committee, and state whether you have examined the entries in the books in reference to the payments that are charged to Mr. Irwin during the year 1872?—A. Yes, we have done so as far as possible; but there are a great many items in the account which it is almost impossible for us to trace.

Q. What is the difficulty about that?—A. We receive each day sixty slips from each of the banks of this city, with the list of the checks simply in round numbers, without any reference to the maker of the check or anything of that kind. On looking over the slips of the days on which we received these checks for $5,000, $2,000, and such items, we find a great many similar items received from three or four different banks, and unless we had Mr. Irwin's check it would be utterly impossible for us to tell from what bank we received it. We might do so by a series of investigations which would take a great deal of time, and which would, in most instances, be entirely futile. I have chosen three or four items, however, which I have endeavored to trace up. Here is one item of $14,500, which is rather an odd amount; and I find that it is the only item of that amount which was received on that day, the 27th of February. We received it from the Bank of America. That unquestionably is the check in question.

Q. Why do you think so?—A. From the fact that it is the only item for that amount on all the slips which we received that day. Then here is another item of $4,000, which is rather an unusual amount also; $5,000 and its multiples are usual amounts. I find that on the 21st of May we paid two items of $4,000—one to the Bank of North America, and the other to the Central National Bank.

Q. If either of these was a certified check, could you identify it in that way?—A. No, sir; there is no mark to identify a certified check from an uncertified check. You will recollect that in the first statement which I made here I could not account for the fact that the check for $100,000 on the 27th of May was paid by the note-teller. The first three checks of that day were paid from the cash of the paying-teller, but the last $100,000 was paid by the note-teller. Since we first made our statement, we have looked over our books, and we find that on that day we issued a certificate of deposit (which I have here) for $56,500, payable to the order of A. H. Whiting, and I can recall with a measure of certainty, though not entirely so, that on that day a gentleman was brought in, giving that name and desiring to deposit a check of Mr. Irwin's for $100,000. He received a portion of it in cash and deposited the rest, receiving this certificate of deposit. That certificate of deposit which was issued on the 27th of May was not returned to the bank for payment until the 3d of July following. It is made payable to the order of Eugene Kelly & Company, and was by Eugene Kelly & Company deposited in the Park Bank, where they keep their account. Whether it was deposited by Eugene Kelly's banking-house in New York, or by their San Francisco house, it is impossible for us to say. It was away for thirty or forty days, which was abundance of time for it to go to California and return.

Q. Do you know A. H. Whiting?—A. No, sir; we never issue certificates to strangers; but when persons come identified to us, we generally take their signatures on the stub of our certificate of deposit book, and we did so in this instance. We took Mr. Whiting's signature on the stub of our deposit-book so as to be able to identify it when it came back. I feel very certain that that was the certificate issued in part payment of that $100,000 check.

Q. Who are Eugene Kelly & Company?—A. They are California bankers, having an office here in New York.

Q. Are there any other items which you can identify or explain?—A. No, sir; not at this moment. They are mostly in round sums of $5,000, and it is very difficult to trace such items.

Q. How can we ascertain to whom these payments were made on that account?—A. There is no way of doing so unless we should examine all of the slips that were received on these particular days, and then take every $5,000 item and send it to one of the banks, and ask that bank to tell us from whom it received the check. The banks could tell us that or not, just as they saw fit to do so.

Q. Could they tell it without having the original checks?—A. They would have difficulty in doing so. They would have to go and hunt out all the $5,000 items which they received in the course of business on that day. Here is a list of checks which must comprise three or four thousand checks that were received in a single day, and the committee will easily see that it is no trifling matter to write to all these different parties.

Q. Can you tell us whether any check entered on that deposit account was received from Washington?—A. No, sir; none of them were received directly by us from Washington. If a Washington bank has a correspondent in New York, it would remit the check to that correspondent, and it would come to us the following day in the ordinary course of business; but there is no way in which we would know that.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Explain a little more that $145,000 item of 27th February, 1872; where did it come from?—A. From the Bank of America.

Q. And was the only item of that amount in that day's business?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Indicating to your mind that that is one of the deposits by Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir; unquestionably that must be the one.

Q. Can you tell to whose credit it was deposited?—A. No, sir; no one can tell that but the Bank of America.

Q. And the other $4,000 came either through the Bank of North America or through the Central National Bank, each of those banks having had a $4,000 item in that day's business, and there being one $4,000 charged against Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It came from one or the other of these two banks, but from which one you cannot tell?—A. No, sir; we cannot tell.

Q. And we can only ascertain that by inquiring from both of those banks, and would fail in one of them?—A. Yes.

Q. Had Mr. Whiting any account with you?—A. No, sir; not previously to that time. We considered it an account when he took our certificate.

Q. You have on the stub of your certificate-book his own handwriting?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you bring it with you?—A. No, sir; but I have it on the certificate here, [presenting a copy to the committee.] There is another item of $22,500; I have been trying to find the slips of that day, but I had not succeeded in doing so when I left the bank this morning. That is under date of 29th of April. That is also rather an unusual amount, and that is the reason why I chose that one. Even amounts, $5,000 and its multiples, come very frequently. If we find the memoranda of that day I will send information about it to the committee.

Q. Is that the only one that strikes you as being likely to be found without much trouble?—A. Yes, sir. It is likely that if we should find out where this item came from, the committee would have great difficulty in tracing it.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. You have spoken of the only trace that you have been able to find of the disposition of the large sum which you said the other day was apparently paid over the counter on the 27th of May. You have found no other trace of the disposition of that money?—A. No, sir; nothing that I can speak positively of.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. This item of $14,500, to which you have referred, if it should be a check which had passed through another bank, what would the bank-books show that would enable you to trace it through that bank?—A. The other bank would have to examine its books, and if it should be as fortunate as we were in only finding one item of $14,500 in that day's business, it could trace that item readily, but otherwise it would be a little more difficult. Still, it could be done. They would have to look over their credit-books of that day, and if they saw an item of $14,500, and but one such item, they could trace it very readily.

Q. What is there about the $19,000 item on May 27th?—A. We certified that check, and that was also hunted for, but we have not succeeded in finding it.

The following is a copy of the certificate of deposit produced by the witness :

" 5561.

NEW YORK, December 30, 1874.

HUGH J. HASTINGS sworn and examined.

By Mr. NIBLACK :

Question. State your occupation.—Answer. I am editor of the New York Commercial Advertiser.

Q. State whether you know, either of your own knowledge or from information which you regard as reliable, of the expenditure of any money at Washington for the procurement of the subsidy of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I have no knowledge of the kind.

Q. So that the idea that you knew of it is all conjectural?—A. It is all conjectural. Probably the committee might get something from my statement, or some indication on which it might hang something. I am a stockholder in what is called the New York and Brooklyn Ferry Company. That company was attacked by some parties to force a reduction of the fare, and the directors of the company thought that I should go to Albany to take care of the company's interest. I was forced to go there, and while I was at Albany I heard that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had some legislation pending before the legislature in regard to reducing the capital stock, or something of that kind. I was inquired of about it on several occasions, and asked by parties to assist them in the matter. I told them that I would take no part in the matter; that I was there to protect my own interests, and had nothing to do with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That was about two years ago last winter.

Q. Do you recollect what kind of legislation was then pending on the part of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I think it was in reference to reducing its capital stock.

Q. It was an amendment to its charter?—A. Something of that sort.

Q. Do you know whether that legislation was obtained or not?—A. It was.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Irwin had any connection with that legislation?—A. I never heard of him in connection with it.

Q. Do you recollect who was at Albany at that time, apparently looking after that business?—A. I cannot recollect just now who had charge of the matter.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Did Mr. Stockwell himself, or any officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, between the 13th of February, 1872, and the 1st of June, 1872, advance you any money to disburse in their interest for the purpose of procuring legislation?—A. No, sir.

Q. And no such money was disbursed by you?—A. No such money was disbursed by me.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Was any such disbursement made by anybody else that you know of?—A. I have no knowledge of it.

RUFUS HATCH recalled.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. Mr. Irwin in his testimony produced letters written by Mr. Stockwell to himself, and referred to his replies to them. Have you examined the papers or files of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to ascertain whether there are letters from Mr. Irwin to Mr. Stockwell, or to any officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, from the latter part of January, 1872, up to the first of June, 1872?—Answer. I have, not, personally, but I gave an order this morning to look for the correspondence between Richard B. Irwin and A. B. Stockwell, either as president or as individual, and to see whether there are any letters, papers, or documents that would bear upon this subject-matter, and that would be of interest or evidence to this committee, or of value to be preserved and made public.

Q. There are some letters here referred to by Mr. Irwin, particularly one in answer to the letter of February 13, and his replies to letters which he produces and submits in evidence, and the committee desires you to produce those letters and all the correspondence relating to the matter.—A. I shall do so, most cheerfully, as fast as possible, as it is the order of the board of directors to produce every paper and document that may be of interest and of value to this committee and to Congress in developing the whole situation.

Adjourned till to-morrow morning at half-past ten o'clock.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

GEORGE E. WEED sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD.

Question. What is your position?—Answer. Cashier for Mr. John Roach.

Q. Where do you reside?—A. In New York City.

Q. What do you know in reference to the exchange of checks, or of the giving of checks, by Mr. Roach to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company some time in 1872?—A. The exchange of checks was made on the 4th of September, 1872, at the request of Mr. Bellows, the vice-president. On the day previous—the 3d of September—when I was in the office of the company on other business, Mr. Bellows requested me to make an exchange of checks for $200,000. Mr. Roach was not present at the time, but, on my return to the office, I mentioned the matter to Mr. Roach, and he said that there was no objection.

Q. Was any reason given by Mr. Bellows for making that request?—A. No, sir. I merely supposed that it was an accommodation to the company.

Q. What was done with the check from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. It was deposited the same day in our bank.

Q. And the proceeds were collected and put to your credit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And there was no other significance in the transaction, but a mere exchange of checks?—A. That is all, as far as Mr. Roach was represented in the matter. He had no knowledge of it except by my stating to him Mr. Bellows's request, and his giving his consent to it. He was neither present when the request was made nor when the transaction took place. Mr. Roundy stated yesterday that Mr. Roach gave the check to Mr. Stockwell; but that is entirely incorrect. I never saw Mr. Stockwell in the matter, and I know that Mr. Roach did not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. To whom was the check given?—A. I handed it to Mr. Bellows.

Q. To whom was it made payable?—A. Mr. Bellows requested that I should draw the check to the order of Mr. Roach; which I did, and Mr. Roach indorsed the check. This $200,000 was the same amount as the payments which we were receiving on the large ships, and the contract for these ships was in Mr. Roach's name individually. Mr. Bellows's check was payable to the order of John Roach, and he requested that we should draw our check payable in the same way.

Q. Did he give any reason why he preferred it in that way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know any reason why he did?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you now see any reason why that way should be preferred?—

A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. What two ships had you then a contract for building?—A. The Peking and the Tokio.

Q. When was the contract for the building of those ships made?—

A. In the latter part of June, 1872.

Q. This subsidy, about which we are now considering, became a law on the 1st of June, and the contract was made immediately after that?—

A. Yes, sir; I think the contract was made on the 26th of June.

Q. And your payments were to be $200,000 each time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often were these payments to be made?—A. At certain stages of the work. We had only received one payment at that time. The contract was for $1,050,000 each.

Q. Was the payment on these ships made in the name of John Roach or of John Roach & Son?—A. In the name of John Roach.

Q. And the facts that the contract was made with John Roach, and that the payment was made to John Roach, and that Mr. Bellows requested this check to be made payable to the order of John Roach, had they any significance?—A. We thought that it had something to do with that contract, or that it was an accommodation to the company.

Q. Does it not now impress you that it was done in order that it might appear part payment on the ships?—A. It does appear so now, and I would say here that the treasurer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company stated afterward that we had given a receipt for the money, but, of course, we had not, because it was no receipt of money.

Q. Do you know whether this additional $100,000 on each of the two ships was charged up so that it might appear that the ships had cost $100,000 each more than they had?—A. I have been told so since by the treasurer of the company.

Q. Was not that really the significance of the action, as you now understand it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not then suspect anything wrong?—A. Not at all.

Q. But while your accounts are kept in the bank in the name of John Roach & Son, the fact that this check was given payable to John Roach made it appear as if it was a payment on this contract?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. And the result of it was that not one dollar of it was paid on the contract?—A. Not a dollar was paid, and there was no benefit whatever on our part.

Q. It left both parties just as they were before the issue?—A. Yes, sir.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

JOHN ROACH sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. A statement was made here yesterday that your checks for $200,000 were exchanged for those of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. State to the committee what you know in reference to that transaction.—Answer. I have no knowledge of the transaction. Mr. Weed, my clerk, did all the business with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and made all the collections, and made, in fact, all the disbursements. He stated to me that he had been to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and that Mr. Bellows, the vice-president, had asked him for an exchange of checks of $200,000. That amount corresponded to the sum which we generally received in payment for the ships which we were building for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I stated to Mr. Weed that I did not know that we had any objection to the transaction, as the parties were responsible, and I supposed that they might be wanting the money for a day. Mr. Weed filled out the check and I indorsed it, and it was deposited in their bank. The exchange check was indorsed by me and deposited in our bank. I never paid any attention to the transaction until this question came up, and on looking over our check-book I could not find that there was anything in the transaction except a mere exchange of checks. I had no knowledge of Mr. Stockwell in the matter.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Did you execute any receipt for the money?—A. Not at all.

Q. Had you no knowledge of the use to which any part of this money was put by the company?—A. No, sir; at that time there was no excitement of any kind in connection with the company, and we supposed merely that the company wanted the use of the money for a day or two.

Q. What advantage could this exchange of checks be to either party?—A. I cannot exactly say.

Q. Did it make the ships appear to have cost more than they actually did?—A. Not on our books.

Q. Could it have done so on the company's books?—A. That I do not know. If I had known that it was going to make the ships appear to cost anything more, I would not have consented to it, because I was endeavoring to make the ships cost less than they would cost to be built on the other side of the water.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. You have stated that all you know about that exchange of checks you derived from Mr. Weed?—A. Entirely so.

Q. And you know nothing on the subject except what you have derived from him?—A. That is all.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

ROSWELL G. ROLSTON sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. What connection had you with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in 1872?—Answer. I was elected a director of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on the 29th May, 1872, and remained a director till December 17, 1872, when I tendered my resignation.

Q. Did you know anything of a previous resolution or order made by the board of directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in reference to the obtaining of a subsidy at Washington?—A. I did no.

Q. You had nothing to do with the company prior to the 29th May, 1872?—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Did you, as a director of the company, obtain any information as to the amount of money chargeable to the company in connection with the subsidy?—A. I knew nothing whatever of the subsidy. It never was discussed at any meeting of the board at which I was present, and I had no knowledge whatever of it.

Q. Nothing was ever stated at the board as to the liabilities of the company on that account?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. What was the original amount of stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know whether it was several times increased by what is known as watering?—A. I do not.

Q. You have no information as to the previous history of the company?—A. None whatever.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

GEORGE L. KINGSLAND sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. State your connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.—Answer. I was elected a director, I think, on the 29th May, 1872, the same date as Mr. Rolston was, and I served until May, 1873.

Q. Prior to the 29th May, 1872, you had no connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. None whatever.

Q. Did you, after the date when you became connected with it, obtain any knowledge as to the alleged expenditures of the company in procuring a subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know of any claims being made by any officer of the company on that account?—A. No, sir.

Q. The question was in no way presented to the board of directors during your term of office?—A. It was not; it never came up.

Q. And in no manner did any knowledge come to you either of expenditures or alleged claims against the company?—A. No, sir; in no way whatever.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Do you know why Mr. Hatch wanted you and Mr. Rolston summoned here?—A. No, sir; I do not. I have no idea why I should be summoned as a witness.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

CHARLES A. AVERY sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. State your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside at present in Brooklyn. I am connected with the Howe Sewing-Machine Company, and am acting on a power of attorney for A. B. Stockwell.

Q. You are the attorney in fact of Mr. Stockwell?—A. I am.

Q. Attending to his business?—A. Yes.

Q. For how long a time have you been so?—A. Since the 1st March last.

Q. Were you doing business for him in any capacity in 1872?—A. I was only a partner with him in 1872.

Q. In what business?—A. In the firm of H. W. Gray & Avery.

Q. Who were the members of that firm?—A. H. W. Gray, myself, and Mr. Stockwell, who was a special partner.

Q. What business was the firm engaged in?—A. In the exchange and brokerage business.

Q. Where were you doing business?—A. In Broad street.

Q. Was your firm at that time owners of Pacific Mail Steamship stock?—A. Our firm was not.

Q. Were you, individually?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know, from information, of an additional subsidy being granted to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company by act of Congress, in May, 1872?—A. I knew of it simply by reading it in the papers.

Q. State to the committee what you know in reference to Mr. Stockwell's efforts to procure the passage of a bill granting that additional subsidy.—A. I know nothing whatever of it.

Q. Do you know Richard B. Irwin?—A. I do not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. You have stated that your firm had no stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and that you had none, in 1872. Did you mean to be understood as saying that Mr. Stockwell had none?—A. Our firm had nothing to say with what Mr. Stockwell did as an individual.

Q. What do you know on this subject?—A. I know that he had stock in the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Was he dealing largely in that stock at that time?—A. He was.

Q. Was he doing business in that stock through your house at that time?—A. The firm of Gray & Avery commenced business on October 1, 1872, and there are no entries in connection with Mr. Stockwell's operations prior to that time. We made no operation for him prior to that time.

RUFUS HATCH recalled.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. The committee desired you to produce the books and papers and correspondence of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company relating to the subsidy. State what you have done in reference to procuring them.—Answer. I have had the books thoroughly examined by Mr. Post, Mr. Merrill, and Mr. Lane. I produce the only correspondence which they have been able to find in relation to the subsidy question.

The correspondence is as follows:

New York, December 2, 1871.

RICHARD B. IRWIN, Esq.,
San Francisco:

The president of this company desires your presence here as soon as possible after the receipt of this letter, and you will therefore make your arrangements to leave San Francisco for New York overland so as to be here at an early date.

The object in view of your coming here is to obtain from you all the information that you can give as to what was done by you last year to obtain an increased subsidy for the China line, and therefore it is uncertain how long you will be detained here, but you had better arrange to be absent at least two months.

During your absence the agency business will be conducted by Captain Eldridge, and the assistant agent Mr. Holman, they dividing your duties as most to facilitate the business of the company, and this to be arranged by Captain Eldridge and yourself before your departure.

Telegraph when you are ready to leave, and what day to expect you here.

Yours, truly,

F. W. G. BELLOWS,
Vice-President.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is in all respects a correct copy of the matter contained in pages 297 and 298 of private official letter-book No. 1, of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed I hand you draught of proposals for the new China service, and of all necessary documents connected therewith.

I would suggest your sending Mr. Abert to Washington with the bids, sealed, with instructions to deliver them in person on, or, if you choose, before, the morning of August 12, and to attend the opening, and report to you. He is the best man. At all events send some one.

Very respectfully,

A. B. STOCKWELL, Esq., President, New York.

(Indorsed :) Irwin, R. B. July 31, 1872. Pacific Mail S. S. Co.

Q. Is that all the correspondence that there is on file?—A. That is all the correspondence which we have been able to find. I have not looked for it myself personally, but I have asked Mr. Post and Mr. Merrill and Mr. Lane to do so. Mr. Post is a young gentleman who has charge of filing away our papers, and Mr. Lane is the secretary pro tem.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. You stated that you instructed them to search for all papers on file touching this matter?—A. For all papers, documents, and correspondence on the subject.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. Suppose you tell us what you know about those two checks, of $100,000 each, which were exchanged with Mr. Roach?—A. I cannot tell you any details of the matter.

Q. Show us your books now and state how those two checks were charged up?—A. I was not a member of the board of directors at that time, but I find on the cash-book the following entries :

“On iron propeller No. 5, to John Roach $100,000
On iron propeller No. 6, to John Roach 100,000”

[Mr. Weed, cashier to Mr. Roach, here stated to the committee that the steamships Peking and Tokio were known on the books of the company as No. 5 and No. 6.]

Q. Do you find any credits or counter-entries for those charges?—A. There are no counter-entries.

Q. If this was simply an exchange of checks, and if it was so recognized on the books of the company, would there not be counter-entries?—A. Naturally there would be, that is, if the company had anything to do with the matter. It might have been a transaction on account of the company, or it might have been an individual matter outside.

Q. Have the Tokio and Peking been fully paid for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Turn over to the book, and let us see the amount assumed to have been paid for those ships.—A. I should have to take the accounts to the present day.

Q. Was not the contract $1,050,000 each?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. See if there is not $100,000 more than that amount charged for each of those ships.—A. In order to ascertain that, you must send for another book-keeper.

Q. Do you not know that that is a fact?—A. I think that that is a fact; that there is $100,000 charged on each of these steamers more than was ever paid to Roach for them.

Q. Why was that done?—A. You must ask the man who made the entry.

Q. Was it not a fraudulent entry?—A. Yes; I should think it was.

Q. It must have been done with the object of hiding up something?—A. I should say so.

Q. Do you know why?—A. I should think it was about $200,000 which somebody was trying to get away with.

Q. You have been managing agent for some time, and I suppose you have been looking into the books?—A. It keeps me pretty busy to attend to the current business.

Q. Have you looked into the old business to a sufficient extent to be able to say what became of that $200,000?—A. My impression is that it went to Lockwood & Co.

Q. Who are Lockwood & Co.?—A. Bankers. I do not know that it did, but I have an impression of that kind.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. When you say that there appears to be $100,000 extra charged on each of those ships, and when you speak of the entries relating to it, are those, in your opinion, the entries which constitute this $200,000 extra charge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that what you have now stated in answer to Mr. Beck applies to those checks, in which we have found the entry charged on the cash-book, and no counter entry whatever?—A. That is my impression. I do not swear to it from positive knowledge.

Q. Is there any other entry of this amount unaccounted for on the books and applied to the steamers except these two?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Now you say that you have an impression that it went to Lockwood & Co. Is there anything on the books which gives you that impression?—A. I cannot say that there is or that there is not.

Q. Have you found on the books any entry whatever relating to the exchange of checks with John Roach?—A. I have not examined.

Q. Do you know, otherwise than by personal examination, that there is any such entry?—A. I do not.

Q. And does it appear that the party benefited by the alleged fraudulent entry was an officer of the company?—A. Yes; that is my impression.

Q. Who was the officer who was benefited by that false entry?—A. I cannot say that any one was benefited by it. I did not keep the books at that time.

Q. I think you understand the point. There are certain facts in evidence here, on your own testimony and on the testimony of the books of the company. Do these facts bring you to any conclusion as to the party benefited by those fraudulent acts?—A. I have an opinion.

Q. There is a conclusion to be drawn from the facts to which you have testified, and I ask you if anybody was benefited by those fraudulent entries and by this exchange of checks, who was the person appearing to have been benefited by them.—A. It is very hard to tell, but my impression is that Mr. Stockwell made this exchange.

Q. An impression derived from the entries and from your knowledge as an officer of the company?—A. Yes; that is my impression.

Q. Now that you have expressed an impression that Lockwood & Co. got the subsequent benefit of it, I would like you to state on what that opinion is based.—A. I did not state that Lockwood & Co. got the benefit of it. I think I stated that Mr. Stockwell did.

Q. State once again distinctly what you do say about Lockwood & Co.—A. I have an impression that there was an exchange of checks for $200,000 between John Roach and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or A. B. Stockwell. There was something of that kind. My impression is that John Roach's check went to Lockwood & Co.

Q. Assuming, then, that it is in testimony that checks were actually exchanged for the amount of $200,000 with an officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and assuming that what you testified to this morning is true, that there are entries on the cash-book of this $200,000 charged against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, now I ask you to state the reason for your further impression that Lockwood & Co. were in any way connected with that entry or the result from it.—A. Well, we get impressions about things which we do not know positively about, and it is pretty hard to go to work and tell the sources of one's impressions.

Q. But when you introduce the name of an additional house in New York, which it may be necessary for us to summon, we are entitled to know the grounds on which you suppose that those gentlemen are connected with the transaction. Let us know the reason why you connect them with it.—A. I think your question is quite proper. Mr. Roach showed me a check which he had given to Mr. Stockwell in exchange, and it is my impression (but I am not certain about that either) that that check has got on it the initials of Lockwood & Co., and that it was deposited by Mr. Stockwell at Lockwood & Co.'s banking-house. That is the basis of any impression I have on the subject.

Q. Then your impression that Lockwood & Co. was connected with that matter is derived from an impression that there was on one of those checks the initials of Lockwood & Co., indicating that the check was deposited with Lockwood & Co. for Mr. Stockwell?—A. That is my impression.

Q. For the account of Stockwell, or for the account of Lockwood & Co.?—A. That I cannot tell.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Has there not been a good deal of watering of the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company from time to time for a number of years?—A. Not since I have had anything to do with it.

Q. What was the original stock of the company?—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Was not application made to the legislature at Albany from time to time whereby the stock was watered from a few millions up to its present amount?—A. It appears to me that I have seen, in a copy of the by-laws or charter of the company, some amendment of the kind. The company commenced with one or two steamers, and it has now got thirty. The last impression I had about it is, that Mr. Stockwell went to Albany for the purpose of getting the privilege of taking half the water out—reducing the stock to $10,000,000. That is all I know about the watering.

Q. Will your amended charters give us that information?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Will you furnish the committee with the original and amended charters of the company?—A. I will send for them.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. State what charges there are on the cash-book under date of 4th September, 1872.—A. I find under that date the following charges:

Sale of 1,600 shares of Panama Railroad stock.....$144,000

Profit and loss:

Gain, 1,600 shares of Panama Railroad stock..... $56,000

Q. What do those two items amount to?—A. They amount to just $200,000.

Q. If $200,000 were charged to cash, under date September 4, for two checks of $100,000 each, given by the company to John Roach, and if on the same day checks amounting to $200,000 were returned to Mr. Roach, ought there not to be a corresponding charge for the return check?—A. To make the books balance that would be necessary, if there was no other charge against the cash for that day.

Q. State whether there are any other charges on that day.—A. I do not see any other charges than those two charges of $144,000 and $56,000.

Q. Do those charges indicate that $200,000 was received by the company in cash at that time?—A. I do not think that they indicate anything of the sort.

Q. Explain what, in your opinion, those charges do indicate, and what they mean.—A. I have not got much impression about it. This is the first time I ever saw those entries.

Q. You have given us some impressions, and we want you now to give us the facts on which those impressions rest.—A. You would want to look, perhaps, into the check-books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I should say that those two entries of $144,000 and $56,000 might be fictitious. Still I cannot tell you that. Mr. Roundy or the gentleman who made the entries could tell you.

Q. There is nothing in those entries which would indicate to you that any cash was received?—A. The Panama Railroad stock may have produced cash.

Q. Read the journal entries in relation to cash paid out by the company on the 4th September.—A. [Reading,] John Roach, iron propeller No. 5, $100,000; John Roach, iron propeller No. 6, $100,000.

Q. On what date were those entries made?—A. They seem as a transaction of September 4.

Q. Those are the entries of the two $100,000 checks given by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to John Roach?—A. That is the way that the entries read.

Q. What are the corresponding credits? Are they not those two items of $144,000 and $56,000?—A. I suppose they are. They are of the same date. I do not see any other entries corresponding.

Q. Can you find the entry in the journal, under date of September 4, of the cash for those two items of $144,000 and $56,000?—A. I do not see anything that looks like it.

Q. Have you ever examined before whether there is such an entry?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Is not this the fact, that the Tokio and Peking cost $1,052,000 each?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that is all that was ever paid to John Roach for them?—A. Yes; that is my impression.

Q. And these two checks of $100,000 each were so carried on the books of the company as to make it appear that the company paid John Roach $1,152,000 for each of those ships?—A. Yes; that is my impression.

Q. And to the extent, therefore, of this $200,000, those entries were fraudulent, and were made for the purpose of deception?—A. You have stated my ideas exactly; there is no question about that.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

ALEXANDER MASTERTON sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. What is your business?—Answer. I am a banker.

Q. What was your business in 1872?—A. I was a banker.

Q. Had you any connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in any capacity, during the year 1872?—A. I was elected a director of the company in November, 1871.

Q. You went in with the Stockwell administration?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you continued to be a director how long?—A. Until April, 1873.

Q. You continued during the entire Stockwell administration?—A. No, sir, not the entire time. I went to Europe, and I gave Mr. Stockwell my resignation. I was not in till the end of his administration.

Q. Were you a director at the time that an effort was being made to procure an additional subsidy?—A. I was.

Q. Were you also a member of the executive committee?—A. I was.

Q. Were you at a meeting of the executive committee on February 14, 1872, when a resolution was adopted touching the proceedings at Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I read to you from page 66 of this testimony, the resolution adopted by the executive committee of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company on the 14th of February, 1872: "Resolved, That the president, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to employ counsel and incur such other necessary expense as may be necessary in connection with the measures for additional subsidy now pending before Congress." Who proposed that resolution?—A. I think it came from the president of the company, Mr. Stockwell.

Q. What reason did he give for directing the executive committee to adopt that resolution?—A. The fact that the enterprise of the Pacific Steamship Company needed an additional subsidy, and that means ought to be taken to procure it; and that there would be a certain amount of necessary expenses for attorneys' fees, gathering statistics, and presenting the matter personally before the members of Congress.

Q. I desire you to recollect, as nearly as you can, exactly what was said. Is that as near as you can recollect, the reason Mr. Stockwell gave?—A. Yes, sir; that is as near as I can recollect.

Q. Did he give an estimate of the amount that would be required under that resolution?—A. I cannot recollect that he gave an estimate.

Q. Did he name any limit as far as you can recollect?—A. No, sir. My impression was that the amount of money required would be small as compared with the magnitude of the undertaking.

Q. How much would be comparatively small?—A. Including attorneys' fees, I should think $15,000 would be enough.

Q. Can you state from your recollection what impression prevailed in the executive committee, derived from the statement made at that time as to the amount of money which you were authorizing Mr. Stockwell to spend? That is the essential point, and I wish you to state it carefully.—A. I should think that an amount of $15,000 or $20,000 would be the utmost required.

Q. You do not recollect that the president named any sum?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Who was present at that meeting of the executive committee?—A. My impression is that it was a full meeting of the board. I think that Mr. Stockwell was present, and Mr. Baxter, and Mr. Smith, and myself. I do not know whether Mr. Lockwood was there or not, or whether he was a member of the committee or not at that time.

Q. Do you now recall any question put to Mr. Stockwell by any member of the committee as to his object in proposing the resolution?—A. I think the conversation was generally in reference to the importance of the measure, and that no definite amount was stated. But the impression on my mind was that $15,000 would cover it. I cannot say that Mr. Stockwell mentioned any specific sum.

Q. Were you present at the meeting of the board of directors when that minute was presented for approval?—A. I think I was.

Q. State whether Mr. Stockwell was present then, and whether he made any statement to the board of directors.—A. I think that Mr. Stockwell was present.

Q. What statement was made on the subject at that meeting of the board?—A. The statement was as to the importance of obtaining the subsidy, and that the executive committee had passed a resolution in reference to it.

Q. Was the statement as to the subsidy the same as that that was made to the executive committee?—A. Yes, sir; substantially the same.

Q. And no further information was given to the board of directors respecting the amount required?—A. No, sir.

Q. During your connection with the company, was any report made as to the amount expended by Mr. Stockwell under that resolution?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever know the amount expended for obtaining the subsidy?—A. Only from hearsay.

Q. You never knew of any report being made by Mr. Stockwell on that subject?—A. No report on that subject was presented to the board of directors.

Q. Or to the executive committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to the auditing committee?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Or to any officer of the board?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Was any statement made as to the amount which the company was obliged to pay, or was liable to pay?—A. No, sir; no official statement.

Q. Was there a personal statement made to you by Stockwell on that point?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Mr. Irwin?—A. I have seen him. I know that he was connected with the company as agent, and I think that he was once introduced to me.

Q. Did he ever make the statement to you, during your connection with the company, as to what it was costing to get the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Neither from him nor from Mr. Stockwell did you learn the amount which the company was liable to pay, or which it did pay?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything in reference to the disbursement made in connection with the subsidy that year in Washington?—A. I do not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. What is the duty of the executive committee?—A. The duty of the executive committee is to receive reports as to the general business of the company, and to take action for any necessary expenses incurred in the sailing of the ships or otherwise.

Q. How often were the reports of the general expenses of the company made to the executive committee?—A. Once in three months.

Q. Then all the entries that appeared on the books of the company were at least once in three months known to the executive committee?—

A. They were presented in form as a balance-sheet to the committee. I may qualify it by saying that it might have been presented to the board of directors.

Q. The books of the company, as shown to us yesterday, explained this state of facts: that there was paid to Mr. Irwin on the 27th of January, 1872, $25,000; on the 26th of February, $40,000; on the 19th of April, $35,000; on the 10th of May, $20,000; on the 11th of May, $20,000—making in all $140,000. Why did not the executive committee inquire for what purpose these large sums were paid?—A. Irwin and Eldridge were the San Francisco agents of the company, and when accounts were read off as a debit to Irwin and Eldridge of $100,000 or $150,000, there was nothing extraordinary in that, because they were disbursing large sums of money in payment for the fitting up of vessels that were broken down on the Pacific side, and it would not excite surprise at all that Irwin and Eldridge would be debited $250,000.

Q. But you knew that Mr. Irwin was here from the early part of January, 1872, till the following May, working on this subsidy business, and the payment to him of these sums would naturally attract some attention. Were there not any inquiries as to why they were not paid?—A. I do not recollect any inquiries being made. His partner was in San Francisco at the time.

Q. There is a large entry of $750,000 paid to him on the 24th of May; was no inquiry made into that by the executive committee? That was certainly an extraordinary amount.—A. I have no recollection of that entry being read off.

Q. Mr. Stockwell remained in office till April, 1873, when you went out?—A. Yes.

Q. From November, 1871, till the early part of 1873 you were not only a director of the company, but a member of the executive committee?—A. I was.

Q. And during all that time the accounts of the company were made to your board every three months?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And no inquiries were made, so far as you are aware, of that extraordinary amount that was paid out?—A. No, sir.

Q. Not even of that $750,000?—A. No, sir. The auditing committee was appointed to examine accounts, and it was not expected that the executive committee should go behind the examination of accounts that was made by the auditing committee.

Q. Who constituted the auditing committee?—A. I think Mr. Osborne was one, Mr. Henry Clews another, and there was another member whom I cannot call to mind.

Q. Was he one of the officers of the company?—A. No, sir; I think that no officer of the company was on the auditing committee. He was a member of the board of directors, but not one of the officers of the company.

Q. Did that auditing committee report all those things to your executive committee, as being correct?—A. They brought them before the board of directors.

Q. Was any explanation made by that auditing committee that you remember, so as to call the attention of the executive committee of the board to these large items?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. In the light of things as they now appear, does it not seem a little remarkable that these things could have gone on in that way?—A. Yes; I thought I knew something of it before, but I know more about it now than I did then.

Q. And the fact is that you did not know anything about it at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recollect whether this $750,000 item of the 24th of May was ever brought to your attention as an officer of the company in any form?—A. I do not recollect ever having heard of it.

Q. Do you recollect any report on it, or any reference to it, by the auditing committee?—A. No, sir; I do not.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. You speak of not knowing anything of these expenditures except from hearsay. Do you mean by that that you learned of it from some persons connected with the company?—A. No, sir; I think I heard it first on the street.

Q. You mean by the street, common talk?—A. Yes.

Q. Your attention was never directed to those extraordinary expenditures in any way while you were connected with the company as director?—A. No, sir.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

CHARLES J. OSBORNE sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. State what connection you have had with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and covering what period of time.—Answer. I have been a director in the company since 1871, with the exception of one year. I was a director for about seven or eight months the first time, and then for the two succeeding years.

Q. Did you go in with the Stockwell board?—A. I did.

Q. And continued how long then?—A. I think about seven or eight months.

Q. Were you a member of the executive committee at the time?—A. I do not remember, but I think I was.

Q. Were you a member of the executive committee on the 14th of February, 1872?—A. I think I was.

Q. Do you recollect the presentation to that committee of a resolution authorizing the president of the company to employ counsel, &c., in connection with obtaining the additional subsidy?—A. I was not at that meeting.

Q. Did the president of the company state to you, either as a member of the executive committee or as a member of the board of directors, what he desired that authority for?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you present at the meeting of the board of directors when a minute of that resolution was presented?—A. No, sir.

Q. You heard no statement made by Mr. Stockwell as to the object of obtaining that authority?—A. No, sir. He and I were bad friends at the time and hardly spoke to each other.

Q. You had no knowledge of the employment of Mr. Irwin as agent at Washington?—A. No, sir; not until some time later.

Q. Did you become aware of the fact after or before the subsidy was obtained?—A. I really do not recollect; but I think it was after.

Q. Did you know, prior to June, 1872, what was going on at Washington, from statements made to you by any officer or agent of the company?—A. No, sir; I merely knew that they were trying to get a subsidy. I did not know what means they were using or who were their agents.

Q. State whether you became acquainted with the means that were being used in connection with obtaining the subsidy during the first half year of 1872?—A. I had no knowledge whatever of it. Mr. Stockwell was rather an autocrat in his position, and I think that very few of the directors knew much about it.

Q. Had he authority to issue checks of the company whenever he pleased?—A. He had.

Q. Did you, as a member of the auditing committee, or in any other capacity, examine any of the books—the check-book or the cash-book, or journal of the company?—A. No, sir; that would have been rather “love’s labor lost.” I do not think that any man could find out much about them.

Q. You did not take the trouble to find out?—A. Yes, I did; and that was the reason why Mr. Stockwell and I were bad friends. I did not propose to be a dummy in the board of directors, and Mr. Stockwell did not like that.

Q. State what efforts you made to find out, and how you were balked.—A. I asked various questions of Mr. Stockwell, which he seemed not to think worth while to answer, always telling me that he was the principal stockholder; in fact that he was the Pacific Mail Steamship Company himself; and as I knew him to be an enormous stockholder myself, I hardly thought it my place to force an issue with him, but I did not care to be on the board of directors, and to give my vote to any of his measures. Consequently, I never went near him, and therefore knew very little about the business.

Q. Then Mr. Stockwell was in the habit of carrying affairs in the board of directors with unusual exclusiveness?—A. Entirely so. He asked no one any questions, but went in on his own hand. He had enough directors in the board to carry his measures just as he wanted, and it made very little matter with him what those directors, who did care anything about the company, said or did. He appeared to have full swing and full sway in every particular.

Q. None of the disbursements about the subsidy at Washington fell under your observation at any time?—A. None at all. If there was any, I knew nothing about it.

Q. And you have no knowledge whatever, and had none at the time, of the amount of money disbursed at Washington by Mr. Irwin?—A. I had no knowledge of it whatever.

Q. Mr. Stockwell was a very large operator in the stock of the company?—A. Enormously large.

Q. Have you any means of knowing the amount of his losses in that stock during the year 1872?—A. At one time he was an enormous gainer, and in the latter part of the year he was a very heavy loser.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. You have referred to the unlimited authority of Mr. Stockwell. Was this authority conferred on him by the by-laws or the constitution of the company, or was it an assumed authority?—A. It was rather an assumed authority. He had enough power in the board to carry anything he wished to carry.

Q. When you speak of his power, you mean he had enough directors in his interest?—A. That is just what I mean.

Q. And you not being in that interest quit the board at the next election, in May?—A. I did; I refused to have my name in.

Q. That board of directors, if it had seen fit, had legal authority, of course, to limit the control of the president?—A. I scarcely think it had even legal authority to do so.

Q. Did not either the constitution or by-laws of the company put any limit on his power to issue checks?—A. Not if the executive committee and the majority of the directors saw fit to let him do it.

Q. The constitution and the by-laws of the company gave them power to put a limit on his power, of course?—A. They did.

Q. It was only because he had men of his own in the board of directors that he was able to have autocratic authority?—A. Yes. For some time previous to that resolution and until we had an election, I never was at a meeting of the board.

Q. Then there seems to be no safe way to manage the affairs of a corporation, when a few of its leading officers control the stock so as to vote their own directors in?—A. No, sir.

Q. That proved to be the experience of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, at least?—A. It did, sadly so.

Q. So that money, whether furnished by private subscription or by the Government, is at the mercy of a few men who control the affairs of the company?—A. Those who had the controlling interest in the stock could have the control of the company, and in that case Mr. Stockwell had it.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Was Mr. Stockwell's control of that company more autocratic and arbitrary than is usually the control of presidents of great companies?—

A. More so than any I ever heard of.

Q. Greater than that exercised by his predecessors and successors?—

A. Very much greater.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

H. H. BAXTER sworn and examined.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Question. Are you connected with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in any capacity at present?—Answer. I am not.

Q. Were you formerly?—A. I was elected director in November, 1871, and was re-elected in the May following, and I resigned during the summer of 1872.

Q. Were you a member of the executive committee?—A. I was not.

Q. Do you recollect being present at a meeting of the board of directors, at which the action of the executive committee authorizing Mr. Stockwell to employ counsel to assist in obtaining a subsidy through Congress was presented, and approved by the board of directors?—A. I was at that meeting.

Q. Do you recollect any statement of Mr. Stockwell's, or of any other person, as to what sum of money would be probably needed or expended under that resolution?—A. I think when the action of the executive committee came up for confirmation, that Mr. Stockwell casually said he thought it would cost the company five or six or seven thousand dollars, perhaps.

Q. That statement, I suppose, was made as a part of the proceedings of the board at which the action of the executive committee was confirmed?—A. The action of the executive committee was confirmed by the board of directors at that meeting. At that time inquiry was made as to the probable cost, and, if I understood the president correctly, he said the cost would be somewhere between five and seven thousand dollars.

Q. Was anything said as to who would probably be employed under that resolution?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you any information afterward as to who was employed?—

A. Only by street report. I never saw Mr. Irwin.

Q. Had you any such information from Mr. Stockwell himself?—A. No, sir.

Q. While you remained a director of the company, did you receive any information as to the sums of money that were being expended for the procurement of the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you consulted as a director, or was the matter of the expenditure of money for that purpose brought to your attention in any way afterward during your connection with the company?—A. No, sir; it was not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Was Mr. Stockwell speculating largely in the stock of the company during the time that you were a director?—A. I think he was.

Q. Were members of the board of directors also speculating in that stock?—A. I do not know. They may have done so, probably, more or less.

Q. Were you?—A. Yes; I bought and sold the stock of the company while I was a director, and before and since.

Q. Were other members of the board of directors speculating in the stock, to your knowledge, at that time?—A. I cannot say of my own knowledge.

Q. Do you know it from conversation with them?—A. My impression is that they were speculating in it more or less. I cannot say what individual members of the board were doing so.

Q. During the time you were a director, you and others of the directors, as well as the president of the company, were speculating in the stock of the company?—A. Yes.

Q. Were the accounts of the disbursements of the company laid before the board of directors every two or three months?—A. Yes, sir; they were laid before the executive committee, and the report of the executive committee was presented to the board of directors once a month for inspection and confirmation.

Q. So that all the moneys that were paid out, and that so appeared on the books of the company, were subject to your inspection?—A. Not in detail.

Q. Large sums of money were paid to Mr. Irwin from the 25th of January to the 15th or 20th of May, amounting to about $140,000. Did you make any inquiry as to why that money was paid to him?—A. I would like to state to the committee what came before the board. The statement presented to the board of directors and to the executive committee is a statement of the condition of the company, and in it would be set forth, for instance, the amount of money in the hands of the various agents of the company, so much money in the hands of Mr. Irwin as the San Francisco agent, and so much in the hands of other agents of the company in China and elsewhere.

Q. During the time that Mr. Irwin was in Washington attending to this subsidy, from January until May, 1872, the books of the company show that there was $140,000 placed in his hands. Were his accounts of the expenditure of that money laid before you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?—A. I do not know that the board was aware of his expending any money.

Q. Your own books show $25,000 given to him in January, $40,000 in February, $50,000 in the early part of May, and so on.—A. The figures which would come to the executive committee and to the board of directors would be, as I have stated, the amount of money in the hands of the San Francisco agency, so that, in getting this statement, the board did not go into an examination of the books of the company to find out as to the correctness of it. The board took the statement presented to it as a true statement of the condition of the company.

Q. Then, on the 24th of May, a large item of $750,000 appears. Would not that attract attention or cause inquiry?—A. Yes, I think it would.

Q. Did it do so?—A. I do not recollect what was said at that meeting. If it was a directors' meeting, the directors saw this statement, presenting to them the condition of the company's affair. I do not know that any board of directors ever went into an examination of the books of the company. It would be almost impossible to do so at their meetings.

Q. It turns out, by examination of the books here, that $750,000 in one item, as well as $140,000, from January till May, was put into the hands of Mr. Irwin, and was all spent on this subsidy. Would that have been a fact which would have attracted the attention of the board, or which an examination could have developed?—A. As a member of the board, I was not aware that any money was being expended for subsidy. No such statement was made before the board of directors.

Q. If the true condition of the company, as you know it now, with all these false entries in the books, with this $200,000 charged to steamships falsely, and with $750,000 spent on the subsidy, and with other false entries, had been known to the public at that time, would it not have affected the price of the stock materially?—A. I think it would have, materially.

Q. Therefore the president and the board of directors, who were speculating in the stock, would not have been likely to have developed to the world the frauds that were being committed?—A. That would depend on whether they were long or short of the stock. If they were short of the stock, they would be very likely to have made known these facts, and if they had been long of the stock, they would not have been likely to do so.

Q. But they were the men to know the truth, and to gamble in the stock accordingly as the truth would affect their own interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you know that the president, yourself, and other directors were so speculating in the stock with that sort of power in your hands over and above what other persons had in speculation?—A. I do not understand your question.

Q. You were speculating in the stock of the company?—A. I cannot say whether I had any interest in it one way or another, at the particular time you mention. I have at different times, both while I was director and previous to my being a director, and since, owned Pacific Mail stock and sold it.

Q. Now you know that great frauds were perpetrated and false entries made on the books?—A. I understand so from this investigation.

Q. And that fact was certainly known to officers of the company, if not to you?—A. It must have been known to the president of the company.

Q. And the true state of facts, if developed to the world, would have materially affected the price of the stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it, however, considered a legitimate thing for men high in position in corporations of that sort to be so speculating, while there are fraudulent entries made in the books of the company to conceal the truth; is that considered legitimate?—A. No, sir; not by any means.

Q. Do you recollect who the members of the executive committee were?—A. I do not recollect now.

Q. How many men composed that committee?—A. Five, I think.

Q. These were gentlemen with whom you were associated for nearly a year, only three years ago. I suppose you remember some of them?—

A. I cannot tell, without refreshing my memory, who the members of the executive committee were. The executive committee was changed once in six months, under the by-laws. They were appointed by the president, if I remember right, once in six months.

Q. Had you not by-laws which limited the authority of the president in the issuing of checks?—A. By our by-laws the president and executive committee have the general management of the business.

Q. The executive committee, however, had to sanction the president's acts?—A. The executive committee reported its doings to the board of directors, who met once a month for confirmation.

Q. Do you remember whether the executive committee reported to the board of directors the fact that on the 24th of May, 1872, the president had given his own checks to Mr. Irwin for $750,000?—A. I know it did not.

Q. Ought not that fact have been reported to the board of directors?—A. I think it ought.

Q. That executive committee ought to have known the fact as well as the president?—A. Yes.

Q. If the executive committee did know it, it never reported the fact to the board of directors?—A. No, sir; it did not.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. If it had been the object of some people to speculate successfully in the stock of the company, in connection with the anticipated subsidy, and if to do that false entries were necessary, was there any officer of the company, during your connection with it, who had put himself in the best position to operate in the stock successfully?—A. I do not know of any.

Q. Who appeared to have the most knowledge of its actual condition, and of its disbursements and liabilities, during the first part of the year 1872? Who was in position to know most about it?—A. Mr. Stockwell was, decidedly.

Q. Had he the power, as president, to exchange checks, or to make loans to any amount, without the sanction of the executive committee?—A. There was a resolution on the books of the company, I think introduced by myself, that no loan of any checks of the company should be made on anything but securities which had a market value in the street, and at no less than 20 per cent. margin for the loan.

Q. That referred to the security; my question related to the amount. Had the president authority to fill a check from the company's funds to any amount on loans? Was there any limitation in the by-laws to that power?—A. I do not know that there is.

Q. He had that power, then. Did that differ from the power that he had in making regular disbursements for the company?—A. No, sir; he had general authority.

Q. Was there not a limit by the by-laws to the amount which he was authorized to pay, without the sanction of the executive committee?—A. I think there is. I think the limit is $5,000.

Q. So that in making actual payment he had no authority, without the sanction of the executive committee, to make a payment exceeding $5,000?—A. He had not, unless he exceeded his authority.

Q. If he wanted to pay out a larger sum of money than $5,000, it would require some such resolution as that of the 14th of February to give him authority?—A. Yes.

Q. Without such resolution he had no such authority?—A. I think not.

Q. But if he wanted to cover up checks by charging them to loan-account, there was no limit to his authority, and no need to get authority from the executive committee or board of directors?—A. No, sir.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

JOHN ELLIOT sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Question. State your business.—Answer. I am a member of the house of Riggs & Company. That house does business in Washington and New York.

Q. Look at the certified check drawn by the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank of New York, dated May 30, 1872, for $50,000, payable to the order of J. G. Schumaker, and state what indorsements are on it.—A. The only indorsement I recognize is the indorsement of Riggs & Company. It is indorsed by J. G. Schumaker, and then made payable to the order of Riggs & Company. This is the indorsement of Riggs & Company, made by me.

Q. How was that check received by the New York house?—A. It was sent to me from the house in Washington, in a letter.

Q. Produce the letter and read it to the committee.—A. [Producing the letter.] The letter is dated Washington, May 31, 1872, and, in addition to other inclosures named in it, says, "We inclose check of the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank for $50,000; present early and telegraph result." The letter is signed by Riggs & Company. It is signed by my partner, Mr. A. T. Keickhoefer.

Q. Whose writing is that over the name of J. G. Schumaker?—A. That is Mr. Keickhoefer's writing. It is "pay Riggs & Company or order."

Q. I suppose that is all the information you have about it?—A. Yes, sir; the check came to me in the regular remittances from the house in Washington.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. I suppose that the proceeds of the check were put to the credit of Mr. Schumaker by Riggs & Company in Washington?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Would that be the natural course?—A. It might not be. They might have cashed the check. The transaction occurred in Washington, and belongs to the Washington house.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

DUMONT CLARKE recalled.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. We desired you to make further examination in reference to the account of Richard B. Irwin with the American Exchange National Bank. State what further examinations you have made, if any, and what information you can give to the committee.—Answer. We had a man working on it until late last night, but he was unable to find either of the two checks; either the $19,000 or the $22,000 check. We have been unable to find the slips of those days. There was a party who represented Mr. Irwin during these transactions by the name of Charles Abert. He represented Mr. Irwin frequently in the management of his business.

Q. Did he come to your bank at that time?—A. Yes, and we had communications from him, simply letters directing us to make up the account, or to send it to him, or something of the sort.

Q. Do you know where he is now?—A. I do not.

Q. Where were these letters from?—A. I think from Washington. If I remember right there was one of these letters somewhere about the 1st of May requesting Mr. Irwin's account to be sent to him. It was signed Richard B. Irwin, by Charles Abert.

Q. Can you give us any other information relating to the check of $125,000 against Mr. Irwin's account?—A. No, sir. These checks were unquestionably paid to Mr. Irwin, or to somebody whom he brought or he introduced. I am satisfied that whoever they were paid to was identified by Mr. Irwin in person.

Q. Are you confident that these checks were paid either to Mr. Irwin himself or to somebody who came to the bank with him?—A. It is not unlikely that they were paid to somebody he brought with him. At all events, they were identified by Mr. Irwin. We do not go beyond that fact.

Q. If a check for $125,000 was presented, payable to bearer, or indorsed to bearer, would you not have paid it?—A. No, sir. We should have used the same precaution that we did with the others, but being presented as they were unquestionably by Mr. Irwin, we did not go beyond that.

Q. If these checks were held by a party whom you knew, would you not have paid them?—A. Yes, but I think we would have recalled that fact.

Q. You think that they were paid over the counter, by one of the paying-tellers?—A. Yes; it is possible that Mr. Irwin might have presented them at the office, as the teller would have probably refused to pay him, and would have referred him to us. The teller does not know Mr. Irwin.

Q. But if the teller had known the person who presented the check, he would not have refused to pay it?—A. I do not know that he would, although he is a very timid man, and he might hesitate before paying such a large sum of money.

Q. Does he state that he does not know Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes; he told me that he does not know Mr. Irwin.

Q. Orders were given by Mr. Coe to watch the checks of $275,000 and $115,000, which were drawn by Mr. Irwin. Would not that have called the attention of the paying-teller to every check that was presented of a large amount, signed by Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir, not necessarily. When he certified a check, that was the end of his duty. A certified check that comes in through the exchanges is attended to by another man. The $275,000 check was a certified check.

Q. What is the paying-teller's name?—A. T. W. Pinckney.

Q. Were both of these checks for $125,000 and $100,000 paid by him?—A. He has not the slightest recollection of it. It is only an inference that these checks, if they were paid by him, were paid by our distinct instructions, or else the money was brought up to our room and paid there.

Q. Would your books contain any memoranda as to the size of bills paid out over the counter, by which you can tell us whether those checks were paid out in thousand-dollar bills or hundred-dollar bills? If a large number of thousand-dollar bills were paid out on that day, would your books contain any indication of it?—A. I think that we might be able to trace that.

Q. Cannot the teller, by examining his memorandum, ascertain it?—A. I think that we keep a record, in a measure, of the description of the cash on hand, so much in thousand-dollar bills, so much in hundred-dollar bills, &c. It is an approximation. Nothing exact.

Q. We should like to know if a large number of thousand-dollar bills were paid out by your bank on the 27th of May.—A. I will try to furnish you with that information.

Mr. BECK. We understand that Mr. Irwin claims that he did not draw any of that money himself, and that he left New York City at noon on the 27th of May.

WITNESS. Has Mr. Irwin been questioned as to whether he came to the bank with any parties?

Mr. BECK. He does not tell us much, but we have heard that much. It is because we have evidence that he left New York at noon on the 27th of May, and drew none of that money himself, that we are now asking you to be a little more particular. I think you told us the other day that your books show that this money was drawn out after 12 o'clock on that day.

WITNESS. No, sir; I think we gave you no such information. It is utterly impossible for us to tell at what hour of the day a check was paid over the counter, unless we remembered it particularly. Our paying-teller puts his checks on a spindle and at 2 o'clock in the day these checks are taken off the spindle, and are assorted for the different ledgers and entered up.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Coe stated in his testimony that on the 27th of May, $325,000 was drawn out of the American Exchange National Bank, by three checks; one for $125,000, and two for $100,000 each. We find that this money was drawn over the counter, and paid in cash, but to whom we have no positive means of determining. They were paid in the afternoon, after the clearing-house operations.

WITNESS. That would bear a little explanation. Our clearing-house checks are first posted up in the ledgers, and the checks that are paid over the counter are never posted up till the afternoon.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Would that fact show that this money was paid after clearing-house hours?—A. No, sir. It might have been paid at five minutes past ten in the morning, and yet that would not be charged up until after two o'clock. After the clearing-house they are all charged and provided. We then charge the checks that are paid over the counter in our own bank.

Q. You take a cash-balance every night?—A. Yes.

Q. Would not the cash-balance on hand at the closing of business on the 26th and the cash-balance on hand on the closing of business on the 27th show just how much cash you had paid over the counter during the business hours of the 27th?—A. Exactly.

Q. Then could you not ascertain to a certainty by the cash-balance of the 26th and 27th whether these sums were paid out in cash or were paid out in checks?—A. I am positive that they were paid out in money. We never pay out in checks.

Q. You paid Mr. Whiting in a check?—A. That was a certificate of deposit.

Q. Are you certain from the examination you made that you did not issue certificates of deposit in part payment of those two checks?—A. Yes, sir. The money was absolutely paid on them. There is no question whatever about that. These three checks, for $125,000, for $100,000, and for $11,500, were absolutely paid in money.

Q. The account of Mr. Irwin was balanced on the 27th of May, ten vouchers returned, and the balance, $389,000, carried forward. Would you have delivered his book and vouchers to anybody but himself?—A. Not without written instructions; but we might have had instructions to do so. In looking over his communications, I find a letter asking us to forward his statement to San Francisco. The date of that communication I cannot positively state, but I know that there was a letter directed to him at San Francisco. This letter of his was written from Philadelphia. He directed us to send his account to San Francisco.

Q. I observe again that he had another balance made out on the 29th of May, and that four vouchers were then returned?—A. Yes.

Q. If that balance was struck, and those vouchers, ten on the 27th and four on the 29th, were returned to any person other than himself, it must have been, under your rule of doing business, on his written order?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not a verbal order?—A. No, sir; a written order.

Q. Be kind enough to examine and see if you have a written order of Mr. Irwin's to deliver his book and vouchers to another person but himself, either on the 27th or 29th of May?—A. I will do so.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

FRANCIS R. BABY sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. State your residence and place of occupation.—A. I am residing in New York City at present. I am not doing any business at present.

Q. Have you been an agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I have been.

Q. During what period?—A. I was an agent of the company, in New York, from 1867 up to the 1st of July, 1873. I had been in the employ of the company for twenty-two years at that time.

Q. Do you know anything relating to the procuring of the additional subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in 1872?—A. Nothing more than the general public knowledge through the papers and through common rumor. My business was not of that character at all. I was an agent of the company simply in managing the ships.

Q. State whether you have personal knowledge of the expenditure of money for that purpose?—A. Not a dollar.

Q. Did you use any money for that purpose in the year 1872?—A. The company paid my fare to Washington in 1870, in order that I might use my personal influence with some friends from California to support this subsidy. That was during Mr. McLane's administration.

Q. Do you know anything in reference to the expenditure of money for the purpose, in the year 1872?—A. No, sir; nothing whatever.

Q. Where were you at the time?—A. Here in New York. I made a voyage to Europe for the purpose of looking at the iron ships building there, under Mr. McLane's administration and under Mr. Stockwell's. I returned in the spring of 1872 with estimates, specifications, &c., for building iron ships.

Q. Did you go to Washington then?—A. No, sir. I never was in Washington but once.

Q. Do you know anything in reference to that exchange of checks?—A. Except from rumor. I do not know of my own personal knowledge. I have been told that an exchange of checks was made.

Q. Your name was given to the committee as that of a witness who might know something in regard to it.—A. I heard of it simply from an employé of the company. That is all the information that I had.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. Did you not know that there was the large amount of $200,000 floating about loosely for a good while, and that it was frequently the subject of conversation as to where that could be charged up so as to dispose of it?—A. It was a common subject of conversation at the time I speak of among the various employés of the company. It was talked of that that sum was floating about, and that they did not know where to charge it.

Q. Was there not a suggestion made to charge it to you?—A. Yes; but whether it was bona fide or not I do not know. It was said that they would put some of it on me.

Q. From whom did that information come?—A. I think from Mr. Phelps, who was then in the employ of the company. I told him that I could not carry such a load as that. My accounts were squared up every night.

Q. Was it not ascertained afterward that that $200,000 found its way, as an additional charge, to the Tokio and Peking?—A. I believe so. There has been always a good deal of trouble in getting up the reports of the company. There has been for a number of years. Mr. Stockwell wanted to show the best hand he could, I suppose.

Q. The best hand he showed, the higher the price of the stock was?—A. Yes. He did succeed in getting the stock up to a very high figure.

Q. When, perhaps, if the true facts had been known, it would not have gone up so high?—A. I do not think there was any reason for its going up as high as it did.

Q. But you do not know how that $200,000 got lodged finally?—A. No, sir; I do not.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. How much did Mr. Phelps want to charge to your agency?—A. I think the whole $200,000, but whether he said that jestingly or not, I do not know. He was speaking of the forthcoming report, and of charging up this thing to the ships.

Q. What was his official connection with the company at the time?—A. He had been a second vice-president, and agent of the company in China, and had been on here at that time for several months, and it was generally understood that he was going out of the company.

Q. Was he understood to be acting in Mr. Stockwell's interest?—A. In getting up this report I understood that Mr. Stockwell had given him access to the company's books, and that he was in communication with the clerks and other employes for the purpose of making up a sort of annual report. That was a short time before Mr. Stockwell went out.

Q. And you declined to have that amount charged to your agency?—A. Yes; I declined having it charged to my agency.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

CYRUS H. TAYLOR sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. State your position.—A. I am note-teller of the Central National Bank.

Q. Did your bank, on or about the 27th of May, 1872, receive a check for about $4,000, drawn on the American Exchange National Bank?—

A. Our books show that a check for that amount was deposited.

Q. State from whom that check was received.—A. It is impossible for us to tell.

Q. Was it received from Washington?—A. It was not.

NEW YORK, December 31, 1874.

EUGENE KELLY sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. State your residence and occupation.—A. I reside at 43 West Fifty-first street, New York. I am in the banking business.

Q. Are you a member of the firm of Eugene Kelly & Co.?—A. I am.

Q. Where is your place of business?—A. At 45 Exchange Place.

Q. Have you also a banking-house at San Francisco?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are both houses conducted under the same style?—A. No, sir; the firm is Daniel Kelly & Co., of San Francisco, and Eugene Kelly & Co., of New York.

Q. Be good enough to look at this certificate of deposit for $56,500, dated 30th of May, 1872, drawn to the order of A. H. Whiting, and indorsed by your firm, and state what you know of that check, and to whose credit it was passed.—A. When I got the dispatch to come here to-day, I looked over the ledger, and I find a credit to A. H. Whiting to that amount.

Q. Where did he then reside?—A. I really do not know. He was in New York occasionally, and I believe in Washington occasionally.

Q. Did you then know where his residence was?—A. I did not.

Q. How did you communicate with him at that time?—A. I think he came to the office.

Q. Had he an account in your bank at that time?—A. He had, and for a long time before. He is doing business now in Arizona, and is in connection with gentlemen in San Francisco, and through our house there he got acquainted with us here, and kept an account with us.

Q. While he was keeping an account, you know where you corresponded with him.—A. I do not remember anything of that sort.

Q. Can you tell by the indorsement on that check whether it passed through your house, or the house in San Francisco?—A. I do not think it passed through the house in San Francisco.

Q. Observe its date, and that it appears not to have been paid for some weeks afterward, and state in that connection whether you now remember distinctly that Mr. Whiting put it in your bank himself.—A. It is impossible for me to remember that.

Q. Can you state now, after examining it, that it did not pass through the San Francisco house?—A. I cannot tell. All that I know is, that it was placed in our house for collection, and that we received the money, and that the amount was placed to his credit on our books.

Q. When did you receive the amount upon it?—A. I have got the whole statement here. It was put to his credit on the 2d of July, 1872.

Q. And that is the date on which you received it, or collected it?—A. That is the date on which it is placed to his credit on our books. It was collected on the same day.

Q. When did you last see Mr. Whiting?—A. I do not remember seeing him for some time—not for a month or six weeks.

Q. You have seen him this fall or winter?—A. Yes; he came into our office. I really do not recollect when I last saw him; perhaps within two months.

Q. Do you know where he is now residing?—A. I do not. I have heard of him, but I do not know where he resides. It is somewhere in Connecticut, I think.

Q. Do you know, or have you information, as to where he resided in the summer of 1872?—A. No, sir.

Q. You usually know the residence of your depositors who have sums of that amount to their credit on your books?—A. No, sir. Mr. Whiting is a gentleman who has been here occasionally, and who is doing business in San Francisco. I never did know where his residence was.

Q. Do you understand that he is still doing business in San Francisco?—A. I do not think he is.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Did he give you the name of the San Francisco gentleman with whom he was doing business?—A. I think the firm was Hooper, Whiting & Co., of San Francisco. I presume it was so in 1872.

Q. But this entry was not to the credit of the firm on your books, but to the credit of Mr. Whiting individually?—A. Of Mr. Whiting individually.

Q. Have you a memorandum of your account with him at that time?—A. Yes, sir, [handing it to the committee.]

Q. Is this a correct transcription of the account of A. H. Whiting with Eugene Kelly & Co., from July 3, 1872, to January, 1873, inclusive?—A. It is. When I received the telegram from this committee I supposed that there was no use in going back prior to that date. I think his account was from the date of that entry up to the 1st of January, 1873. This is a record of the deposits and the checks between these two periods.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any instructions being given to your house touching the disbursement of that sum of $56,500?—A. None at all.

Q. Are there any memoranda among your papers showing how this sum was disbursed?—A. We have the checks.

Q. Is there any indication that this sum was disbursed in any other way than the usual manner?—A. This statement shows the checks.

Q. Is there anything among your papers indicating a disbursement of the amount different from ordinary disbursements?—A. Nothing at all.

Q. All the checks were in the usual general style?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any certificate of deposit drawn against any part of the amount?—A. No, sir. They were all checks up to the 14th of October, 1872, when the account was balanced. The 24th of October is the date of the first check which we have now in our possession. Up to that period the books were balanced and the vouchers returned.

Mr. Beck, looking over the checks handed to the committee by witness, selected the following check, and asked that it be put in evidence.

[No. 71.]

NEW YORK, November 11, 1872.

[Revenue-stamp marked A. H. W., 11, 11, '72.]

Pay to the order of Hon. Cornelius Cole eighteen thousand and twenty-three and $\frac{20}{100}$ dollars.

A. H. WHITING.

\$18,023 $\frac{20}{100}$.

(Across the face of the check:)

Per H. G. BEALES.

(Indorsed:)

C. COLE.

Deposit:

GEO. D. KRIMSHAW, Treasurer.

(Stamped.) Pay to the order of Chemical National Bank, New York, for collection for the Girard National Bank, of Philadelphia.

(Signed)

J. RAMSET,
Cashier.

Q. Do you know Mr. Cornelius Cole?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he?—A. I know Hon. Mr. Cole, of California; he was a Senator of the United States.

Q. Do you think he was the man to whom this check was payable?—A. I do not know Mr. Cole's handwriting, but I suppose he is the same gentleman. He is, I think, a brother-in-law of Mr. Whiting.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Most of these checks appear to be dated at Weedsport, N. Y., and to be payable to S. W. Treat or order. Is there a firm of that name doing business in Weedsport?—A. I really do not know.

Q. Was that the residence of Mr. Whiting, or reported to be his residence?—A. That I cannot say.

Q. Where is Weedsport?—A. I really do not know; I think this is the first time I ever saw the name.

Q. Was the account of your house with A. H. Whiting balanced prior to July 3, 1872, the date of the deposit of the $56,500 to his credit?—

A. No, the account did not start from a balance. It commences at the date of that deposit.

Q. Was there anything to his credit prior to that time?—A. Yes, I think so.

Witness produced and handed to the committee a transcript of Mr. Whiting's account.

Rufus Hatch produced the stub check-books from No. 2401 to 2500 of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for 1872.

Q. Read the entry to which your attention has been called.—A. [Reading:]

1872, September 4.

Propeller No. 5	$100,000
Propeller No. 6	100,000

John Roach	200,000
------------------	---------

Q. In whose handwriting was the entries?—A. That I do not know; they are probably in the treasurer's handwriting.

Q. Are there any entries in regard to investments there?—A. On the opposite page I find this entry:

September 4.

Dividends and investments:

160 shares Panama, at 90	$144,000
--------------------------------	-----------

Profit & loss:

1,600 shares Panama, at 35	56,000
----------------------------------	--------

Lockwood & Co	200,000
---------------------	---------

Q. Will you explain why that entry is made on the check-book in a way that does not indicate a check received or drawn? That is the stub of the check-book?—A. This is the stub on this side, and that is a memorandum on the opposite page, bringing forward the balances of any entries that may appear.

Q. Balances of what?—A. Any entries that it might be necessary to make memorandums of.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Does it not indicate that it goes to the credit of cash?—A. Yes, sir; it indicates $200,000 to the credit of cash.

Q. Is your cash-account kept upon that book, or was it kept upon that slip?—A. This is a memorandum. All check-books are a memorandum-book, the checks on one side and the memorandum on the other side of the amount.

Q. In all cases the stub of the check-book keeps the account of cash of the company, drafts drawn on the bank, and deposits?—A. Yes, sir; they should do it.

Q. That is the method of doing business here?—A. Well, sir; I do not know as to this check-book.

Q. I wish you would have the book-keeper see if that is carried out upon the journal and ledger.—A. That we did this morning, and we found the entries there and admitted them.

Q. Found them carried to your journal and ledger?—A. I think so.

Q. Is there any note of about September 4th, of cash received from John Roach, to the amount of $200,000, or any less sum?—A. That would be on this side. I do not see any entry of $200,000 anywhere.

Q. Have you found in the books an entry of money, of checks received from John Roach, on or about the date of September 4th?—A. No, sir; I have not.

FREDERIC KNOWLAND sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. Please state your occupation and place of business.—

Answer. I am general agent for the Union and Central Pacific Railroad, at 287 Broadway.

Q. State what acquaintance, if any, you had with the operations of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the early part of 1873 relative to obtaining a subsidy.—A. I had no knowledge at all of any subsidy. We had a running arrangement with them by which we sustained rates.

Q. In the early part of 1872 were you here or in Washington, or where were you?—A. I was here.

Q. Were you in Washington during that period?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had no communication with Mr. Stockwell relating to obtaining the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor with Irwin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know Irwin?—A. I never saw him but to speak to him; that is all.

Q. Had you any conversation with him relative to obtaining the subsidy—as to the amount of money that was being expended for that purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor with Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you any stock transactions with him during that time?—A. I bought puts and calls from him, and dealt in it the same as I would with anybody else.

Q. But you had no communication with him as to the means they were using to obtain this subsidy?—A. No, sir; I had not.

Q. Was the subsidy spoken of between you and Stockwell to influence you in the purchase or sale of stocks?—A. No, sir; I never had a word of conversation with Mr. Stockwell in relation to the subsidy, or with Mr. Irwin, in my life. Mr. Stockwell never in his life mentioned subsidy to me, and I have had a great deal of business with him.

H. E. MERRILL was recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Turn to the entries in the cash-book of September 4, 1872, cash dr., and state whether the entries there to the dr. of cash are journalized and entered in the ledger; if so, where?—Answer. I find here a charge to cash and a credit to investments on a sale of 1,600 shares of Panama R. R. stock, $144,000; profit and loss, cr., cash dr., gain on 1,600 shares of Panama R. R. stock, $56,000. That is the cash-book. Then on the journal, page 224, I find: Sale 1,600 shares Panama R. R. Co., $144,000; interest account cr. on September 3; gain on sale 1,600 shares of Panama R. R., $56,000.

Q. Are those posted to the ledger?—A. I presume they are.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Just Anglicize the result of all that, to the interests of the company. Lay aside your book-keeping phrases and state in plain English the results to the interest of the company, of a transaction in which checks were exchanged with John Roach for $200,000, no credit made to cash as the proceeds of the John Roach checks, and then take the investment entries of the corresponding amounts, and state the result to the interests of the company.—A. Of course I can only speak as the books show. There appears to have been given to John Roach a check for $200,000 on September 4, and there appears a credit on the opposite side as a sale of 1,600 shares Panama Railroad Company, from which it would seem that the company owned that stock and had sold it and received $144,000 and $56,000 additional gain upon it, amounting together to $200,000.

Q. Is the result of that operation that the company is $200,000 out?—A. On the face of it it looks very much like it. I do not know anything about it.

Q. Without a credit of the checks of $200,000 received from John Roach it is an inevitable result, is it not, that the company must have been out $200,000 by means of that transaction?—A. Yes, sir; I should say it was.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. See if it is not balanced by charging an additional $100,000 to the cost of each of the ships Tokio and Pekin?—A. It is so charged.

Q. The company actually paid John Roach only $1,052,000 each for those ships and charged them up $1,152,000 each. There is $100,000 actually charged to each of those ships more than was actually paid for the ships?—A. That I do not know, only as I have said.

Q. I thought you were there at the time?—A. No, sir, I was not there; all I know about it is from the record.

WILLIAM H. LANE sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. Please state your occupation.—Answer. I am purchasing-agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and acting secretary.

Q. Have you made an examination of the papers and letters of that company to find out a correspondence between the company and Richard B. Irwin, in the early part of 1872?—A. Yes, sir, I have examined from December, 1871, to the latter part of 1872, and I find one letter only, of which I have made a certified copy or transcript, which has been presented through Mr. Hatch this morning.

Q. That is the only one you found on file relating in any manner to the obtaining of a subsidy in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many original letters referring to that subject did you find in the correspondence?—A. Only this one, of which I made a certified copy. That letter was from Mr. Bellows, the vice-president of the company, to Mr. Irwin, who was then the agent at San Francisco.

Q. Of letters to the company, or to an officer of the company, how many did you find on file?—A. I think there were three or four, but I am not positive as to the number.

Q. You do not recollect their dates?—A. No, sir.

Q. To whom did you give them?—A. They were handed to Mr. Hatch.

Q. Then the letters that were handed in by Mr. Hatch are the letters which you found, and to which you now refer?—A. Yes, sir.

J. B. POST, jr., sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your occupation?—Answer. I am a clerk in the employ of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. State whether you have made any examination of the papers of the company for any correspondence on behalf of the company with Richard B. Irwin in 1872, prior to the first of July?—A. I made an examination of the correspondence yesterday, but I cannot speak as to the exact dates.

Q. What period did your examination cover?—A. I think it was from the first of January, 1872, to the same time 1873—it covered the year 1872.

Q. Did you find any correspondence relating to the procuring of a subsidy in Washington?—A. There was only one letter I could find bearing upon the subsidy in any way. It was dated prior to 1872; it was dated December 2, 1871.

Q. The only correspondence emanating from the office of the company, in relation to procuring a subsidy, was that one letter, so far as you know?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom did you give the copy of that letter?—A. I did not make the copy. I found the press copy of the original letter in the copy-book, and I believe that Mr. Lane made the attest copy.

Q. Did you find any letters to the company relating to the obtaining of the subsidy?—A. I did not, sir, none bearing directly upon the subsidy at all.

Q. Then all you have found in your examination of the books and papers of the company relating to the subsidy is what you have just now stated?—A. That is all.

Q. Was your search thorough?—A. It was as thorough as I could make it.

F. W. G. BELLOWS recalled and further examined.

Mr. KASSON. The committee is informed, Mr. Bellows, that you desire to make a statement in correction, or in further explanation, of the testimony you have already given.

Mr. BELLOWS. I do, sir. I appear voluntarily, without being subpoenaed.

Question. State, then, what you desire to say, in the form, of course, of an explanation.—Answer. One of the statements made yesterday by the accountant of the company left the impression on my mind, as I read it in the papers, that he gave the committee to understand that the orders that were given to him in the office in regard to these letters, &c., were given by me. I wish to say that I never gave an order in regard to those things, except in the regular way or course of business, that was not directed by Mr. Stockwell, and I always, for my own protection, prefaced the directions I gave with some such statement as "the president desires thus and so to be done."

Q. What you desire to state, then, is that, in giving any of the instructions referred to by Mr. Roundy as coming from you, you were acting under the direction of the president?—A. Any instructions that were irregular.

Q. Do you regard the $750,000 transaction as irregular?—A. I do, sir.

Q. Then whatever Mr. Roundy stated in regard to these items connected with the subsidy as having been done by him under your instructions, was done under instructions which you yourself had in turn received from Mr. Stockwell?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Roundy was correct in stating that he received the instructions from me, because the president never gave his orders except through me; but I was always particular, to avoid any responsibility in the matter, to say that it was desired by the president that these things should be done—that the president directed so and so to be done.

Q. Then all you desire to say is, that all you directed to be done you directed officially under the instruction of the president?—A. That is all in regard to that.

Q. Anything else?—A. Yes, sir. In regard to the money that was charged to the two ships, Mr. Roundy said that I made the remark that it was to be put to the account of the ships and kept from the directors, or something to that effect. I never made any remark of the kind. I recommended to Mr. Stockwell at the time that he should charge all the expenditures that he had made in regard to this subsidy to a special account; that he should open a special account and call it whatever he had a mind to, "China Line, No. 2," or "China Line, Special Expense," or whatever he chose, but that he should, at all events, open such an account and charge all his expenditure of that kind to that account; and, as he received the subsidy, credit it to that account until those expenses were all wiped out. I earnestly recommended that course to him many times, but he positively refused to do it. He said, "We are building four ships; we are building two of them for this special service, and I will charge it in that way. It is perfectly proper. I will charge $100,000 to each of those ships; that is perfectly proper. Railroads charge their construction account in the same way, and it is perfectly right that these ships, which are built to run under this subsidy, should be charged with this money, and be made to bear their part of the expense. The subsidy was passed in May, and this was done in the fall; my impression is that it was in September.

Q. You have now been stating what Mr. Stockwell told you on this subject?—A. Yes, sir. And I have said that the accountant was mistaken or misunderstood me when he attributed the remark to me that he did, for I made no such remark. I explained at the time exactly what the president wanted done, and why he wanted it done.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Stockwell was gaining or losing in his stock-operations after April or May, 1872?—A. I know nothing of it except as I judged by his manner and his anxiety, that is all. He never said a word to me about stock.

Q. You did not know from any statements made by him whether he lost subsequently?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he a large purchaser prior to the middle of May, 1872?—A. I have no doubt that he was. I do not know, however, because I had no means of knowing his operations.

Q. You have stated that you think it was in September, 1872, that Mr. Stockwell proposed to get rid of these troublesome and mysterious entries by charging them over to the ships. Now, prior to the granting of the subsidy, or to about the time of the granting of the subsidy, had Mr. Stockwell indicated to you what accounts he intended to put those expenses to so as to carry them along in the books?—A. No, sir.

Q. He had given you no instructions?—A. None at all.

Q. And therefore it was about September that he determined to charge the whole or a part of that expenditure to the construction of the ships. That was the first you knew about his intention?—A. I am not sure that it was September; that is my impression, but of course the books will show.

Q. I will state for your information that the evidence before the committee is that this charge of $200,000 against the ships was made on September 4th.—A. Well, he had spoken of it before that.

Q. When first did he speak to you about disposing of those sums in that way?—A. It was after the payment of Mr. Irwin in May, at the time that he received the $750,000.

Q. Was it before any contract was made for building the ships?—A. Without looking at the date of the contract I cannot tell, but from recollection I should say it was.

Q. Before a contract had been made for the ships Mr. Stockwell proposed to charge that money to the ships?—A. No, sir; you misunderstood me.

Q. You misunderstood me, perhaps.—A. Well, it was a misunderstanding at any rate. The ships were contracted for and under way and payments made upon them at the time that this $200,000 was charged. I understood you to ask whether he had said anything in relation to charging any part of this expenditure to any other account besides the ships, and I answered that he had.

Q. No; I wanted to get the date when Mr. Stockwell first proposed to charge over this hitherto mysterious account to the construction of those ships.—A. I think it was about that time it was done; it may have been a short time before, but not long.

Q. Then, if the charges were made on or about September 4, it was about that time that he first suggested to you the charging of those amounts to the construction of the ships?—A. Yes, sir; it may have been a week or ten days, or two weeks, but only a short time.

Q. Before that he had made no suggestion to you to charge that money to the construction of new ships?—A. Not to the ships.

Q. Had he proposed to charge it to the construction-account of ships previously constructed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had he suggested to you previously to what account he would carry those items?—A. A part of it.

Q. And what account had he suggested that he would carry a part of it?—A. The San Francisco agency.

Q. Was that the only other account to which he proposed to carry those troublesome items or a part of them?—A. It is all that I recollect at this moment. I could tell by looking at the books, but I have not seen them for two years and a half.

Q. So far as you recollect, then, the two suggestions made by Mr. Stockwell on that subject were, first, to get rid of these items by putting them to the San Francisco agency, and afterward by putting them against the new construction-account?—A. No, sir. It is brought to my mind at this moment that there was something about adding a dollar a ton to the price of the coal on hand.

Q. That was suggested about what time?—A. This all took place between May 24, the time that Mr. Irwin received those checks, and the time this amount was charged to the ships—within a period of two or three months.

Q. Then the coal proposition came, you think, before the proposition to carry the items to the San Francisco agency, or did it come afterward?—A. I think it came after that.

Q. And before the proposition to put this money against the construction account?—A. I think so.

Q. Do you happen to remember whether any portion of the money was charged against the coal account?—A. No, sir; I could not tell without examining the books. My recollection is that it was not.

Q. Do you remember receiving any instructions from Mr. Stockwell respecting the account to which certain checks that were issued to Mr. Irwin in 1872 were to be entered?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. You have no recollection of receiving any instructions from Mr. Stockwell as to the account to which certain checks amounting to several thousand dollars (some of which checks—the largest part of them were afterward returned) were to be put while they were out?—A. No, sir; my recollection is that I kept them merely on a memorandum, because it was the understanding that those checks should not be used.

Q. So you think they do not even appear on the stubs of the check-book?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. What was the amount, $600,000?—A. No, my impression is that it was $500,000.

Q. Whatever the amount was you think that no part of it was entered on the stubs of the checks?—A. No, sir; I think not, because it was understood that the checks were not to be used.

Q. There was some money paid to Irwin along in the spring—some considerable amount—do you recollect the account to which Mr. Stockwell instructed you that they should be charged?—A. I do not remember any instructions in regard to that. I know that some of the items were charged to profit and loss, because it was supposed that they were necessarily incurred expenses, and some of them were charged to Eldridge & Irwin, agents in San Francisco, with the intention, as he said, to settle the account after they got through, and on the recommendation of Mr. Irwin that all moneys should be charged to that agency.

Q. Mr. Irwin recommended that the money should be charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. So Mr. Stockwell stated.

Q. You did not know that from Irwin?—A. No, sir; I think Mr. Stockwell read me something from a note received from Irwin, in which that recommendation was made. He either gave me the note or read it to me. I do not remember which.

Q. Is there anything else to which you want to call the attention of the committee by way of correction or explanation of your former evidence?—A. No, sir; nothing except a point in regard to the testimony that I gave in Washington. I was asked, by Mr. Dawes, I think, if I had ever had any correspondence with Irwin during the time that he was in Washington, and I said that I did not know until I could examine my letter-books. When I came home, I did examine, and I found that I had written to him one or two letters bearing upon the subject, which the committee can have copies of if they wish.

Q. Be good enough to furnish the committee with copies of these letters; send them to the chairman of the committee at Washington.—A. I will do so.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. State again during what period you were the vice-president of the company.—A. From the early part of 1865, until May, 1873.

Q. Were there changes made in your stock during those years; was it raised from a small up to a larger one?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often was it changed, and what was the character of those changes?—A. It is so long ago that I can hardly state from recollection, but there were several increases. When I went into the company, in 1861, the capital was $3,600,000, I think, and it eventually grew up to $20,000,000.

Q. The increase being authorized at various times by the legislature of New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was raised first to five million, then to eight million, then to ten million, then to fifteen million, and then to twenty million?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was a stock that seemed for a time to bear watering pretty well?—A. Well, sir, it was not all water. At one time we assessed the stockholders fifty per cent. of the stock, which they paid in cash. At another time, when the increase was made, there were 50,000 shares sold at $200. Then, when we acquired the Atlantic line in 1865, they added $3,000,000.

Q. In stock, not in payments by the stockholders?—A. Well, sir, we paid in stock for the line.

Q. How much do you think the actual payments by stockholders amounted to?—A. If I could look at the books I could tell you, but I know that we called upon them for fifty per cent. of the increase; we gave them one share for every one held, and they paid fifty per cent. in cash. I think that was the time the stock was raised to ten million.

Q. How often did you make reports to your executive committee?—A. The usual business of the committee was reported to them weekly when they met.

Q. During the early part of 1872 did you make weekly reports to the executive committee of the amounts of money that were put into the hands of Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why didn't you?—A. Because I was not directed to. I never made any statements to the executive committee in regard to payments.

Q. You were vice-president of the company, were you not?—A. Yes sir; but that was no part of my duty.

Q. You had no knowledge of the transaction?—A. I had.

Q. Was it your duty as vice-president to conceal from the executive committee the knowledge of facts in your possession affecting the interests of the company?—A. There was no concealment on my part at all.

Q. You knew of these payments?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you did not tell of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. As an officer of the company did you not regard it as your duty to tell the truth as you knew it about the affairs of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you not do it, then?—A. I did, sir. It never was my duty to make any report to the executive committee of payments.

Q. At the time the checks were given by Mr. Stockwell to Irwin for $750,000, on the 24th of May, did you make any report to the executive committee of that company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever lay it before the board of directors?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not know at the time that all that money was being spent to obtain the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not know at the time you gave Irwin those checks that the money was for no other purpose but for this subsidy business?—A. The only thing that passed through my mind at that time was that Mr.

Stockwell probably had made some arrangements with him, by which he had agreed to pay him so much money for procuring the subsidy; for I had no knowledge at all of what was done with any of the money, in any manner or shape.

Q. Did you not feel it your duty, as vice-president of the company and one of the trustees for the stockholders, to inform them of any such important transaction as that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?—A. Because I supposed the president would do that, or had done it.

Q. Did you meet with the board of directors?—A. I was president of the board of directors, but they met only once a month.

Q. When they next met after the expenditure of this $140,000 by Irwin, prior to the $750,000 that he received, did you not regard it as your duty to inform the board of directors of that fact?—A. I would if I had not supposed that the president had advised them of it.

Q. Did you suppose that the board of directors knew all the facts that you knew?—A. No, sir. I do not know that they were all there; but I supposed that the president was constantly conferring with his directors.

Q. And telling them all the facts?—A. I supposed so.

Q. How often did you make reports to the world of the condition of the affairs of your company?—A. I think there were two reports made while Mr. Stockwell was in the administration—one when he came in and one when he went out.

Q. When he made the report when he went out, in the early part of 1873, did that report set forth the truth of the facts as they existed?—A. Yes, sir; that $500,000 remained charged to the San Francisco agency.

Q. And did not you, the vice-president, and Stockwell, the president, both know very well that that charge of $500,000 to the San Francisco agency was a false charge, and was put there for the purpose of covering up that transaction?—A. It was put there, as Mr. Stockwell told me at the time, with the understanding that he expected to get back a portion of that money, and he said he would leave it to that account for the present, as he had been recommended by Mr. Irwin to charge it to the San Francisco agency until he got a payment, and then the whole thing would be wiped out. It was known what that $500,000 was for, because I was asked a great many times to explain it, and I did explain it to everybody that asked me.

Q. Would any one know from reading the company's report where that money had gone?—A. No, sir.

Q. Would not the world understand from reading that report that it was properly charged to the San Francisco agency?—A. I do not think they would, because they would know that the agency would not have any such large amount of money standing against it.

Q. Did anybody outside—anybody except those in the secrets of the company—know that $100,000 had been falsely charged on your books of construction to each of the steamers, Tokio and Peking?—A. I do not know.

Q. Could they obtain any such knowledge from your annual report?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did not your annual report, as officers of the company, tell the truth upon that subject?—A. I do not know why it did not.

Q. You knew then that that report was a falsehood on its face?—A. Well, sir, I did not consider that that was so irregular, if we choose to make those ships stand for so much money; it was irregular, but I did not consider that there was anything wrong in it.

Q. You did not consider there was anything wrong in making that false statement in your annual report?—A. No, sir; I did not think there was anything wrong in that report.

Q. I merely wanted to get at the morale of the officers of this company.—A. Well, sir, I may be wrong, but I do not see anything wrong in that.

Q. You mean to say that you, as vice-president of that company, thought that there was nothing wrong in making a false entry upon your books of $100,000 more than you had paid for the ships?—A. Yes, sir; wrong without explaining why it was done.

Q. But your annual report did not explain it.—A. It did not.

Q. You had got this subsidy and were applying for a continuance of it?—A. I do not know, sir; I presume they were. I had left the company then.

Q. That original subsidy was $500,000 a year for ten years, was it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And these annual reports of yours would be submitted to Congress; and with no knowledge, except what they could get from your reports, they were expected to act upon the application of the company for a further subsidy?—A. That I do not know; I had nothing to do with that at all.

Q. Was any explanation ever made, except what appeared in the annual report, so that Congress could understand whether it would be a proper thing to continue that subsidy or not? Do you know of any other report or statement being made to Congress?—No, sir; I do not.

Q. Was not the annual report, as published, well calculated to mislead anybody as to the true condition of the affairs of that company?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose it was, without this explanation.

Q. I see that you have received an opinion from the Attorney-General of the United States, in which he says you are entitled to a continuance of the subsidy. Did you advise the Attorney-General of all the facts as you have stated them here, as to the condition of the company, before you obtained that opinion?—A. I tell you I was not connected with the company at that time, and I do not know what passed between them and the Attorney-General. I left the company in 1873.

Q. You have seen the letter of the Attorney-General saying that the company is entitled to a continuance of the subsidy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge whether the Attorney-General gave that opinion with full knowledge of the facts, or not?—A. I know nothing at all about that, sir.

Q. When the company were applying to a leading officer of the Government, and asking an opinion in their favor in the matter of the continuance of this subsidy, do you not think that it was important and proper for them to tell the whole truth?—A. Certainly, sir.

Q. But this company has not done this, so far as you know?—A. I do not know whether they informed the Attorney-General or not. If I had seen the Attorney-General, and he had asked me anything about it, I should have told him frankly all about it; or anybody else who would have asked me about it.

Q. I believe that Scott, Strong & Co. had false charges made against them on the books of the company while you were the vice-president—charges made against them for the purpose of bridging over something?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you remember that such charges were made against Harriot & Noyes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To the amount of $600,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That entry of $600,000 against Harriot & Noyes was a false entry?—A. Yes, sir, it was.

Q. And you knew at the time that it was a false entry?—No, sir; because the amount was charged to Eldredge & Irwin first, and Mr. Stockwell, two or three days afterward, told the treasurer pro tem. to change it to Harriot & Noyes, saying that he expected to get back a portion of that money.

Q. But the books showed that it was charged to Harriot & Noyes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was a false charge?—A. It was.

Q. And as soon as it went on the books you knew it?—A. No, sir; not at the time, but very soon after.

Q. There was the fact, then, that you know that $600,000 was falsely charged to that firm, and why didn't you tell the board of directors of that fact?—A. I didn't think I was called upon to tell them; I supposed that Mr. Stockwell saw some way in which he was going to receive back this money, a portion of it. I didn't know what way, but I supposed he saw some way, and that then he would settle up the accounts and state to his directors just what it had cost.

Q. And you think that the vice-president of a company is doing his duty when, having knowledge that false entries are made in the books, he makes no inquiry of the board of directors whether they know it or not, and keeps it entirely concealed from them?—A. I don't think there was any concealment about it, for I didn't feel that it was part of my duty to do it; I felt that the responsibility was entirely upon the president, and he was acting under a resolution that had been passed.

Q. Were you present at that meeting of the board of directors?—A. No, sir; I was not a member of the board.

Q. Were you present at the meeting?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you present when the action of the executive committee was ratified by the board?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you first issue these checks to Mr. Stockwell and then charge them to Richard B. Irwin?—A. Mr. Stockwell gave me a memorandum, and told me to tell the treasurer to draw the checks in that way. I handed it to the treasurer, and they were drawn in that way, and taken in to Mr. Stockwell, and he said he didn't want them drawn to his order, but to Irwin's order; I then took them back, and told the treasurer what Mr. Stockwell said, and the checks were re-drawn.

Q. How much money do you know of that was spent in Washington to obtain this subsidy?—A. I don't know that any money was spent in Washington, except what Irwin spent for his house there.

Q. Have you any knowledge from Mr. Stockwell or Irwin as to the expenditure of any money in Washington in obtaining the subsidy?—A. Not a dollar, sir.

Q. From the time he went there in January until May, was there no consultation between you on the subject?—A. I never exchanged a word with Mr. Irwin upon that subject or knew anything about it, no more than a man in a foreign country.

Q. You knew, at the time the checks for $750,000 were given to him on the 24th of May, that previously there had been given to him for that purpose $25,000 in January, $40,000 in February, $35,000 in April, and $40,000 up to the 15th of May?—A. I knew that—that that money had been furnished to him; what he had done with it I did not know.

Q. But you knew that it had been furnished in connection with the subsidy in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not at all in connection with the San Francisco agency?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you knew that he came back for $750,000 when that $140,000 was gone, making $890,000 in all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And yet you never thought it of sufficient importance either to advise with the stockholders or speak to the board of directors about it?—A. I didn't think it my duty to do that. My duty in regard to those things was simply clerical. I had sufficient to do in the general management of the details of the business of the company, without paying attention to those things.

Q. Don't you know that the men who were dealing in the stock, and were not in the secrets of the company, were dealing upon the false showing that the company had made, and didn't you know, in fact, that the company was just that much worse off than it pretended to be?—A. No, sir; for I don't know anything about them.

Q. You knew that any private gentleman dealing upon the faith of your company's published representations had no knowledge that these entries to Harriot & Noyes and John Roach and others were fraudulent?—A. None of that money was charged to any of these parties, excepting Harriot & Noyes.

Q. One of your vice-presidents, Mr. Scott, speaks of $150,000 that was falsely charged to his firm.—A. I don't think it was as much as that; I knew what that transaction was, and the explanation in regard to it is a very simple one, which I had no knowledge of at the time, but I have obtained it since.

Q. Is not this the fact, that the dealings of that company during the Stockwell administration, as the business of the company was carried on and as the books were kept, were such that the truth could not be known by men who were not in the secrets of the office?—A. In regard to the subsidy, it was certainly so; nobody condemned it more than I did.

Q. Do you know that at any time any of the stock of the Panama Railroad Company was taken from the company's safe and not properly accounted for?—A. It was accounted for afterwards.

Q. How was that taken from the safe?—A. I stated that in Washington; it is in my testimony.

Q. Is the explanation of how it was accounted for there too?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Was the book-keeper under your direction?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose he would be called so.

Q. You were in the board of directors at the time a resolution was passed authorizing expenditures in connection with the subsidy?—A. I was not.

Q. When did you first learn of the existence of that resolution?—A. I must have been aware of it very soon after it was passed; I cannot tell you the exact time.

Q. Did you read it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you think you knew of it soon after it was passed?—A. I think so.

Q. The book-keeper has undertaken to justify himself for making these entries on the books by the statement that he regarded it as his duty to obey the instructions of his superiors; he was under your direction; and you now state that you were justified in directing these entries by the orders of your superiors.—A. I didn't take any responsibility in regard to the entries. I merely, as I told you, obeyed the orders of the president. I would not have had such an entry made myself.

Q. Then you did it because the president desired it to be done?—A. I didn't do it; I merely conveyed the president's order.

Q. You directed it to be done?—A. No, sir; I said "The president directs or wishes so and so to be done."

Q. The order went through you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If this investigation has no other good result, it will perhaps show the country how business is managed by leading financial representatives in the city of New York. In your position, as vice-president of a great company subsidized by the United States, did you regard it as your duty to be the medium of directing false entries to be made in the books of that company, a great corporation in which the whole country is interested?—A. Do you mean do I think I was justified?

Q. Did you regard it as your duty to be a party, as a medium of communication or otherwise, to the making of false entries in the books of a great corporation in which the whole country is interested?—A. As a subordinate I felt that I was obliged to obey the orders of my superiors or give up my position, and it was too important to me; I could not afford it; I tried several times to get out of it, and went to my friends for that purpose, and I afterwards refused the presidency of the company solely on that ground.

Q. All that time, however, when you were the vice-president of the company, you allowed fraudulent entries to go on, under the circumstances that have been stated here, without attempting to stop them by communicating the fact to the board of directors?—A. I did not communicate with the directors on the subject, because, as I said before, I did not regard it as my duty to do so.

Q. Then you regard it as the right of the officers of a corporation placed in charge of the interests of the stockholders to require you, when you are not the chief, to be a party to the making of false entries respecting the transactions of the company?—A. As I said before, I felt it was my duty to obey the orders of my superiors.

Q. Do you understand that the commercial sentiment of New York requires any honorable gentleman to go so far as to be a party to the making of false entries on the ground that it is his duty to obey his superior officer?—A. I don't think he is a party to it.

Q. Not when he communicates to the book-keeper the desire of his chief that false entries shall be made, and when in pursuance of that communication these fraudulent entries go into the books?—A. I do not consider that I was responsible in any way or shape for these entries; if I had so considered, I should have been very slow to do it.

Q. Still you say it affected you so that you were unwilling to remain, and sought other occupation?—A. Yes, sir; because I felt that it was irregular.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you understand that the arrangement in regard to the subsidy was a private arrangement between Mr. Stockwell and Mr. Irwin, or that it was an arrangement with the company?—A. You mean as to the amount paid him?

Q. I mean the arrangement or contract between them in reference to the subsidy.—A. I supposed that it was entirely between Irwin and Stockwell, for I never knew of Mr. Irwin's communicating with anybody connected with the company but Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Have you seen the correspondence between Mr. Stockwell and Mr. Irwin, or the company and Mr. Irwin, relative to procuring the subsidy?—A. I saw some notes from Irwin to Mr. Stockwell, which Mr. Stockwell showed me. They were all private. There was no official correspondence that I am aware of.

Q. Is that correspondence in the possession of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or was it left in their possession?—A. I don't think it was, because if it had been it would have been found. I suppose Mr. Stockwell destroyed the letters as they were received.

Q. You were asked in Washington whether, if the money was sent to Irwin, there was probably some letter accompanying it, and you answered, "Undoubtedly." You were asked further, "Have you any letter-books which will disclose that fact," and you answered, "There are the company's letter-books." Will you explain what these books that you refer to are?—A. I stated there one time, when asked whether, if the money was sent to him, it was accompanied by a letter, that I supposed it was, undoubtedly, and supposed that if there had been a letter it would be in the company's letter-books. From the testimony that I have heard here to-day, it appears that they have searched for those letters and have not found them. One of the letters, which I told the committee I would give them a copy of, refers to the $25,000 sent in January. Mr. Irwin wrote to Mr. Stockwell requesting him to make deposit to that amount, and it was done, and he was advised of it. That is the only letter that I have any knowledge of; it was in a private letter-book, not the company's letter-book.

Q. You were asked, "Have you any recollection of writing any letter inclosing Stockwell's private check to Irwin here at Washington?" and you answered, "No, sir; I have not, but I have a letter-book, and if I did write such a letter, it is in that book."—A. Well, there is no such letter; I have looked for it and found none.

Q. In whose possession is that letter-book that you refer to as containing that mention of the $25,000?—A. It is my own letter-book.

Q. We would like to have a copy of it.—A. You shall have it; if I had known I was coming up this afternoon I would have brought it.

Q. Are there any other letters or copies of letters containing information in regard to remittances to Irwin, or a receipt of money by him?—A. Only that one, sir; but there is another letter which refers to the letter which the president directed to be written to Mr. Cox, Representative from New York.

Q. There was no other letter relating to any money?—A. I will produce the letters.

WILLIAM L. JENKINS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please state your residence and occupation.—Answer. New York. President of the Bank of America.

Q. From the evidence taken before this committee it appears that a check for $14,500, drawn by Richard B. Irwin on the American Exchange National Bank of New York, was passed through the clearing-house to the credit of your bank on the 29th of February, 1872, or about that time. Will you state what information you have in regard to that?—A. Yes, sir. I don't know whether that is the check. We have no memoranda of that; we do not keep memoranda of checks for deposit, except they come by mail. There was a check of $14,500 deposited on the 27th, which went through the exchanges on the 28th, the next day. It was deposited by Lees & Waller. This is the ticket of their deposit, and among them is that check, $14,500. They deposited on that day $120,050.94, and in that deposit we find a check of $14,500. That is all we can tell you about it.

Q. Was there no other check for $14,500 in that day's transactions?—

A. No, sir; none for two or three days previous to that and after that; we have looked.

Q. No such transactions with anybody?—A. No, sir; that is the only one, and for that amount, anywhere about that time.

Q. That came by mail?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who are the firm of Lees & Waller?—A. James Lees has died since then. The firm is now Laidlaw & Co. Their place of business is 33 Pine street.

Q. Is Waller still a member of the firm?—A. No, sir; he is not living; he was not living at that time, but that was the firm's name.

LE GRAND LOCKWOOD sworn and examined.

Question. Were you a member of the firm of Laidlaw & Co. in 1872?—

Answer. I was.

Q. Have you with you books which will show the entries of certain deposits on or about September 4, 1872?—A. I have not.

Q. Will you examine the books and give the committee information as to a certain deposit of one or two hundred thousand dollars made on or about September 4, 1872, by either the president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or some other party, if you find entries of checks to that amount?—A. I will endeavor to find the books and look it up, and I have no doubt that I can. I will endeavor to be here to-morrow by 12 o'clock with the books.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. Are you the Mr. Le Grand Lockwood who was examined once before the Committee of Ways and Means relative to some other matters, in which Judge Sherman and others became entangled?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made an affidavit before the Ways and Means Committee which had something to do with the beginning of this investigation?—A. I believe I did.

Q. Will you now go on and tell us all you know about the frauds committed in obtaining the subsidy?—A. I do not know anything more about them than I told at that time.

Q. Suppose you tell it over again now?—A. I know nothing whatever about it except that a gentleman remarked at the time that there had been a million of dollars spent in securing the passage of the subsidy.

Q. From whom did you get that information?—A. No one ever told me directly.

Q. How did it get into your ears, then: you guessed pretty well, according to recent developments?—A. Well, sir, it was hinted to me by Mr. Frederick Billings.

Q. In what form was the hint you received?—A. We were talking about the worthlessness of this stock. When the Stockwell board came in there was a great question on Wall street as to what Pacific Mail was worth, and my father and myself, and I think Mr. Billings, had a statement made up about the property, and we came to the conclusion that instead of being of great value the stock was worth about 25 cents. In referring to that conversation Mr. Billings said that since we had come to that conclusion, there had been so much money spent, naming a million of dollars, which was "gone nobody knew where;" those, I believe, were his words.

Q. About what time was it that Mr. Frederick Billings gave you that information or that hint?—A. It was after the passage of the subsidy, I presume; I do not recollect the date, but I think it was in the winter of 1872 or '73.

Q. It was a short time before you testified before the Committee on Ways and Means upon that very subject?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever follow up that hint to see what was the truth about it?—A. I never did.

Q. At the time the subsidy was pending before Congress, during the early part of 1872, did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Stockwell, Irwin, or anybody else bearing upon it?—A. I don't remember ever having any.

Q. Do you know anybody who acted as agent to procure the subsidy who got any of the money?—A. Nobody except Irwin.

Q. Did you talk with him about what he was doing?—A. I never saw Irwin in my life.

Q. Did you know in 1872 that he was getting a subsidy?—A. O, we all knew it; Mr. Stockwell testified under oath, in a lawsuit that somebody had against him, that Irwin was there in the employment of the company; that, I think, was in the early part of March, 1872, before the subsidy was passed.

Q. I suppose that in that testimony in court he did not go into any detail about the expenditures, or the amount of them?—A. O, no, sir; the question was asked him what Irwin was in Washington for, and he said, for reasons best known to himself.

Q. Can you give us any more information about that subject?—A. I do not think that I can.

Q. We are, of course, comparatively in the dark and looking for light from any quarter, and if you can give us any we want it.—A. I know nothing to my own knowledge.

GUY F. GOSMAN sworn and examined.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Mail-teller of the Bank of America.

Q. State what you know about a check drawn upon the American Exchange National Bank of New York for $4,000, on or about May 24, 1872, which passed through the clearing-house, from the Bank of America.—A. I am not the receiving-teller, nor the assistant receiving-teller. The reason my name was given to the committee was, that I am the teller who receives all letters. On May 21, 1872, we received no check on the American Exchange Bank for $4,000 through the mails.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. It may have been on deposit and you not know it?—A. There was a check for $4,000 on the American Exchange Bank deposited in our bank on that day; it was deposited to the credit of R. J. Capron. I did not receive that check; indeed, no one who is in the bank now received it.

Q. Who are R. J. Capron & Co.? Are they bankers in New York?—A. They were at that time, I believe; the firm is dissolved now.

Q. Do you know any of the members of the concern?—A. No, sir, I do not.

Q. Do you know who succeeded to their business or books?—A. The firm since has been Capron & Merriam, and they failed on C. C. and I. C.; their office was in Broad street; Merriam & Capron's office is at the corner of New and Wall streets.

Q. And that is the only check for $4,000 on that bank on that day?—
A. Yes, sir; we have some other checks on different banks on that same day.

NEW YORK, January 2, 1875.

HENRY CLEWS called and sworn, in the absence of the chairman, by Mr. S. B. Goodale, a notary public for the city and county of New York.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Please give your name and residence.—A. Henry Clews; my place of business is 32 Wall street.

Q. Were you an officer or director of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the year 1872?—A. I was.

Q. During the whole of that year?—A. I think so.

Q. Did you go in with the Stockwell administration?—A. I think I did.

Q. That was in the latter part of the year 1873. With that aid to your memory can you say that you were a member of the board on February 14, 1872?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you a member of the executive committee?—A. I was not.

Q. Then you were not present at the meeting of the executive committee on February 14, 1872?—A. I was not.

Q. Do you recollect being present at a meeting of the board of directors when a certain resolution, adopted by the executive committee in February, 1872, was presented for approval, giving a certain authority to the president to engage counsel and incur other necessary expenses?—
A. I have no recollection of it, and, consequently, I think I must have been absent from that meeting.

Q. You have no recollection of any such resolution being presented to the board?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear anything said to the board of directors, or to any of the directors, in relation to the passage of the resolution?—A. Not that I now remember.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Stockwell had employed Mr. Irwin at Washington to procure a subsidy for the company?—A. I did not, sir, until long afterwards.

Q. Until after the law had been passed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any knowledge at all what expenses were incurred in procuring the subsidy?—A. Not until it was too late to correct it.

Q. Until when?—A. Some time after the subsidy was obtained.

Q. How did you first hear that expenses had been incurred for it?—
A. I had no facts in regard to it; I heard of it merely by common rumor.

Q. You did not hear it from Mr. Stockwell, or any member of the board of directors?—A. Not until long after the subsidy was obtained.

Q. Did you ever see any report made to the board or communicated to the company, in any way, of the amount of expenses incurred in obtaining the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you say that you had no personal knowledge, until after the subsidy was granted, of the means by which it was obtained or the expenses incurred in obtaining it?—A. I had not.

Q. Have you any reason to believe that the facts were known to the board prior to sending Irwin to Washington, or after he had been sent there?—A. I think not, sir; on the contrary, I think it was studiously kept from the board—all knowledge pertaining to it.

Q. Were you a member of the auditing committee of the board in the spring and summer of 1872?—A. I was one of the committee, but, I think, elected after that.

Q. As a member of the auditing committee, have you a knowledge that there were any accounts presented to that committee having relation to those expenditures at Washington?—A. Not at any meeting of the board where I was present.

Q. And you did not know of any accounts that were audited by that committee, while you were a member of it, having any relation to the expenses at Washington?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you any knowledge, derived from any officer of the board or acquired by yourself while a member of the board, from which you can state what amount was expended, through Irwin or otherwise, in procuring the subsidy, or alleged to have been expended for that purpose?—A. I never knew, sir, until my attention was called to an irregularity of the president's, when that matter, of course, developed itself. That was along toward the end of the year, or rather of the term that we were elected for; it was in the spring of 1873, I think.

Q. Then, prior to the spring of 1873, you had no knowledge coming to you in any way whatever touching these irregular expenditures?—A. Not at all. There was another irregularity on the part of the president, and that called my attention to this large expenditure in behalf of the subsidy or alleged to have been in behalf of the subsidy.

Q. Was that after Mr. Stockwell went out of the board or before?—A. It was while he was in the board.

Q. How long after that discovery did he remain in the board?—A. I think he remained in the board until the term had expired. I was not aware that he resigned at all.

Q. When did his term expire?—A. In May, 1873.

Q. And you think it was in the spring of 1873 that the discovery was made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Stockwell make any statements at that time touching these disputed or doubtful accounts?—A. He did not.

Q. What action was taken in consequence of that discovery?—A. The action principally taken was in connection with another matter which absorbed attention almost to the exclusion of the subsidy matter; that was the taking by the president of a large amount of the Panama Railroad Company's stock, assets Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and the investigation and action were in connection with those assets of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company alleged to have been improperly appropriated to himself by Stockwell.

Q. Do you know whether or not Stockwell was a gainer or a loser in the summer or fall of 1872 by operations in the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I should suppose from all accounts (although I had no actual knowledge) that he was a gainer at that time.

Q. Have you any personal knowledge what his condition was in respect to operations in the stock of the company in the spring, summer, and fall?—A. In the spring, I should suppose, he was a gainer, but in the fall he was a large loser, I should suppose. My only knowledge on the subject was from common report.

Q. State whether, from your knowledge as a member of the board of directors or otherwise, you have reason to believe that the board of directors, or the executive committee of the board of directors, had any knowledge of the expenditure made to obtain this subsidy until after the law was passed, and prior to the time of which you speak.—A. I cannot speak in behalf of the executive committee, as I was not one of them.

Q. Well, my question covers the whole so far as your knowledge goes.—A. In behalf of the board I can unhesitatingly say, at any regular meeting of the board when I was present, no knowledge was brought to the board in connection with the large expenditure; on the contrary, I think it has always been regarded by the board, or the members of the board, as an amount of money that was abstracted from the company without any authority, and for which those connected with it are amenable to law.

Q. You say no knowledge came to the directors as a board. Do you mean to leave it to be inferred that individuals of those directors knew what was going on in relation to those expenditures?—A. I think I can say that individually I have no knowledge of any one of the directors having any knowledge of that large expenditure.

Q. Then, in your opinion, when the discovery of those expenditures was made, it was a surprise to the board of directors during the time that the expenditures were incurred?—A. It was a very great surprise.

LE GRAND LOCKWOOD recalled and further examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. State, if you please, what your business was in the early part of 1872.—Answer. Banker and broker; a member of the firm of Lockwood & Co.

Q. Was any member of the firm connected with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, as officer or director?—A. In the summer of 1872 my father was a director, he being a member of the firm of Lockwood & Company, at that time.

Q. State when he became a director, and when he ceased to be a director.—A. He became a director, I think, about November 20, 1871, and he ceased to be a director when he died, which was on the 24th of February, 1872.

Q. Can you state whether or not he was a member of the executive committee?—A. He was chairman of the executive committee.

Q. Can you tell when he ceased to appear at any of the meetings of the committee or the board?—A. I cannot tell you when he ceased to appear; he was sick some two weeks before he died, and he died on the 24th of February.

Q. Then was he, or was he not, present at a meeting of the executive committee on the 14th of February?—A. He probably was not.

Q. In pursuance of the inquiry put to you on Thursday, I will be glad if you will please state whether your father, as a director, so far as you know, concurred in the action indicated by the resolution of February 14, authorizing the disbursement of money for attorneys' fees and "other necessary expenses" at Washington; in other words, so far as you know, had he any knowledge of the operations going on under the direction of Stockwell through Irwin?—A. I had a talk with my father before he was taken sick, about it, in which he said that he understood that Mr. Stockwell was going to spend a large amount of money to have this subsidy carried in Washington, and that he and Billings wished to have it distinctly understood that they were to have nothing whatever to do with it.

Q. Did you understand that he supported or differed from Mr. Stockwell in the management of the company?—A. He differed with Stockwell almost entirely in purchasing stock for the company at about 50, when my father thought the stock was not worth half that amount of money, and Mr. Stockwell and he had quite high words on the subject. Mr. Stockwell told him that if he did not think the stock was worth what it was selling for, and would not do as he wished, that he must leave the board; my father told him that he would not, that he was put there as a trustee, and he should stay there and look after him, Stockwell.

Q. So far as you know, were the operations of Stockwell through Irwin, as they are now developed, in procuring the subsidy known and supported by the executive committee or the directors?—A. So far as my opinion goes——

Q. I don't want any opinion unless it is based upon some knowledge of the facts obtained from the directors.—A. Well, as I said before, Mr. Stockwell in a law-suit in March, 1872, gave all of us to understand that Irwin was in Washington endeavoring to get the subsidy. Further than that I don't know anything at all.

Q. It was not developed at that time whether there was a large or a small sum being expended for that purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. You knew nothing of that?—A. No, sir.

Q. So far as you know from conversation with the directors, your father and others, the directors knew nothing of it?—A. No, sir; not of the amount.

Q. Now recur to the subject on which you were examined on Thursday, and state whether you find any trace upon the books of Lockwood & Co. of the checks for $200,000 referred to on Saturday as coming through Mr. Roach or Mr. Stockwell.—A. I find no trace of any checks coming from Mr. Roach at all. There is a credit on September 4, 1872, to an account called "change" on our books, for $200,000, a check drawn on the Oriental National Bank of New York; and there is also a corresponding debit of $200,000 of a check drawn by us in favor of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. That closed the account called "change" by balancing it?—A. Yes, sir; so far as that item was concerned.

Q. Then that check went to the credit of no person on your books?—A. No, sir; it did not.

Q. You are sure that the check was drawn in favor of the steamship company, and not of the president of the company individually?—A. I have not seen the check and consequently I could not swear to it, but I have not the slightest doubt of it.

Q. Is the check in your possession?—A. Yes, sir; it is in my possession, but I don't know where it is.

Q. It could be found?—A. I suppose it could.

Q. Is there any other item of $200,000 on that day?—A. There is not, sir.

Q. You have no doubt, then, that that was the check $200,000 about which we are inquiring?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. Have you the stubs of the check-book?—A. Yes, sir; but the check-book would only show exactly what I have told you.

Q. Would not the stub show in whose favor it was drawn?—A. No. This book that I have looked at is a little fuller than the check-book.

Q. Then you are sure that the check-book was really to the order of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, instead of to the order of A. B. Stockwell; that is the point we are inquiring about?—A. I have not the slightest doubt that it was drawn to the order of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

RUFUS HATCH recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. If you have made any examination in reference to this exchange of checks for $200,000, state whether you find on the books of the company any trace of $200,000 received through a check from Lockwood & Co., on or about September 4, 1872.—Answer. No, sir; there is none; the only entry of $200,000 about that time was the sale or proceeds of 1,600 shares of Panama.

Q. I ask now as to the proceeds of a check from Lockwood & Co.—A. There is no check from Lockwood & Co., nor any other check of that amount, nor any checks to make that amount.

HENRY B. LAIDLAW sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Please state your occupation and place of business.—Answer. Banker, at 33 Pine street.

Q. Do you know the firm of Lees & Waller, doing business in 1872?—

A. I did know them; I was not a member of that firm at that time.

Q. From the testimony of the president of the Bank of America, it appears that a check for $14,500 upon the American Exchange National Bank was deposited by the firm of Lees & Waller with the Bank of America on or about February 27, 1872. State what you know, or what the books and papers of Lees & Waller show, in regard to such a check.—A. The letter-files and the books show the receipt of a check from Richard B. Irwin, sent in a letter to us from Washington, dated February 26, 1872. The letter in full reads :

Messrs. LEES & WALLER :

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find check $14,500, for which please return me your sight exchange on Bank of California, favor Edridge & Irwin, $13,000 coin, and currency check for the balance, and oblige,

Yours, respectfully,

RICHARD B. IRWIN.

Q. Was there any correspondence preceding that?—A. There was a letter of date February 23, in which he asks us, "What will be the cost in currency of your coin draft on San Francisco, sight, for $13,000? I would like to send for same, with remittance, immediately on receipt of your reply."

Q. Is there any other correspondence between the firm of Lees & Waller and Irwin in 1872?—A. There is one letter of date, apparently, February 28, saying, "Yours of the 27th, with inclosures, came to hand this morning;" the inclosures being the draft that he had asked for.

Q. Where were those letters dated?—A. At Washington.

Q. Are there any other letters among the files or papers of Lees & Waller?—A. There do not appear to be any others.

Q. For what period have you examined?—A. The letter-file runs from 1870 to the present time.

Q. That was the only transaction that that firm had with him?—A. It appears to be the only one of that kind.

Q. You have given the correspondence; state what you did.—A. I presume we drew the draft on the Bank of California, in favor of Edridge & Irwin, for $13,000 gold, and sent it to Mr. Irwin in Washington.

Q. Can you produce that draft?—A. It must be in the possession of the Bank of California.

Q. It is not your custom to have the drafts drawn by you upon that bank returned to you?—A. It is not our custom.

NEW YORK, January 2, 1875.

S. L. PHELPS sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD.

Question. State your business.—Answer. I have no business now. I was second vice-president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in 1872 and 1873, and until May, 1873.

Q. Commencing at what time?—A. I cannot tell the exact date. I entered the service of the company at the end of 1864, and remained in it till the end of May, 1873.

Q. Were you a member of the executive committee in 1872?—A. No, sir; I had nothing to do with it.

Q. What were the duties of your office?—A. My duties were more particularly confined to the China line. I had no duty whatever with any other portion of the line, except under the special direction of the president and board of directors. My duties were generally in China and Japan. I was general superintendent of the line.

Q. Did the disbursement of money pass through your hands?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did the agents of the company report to you in reference to your business?—A. Yes, sir. The reports of the agents there first went through me to the office in New York.

Q. Was it the duty of your office to pass on their accounts?—A. Yes, to canvass the accounts.

Q. Were the accounts, which were sent by the San Francisco agency, required to be checked and allowed by you before they were passed?—A. I had nothing to do with the San Francisco agency, only with the China and Japan agencies. My supervision was only in the East. I had nothing whatever to do with the San Francisco agency, except when specially directed by the president to attend to some particular matter, but not in a general way.

Q. You have asked to be permitted to appear here, and you can state for what purpose you did so.—A. I find in Mr. Baby's testimony that he says that Mr. Phelps wanted to charge $200,000 against his account; that he does not know whether I was jesting or not, and that he believes that I was acting in Mr. Stockwell's interest, trying to get up a report. I went to see Mr. Baby yesterday and asked him about it. He told me that his testimony was unfairly reported in the papers, and he was to meet me this morning at half past ten o'clock at the Central Pacific Railroad Office, in Nassau street, to come up here. I was there at the time appointed, and remained till twenty minutes past twelve; but Mr. Baby did not appear. I hoped to find him here, but I find he is not here. He told me yesterday that he recollected my saying something of that sort to him in jest, and that he also recollected my telling him that that report of Mr. Irwin was a thing which I would not sign, or he either. I have procured from Mr. Bellows, who was vice-president at the time, a letter which I would like to have put on the record.

[The letter was submitted to the committee, but the committee declined to admit it.]

Q. Is there anything further which you wish to state?—A. Yes; I have to state that I had nothing whatever to do with the New York office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or its accounts. I wrote Mr. Stockwell's report, which he made to the stockholders in May, 1873, but it was simply putting his dictation into form. I had nothing to do with the details of the report further than to put it in form. I did not make up the financial part of the statement at all. It was given to me by him. I said to Mr. Stockwell, is it possible that you intend to sign that report with that $6,000 charged to the San Francisco agency? He said, certainly, it was all right; it was expended for the benefit of the China line. I took particular pains to criticize that report, and to state the character of it to some members of the board of directors, whom I best knew, so that there should be no misunderstanding on the part of the board as to my view in reference to that report.

Q. You say you told Mr. Baby that you would not sign that report?
—A. Yes.

Q. Why would you not sign it?—A. Simply because I did not consider it a fair report.

Q. What was there in the report which you particularly excepted to?
—A. Well, it was a misrepresentation. It was a report calculated to deceive the stockholders as to the result of a purchase that had been made by Mr. Stockwell of steamships belonging to another line.

Q. By whom were you elected or appointed second vice-president of the company?—A. I was simply appointed by the consent of the board of directors. It is not an elective office like that of vice-president.

Q. In the absence of the president and the first vice-president you would be the president of the company?—A. I presume I would be.

Q. And you were aware that this was a false report made by Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir; I did not say that it was a false report; I have not used the term "false;" I said that it was a report calculated to deceive the stockholders, although I do not know that there was a single item in it that was false.

Q. You would not sign it?—A. No, sir, because I thought it was unfair.

Q. You say that you criticised the report and informed the directors?—A. So far as I knew them.

Q. Whom did you inform?—A. I informed Mr. Williams, who seemed, at the time, to be active in the direction, and I informed Mr. Clews and Mr. Kingsland, who were the members of the board whom I knew best.

Q. State what those items were about which you were dissatisfied.
—A. I was dissatisfied with the representation of the value of the California coast line with reference to the ships which had been purchased from the New Zealand Company, and I was particularly struck with this $600,000 which was charged to the San Francisco agency.

Q. Did you criticise this matter to the directors?—A. Yes, to Mr. Williams, Mr. Clews, and Mr. Kingsland. They were a select committee of the board having charge of the purchase of the New Zealand steamers, and therefore I knew them better than the others. I have not been in New York except on rare occasions, and I had very little knowledge of the directors.

Q. When was that?—A. In May, 1873.

Q. Who was Mr. Williams?—A. He is a gentleman doing business in Pearl street. He was a director in the company for a short time only. This was about three or four years before I left the service.

Q. What knowledge have you in reference to the disbursement or appropriation of money belonging to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the purpose of procuring legislation from Congress during the time that you were second vice-president?—A. I have no knowledge of my own directly.

Q. Have you any knowledge from the statement of any officer of the company or of any person in the employ of the company?—A. Yes. Mr. Stockwell, in a conversation relating to the San Francisco agency, clearly admitted to me the expenditure of money in Washington.

Q. State what he said, as nearly as you can.—A. There is but one thing which I can state directly. He told me that as there was to be a congressional investigation about the subsidy, he supposed he would have to send Mr. Irwin out of the country and keep him away for a while.

Q. When did he make that statement to you?—A. I think it must have been in August or September, 1872.

Q. Prior to September, 1872, where were you located?—A. In China and Japan.

Q. Were you absent from New York prior to 1872?—A. Yes.

Q. Then you have no personal knowledge of what took place in Washington?—A. None whatever.

Q. And you had at the time no information in reference to the expenditure of money there?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you any knowledge other than you have communicated, in reference to the admission of Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir. There is one matter which bears somewhat on that Washington business. It occurred prior to it, but may be regarded as a knowledge or indication, at all events. It is within my knowledge that Mr. Irwin, when he had failed at the second session of Congress in getting the subsidy, came back here and reported to Mr. McLane, who was then president of the company, that in his opinion, and in the opinion of those who knew most about such things in Washington, the subsidy could not be obtained without the expenditure of half a million dollars; that Mr. McLane reported the substance of that statement to the board of directors, and stated that he was opposed to anything of that kind; and the board of directors voted down the proposition entirely.

Q. Was that fact noted on the minutes of the company?—A. I do not know that; Mr. McLane stated it to me.

Q. You never examined the minutes of the company to know whether there was any record of it?—A. No, sir. I ought to say in this connection that the impression was made strongly on my mind that Mr. Irwin himself was not an advocate of the proposition.

Q. At what time was this statement made to you by Mr. Stockwell?—A. It is positively wrong for me to say it was a statement. It is difficult for me to fix the date, but it was between early in August and the latter part of September, 1872; for that was the interval of time that I spent here.

Q. Did you establish the China line and make all the expenditures there?—A. Yes, sir; I established the trans-Pacific line. I had nothing to do with anything else. I was not in the country when these things were transpiring.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Why did Mr. Stockwell state that he supposed that there would be a congressional investigation?—A. It was a matter of general talk. I had been in Washington and had heard it generally spoken of as being a thing that was certain to take place. I cannot be more positive than that.

The subcommittee adjourned, to meet in Washington on Wednesday January 6, 1875.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 6, 1875.

CHARLES ABERT sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON :

Question. Where do you reside ?—Answer. I reside in Montgomery County, Maryland.

Q. Were you a resident of Washington in 1872 ?—A. No, sir; I have not been a resident of Washington since 1861.

Q. Where was your place of business in the spring and summer of 1872 ?—A. I was employed here in Washington.

Q. And in what business ?—A. I was employed on various business, but I will state that I was the agent or attorney for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company from 1860 down to September, 1873.

Q. Have you an office in Washington ?—A. No, sir; I only came in as business called me here. My home is about fifteen miles from here.

Q. Your business was conducted by correspondence ?—A. Partly by correspondence and partly in person.

Q. From whom did you get your instructions in regard to the business of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the spring of 1872 ?—A. From Mr. Bellows principally, and from Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Did you receive instructions in person or by letter ?—A. Sometimes by letter and sometimes in person.

Q. Did you have interviews with Mr. Richard B. Irwin in connection with that business ?—A. I did.

Q. What were your duties or functions in connection with the business of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the spring of 1872, prior to July 1872 ?—A. I was Mr. Irwin's counsel in connection with that matter.

Q. Were you aware that at that time there was pending an application in Congress for a subsidy ?—A. I commenced that application as the counsel and agent for the company in December, 1871.

Q. What aid did you give Mr. Irwin in the procuring of that subsidy ?—A. I aided him as his counsel in advising him and in collecting statistics, procuring papers, and the general duties of counsel in such matters.

Q. You directed him as to the course he should pursue ?—A. I cannot say that I directed him in the course he should pursue. I was managing the case until February, 1872, as, I believe, the sole agent of the company for that purpose. About the first part of February, 1872, I was superseded, and Mr. Irwin was put in sole control of the matter, and I was requested by him to aid him as counsel. I was considerably disappointed and mortified at being removed, but the company continued me as its agent, as heretofore, for general departmental business, and at Mr. Irwin's request I aided him as counsel in the matter until the conclusion of legislation thereon.

Q. Did you also act as disbursing agent for any expenses in connection with it ?—A. I did.

Q. To what amount of disbursements ?—A. I cannot state positively, for I have not any memorandum with me.

Q. You have an idea about how much ?—A. Something over $100,000; I cannot say exactly.

Q. Was it less than $150,000 ?—A. I should think it was.

Q. Was it less than $125,000 ?—A. I do not think it was.

Q. Then you think it was between $125,000 and $150,000 ?—A. Yes.

Q. Covering what period of time were those disbursements ?—A. They were made at different periods during the progress of the case.

Q. Between what dates?—A. Some time between February and the latter part of June.

Q. You would say, then, that the period of disbursement was between 1st February and 1st July?—A. Between 2d February and 1st July.

Q. You disbursed nothing connected with the transaction after 1st July?—A. I think there were some small disbursements made after that time.

Q. And prior to what time? Fix the last limit as nearly as you can.—A. I cannot say definitely, but would state that it was not later than September of that year.

Q. Were the moneys which you disbursed received by you in checks or in cash?—A. Sometimes by check and sometimes by cash.

Q. Can you state what amounts you received by checks or give any round sum which you received by check as nearly as you can recollect?—A. I cannot.

Q. Can you not state the largest sum you received by any one check?—A. The largest sum in any one check was $100,000.

Q. And that check was sent by whom?—A. That I cannot tell you; I mean by that that I do not recollect.

Q. From whom did you receive it?—A. I received it from Irwin.

Q. Can you give the date when you received it?—A. The 27th May.

Q. Did you receive it by letter?—A. I received it personally.

Q. At Washington?—A. At New York.

Q. On what bank?—A. The American Exchange National Bank, or the Merchants' Exchange National Bank, New York; one or the other.

Q. What other considerable sum do you remember receiving by check?—A. There was a sum of money received by check on the 15th May, I think for $50,000 or $60,000.

Q. Did you receive that check by letter or in person?—A. I received that in person, in New York, to deliver to Mr. Irwin.

Q. From whom?—A. Either from Mr. Stockwell or Mr. Bellows; I cannot say positively which; it was one or the other.

Q. And that check you gave as a check or as money which you drew upon it, to Mr. Irwin?—A. My impression is that I gave Mr. Irwin that check.

Q. Did it bear your indorsement? Was it payable to your order?—A. That I do not recollect.

Q. But you did not draw the money yourself on that check?—A. I think I handed Mr. Irwin the check, and if it required my indorsement, I, of course, indorsed it, but I do not recollect.

Q. Do you recollect on what bank that check was drawn?—A. I do not.

Q. The check for $100,000, you drew the money on yourself?—A. I did.

Q. Where did you take that money?—A. I brought that money here.

Q. And to whom did you deliver it in Washington?—A. I was directed by Mr. Irwin, as his counsel, to make certain payments here. Mr. Irwin, I understand, has declined to state to whom he made payments, and therefore I feel a hesitancy, as counsel, in answering that question, as to whom those payments were made, in view of my relation to him as counsel, further than to say, in defense of my own reputation, that not a cent of that was paid with any agreement or understanding or expectation that it would ever reach any member of Congress. I will state on that point that, presuming I should be interrogated on that, I have called on Reverdy Johnson for his opinion as to the duties of counsel in such matters, and expected it to arrive this morning. I am not a very experienced lawyer, or I should have decided the question on my own responsibility, and I thought that, as the question would very likely be put to me, I should be prepared with an opinion from a gentleman whose standing is known throughout the country, and I have written to him for his opinion on that point.

Q. I will pass that for the present and ask you of what bar are you a member?—A. I was admitted to the bar of the courts of Washington in 1845. I have not practiced before any of the present courts of the District of Columbia. I am a member of the bar in Rockwell, in Montgomery County, Maryland.

Q. Have you practiced in any of the courts in Washington during the last twelve years?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you practiced in Montgomery County?—A. Yes; I reside four miles from the county-town, and am a member of the bar there.

Q. In what sums did you pay out that $100,000?—A. I have no memorandum here, and my memory would not guide me with any accuracy.

Q. Do you recollect the largest sums you paid to any one person?—A. I do not.

Q. To whom did you render any account of those disbursements?—A. To Mr. Irwin.

Q. Any one else?—A. No, sir; I was not responsible to any one else. When I was removed in February, I considered my direct communication with the company in connection with the subsidy as entirely closed. I was removed entirely, and would have gone to my home in Maryland, but that Mr. Irwin desired me to remain with him. I will state further that Mr. Irwin is a relative of mine.

Q. To how many persons did you make payments from that sum of $100,000?—A. To from fifteen to twenty, I suppose.

Q. Were those persons residents of the city of Washington?—A. Some of them were and some of them were not. Some of them I never saw before and have never seen since.

Q. In what State did those persons reside who were not residents of Washington?—A. That I do not know.

Q. But the names of those to whom you made payments were all given to Mr. Irwin, were they?—A. They were.

Q. He knows to whom you made these payments?—A. He knows to whom he directed me to make payments. They were made under his direction as counsel, and the receipts were taken and furnished to him.

Q. As to the $50,000 or $60,000 which you received on the 15th of May, what was done with that?—A. I paid it to Mr. Irwin, as before stated.

Q. You made no disbursements of that sum?—A. I do not know whether I disbursed any of that or not.

Q. But you delivered it all to Mr. Irwin?—A. I did. I do not know whether it was $50,000 or $60,000.

Q. Was the other sum which you received for disbursement in excess of that $100,000 received in cash? You say that you disbursed from $125,000 to $150,000.—A. I believe that I have stated that that was the only check which I received.

Q. The rest was handed to you in money?—A. Yes.

Q. By whom?—A. By Mr. Irwin.

Q. To be disbursed under his direction?—A. Yes.

Q. Were those payments made to persons resident in Washington?—A. Some of them were and some of them were not.

Q. Were they made to the same persons who received the other sums of which you have spoken?—A. I do not know whether any of those were persons who had received sums of money from me before or not.

Q. Recall, if you can, whether they were in part the same persons.—
A. Several of them were.

Q. Do you wish to make the same statement in reference to the persons receiving these payments that you made respecting those who received payment out of the $100,000?—A. I want my answer in reference to that matter to cover the whole of the disbursements that I made.

Q. You had better repeat that statement, or put it in the form in which you wish it to stand.—A. It is already just as I desire it to stand, in answer to the former question.

Q. Did you receive any sums prior to the 15th of May either from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or from Mr. Irwin?—A. I think I have mentioned that I made some disbursements prior to the 15th of May. They were small amounts.

Q. Were those disbursements made to the same persons of whom you have spoken in answer to the other two questions?—A. I think not; I cannot be positive at this time.

Q. Do you recollect to whom the payments were made?—A. I could remember to whom some of the payments were made.

Q. Are you willing to state to whom any of those payments were made?—A. No, sir, because all of them were made by me in the same capacity.

Q. Do you mean to say that as to all the payments made prior to the 15th of May, you wish to make the same statement as you made in reference to the other two?—A. Yes, sir; I paid a good many of Mr. Irwin's household expenses, house-rent, and various matters, which were not inconsiderable, for he is a gentleman who has always lived in proportion to his means, and his means have been comfortable.

Q. Will you state what amount you received for your own services in connection with the transaction?—A. I will state that when I commenced the case, my agreement with Mr. Stockwell was that I was to receive $1,000 in cash, and $30,000 if successful. The $1,000 was paid to me in cash; the other was not paid because I was superseded. With reference to the payments made to me by Mr. Irwin, they were between $5,000 and $7,000, as my counsel-fees. I have no hesitancy in stating myself what I received.

Q. That amount will cover all that you appropriated to your own use, or that you were paid for your own use in the transaction?—A. Yes, sir; to the best of my recollection.

Q. With whom was that first agreement that you have stated?—A. With Mr. Stockwell, personally.

Q. When was that?—A. That was in December, 1871. I will state that I never had a written agreement with Mr. Stockwell, but he paid me this $1,000 as a retaining-fee, and he was to arrange with the company to pay me the balance on the passage of the act.

Q. Did you ever apply to the company for any further payment?—A. I did not, because I deemed it useless. I had no agreement, no written contract, nor did I have any evidence to sustain me. Further, I was continued as the counsel of the company until 1873. The company then, for economical reasons, reduced its employés, and for that reason, as stated in the letter to me, I was removed.

Q. Do you recollect the names of the persons to whom you made the payments of the $100,000?—A. I do not recollect them all.

Q. You have a list of them?—A. I have not a list of the Christian names of all of them.

Q. But you have a list of their surnames?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. That $100,000 which you received, you drew out of the American Exchange Bank of New York, on the 27th May?—A. That is my recollection.

Q. On the check of Mr. Irwin?—A. I believe on the check of Mr. Irwin.

Q. You have read the testimony, I suppose, taken before this committee where Mr. Irwin had deposited $750,000 in that bank on 27th May; and among other items were three items of $125,000, $100,000, and $100,000 drawn out on that day.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who drew the $125,000 on that day?—A. I will tell you in a moment, [after some consideration;] it is some time ago, and I want to be accurate. My recollection is this: that $125,000 was given to me first on that day. Whether it was given to me by check or in money, I cannot positively say. Mr. Irwin was about departing for California, and my interview with him was short and hurried. I had no chance for a consultation, or for anything like deliberate reflection. He required $100,000 of that $125,000 which I had received, and then, according to the best of my recollection, he gave me a check for $100,000, making the amount coming to me still $125,000. The bank was unable to pay that check immediately. I intended to have left New York that morning for Washington, but the bank asked me to hold on to the check for some hours, which made me lose the train for Washington, so that I could not leave until night, and in the course of the day the bank paid me that $100,000, making the whole amount coming to me for disbursement on that day $125,000.

Q. Then you were mistaken in your statement to Mr. Kasson that you only got $100,000 at that time?—A. I do not think that was my testimony.

Q. You now say, however, that you got $125,000 on that day?—A. Yes sir; let me again make my statement. I do not recollect whether the $125,000 first given to me was by check or in money; but I did receive $125,000; then Mr. Irwin required $100,000, which I gave him, and he gave me a check for that amount, still leaving me $125,000 to disburse under his directions.

Q. But you stated a moment ago that you drew $100,000 on a check?—A. Yes, that is what I say now; there cannot be any conflict, I think, in what I have stated.

Q. [Referring to a bank-book.] On the 27th day of May a check for $125,000 was drawn out of the American Exchange National Bank, another check for $100,000, and still another check for $100,000. We have already proved that $100,000 was drawn by one A. H. Whiting on that day.—A. I know nothing about that.

Q. This other $100,000 you drew?—A. Yes, I suppose so. I have stated that I received $125,000 on that day, but I do not know whether I received it on a check to my order or whether the cash was handed to me, but I handed to Mr. Irwin $100,000, for which amount he gave me a check, and one of those checks for $100,000 to which you refer, may be that check.

Q. So that in fact the whole $225,000 was drawn out between you and Irwin on that day, of which amount Irwin got $100,000 and you got $100,000?—A. Yes.

Q. And did you on that same evening yourself, on the written order of Mr. Irwin, balance his book with that bank?—A. I do not recollect that I did.

Q. You were in the habit of doing that for him frequently I see, in the Metropolitan Bank of Washington and elsewhere.—A. I have balanced his bank-account in the Metropolitan Bank here.

Q. Did he not start for Philadelphia before the close of bank hours on the 27th of May?—A. He left at noon of that day.

Q. Leaving you in New York?—A. Yes.

Q. His bank-account with the American Exchange Bank was, as you may observe, balanced on that day, and the vouchers returned; are not you the gentleman with whom the bank balanced that account, and to whom these vouchers were returned; if not, who else could do it?—A. All I can say is that I may have done it, but I do not recollect it; if I recollected it, I certainly should not hesitate in saying so.

Q. Did you not afterward, on the 29th of May, after the check for $275,000 to Schumaker, and the $115,000 check to King, were drawn out, again balance the books and receive the vouchers, while he was on his way to California?—A. I was not in New York on that day and cannot tell.

Q. Have you never had his bank-book with the American Exchange Bank?—A. Not to my recollection. If you have any evidence which will refresh my memory on the subject, I will be glad to have it.

Q. The fact is that Mr. Irwin left New York at noon on the 27th.—A. Yes.

Q. Before you got your money?—A. Before I got that $100,000, of course.

Q. I refer you to the letter written by you to the American Exchange Bank, asking the bank to send his statement, and signed R. B. Irwin, by Charles Abert. Do you recollect that letter?—A. I do not recollect receiving that statement. I presume Mr. Irwin received it himself. The letter was written by me for him, and I presume the papers went to him. I have no recollection as to examining Mr. Irwin's bank-book at all.

Q. However, the main fact is that this $225,000 was drawn by you and Mr. Irwin on that day?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have forgotten whether you got the vouchers in settlement that evening or not?—A. I have.

Q. Do you know of any other bank-account which he had in New York?—A. I do not.

Q. You have had a power of attorney to settle up his books?—A. I had a power of attorney with reference to his account in the Metropolitan National Bank of this city, but I had no power of attorney with reference to the American Exchange Bank in New York.

Q. You did settle up his account with the Metropolitan Bank of Washington under power of attorney?—A. Yes.

Q. And did draw his balance on checks signed R. B. Irwin by you?—A. Yes.

Q. So that your relations and his were very close and very confidential?—A. Yes, he is a nephew of mine, in addition to my being his counsel.

Q. Were you with Mr. Irwin when he deposited that $750,000 on that day?—A. I knew nothing about that $750,000 until I saw it in testimony since this investigation commenced.

Q. When he started off that day at noon to go to California, did he not leave you as his agent to attend to his bank-account, and to close up his business in New York?—A. I do not recollect closing up his account with that bank at all.

Q. How long did you remain in New York at that time?—A. I left on that same evening, the 27th.

Q. Do you recollect seeing a man named A. H. Whiting, who had a check for $100,000 on that bank, that day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you recollect Mr. Irwin telling you anything about him?—A. No, sir.

Q. There are two other checks, one for $11,500, drawn on that day on Mr. Irwin's account. Do you know who drew that check?—A. I know nothing about it.

Q. What other bank besides the Metropolitan National Bank of Washington had Mr. Irwin an account in, so far as you know?—A. I know of none other than the bank here and the American Exchange National Bank of New York.

Q. Why was a power of attorney given to you to settle up his business at the Metropolitan National Bank of Washington?—A. He was in haste to get away, and there were a good many little accounts here connected with his leaving which he desired to settle, and he left me to attend to them, which I did.

Q. Do you recollect what balance he left subject to your draft on that bank?—A. I do not; the books will show that better than my recollection.

Q. Have you the checks which you yourself took up when you drew that balance?—A. I think the checks are all in the bank. I called on the bank for settlement of Mr. Irwin's account about the time of his departure from here and subsequently, and they stated at the bank that they had sent the books to him. Nothing further was done after their presenting me with the balance to be returned to Mr. Irwin. The checks which were in the bank are still there, I believe. I do not think that I have any of them.

Q. So that instead of $100,000 received in May, to be disbursed among the persons here in Washington, you in fact received and disbursed $125,000 which you received on the 27th of May, to persons here in Washington, by Mr. Irwin's order?—A. I think that was my statement.

Q. And you had disbursed some $50,000 before to other persons?—A. No, sir; according to my recollection I do not think the whole of my disbursements would amount to that.

Q. You disbursed $125,000 of money which you received on the 27th of May?—A. Yes.

Q. You had received other money prior to the 15th of May which you had disbursed. You stated to Mr. Kasson that about the 15th of May you had received $50,000 or $60,000 personally, which you had handed to Mr. Irwin, and that Mr. Irwin got you to distribute a considerable amount of it.—A. I said that whether I distributed any of that amount or not I did not recollect.

Q. But prior to the 15th of May you had received money?—A. Between the 2d of February and that time I had made some small disbursements.

Q. To how large an amount?—A. I cannot recollect.

Q. Can you come near it?—A. It would not be proper for me to make a guess, for I could not come near it.

Q. You could tell whether it was as much as $500?—A. Yes, sir, I can tell that.

Q. It was a good deal more than that?—A. Yes, sir; it was more than $500.

Q. Was it not more than $25,000?—A. I do not think it was as much as $25,000.

Q. How much do you think it was?—A. I think that the committee must see that I am trying to answer these questions truthfully. I do not want, therefore, to give a mere surmise about a matter about which there should be exactitude. I can give no surmise or no guess about what that amount was. I might say that it was less than $10,000, and that is all I can say.

Q. But what do you say?—A. I cannot say positively what that amount was.

Q. Was it not more than $10,000?—A. I do not think it was.

Q. You have already stated that you have a list of the men to whom you paid it, and that the men to whom you paid the money received prior to the 27th of May, were in part the same men as those to whom you paid the sum received on the 27th of May, and, with that data, I presume you can tell who they are?—A. If I had the data with me I could tell exactly.

Q. Have you not that data with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Where is the data?—A. At my home.

Q. Have you not been at home since you were summoned to attend here?—A. I have been.

Q. Was there any difficulty in your bringing that data with you?—A. None at all.

Q. Be kind enough to refresh your recollection by looking over that data, so that you can give us the names.—A. I can do so.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. You stated that you were a relative of Mr. Irwin?—A. He is a nephew of mine, and I have known him from his boyhood.

Q. You stated also that he received $100,000 the day he left for California of the money to which you have referred as being drawn from the American Exchange National Bank in New York; please state for what purpose he drew that money, if you know.—A. I do not know.

Q. Did he take it with him to California?—A. I think so; my impression is that he went from the bank directly to the depot.

Q. You do not know whether he intended to make or did make any disbursement of it in connection with the subsidy?—A. I know nothing about what he did with that money at all.

Q. The inference would be, if he left immediately for the depot, that the money was not to be expended on anything connected with the Pacific subsidy here in Washington?—A. Unquestionably.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Irwin was dealing during that spring and summer in the stock of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I do not.

Q. If he was, you are not aware of it?—A. I am not.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Was your first agreement made in Washington or in New York; I mean the agreement with Mr. Stockwell, or with the directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, when you undertook the business?—A. It was made in New York.

Q. And with what officer of the company?—A. With Mr. Stockwell himself.

Q. You say that you were to receive, and did receive, $1,000 cash?—A. I received $1,000, and was to receive $30,000 if successful. A further agreement was that I was to have the sole control of the management of the case, and that no additional counsel was to be employed without my express sanction.

Q. Did that agreement include the disbursement of any money here?

Were you employed to disburse money here in procuring the subsidy?—

A. Not at all. That $30,000 was my own compensation entirely.

Q. It was simply your own compensation, and not a sum to be disbursed?—A. It was to come to me as my own compensation.

Q. There was no provision in your first agreement that required you to disburse any funds here?—A. None at all. As I stated, I made an express agreement with Mr. Stockwell that no counsel was to be employed here except myself, without my express sanction; and during the time that I was agent and counsel of the company, from December until February, I never employed any one else.

Q. You were simply retained by Mr. Irwin as his counsel and attorney?—A. I was.

Q. Were you paid a retainer by him?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Where was your agreement made with him in reference to the matter?—A. In Washington.

Q. At what time?—A. There was no positive agreement made. He simply requested me to act as his counsel in the matter. When he received that letter on the 2d of February superseding me, I was angry and disappointed, and I expressed my readiness to return to my home in Maryland. Mr. Irwin said that I could be of great assistance to him from my knowledge of the affairs of the company here, and he requested me to act as his counsel, and I did so. There was no agreement as to what I should receive from Mr. Irwin.

Q. Did he disclose to you that he should require your services in the disbursement of money?—A. He did not.

Q. Did your employment or retainer by him include the disbursement of money?—A. It did not; it was solely for my services.

Q. At what time did you commence the disbursement of this money?—A. I cannot give the exact date.

Q. About what time?—A. It must have been in the latter part of February or the first part of March.

Q. From whom did you receive the funds which you first disbursed?—A. All the funds that I disbursed for Mr. Irwin I received directly from him.

Q. From whom did you receive the $50,000 or $60,000 on the 15th of May which you disbursed?—A. I have stated that I received that $50,000 or $60,000 (I do not know which amount) either from Mr. Stockwell or from Mr. Bellows.

Q. You said that the first money that you distributed you received from Mr. Irwin; then you were mistaken in that?—A. No, sir; I have stated that all the moneys I distributed I received from Mr. Irwin. The amount to which you refer of the 15th of May, I handed entirely to Mr. Irwin, and whether I distributed any of that amount I do not know.

Q. When did you receive, in the first instance, money to disburse for that purpose?—A. In the latter part of February or the early part of March.

Q. And you received it from Mr. Irwin?—A. I did.

Q. Did you deposit any of the money received from Mr. Irwin to your credit in any bank?—A. I do not think I did. I have no recollection of having done so.

Q. Did you not make larger deposits during this period than you had been making prior to it?—A. I made no deposits at all of this money. I paid the money as the disbursements were required.

Q. What am I to understand by that; that you immediately paid out the money when you received it?—A. Yes, sir; that I did not deposit the money.

Q. As you received it from Mr. Irwin you delivered the money over to the persons whom he indicated, without depositing it in bank?—A. Yes.

Q. By whom was the check for $50,000 or $60,000, which you received on the 15th of May, in New York, drawn?—A. Either by the president or vice-president of the company.

Q. Was it an individual check or the check of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I cannot tell that; I do not know; the check must be accessible, and is the best evidence. I suppose that it was on the company's bank in New York.

Q. Do you know Charles W. Goulding?—A. I think I recollect a Mr. Goulding being in Washington during that period.

Q. Had he any connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in reference to the subsidy?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Do you know of any funds being distributed to him?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know William S. King?—A. I do.

Q. Do you know of any funds being paid to him by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or by Mr. Irwin?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know A. H. Whiting?—A. If the committee commence by asking questions as to the persons to whom I did not pay money, and if it will go all around, it will by and by obtain an answer which I do not think I am, as counsel, obliged to give.

Q. Do you decline to answer the question, whether you know Mr. Whiting?—A. I do not know Mr. Whiting.

Q. Where did you make the disbursements that you speak of?—A. With one exception, in Washington.

Q. Had you met with the parties to whom those disbursements were made, frequently or occasionally before that?—A. Some of them I never saw before, nor have I seen them since.

Q. Where were Mr. Irwin's quarters at that time?—A. Part of that time he had rooms opposite the Arlington House, and part of the time he had a hired house on I street near Fifteenth.

Q. Were the disbursements made in his room?—A. I think they were.

Q. Was Mr. Irwin present?—A. He was not.

Q. Had those funds been placed in your hands prior to that time by Mr. Irwin for those parties?—A. All the moneys that were disbursed by me had been placed in my hands by Mr. Irwin, and I paid the money to the individuals to whom I was directed to pay it.

Q. Were the payments made after Mr. Irwin had left for San Francisco?—A. A portion of them were made prior to his leaving for San Francisco.

Q. Was Mr. Irwin present when those were made?—A. He was not

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. You say that Mr. Irwin left New York in the noon train, and that you left in the evening train the same day. You got the last payment of either $125,000 or $100,000 after he left?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he leave for California at that time?—A. I believe so.

Q. Directly?—A. That was my impression, that he left direct for California.

Q. Did he stop on the way at Philadelphia?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know whether he stopped anywhere on the way?—A. I do not know.

Q. Of course you did not disburse the money until after you received it?—A. Of course not.

Q. And you received it after he left for California?—A. Yes.

Q. And you returned to him receipts from all the persons to whom you paid the money?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was he when you made your returns to him?—A. He was in California, I presume.

Q. Did you do it by letter?—A. I did.

Q. You inclosed to him an account of the persons whom you had paid, and the sums that you had paid them, with their receipts?—A. I did.

Q. He therefore has in his possession the names of all these persons and their receipts?—A. I do not know.

Q. He has had them?—A. Yes, he has had them.

Q. Did he acknowledge their receipt?—A. He did.

Q. Did you pay the entire $125,000 out in that way?—A. I did not.

Q. How much did you pay in that way?—A. I cannot say precisely. I deposited $18,500 balance to his credit.

Q. Where did you deposit it?—A. At the American Exchange Bank in New York.

Q. When did you deposit it to his credit?—A. I cannot say positively; their book will show.

Q. (Referring to a paper.) Was it about the 5th of June?—A. Yes, that is the date.

Q. With that exception, did you pay out the entire $125,000 as indicated?—A. I did.

Q. Did you pay it by checks, or in cash?—A. I believe entirely in cash.

Q. You brought the cash here to Washington and distributed it in bills?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the size of the largest of the bills?—A. I think one thousand dollars.

Q. How much of the amount was in thousand-dollar bills?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Give us your guess.—A. I cannot have any idea.

Q. Was as much as $25,000 of it in thousand-dollar bills?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Was as much as $10,000 of it in thousand-dollar bills?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Was there any of it in thousand-dollar bills?—A. There was some of it in thousand-dollar bills.

Q. What makes you think so?—A. Because the bills were in my possession and I saw them.

Q. Then can you not tell within $10,000 how much of that amount was in thousand-dollar bills?—A. I cannot.

Q. What is your impression?—A. I think it likely that perhaps half the amount was in thousand-dollar bills.

Q. There was about half the amount in thousand-dollars bills?—A. I should think there was.

Q. When did you see Mr. Irwin last?—A. I saw him on the steps of Wormley's House on Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock just as I was summoned here as a witness.

Q. Before you were summoned or afterward?—A. Just as I was summoned.

Q. Did you have any communication with him after you were summoned?—A. I did not.

Q. Have you had any communication with him in reference to your testimony here?—A. I have.

Q. Has he requested you not to state here to whom you paid this money?—A. He has not.

Q. Do you understand it to be the privilege of the counsel or of the party to withhold communications?—A. I consider it the privilege of counsel.

Q. It is therefore because you fall back upon your privilege as counsel that you withhold what your client has not asked you to withhold, is it?—A. My client has himself declined to answer the question, and that is what causes me to decline doing so.

Q. I understand you to say that your client has not requested you to withhold this information?—A. He has not given his consent to my imparting it; he has left it entirely to my sense of duty.

Q. He has not requested you to withhold it?—A. He has not.

Q. You assume, then, to withhold it without the request of your client?—A. He has not given me his consent.

Q. My question is, has he requested you to withhold it; do you wish to qualify your answer?—A. I wish to qualify the answer by saying that he has not consented to my giving the information.

Q. Be kind enough to answer this question: has he requested you not to give it?—A. I cannot say that he has requested me not to give the names of these parties.

Q. You can say whether he has or not?—A. He has not consented.

Q. That is not an answer. You are a lawyer of long standing and know what the question is. The question is whether he has requested you to withhold those names?—A. I do not think he has.

Q. Now I desire to put a question to you: I do not desire to ask at this time for any confidential communication that Mr. Irwin has made to you, but I wish to ask you a single fact independent of communication that he has made to you as counsel or otherwise. That fact is something that you have done yourself. To whom did you pay that money?—A. That money was paid by Mr. Irwin's directions, not by any agreement between me and the parties.

Q. I have not asked you by whose directions it was paid; the question is a question of fact as to what you have been doing yourself, not as to what has been communicated to you by your client. You say that you have been paying men money which you received from the Pacific Steamship Company in connection with the subsidy. Now, I ask you a fact; I do not ask you anything communicated to you by any client whatever, or that you have learned from your client—nothing at all that has passed between you and your client. I ask you a simple fact: what have you done yourself; to whom did you pay that money?—A. I can only repeat what I have stated before, that Mr. Irwin has declined to answer the question.

Q. I do not ask you whether Mr. Irwin has declined to answer or not. I want to know whether you will answer the question as to what you have been doing yourself; to whom did you pay that money?—A. I consider that an answer, and that question would be violative of the relations between Mr. Irwin and me as his counsel.

Q. I will be satisfied if you simply say whether you will answer it or not.—A. I cannot answer it, as at present advised.

Q. If you paid it to no member of Congress, and if you paid it with no understanding that it would reach any member of Congress, what is there about the transaction that renders it improper for you to state it here?—A. I do not know that there is anything improper in my answering the question, further than as I have stated as to the relations between Mr. Irwin and me as his counsel.

Q. If Mr. Irwin has not requested you to withhold the names of the persons to whom you have paid this money, and if you know of anything in the transaction yourself which renders it improper, why do you decline to answer as to what you have done yourself?—A. I have stated that on that point I have asked the opinion of Mr. Reverdy Johnson as to how far I should be relieved in answering that question from my obligations as counsel. When I stated that Mr. Irwin has not prohibited me from giving that information, he has not, on the other hand, given his consent that I should give it, but leaves it entirely to my sense of justice and my sense of duty as counsel. I will state that had I been called here as a witness preceding Mr. Irwin's examination, I should not have hesitated one instant in answering that question in full; but Mr. Irwin having himself declined to answer the question, I having seen him on that matter, and he having declined to give his consent to my answering the question, I, therefore, as at present advised, hesitate to answer.

Q. Did you ask him for his consent?—A. I asked him for his consent.

Q. What did he say?—A. He left it entirely to my sense of duty as counsel, whether I should do it or not. Before the committee adjourns, I desire to repeat what I said a moment ago, that had my examination as a witness preceded the examination of Mr. Irwin, I should not have hesitated to answer that question in full. I do not positively decline to answer the question, but I await the opinion which I have asked from Mr. Johnson, before answering.

Q. You have stated that you made these disbursements in Mr. Irwin's room, and that many of the men to whom you paid this money you never saw before nor have seen since; how were you put in communication with them in Mr. Irwin's room?—A. They were introduced to me.

Q. By whom?—A. By various parties.

Q. Did you give notice that they should meet you there?—A. No, I think not.

Q. How much time did these disbursements in Mr. Irwin's room cover?—A. I do not know. I think that the last disbursement I made was on the 5th of June.

Q. Who brought any man to your room whom you never saw before or since, and to whom you paid money?—A. Of course there was somebody there to identify them.

Q. Who is the person who introduced a man to you there whom you never saw before or since, and to whom you paid money?—A. The persons who introduced them were persons whom I knew.

Q. Therefore you can tell who they were, and that is what I ask you. You say that many of those men you never saw before or since, that they were introduced to you at Mr. Irwin's room by some other person. Who is the person that introduced them?—A. I would request that the committee wait until I get this opinion from Mr. Johnson, and then I may be able to answer fully to the satisfaction of the committee.

Q. Is there anything between you and your client, any confidential communications between you and him, covering the name of the persons who introduced these parties?—A. I do not know that there is.

Q. Then you can give us the name without any benefit of counsel; you need not ask Mr. Reverdy Johnson whether you can tell that story or not.

Mr. NIBLACK. I move that the committee adjourn for the present.

Mr. KASSON. I think that the suggestion of Mr. Abert will lead him to answer several of these questions, and therefore I submit that the committee take a recess, subject to the call of the chairman.

The committee accordingly took a recess.

The committee re-assembled at 2.30 p. m. The chairman submitted the following communication from the president of the National Metropolitan Bank of Washington:

NATIONAL METROPOLITAN BANK,

(Late Bank of the Metropolis, organized January 11, 1814.)

Washington, D. C., January 6, 1875.

DEAR SIR: In yielding obedience to your summons of the 5th instant to produce the books, &c., of this bank, "showing the deposit and payments of money upon the account of Richard B. Irwin for 1872," I beg leave to remind you that this institution is the custodian of funds of private individuals and business firms, and in view of this fact I respectfully protest against the exposure of their accounts.

Having reason, however, to believe that you will insist upon compliance with the subpoena, I have placed the books, &c., called for in charge of Mr. J. Gales Moore, who is employed in the bank, and will furnish you with such information respecting Mr. Irwin's account as you may demand.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
J. W. THOMPSON, President.

Hon. J. G. BLAINE.

Having already taken action in a similar case, the committee resolved to insist upon the production of the books.

J. GALES MOORE, general book-keeper of the National Metropolitan Bank of Washington, sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Have you the books of the National Metropolitan Bank for the year 1872, or any of them; and, if so, what?—A. I have the deposit-book and what we call the bill-book, and the check-book or the check-journal. And then I have the stubs of three of the draft-books.

Q. Have you examined whether Mr. R. B. Irwin had an account with the bank during that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the account, or a transcript of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you produce it?—A. [Witness produces it.] This is a transcript of the account. It is from the ledger, beginning February 14 and ending July 1, 1872. It contains a statement of the deposits and checks paid on the account of Mr. Richard B. Irwin.

Q. The first deposit appears to have been on the 14th of February. Was there any deposit in 1872 prior to that time?—A. No, sir; none.

Q. Had he an account with the bank prior to that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But no deposit in that year?—A. No, sir; not previous to February 14.

Q. Is the account closed; and, if so, when?—A. It was closed on July 1, 1872.

Q. Have you any vouchers or checks showing the disbursement of any of the moneys mentioned in this account?—A. I only have the vouchers from May 22d to the 1st of July.

Q. Will you submit those?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the deposit-journal?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the total amount of the deposits to the credit of Irwin's account, and in what were they made—in cash or in drafts?—A. He deposited in our bank altogether $40,500.16, in drafts on New York; but one day he came in with a draft for $15,000, out of which we paid him $6,000, leaving $9,000 of it to his credit, and making the net amount of his deposits $34,500.16. Then there was a check of $800 on the First National Bank of this city, which also was deposited.

Q. To whom was the money paid?—A. Do you mean all the checks that were paid?

Q. Were those sums paid to Mr. Irwin or to him and others?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Do your books indicate to whom the payments were made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What book?—A. The check-journal.

Q. Have you made any minutes of the parties to whom payments appear from your check-journal to have been made?—A. Yes, sir; I made a memorandum in each case on the transcript of the account.

Q. Will you state to the committee what checks appear from your check-journal to have been paid to Mr. Abert, or to have been drawn payable to his order?—A. That I would have to compare with the account. I put the names on there.

Q. Read the dates and the amounts of those payable to Mr. Abert.—A. On April 24, $1,000; May 2, $500; May 6, $1,000; May 9, $1,000; May 24, $100; May 28, $100; May 31, $41.67. That is all.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Where you have a check payable to Charles Abert and then indorsed by somebody else, have you put down both indorsements?—A. No, sir; I have not put both.

Q. For instance, there is Charles Abert and B. E. Martin, $100; you haven't got Martin's name.—A. No, sir; I didn't put that down.

Q. Does not that indicate that it was indorsed by Abert to Martin and drawn by him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The memorandum you furnish us here does not show that fact.—A. No, sir; it only shows that it is payable to Abert. I can make a memorandum of that indorsement here.

Q. Would not that be necessary if you are going to give us a correct idea of it?—A. I took this from the check-journal; it only shows to whom a check is payable; it won't show the indorsers.

Q. And it won't show that Charles Abert drew that money out of the bank himself?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have got to get the check, to show that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is Mr. Martin?—A. I don't know him, sir, at all.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. What is the character of those checks as indicated by the persons to whom they are made payable, if you have examined them and have any idea what they are for?—A. Yes, sir; I have read quite a number of them that seemed to be in payment of bills, such as grocery-bills, market-bills, board-bills, gas-bills, and printing-bills.

Q. Is that the general character of the account?—A. That appears to be the general character of these checks that we have in our possession.

Q. You refer to checks given since May 22, 1872?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have the power of attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. See if that power of attorney does not authorize the balancing of the books and the returning of the checks to Charles Abert.—A. The power of attorney does not, but this does.

Q. Read that paper.—A. [Reading.] “My old bank-book having been lost or mislaid, I have this day received a new one, balanced up to date, and all the checks charged therein have been delivered up to me.

“R. B. IRWIN,
“By CHARLES ABERT, “Attorney.

“22 May, 1872.”

Q. So that the checks were delivered to Abert?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the power of attorney is of what date?—A. 22 May, 1872.

Q. Under that he drew out the balance remaining to Irwin's credit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Closing it up with those two small checks?—A. Yes, sir; $967.48 and $56.05.

By Mr. DAWES:

Q. Do you know what Martin it was that was formerly president of the Ocean National Bank?—A. No, sir; I don't know.

Q. Read the power of attorney.—A. [Reading.] “Know all men by these presents that I, Richard B. Irwin, of San Francisco, California, do hereby authorize, constitute, and appoint Charles Abert, of Montgomery County, Maryland, to draw and receive from the National Metropolitan Bank, in the city of Washington, D. C., any and all sums standing to my credit on the books of said bank, in such sums and at such times as may be required; hereby ratifying and confirming all that may lawfully be done in the premises by virtue hereof. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal in the city of Washington, this 22d day of May, in the year of our Lord 1872.

(Signed)

“RICHARD B. IRWIN.

“B. E. MARTIN.”

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 7, 1875.

CHARLES ABERT recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. We left off in the examination yesterday at the question whether you would give us the names of the persons to whom you paid the money received from Mr. Irwin. I will repeat the question.

WITNESS. Before proceeding with that branch of my testimony, I desire to submit to the committee the opinion of Mr. Reverdy Johnson.

I have said that had my examination preceded that of Mr. Irwin, I should have felt no hesitancy in answering the question of the committee as to whom, under Mr. Irwin's direction, I, as his attorney, paid certain sums of money intrusted to me by him for the purpose. As now advised, it appears that I would thus, unknowingly, have violated my duty as counsel or attorney. I have said that I felt a hesitancy in stating to whom payments were made by me, from the fact that Mr. Irwin had declined to answer to whom he made payments; and I say that he did not direct me to pay any sum or sums to any member of either House of Congress; neither did I do so. Nor did I pay any person with the knowledge, understanding, or agreement that any sum or sums were to be so paid.

Mr. Irwin has not forbidden me to name, nor requested me not to name, the persons to whom he directed me to make payments; but, having requested him to give his consent, under the apprehension that, with it, I might answer fully as desired, he has addressed me the following letter:

[Received Tuesday night, January 5, at 2022 I street.]

“WORMLEY’S HOTEL,
“Washington, January 5, 1875.

“MY DEAR SIR: I have carefully reflected upon your request that I would release you from your obligations as my counsel so as to enable you to answer any and all questions that may be put to you by the Committee of Ways and Means. I find myself still unable to express such consent.

“Indeed, I doubt whether any action of mine can change those relations. I can only repeat, that I must leave the decision of the question to your conscience, your own sense of duty, and your own knowledge of the relative rights and obligations of client and counsel.

“I cannot believe that any counsel has a right, under any circumstances, to give up the confidence of his client.

“As this is a matter of great importance to you, as your decision may bring you in contact with the physical power of the House of Representatives; as it involves a question of the highest professional ethics; and as it may affect your whole future career one way or the other, whatever you decide, allow me to go a step further and most earnestly and respectfully advise you for your own sake, and in order that your course may command the continued confidence of your clients and your professional brethren, that before definitely deciding you consult the highest authority in your profession now available.

“Should you act either way under the advice of the Hon. Reverdy Johnson, or Hon. J. S. Black, or any lawyer of similar standing, I should feel that you had a protection against criticism from whatever quarter; and should any lawyer of the standing of these gentlemen advise you to answer all the questions of the committee, I, for one, would feel that you had exhausted your duty so far as I am concerned.

“Personally, as you are aware, I should be glad to release you unconditionally, knowing that your evidence could only confirm mine.

“Very respectfully,

“RICH’D B. IRWIN.

“CHARLES ABERT, Esq.”

It was in consequence of this letter that I wrote to the Hon. Reverdy Johnson as follows, he being personally well known to me for many years:

“WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5, 1875.

“DEAR SIR: I am summoned to testify before the committee of the House of Representatives, now investigating the Pacific Mail subsidy question, and must appear to-morrow. I was of counsel for Mr. R. B. Irwin, who had control of the interests of the company before Congress during the session of 1871-’72. I was directed, in the course of my employment by him, to make payments to certain persons not members of Congress of either House for their aid and counsel in the matter. I desire to have your opinion as to whether, under my obligations as counsel, I have the right to give the names of these persons, if called on to do so by the committee, in the course of my examination. Is it consistent with the relative rights and duties of client and counsel to answer such question? Please give me your opinion fully on the principle involved.

"Very respectfully, yours,

"C. A.

"Hon. REVERDY JOHNSON,
"Baltimore."

Here is Mr. Johnson's reply:

"BALTIMORE, January 6, 1875.

"DEAR SIR: Your letter of yesterday is received. If you were employed by Mr. Irwin as counsel, and in that capacity was directed by him to employ other persons and to pay them out of the funds placed in your hands for the purpose, you cannot legally or morally, without his consent, disclose their names. You tell me, and from my knowledge of you I am sure it is so, that you made no payment to any member of Congress.

"Yours, with regard,

"REV. JOHNSON.

"CHARLES ABERT, Esq.,
"Washington."

In the matter of professional confidence between attorney and client, the following took place in the Committee on Banking and Currency of this House in the Ocean Bank investigation, in the month of March of the present year. The witness under examination was John E. Parsons, esq., an attorney and counselor at law in New York, and had acted "as counsel for Mr. Theodore M. Davis, the receiver, (for the bank,) in his capacity as such." The chairman of the committee, I am informed, was Mr. Maynard, of Tennessee.

"NEW YORK, March 5, 1874.

"JOHN E. PARSONS sworn and examined.

"Question by CHAIRMAN. Of course whatever you may have received from Mr. Davis in your capacity as attorney for him, as your client, is a matter that the committee will not inquire into, or permit to be inquired into; but aside from that, please state whether you know of any illegal or improper conduct in the management of the affairs of the bank on his part, or on the part of any other official in any way connected with the bank.—Answer. What I know, which has come to me from Mr. Davis himself, I do not feel at liberty to state unless by his consent. I do not know that he will object to my answering any inquiry that the committee may desire to address to me; and if he is willing, I am willing.

"The CHAIRMAN. The objection is not one that is taken for the benefit of the client. It rests on high public policy, which requires for the administration of justice that the communications between client and attorney shall be confidential and shall not be divulged, although the parties do consent.

"The WITNESS. In answer to the question, then, I state that I have had some opportunity of observing Mr. Davis's course as receiver of the bank.

"Q. Anything that you know from Mr. Davis, outside and beyond your relations to him as attorney, is legitimate and proper to be stated."

From the caution which accompanies this question, and the indicated opinion of the chairman, Mr. Maynard, his views seem fully to accord with the opinion of Mr. Reverdy Johnson, already given.

Where a difference in the course of action on the same point by two committees of the House occurs, both courses cannot be right; and, in my opinion, the House itself should decide which is right.

There is a recognized difference between the position of Mr. Irwin and myself before this committee, in that he was an officer or agent of the Pacific Mail Company, and I was an attorney and counselor employed by him.

"Communications made on the faith of that professional confidence which a client reposes in his counsel, attorney, or solicitor, are not allowed to be revealed in a court of justice." (Phillips on Evidence, vol. 1, p. 162.)

"With respect to the character and situation of the persons receiving the communications, it is to be observed that this professional privilege extends to the three cases of counsel, attorney, and solicitor." (Ib., p. 163.)

Therefore, in the payments made by me, as the attorney of Mr. Irwin, am I not debarred from testifying, especially when, on applying to my client to be allowed to testify on this point, he declines to give his consent. Phillips says, "An attorney will not be allowed, against his client's will, to disclose matters of professional confidence, though himself willing to do so." (p. 163.)

In the Ocean Bank investigation case, already referred to, the witness was not allowed to answer the question as to whether "he knew of any illegal or improper conduct in the management of the affairs of the bank on his [Mr. Davis's] part, or on the part of any other official in any way connected with the bank;" because, what the witness knew, "came from Mr. Davis himself."

Having exhibited to this committee an opposite course of action pursued by it from that adopted by the Committee on Banking and Currency, on the question of professional confidence, I respectfully contend that the House alone can decide which is the right course; and, therefore, before answering the pending interrogatory of this committee, I ask that the committee will obtain the decision of the House on this point, as applicable to my case.

The CHAIRMAN. I will not ask you just now to divulge any communication made to you by Mr. Irwin; but I will ask you to testify to your own acts, without any regard to any communications. I therefore put the question to you, to whom did you pay this money?

WITNESS. It strikes me that that is the very question at issue. I made no payments voluntarily. I made them under the direction of Mr. Irwin.

The CHAIRMAN. About communications between counsel and client, the courts say that these communications are confidential, but I never heard of a court saying that a man can conceal his own acts because his client told him to do them. I ask you now about your own acts.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to call the attention of the witness to the distinction that exists between communications made by a client to his attorney and disbursements made by the attorney, simply as an agent. In other words, the duties of counsel do not, as a rule, extend to business of that sort, but simply to advice and general direction.

The CHAIRMAN, [to witness.] Do you hold, as a matter of law, that this committee is not entitled to hear any communications made to you by Mr. Irwin, if both you and Mr. Irwin consent to it? That seems to be the doctrine laid down by the Committee on Banking and Currency in the case to which you have referred.

WITNESS. No, sir; the difficulty in this case is, that Mr. Irwin himself declined to answer. If Mr. Irwin had not declined to answer, I should not have considered this a privileged question at all.

Mr. BECK. Let me make a suggestion to Mr. Abert. Mr. Johnson says, in his letter, that if you were employed by Mr. Irwin as counsel, and in that capacity were directed by him to employ other persons, and to pay them out of funds put in your hands for the purpose, you cannot legally or morally, without his consent, disclose their names. You recollect that you said to us yesterday that the payments were made by you to men whom you had never seen before or since, in many cases. Does it not occur to you that where payments were made by you to men whom you never saw before nor since, the letter of Mr. Reverdy Johnson does not approach the question at all?

WITNESS. It is not a question of employment by me, certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody is more desirous than I am myself to guard jealously the rights of a client in the hands of his counsel. They are considered by the profession the most sacred of its obligations, and I for one would not knowingly trench upon those rights. We desire to get at certain acts of yours, which we believe we are entitled to, without regard to the discussion of this question. As Mr. Niblack has said, these acts of disbursement by you cannot, under any construction, be considered as confidential communications between client and counsel.

Mr. KASSON. In the very nature of things, the party to whom the money is paid is as well aware of the fact as the client himself, and therefore it cannot be a personal secret. I hold, further, that universal law requires a counsel in a case in court to testify to a payment which he has made to another party, whether by direction of his client or not, if that question arises.

Mr. NIBLACK. Under the law of my State, a physician is prohibited from disclosing communications made to him by his patients, but that prohibition would not prevent him, if called upon in a proper way, from communicating the fact what medicine he gave to his patient.

Mr. KASSON. Or if a suit was brought by the apothecary who sold the medicine and he should put the physician on the stand, the physician would be compelled to testify that he ordered the medicine.

Mr. NIBLACK. Or take the case of a priest. He may properly refuse to tell what a dying man communicated to him, but that would not protect him from disclosing to the court what became of the money of the dying man that came into his possession, if that became a material question.

The CHAIRMAN. He might be shielded from saying what the dying man told him, but not from stating what he did with the money.

Mr. BECK. The question here does not raise at all the question between attorney and client. We are investigating now what corrupt means have been used to obtain legislation by Congress. Mr. Irwin is in no sense a party to that matter. He is a witness, and this man is a witness, and they cannot constitute the relations of client and attorney in covering up payments made for corrupt purposes. As we are endeavoring to get at the bottom of the question whether corrupt means were used or not, the relations of client and attorney cannot exist in the matter. Congress does not recognize any such thing. It is against public morality for men to come here attempting to influence legislation, and spending money for that purpose. Whether Mr. Irwin employed counsel or not, he could not constitute a relation which would keep Congress from getting at the facts. I therefore go away beyond all this question of attorney and client.

Mr. WOOD. You express my sentiments exactly.

Mr. KELLEY. And I concur entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not doubt a word of what Mr. Beck has said, that this matter is distinguishable from the relations of attorney and client.

WITNESS. I would state that I only want to clear my professional honor and my honor as a man who, up to 52 years of age, has passed through life with his character untarnished. I therefore ask that you will decide the question which I have submitted, and that then you will allow me until Saturday morning to decide fully on my position. I have been suffering from chronic ozena, which has weakened me very much, and I should like to have rest until Saturday morning. I would feel in a different position if I had the decision of the House. I want to feel fully fortified in the matter.

Mr. BECK. Will you abide by the decision of the House?

WITNESS. Do you mean by that that if the House decides I shall answer I will answer?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

WITNESS. I cannot say yes or no to that.

After a short consultation the request of the witness was complied with, and he was excused until Saturday morning.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 7, 1875.

GEORGE W. RIGGS sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. State your business.—Answer. I am a banker in this city.

Q. Examine this check drawn by the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank for $50,000, numbered 191, and state what you know of any of the indorsements on it.—A. I recognize the handwriting of two of my partners upon it. The indorsement, "Pay Riggs & Co., or order," is in the handwriting of Mr. Kieckhoefer, one of my partners who attends to the correspondence. Below that is the indorsement, "Riggs & Co.," by my New York partner, Mr. John Elliot.

Q. Do you know the indorsement of John G. Schumaker?—A. I am not acquainted with his signature. He presented this check at my office, and he was identified there.

Q. What do you know in regard to this check?—A. It was cashed at the counter of my office on the 31st May.

Q. Who presented it?—A. It was presented by John G. Schumaker, who was introduced and identified.

Q. State all that you know about that transaction.—A. When Mr. Burchard and Mr. Beck called the other day, I said I did not recollect who had introduced Mr. Schumaker, but since then Mr. J. C. G. Kennedy has reminded me that he introduced him. The check was presented in my office, with the request to have it cashed, and the identification being satisfactory, I directed the teller to give the money for it.

Q. To whom was the money paid?—A. To Mr. Schumaker, who indorsed it. He was identified by Mr. Kennedy.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Did the amount of this check pass through your books in any way?—A. No, sir; we paid it over the counter. It went into our books as cash. It only appears as so much cash sent by us to our New York house.

Q. And the money was paid on it on presentation instead of being put to the credit of any one?—A. Yes; the identification was satisfactory, and all that I required was an identification of the payee.

Q. How was it paid?—A. In Treasury-notes and bank-notes.

Q. Of any particular magnitude?—A. I do not know; we were asked for large notes.

Q. For thousand-dollar notes or hundred-dollar notes?—A. Mr. Kennedy has reminded me that I told him at the time that he asked for thousand-dollar notes.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Did Charles Abert have any account in your bank in 1872?—A. Yes. Here is an abstract of his account, [handing it to the committee.]

WASHINGTON, January 7, 1875.

HENRY D. COOKE sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. What was your business in 1872?—Answer. I was a partner in the house of Jay Cooke & Co., in Washington.

Q. Look at the checks of the Brooklyn Trust Company, numbered 192 and 193, for $50,000, each drawn on the Marine National Bank of New York, payable to the order of John G. Schumaker, and state whether the indorsement of your bank is on these two checks.—A. It is.

Q. Do you know Mr. Schumaker?—A. No, sir; I do not think I would know him if I saw him.

Q. Do you see your initials in pencil on these checks?—A. Yes; the initials are a guide for the teller. They indicate that he may pay the check.

Q. What do you know in regard to the cashing of these checks by your house?—A. I presume that the checks were presented to be cashed, and that they were cashed by our house in Washington to remit to New York to our credit, as is stated in the indorsement on them. My initials are on the checks simply as an indication of the person, and as an indication that the checks might be paid. It is for the guidance of the teller.

Q. Who presented those checks?—A. I do not recollect. I presume that Mr. Schumaker did, as his is the only indorsement on the checks.

Q. Were they paid in cash or were they credited on your books?—A. I have no recollection of the transaction, but the books will show, and if the committee desire it the fact can be ascertained.

Q. Do you know to whom the money was paid on these checks, if they were paid in cash?—A. I do not. I recollect nothing of the transaction. The books can be produced. They are in town and can be brought here at any time.

Q. I did not understand for what purpose you say you put your initials on these checks.—A. That was a matter of constant occurrence. Whenever a draft was to be paid, or a note to be discounted, or a party to be identified, I put my initials on the paper.

Q. What occasion was there for the identification of the party except the money was paid?—A. I presume the money was paid.

Q. At your bank here?—A. Yes.

Q. Who do you suppose was identified by your initials?—A. I presume it was Mr. Schumaker. The last indorser would be the party to whom we paid the money, and the party to be identified.

Q. Then the indorsement and your memory combined enable you to state that the money was, beyond all reasonable doubt, paid over the counter to Mr. Schumaker here in Washington?—A. Yes.

Q. And that it did not enter on your books in any other way than simply to take notice of the drafts?—A. I presume not. The books will show if it did.

Q. If these checks were paid over the counter there would be no further entry made on the books?—A. No, sir; I will examine the books and see.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Who was then paying-teller of your bank?—A. Mr. Corson was our general book-keeper. Mr. Tenney was our general clerk, and had power of attorney to indorse for the firm as he has done in this case.

Q. Is Mr. Tenney in the city now?—A. No, sir; he is somewhere in the West.

Q. Would he have any knowledge of this transaction?—A. I do not think he would be as likely to have any knowledge of it as Mr. Corson.

Adjourned till January 8.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8, 1875.

RICHARD C. PARSONS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your business and place of residence.—Answer. I am a lawyer. My residence is Cleveland, Ohio.

Q. What was your business during the time that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was procuring its last subsidy legislation in the Forty-second Congress, in the spring of 1872?—A. I was a practicing lawyer, and also occupied the position of marshal of the Supreme Court.

Q. Do you know anything about the procurement of that subsidy?—A. I do.

Witness proceeded to read the following statement:

I am under obligations to the committee for this opportunity of giving my testimony. I have no desire to deny or conceal anything in my connection with this case, and trust the committee will find nothing in my relations to it to censure or criticise. Nearly three years ago Mr. Stockwell, the president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, a gentleman who was an old friend and client of mine of many years' standing, at Cleveland, where we both resided, employed me as his lawyer, to aid him in presenting a measure to Congress asking for an increased subsidy to that company. At the time I had not been even nominated for Congress; had a perfect right to act as his lawyer and counsel, and charge such fees for my services as he and I should agree upon. I told him his project was a matter of great national importance, and if he expected to succeed he must prepare his case with deliberation and thorough care, and have it presented with skill and ability.

My first advice to him was as to the best method of presenting the matter, so as to give the case to Congress in its strongest light, and secure the best assurance of success. Mr. Stockwell I knew to be a liberal, generous, and almost princely man in regard to money, and, if necessary, would have employed a township of men to carry out any project upon which he had fixed his heart. Hence, at the outset, I advised him earnestly against employing any one in the case except the regular authorized agents of the company, who were familiar with its business and resources, and such counsel as were necessary to prepare and properly present his wishes to Congress. I advised him that a large and apparently interested lobby of workers would only prejudice Congress against his bill, and thus defeat the very object for which they would labor. To this he assented. I next advised him to have full, careful, and elaborate statistics of the trade with China, Japan, the Isthmus, &c., prepared for the information of the committees and of Congress. Also, the account of the several sums paid by foreign nations to their several steamship-lines, by way of support, as national subsidies; schedules showing the amounts paid by the United States annually to the ships of England and other countries for freight to and from our shores, and for passengers; to urge upon Congress the vital necessity of giving aid to our steamship-lines, so that we could compete upon favorable terms with the steamships of other countries; to impress strongly upon Congress the fact that by the enlargement and increased usefulness of the company, by means of the additional subsidy asked for, renewed credit would be reflected upon our national ship-building interests, as well as tend to revive its almost ruined condition; to present the present condition of our foreign trade and passenger traffic, showing that we were utterly at the mercy of foreign ships and foreign prices, and that the enormous sums paid for their use in gold was destructive to our commerce, and absolutely injurious to the country at large; that our vast commerce was utterly at the mercy of strangers, and that we could neither export or import a dollar's worth of property in steam-bottoms without their consent and agreement; to contrast the difference between the expense of building ships on our own shores with those upon the Clyde, together with the increased cost of running-expenses, owing to the higher price of labor here and the greater rates of interest upon capital paid in the United States over that abroad; to prove to Congress by facts and figures that no steamship company of the United States could compete with foreign bottoms without substantial aid from the Government; to show the suicidal policy of our Government in refusing to aid the establishment and encouragement of home lines, contrasted with the liberal policy of England and other countries, who paid millions annually by way of subsidies to support the honor of their flag and increase the wealth of their people; that the subsidy would enable the United States to control the vast commerce of the east, making, by way of the Pacific Railroad, the shortest, most direct, and cheapest method of bringing its merchandise to our own shores or sending it directly across our country to Europe, thus making the Pacific Railroad the carriers of the world; to give in detail the sums paid annually by the people of the United States to foreign ships for their use, amounting to over $70,000,000 in gold; to have all these facts elaborated and carefully prepared for the use of the committees and Congress, and to be urged as far as possible upon the attention of individual members.

To do this partially well required a great deal of time and study and labor, and I did all in my power to aid in the proper preparation of the case, and prepared an elaborate argument for the committee, embracing substantially all the reasons in my power to present, and all the facts and statistics essential to a full understanding of the subject. My object was to show the value and importance of the subsidy as one of the highest national importance, reflecting, as I believed it would, honor upon the country and increased wealth to the nation.

I was warmly in favor of the subsidy. So long ago as 1861, while consul of the United States at Rio Janeiro, I had seen the disastrous effect upon our commerce with Brazil of the subsidized steamship-lines of England and France; and I wrote to the State Department, urging upon the Government the propriety of giving direct aid to a line of steamers from our own country, that we might secure a part of the trade of that great empire, and not permit it to fall entirely into the hands of others. Hence, in urging this subsidy for the Pacific Company upon Congress, I was really doing that which I believed to be the wisest policy and for the highest good of the country at large. I did all in my power to urge upon Congress the importance of the measure, and to forward the wishes of my client, and had the satisfaction of seeing the bill become a law.

Some time after the whole matter was concluded, Mr. Stockwell wrote me to send him my account for my fees and expenses, and to make it out in the name of the company. I did so; but cannot recollect whether it was made out here or at Cleveland. I presume the bill can be found on the files of the company in New York. There was no secrecy about the transaction in any manner, either on his part or mine. So well known was my connection with the case, that the whole matter was fully commented upon by the press of my district during my first and second canvass for Congress, and explained by me upon the stump. The charge was that I had been the paid attorney of the company while I was marshal of the Supreme Court, which I readily admitted.

Before proceeding farther, I beg to be allowed a short personal explanation. I have been sharply and most ungenerously criticised because I practiced my profession as a lawyer here while occupying the position of marshal of the Supreme Court, as though I had been guilty of some decided wrong. I was not aware there was the slightest impropriety in my doing so, nor did I suspect that the public would so regard it. I knew it was a common practice for editors to be appointed postmasters and to other places of trust, and to continue to pursue their usual calling; that lawyers were appointed collectors of internal revenue and of customs, yet continued the daily practice of their profession. I was United States commissioner at Cleveland for some years, and sat as an examining magistrate one day and appeared in court to argue cases the next. So long as I honestly and scrupulously discharged every public duty imposed upon me in the several official stations I have held—which I have always tried to do with painstaking fidelity—I felt I was at liberty to make money in my profession, when I could do so without neglecting any duty I owed the public. At all events, I accepted the office of marshal, an office of trifling pay, and which required but a portion of my time, with the distinct understanding with the late Chief Justice that my acceptance of the place should in no manner interfere with the practice of my profession, except in the Supreme Court and the Court of Claims. Neither he nor I felt there was any indelicacy in my preparing cases for congressional action, and in the very few cases I acted I did so with his knowledge.

During my official life in Washington I had observed the most eminent lawyers of the United States, distinguished for their learning and virtues, engaged in preparing and presenting the cases of their clients before Congress; and I understood such had been the practice from the foundation of the Government. I claim, therefore, I had a perfect right to act as I did; that the matter was purely my own private business, and my sole object in making this explanation is to protest against the misrepresentation to which I have been subjected.

I deem it proper to say that Mr. Stockwell paid me for my fees and expenses in the case, $12,000. In addition to this, Mr. Irwin, as the agent of the company, at my request, gave me a draft on New York for $1,500, which I used for my own private purposes. No other moneys belonging to the company ever came into my possession or were controlled by me directly or indirectly.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you pay out any of this money which you received from Mr. Stockwell to any other persons?—A. I did.

Q. To whom did you pay it?—A. The only person to whom I gave money directly was a gentleman who occupied a position of an assistant of mine in Washington, a gentleman who acted as my clerk and secretary, and who rendered me very valuable services in the matter. I gave him for his services $1,500.

Q. Will you state his name?—A. Mr. Burritt, my brother-in-law. I paid him $1,500 for his services. I also think that in making out my account I charged him $2,000 in addition for expenses, for which, I think, I received a separate draft.

Q. Was that in addition to the $12,500?—A. No, sir; the whole amount, including everything, was $13,500, and out of that I paid $1,500 to this gentleman for services, and also about $2,000 for expenses—for printing expenses, expenses in traveling to New York and back, bills at the hotel, carriages, telegrams, and other incidental expenses. No part of it was paid to any person directly or indirectly connected with Congress.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. The draft for $2,000 was sent to you before the passage of the subsidy act?—A. I think so; I think it was sent to me early in May, but I do not recollect. It was sent to me when I asked for it.

Q. And when was the $10,000 paid?—A. I think that originally Mr. Stockwell gave me $5,000 in New York; I do not recollect when he gave me the balance. My fee in the case was $10,000, and my expenses in the case were $3,500. I never had any other money of the company, directly or indirectly.

Q. Did you fix the amount of your fee before or after the service was rendered?—A. My impression is that it was understood between Mr. Stockwell and myself. It was a matter of no sort of importance either to Mr. Stockwell or myself whether it was understood or not; he would have paid any fee that I charged that he thought reasonable.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. When did Mr. Stockwell make that arrangement with you?—A. I do not recollect; it was about three years ago, I think.

Q. This subsidy measure was passed in the last of May, 1872.—A. Yes; I was in Cleveland when it passed. By looking at the record, I find that I left Washington on the 17th of May, 1872, and was not here when the bill passed.

Q. What record do you allude to?—A. The hotel register.

Q. How long were you employed before the subsidy measure passed?—A. Some time; several months.

Q. When was your first bargain or contract with Mr. Stockwell?—A. I think I saw him some time in March, 1872.

Q. Here in Washington?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you first get any money from Mr. Irwin?—A. The only time I ever got any money from Mr. Irwin was when I asked him to give me a draft on New York for $1,500 ; which he did.

Q. When was that ?—A. Perhaps in the latter part of April or the first of May.

Q. You had at that time received no money from Mr. Stockwell ?—A. I had.

Q. How much ?—A. I do not recollect ; I do not recollect how I received that fee. I have tried to recall it, but I have no means of refreshing my recollection.

Q. Had you received all of that fee from Stockwell before Irwin paid you that money ?—A. No ; I think not.

Q. What other citizens of Cleveland were employed or urged, either by you or Mr. Stockwell, to come to Washington to aid in working up the subsidy ?—A. I do not think that any other citizen of Cleveland was employed.

Q. Who was spoken to on the subject ?—A. That I cannot say ; I was not at Cleveland.

Q. Who was spoken to by you ?—A. I asked no one to come here.

Q. Who by Stockwell, that you are aware of ?—A. That I cannot say ; I do not know, except by hearsay, that he ever really spoke to anybody there about it.

Q. You do not know the fact from him ?—A. No ; I do not think I do.

Q. Do you know it from any Cleveland people ?—A. No ; there were several persons in Cleveland who were friendly to the matter, but not as his attorney.

Q. Who were they ?—A. Gentlemen who were known to Mr. Stockwell to be friendly, but I do not know that they did anything in the matter.

Q. Do you recollect who they were ?—A. It would be merely a surmise if I were to state it, because Mr. Stockwell never told me that he asked anybody to come on here, and I know that I never asked anybody to come here.

Q. Did any one ever come from Cleveland ?—A. My impression is that they did.

Q. Who were they ?—A. My impression is that a gentleman from Cleveland came on.

Q. Who else came on ?—A. I do not know that he came on for that matter.

Q. Were the expenses of this gentleman paid for coming on here ?—A. That I do not know, but I think not.

Q. You do not know it either from them or from Mr. Stockwell or of your own knowledge ?—A. I can have no knowledge except from hearsay.

Q. Did I understand you to say that you never received any money in connection with this subsidy beyond the $13,500, in any shape or form ?—A. That is my recollection of it—that that is all the money I ever received from anybody in connection with the service.

Q. Did you ever receive any other money from Irwin ?—A. No, sir ; not a penny.

Q. I have seen a statement that Mr. Irwin has said that you had distributed a very considerable amount of money for him, and therefore I ask you the question.—A. I suppose that you will take my word on that subject. I state to you on my honor as a gentleman, and on my oath as a man, that I never received, directly or indirectly, any money from Mr. Irwin except a draft on New York for $1,500, and that I never distributed in any manner any of the money for which he is responsible, except the $1,500 mentioned.

Q. Were you present at any time when Irwin was paying money to other people?—A. Never.

Q. Or when anybody else was distributing money?—A. Never.

Q. Or the money of the company?—A. No, sir; not a dollar.

Q. The only person to whom you paid any portion of the money was one of your clerks?—A. That is all.

Q. The fee, as you understand it, being about $10,000, and the pay of the clerk and other expenses making $3,500?—A. Yes.

Q. If you know of any person using any money in obtaining this subsidy, or of any member of Congress receiving any, or of anybody offering to pay any member of Congress, you will say so.—A. I have no knowledge whatever on the subject.

Q. Did you ever see any list of names of members in Congress in the hands of Mr. Irwin?—A. That I cannot say. I should think it very likely that I may have done so, because I made out twenty or thirty lists of members of Congress in both houses whom I supposed would vote for the bill. There never was any improper allusion made as to any one of them. These were simply lists of the persons in both houses who were supposed to be favorable to the bill, but there was never anything said in regard to the payment of money to any of them.

Q. You never saw any lists of names purporting to be the names of persons who could be influenced by money?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. Did you make a written argument before any of the committees of Congress on the subject?—A. I prepared an argument to make before the Senate Committee, a very elaborate and exhaustive one, covering all the points. I thought that it was in the office of the marshal of the Supreme Court, and I went to look for it the other day, and I could not find it. It was prepared for the use of the committee, but the committee was found to be so decidedly in favor of the subsidy that the labor seemed to be thrown away. There was really no strong opposition to the subsidy in the committee, as I recollect.

By Mr. WOOD :

Q. State in detail all the services you rendered for that fee of $10,000.—A. That would be impossible.

Q. State them generally.—A. In the first place, I began to prepare, from all the sources that I could find, all the statistics as set forth in my written statement; a very great labor. I also prepared and fitted myself to understand and comprehend the case thoroughly. I not only sent all the papers, documents, pamphlets, and everything connected with the case, with letters, to each member of Congress of both houses, but, whenever I had the opportunity, I took my papers and laid the case before the members in person. I never asked, to the best of my recollection, any member of Congress to vote for that bill or any other bill in my life. I regarded my duty as done when I laid the whole case before a member and asked his attention to it. I did all that I could to secure the passage of the subsidy, and I suppose that I did render very important services in the matter.

Q. Your original agreement was with Mr. Stockwell?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he at Washington during the time that you performed these services?—A. I think he came here once.

Q. Mr. Irwin, however, was here all the while?—A. Yes, sir. I do not know that he was here all the while ; for after the bill passed the Senate, I felt so confident that it would pass the House, as there seemed to be a substantial majority for it, that I went home on the 17th of May. I was not here when it passed, so that I cannot say whether Mr. Irwin was here all the time or not. My impression is that the last time I saw Mr. Irwin was early in May, 1872, and I never saw him again till I saw him the other day on the floor of the House.

Q. Did Mr. Stockwell, in his conversations with you, refer to Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes ; he told me that Mr. Irwin was his agent, and had charge of the bill, and if I wanted to confer on the subject I might confer with him.

Q. And to follow his directions?—A. No, sir ; Mr. Stockwell did not say that, but to confer with him.

Q. You did co-operate with Mr. Irwin in Mr. Stockwell's business?—A. Certainly.

Q. You had frequent conversations with Mr. Irwin?—A. I do not think they were very frequent, but I saw him several times.

Q. Did he converse with you in reference to the subsidy?—A. Yes ; sometimes.

Q. Do you recollect that in those interviews he ever stated to you the name of any member of Congress whom he expected to be for or against you in the matter?—A. I think he did say, repeatedly, in looking over the list of members, that these gentlemen were for the measure and those gentlemen against it. My recollection is that when any gentleman was supposed to be against the bill measures were taken to have him waited on and talked to.

Q. And you were consulted by Mr. Irwin in regard to accomplishing change of opinion with members of Congress?—A. Sometimes.

Q. Do you recollect the names of those gentlemen?—A. No ; the whole matter passed out of my mind, so far as individuals were concerned.

Q. You do recollect some of them?—A. When you come to the names of gentlemen, I have no recollection whatever about it.

Q. You conversed with Mr. Irwin as to the probability of the votes of members of Congress of both houses?—A. Yes ; I think I did, two or three times. My recollection is that I looked over the list, and told him those members who I thought would vote for the measure.

Q. Did you ever call on members with Mr. Irwin?—A. I think I never did.

Q. Did Mr. Irwin at any time consult with you as to the expenditure of money on account of the subsidy?—A. No, sir ; never.

Q. Were you aware at the time that he was expending money?—A. No, from no personal knowledge, except that he was living handsomely.

Q. I mean, expending money in order to procure votes?—A. No, sir ; he never said a word to me on the subject of expending a dollar to corrupt a member.

Q. You are aware, I suppose, that the measure was lost in the House in the first instance?—A. I did not recollect about that, but I believe such was the fact.

Q. And that it was subsequently passed in the Senate?—A. I recollect that now.

Q. You were in favor of the measure?—A. Yes, sir ; I was decidedly in favor of it.

Q. Do you recollect members of the houses of Congress individually who changed their views between the first rejection of the bill in the House and its subsequent passage?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection.

Q. Did you not have at the time close conferences with Mr. Irwin as to the effect of a change of some votes in the House?—A. I think not. I would state it to you frankly if I had. I have no disguise in the matter at all. My connection with the case was perfectly open and transparent to everybody. I did nothing in the matter that was not perfectly proper, and I would state anything that I could recollect with perfect fairness.

Q. You have no reservation to make growing out of your position as counsel?—A. I did nothing as counsel that I cannot properly state to you. I was not called upon to do anything improper.

Q. In this private conversation which you had with Mr. Irwin and with members of Congress nothing improper occurred?—A. I never had any private conference with a member of Congress in the presence of Mr. Irwin. When I wanted anything of a member of Congress, I went to him myself, and told him what I wanted, and when I had done so I went away.

Q. Did you, in that case, go to any member of Congress yourself?—A. Certainly, I did, several times.

Q. Did you effect any changes?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Do you believe that you did?—A. I cannot say that. I laid the case before the members of Congress in the best way I could, and gave my reasons why I thought the measure right and proper and why I thought it ought to be voted for.

Q. Did you communicate every instance of the kind to Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it not a part of your duty to do so?—A. No, sir; I had no duty toward Mr. Irwin.

Q. He represented Mr. Stockwell.—A. No; I represented Mr. Stockwell, and he represented the company.

Q. But Mr. Stockwell represented the company, and made an arrangement with you in behalf of the company, for which he gave you $10,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Had he subsequently directed you to advise with Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, whenever I felt it necessary.

Q. Did you not advise with Mr. Irwin in reference to members of Congress?—A. Yes, in the manner I have stated.

Q. In what manner?—A. I looked over the lists with him two or three times, and gave my opinion as to the strength of the bill in each house, and he gave me his.

Q. You compared views with each other?—A. Yes.

Q. You made suggestions to him?—A. Very likely.

Q. Do you think he acted on them?—A. I do not know.

Q. What is your opinion?—A. I really do not recollect anything about it. The matter did not press itself very strongly on my mind at the time.

Q. You had very substantial reasons for being so energetic?—A. I did my duty as far as I knew how, and earned my money as well as I could.

Q. I do not wish you to understand that I mean to impute any wrong motive to you in your endeavor to accomplish the passage of the bill. What I want to get at is this, how far Mr. Irwin acted on any suggestion of yours in corrupting members of Congress.—A. If you desire to have it put in that way, and wish the imputation to rest on me—

Mr. WOOD. I distinctly disavow that; but I wish to know whether, in consequence of any recommendation or suggestion or opinion of yours as to individual members, Mr. Irwin corrupted any members, for it is quite evident to us that he did succeed in corrupting some members of Congress.

The WITNESS. I say to you, as I said before, that I know nothing whatever of his corrupting any member of Congress, or of his offering to corrupt any member of Congress; nor do I know of any member of Congress being corrupted by him; nor did any intimation of mine point to a man who could or could not be influenced by money. Does that cover it?

Mr. WOOD. That is not exactly an answer to my question.

The WITNESS. I am entirely willing to answer without the slightest equivocation.

Mr. WOOD. Independent and outside of the mere question of corruption, do you think that, in consequence of your statements to Mr. Irwin as to members of Congress in either house, Mr. Irwin succeeded, either by your arguments, your statistics, or your facts, or by other influences which he may have used, in obtaining votes?—A. I do not think that I ever gave to Mr. Irwin any intimation of any member of Congress who could be in the slightest degree influenced by any money consideration.

Q. I have not asked you that. My question is this: Do you think that, in consequence of the statistics and facts and arguments which you yourself furnished, Mr. Irwin did succeed in obtaining any votes which he would not otherwise have obtained?—A. It is impossible for me to say. I can only be answerable for what I did myself.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Do you know of anybody else being employed as attorney or agent in that matter, except yourself and Mr. Irwin?—A. That is all I now recollect. I never knew of the employment of the other gentlemen whose names I have seen in the papers.

Q. Then you were not authorized to employ other counsel, and you did not employ other counsel?—A. No, sir; I did not. I should have employed any one if I deemed it necessary.

Q. Did you know Mr. Abert as the attorney of the company?—A. I did not know him, and I do not think that I ever saw him.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Mr. Niblack asked you in reference to the employment of counsel. I will make the question broader. Did you employ any person to assist in procuring this subsidy?—A. No one whatever.

Q. And you did not assist in any arrangement for the employment of any person?—A. Not that I am aware of, in the slightest degree.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. You spoke of looking over the list. Did you mean by that the rolls of the members?—A. Simply the rolls of members of the House and Senate. For instance, there were a certain number of avowed friends of the measure, who were well known. They were all marked off. Then there was a class of gentleman who were doubtful. They were marked doubtful. Then there were those who were supposed to be friendly, but who had not been called upon in any manner, and whose opinions were not known. They were marked in a different way, simply and merely for the purpose of calling upon those gentleman, or of having them called upon, that they might be asked how they stood upon the measure. For instance, if I desired to call upon Mr. Kelley, as a gentleman whom I had known for twenty years, I should have called upon Mr. Kelley, and asked him whether he was for or against the subsidy. If he said that he was against the subsidy, and if he gave me time to explain it, I should have explained it to him. If he had said that he was against it; that he did not want to hear anything about it, and that he had his mind made up, he would have been checked upon the list as opposed to the measure. The lists were simply the roll-calls of the two Houses.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you retained before the month of February, 1872, or after it?—A. I cannot recollect without going home to Cleveland, or going to the office of the company in New York. I do not recollect how early I was retained in the case.

Q. Can you give us no idea?—A. No, sir; I tried to think this morning.

Q. The agreement was between you and Mr. Stockwell personally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And when it was made it had no reference to the company, but to Mr. Stockwell individually?—A. It was made by himself individually.

Q. Then why did he, after the passage of the measure, ask you to make out your account against the company?—A. I suppose that whatever he paid me he wanted the company to pay, as the services were really for the company.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. In the course of your conferences with Mr. Irwin, what other gentlemen did you meet acting as co-counsel with yourself?—A. Nobody whatever, that I recall. I cannot recollect a single gentleman whom I met with Mr. Irwin, except Captain Bradbury, who was afterward elected president of the company.

Q. Did Irwin ever tell you whom he had employed, or whom he was going to employ, to aid him in obtaining this subsidy?—A. He never did. To my recollection he never spoke to me on the subject.

Q. Did he never suggest that it was going to cost a large amount of money, and that he was getting other people to work and putting money in their hands?—A. I do not recollect anything of the sort.

Q. You know that the fact is that he did pay out large amounts of money?—A. I have seen such a statement, but I was absolutely ignorant of any knowledge of it at the time. I have no knowledge whatever on the subject, except by hearsay.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Can you tell about the time that you were paid by Mr. Stockwell?—A. I am so confused about those payments that I am not altogether clear that I received $12,000 outside of the $1,500, or whether the $1,500 did not go into the $12,000. My own impression is that you will find everything that came to me charged to me directly on the books of the company, and I think you will find the bill which I rendered on the files of the company. If there is the slightest discrepancy between the books and my recollection, I should be most happy to correct it. My impression is that Mr. Stockwell paid me the bulk of my fee in New York, but I cannot recollect about the time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you have any stock speculations with Mr. Stockwell?—A. Several times.

Q. During the pendency of this subsidy measure?—A. Both before and during the time and afterward.

Q. To what extent?—A. I do not know how much it was; not very much.

Q. Can you give any estimate of it?—A. That is my private business, and I do not think that it is quite the business of this committee to inquire into it. I both made money and lost money on the stock, and the outcome was worse than the beginning.

Q. Were you, during this time, Mr. Stockwell's attorney?—A. Mr. Stockwell advised with me as to his own private business and the conduct of his own affairs. I had been his attorney in Cleveland previously.

Q. During the pendency of this subsidy measure you had no private business of his to attend to?—A. Not the slightest; nothing but this matter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8, 1875.

JOHN G. SCHUMAKER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your residence and business.—Answer. I am a practicing lawyer, and have been for twenty-five years, in the cities of New York and Brooklyn. I am an attorney of the supreme court of the State of New York and an attorney of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Q. Were you a member of the Forty-first Congress?—A. I was.

Q. Are you a member of the Forty-third Congress?—A. I am.

Q. Are you a member-elect to the Forty-fourth Congress?—A. I am.

Q. You were not a member in the Forty-second Congress?—A. I was not.

Q. Do you know William S. King, the former postmaster of the House of Representatives?—A. I do.

Q. Did you, in the month of May, 1872, go with Mr. King to the American Exchange National Bank of New York?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you at the American Exchange National Bank in New York in the month of May, 1872, at any time with Mr. King?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge.

Q. Were you at the American Exchange National Bank during the month of May for any purpose?—A. I do not recollect the bank, but I have a remembrance of being at a bank in New York, by the direction of a client, in reference to the certification of a check. My impression was that it was the Bank of Commerce.

Q. Did you ever have in your possession a check drawn by Mr. Richard B. Irwin for $275,000?—A. I had a check which was given to me by a client, in the confidential relation of client and attorney, and I went to some bank in New York (my impression was that it was the Bank of Commerce) to get the check certified.

Q. In order to identify the check I am inquiring of, I ask you if you

Q. Have you ever had more than one check for that amount?—A. Not at that particular time.

Q. Then there will be no confusion about it. If you never had but one check for that amount, was that check drawn by Richard B. Irwin?—A. I am under the impression that it was.

Q. Was it payable to your order?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it payable to his own order?—A. I cannot recollect.

Q. Was it indorsed by Mr. Irwin?—A. I cannot recollect.

Q. Was it so indorsed as to be payable to bearer, while in your hands?—A. My impression is that it was.

Q. You think that you had that check in the month of May, 1872?—

A. I had a check of that description.

Q. Of that amount?—A. Yes.

Q. The only one you ever had of that amount?—A. Yes.

Q. You took that check to get certified?—A. I did.

Q. What bank do you think that was?—A. As I told you before, I have no distinct recollection of the bank; my impression was, until lately, that it was the Bank of Commerce; but I have no distinct recollection.

Q. Was it the bank on which the check was drawn?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. You think it was drawn by Richard B. Irwin?—A. I do not say that.

Q. What did you say?—A. That is my impression.

Q. Did you receive it from Richard B. Irwin?—A. That relates to confidential relations of client and counsel.

Q. If it were not for the confidential relations between client and counsel, would you tell from whom you received it?—A. I would.

Q. You could tell?—A. I could tell, and would tell if my clients were willing that I should tell.

Q. Without waiving the question, I will ask you one or two more questions. Was it received by you in compensation of any service to the person from whom you received it?—A. I cannot say that it was for services to the person from whom I received it.

Q. Did you receive it in compensation for your services?—A. I received it for my clients.

Q. I am not asking who your clients were, I am merely asking whether you received it in compensation for your services.—A. Not the whole of it.

Q. Any part of it?—A. Yes.

Q. What part of it?—A. A small amount.

Q. How much?—A. I cannot say. You have a copy of my bank-book.

Q. How much do you think you received for your services?—A. My impression is that it was in the neighborhood of $10,000. You have my bank-book, and all my accounts.

Q. About $10,000 for your own personal services?—A. Yes.

Q. The rest of it was for some other purpose than in compensation for your own personal services?—A. That relates to confidential communications between myself and my clients.

Q. Was there more than $10,000 for your personal services?—A. I think about that sum.

Q. Do you think it would exceed that?—A. Not a great deal.

Q. In order to come to a limit, did it exceed $15,000?—A. My impression as to the amount is, that it was in the neighborhood of $10,000.

Q. Then the difference between $275,000 and about $10,000 was received for some other purpose than for your personal services?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You got that check certified, did you?—A. I did not.

Q. What did you do with it?—A. I took it to the Brooklyn Trust Company, by direction of my clients, and had it broken up at their direction, and directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to send the broken-up checks to my client, reserving about $10,000, I think.

Q. You did that without having the $275,000 check certified?—A. I did not get it certified myself.

Q. When you took it to the Brooklyn Trust Company was it certified?—A. It was not certified.

Q. Did you in that month take any other check for $275,000 to the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, whatever check you presented to the Brooklyn Trust Company during that month is the one that we are examining about?—A. Yes.

Q. And you think that that one was not a certified check?—A. I think it was not.

Q. You directed them to break it up, and to send all of it, except about $10,000, to your client?—A. Yes.

Q. The same client from whom you received it?—A. Well, I would not say that; that is a construction of law. It was not the person from whom I received it.

Q. Give us data enough, so that we can form a legal opinion about it.—A. I would say that it was not sent to the person from whom I received it.

Q. Was it sent to the clients from whom it came?—A. It was sent, under instructions from my clients, by the Brooklyn Trust Company to my clients again, in small checks.

Q. Returned to the same clients?—A. Yes, sir. Well, that is not exactly a fair question, after what I have said previous to my being sworn; I told you that I was counsel for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and for Richard B. Irwin.

Q. Then we will not have any confusion about it; did you direct the Brooklyn Trust Company to send it to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. The confidential relations between client and counsel again come up here. If I am forced to answer that question, I will answer it with pleasure; but I have some notions of honor and some notions in respect to my oath as an attorney of the Supreme Court; if I am compelled to answer the question, there is no harm in my doing so.

The CHAIRMAN. You and I understand that all this is confidential between you and me, and that there is nothing personal in the examination.

The WITNESS. Certainly not.

Q. I will not trench upon the relations of client and counsel now; I simply ask you what instruction you yourself gave to the Brooklyn Trust Company.—A. I gave the Brooklyn Trust Company instructions to send the checks to clients of mine in the city of New York.

Q. Tell us who they were whom you instructed the Brooklyn Trust Company to send them to.—A. I do not think I ought to do that, for various reasons.

Q. I am not asking you anything that passed between you and your client, but only as to what passed between you and the Brooklyn Trust Company.—A. What passed between me and the Brooklyn Trust Company was that which I did as attorney and counsel for certain clients.

Q. I know that, but I only wish to know what you did. I do not ask you what passed between yourself and your clients.—A. Whatever I did was done as attorney and counsel for my clients—for the men whom I represented.

The CHAIRMAN. I know that, but I am not asking for any communication between you and your clients, only for what you did yourself.

WITNESS. We certainly understand one another. You have repeated that two or three times. I was the personification of my clients. I did nothing as John Schumaker, but I acted for men for whom I was paid and employed to attend to business.

Q. Without waiving that question, I will come to another. You say that you directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to break up that check and to send it all to your clients except about $10,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know how you directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to break it up—into what forms?—A. I did not give them any personal instructions. I had a memorandum from my client, or something, to indicate what was to be done. I cannot recollect it now particularly.

Q. Did you have $150,000 passed to your own credit there?—A. No, sir; I did not give any instructions to have anything passed to my credit.

Q. Did you have any sum passed to your credit?—A. It seems that I did.

Q. How much?—A. $125,000.

Q. That sum was passed to your own credit?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think that the bank officials did not follow your instructions about that?—A. Not as to that particular matter.

Q. They misunderstood you in passing $125,000 to your credit?—A. It seems that they have done so.

Q. That would leave $150,000 out of the $275,000. What did you tell them to do with the rest?—A. I know that they broke the check, and passed $125,000 to my credit.

Q. How much would that leave?—A. They made three distinct checks, payable to my order, on the Marine National Bank, for $50,000 each.

Q. What did you do with those checks?—A. I directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to pass them to my client.

Q. Were they drawn while you were there?—A. I never drew but one of the checks of the whole number that were broken up.

Q. Of the three?—A. Of all of them.

Q. What was the form of the distribution of the $150,000?—A. They were sent to my clients.

Q. In what form?—A. I do not know. The whole thing was sent to my clients together. When I found that I had to my credit $125,000, I said to the officers of the bank that there was a mistake about it. Then they made out small checks, as I directed, and they sent them all to my clients—my own personal checks, as the result of the breaking up of the $275,000.

Q. Let this $125,000 repose to your credit for a moment, and direct your attention to the $150,000, and tell me the precise form in which that was distributed.—A. It was sent to my clients in the city of New York by the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Q. I ask you in what form.—A. My recollection is that there were three checks of $50,000, drawn to my order on the Marine National Bank of New York.

Q. Were they drawn while you were at the office of the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. I think not; they were prepared for me, and I indorsed them.

Q. At another time, and before you deposited that check?—A. I did not deposit that check in the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Q. Where did you deposit it?—A. I gave it to the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company, and told them to break it up in small checks.

Q. You gave it to the officers of the company and told them to break it up, and the question I ask of you is, what was the particular form in which the $150,000 was broken up and transmitted? You say it was in three checks, payable to your order; and now the next question that I ask is, whether those checks were drawn at that time or not?—A. I think they were drawn after the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company were satisfied that there was such an amount to their credit in the Marine National Bank, that they could give those checks.

Q. How long after you handed this $275,000 check to the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company was it that these three checks were drawn?—A. I am under the impression that it was on the same day or the next day; I am not certain.

Q. Were they drawn while you were there?—A. I think not.

Q. Were they handed to you by the officers of the company?—A. They were shown to me—not handed to me—and my indorsement was requested, and I indorsed them there.

Q. Where were they shown to you?—A. In the office of the Brooklyn Trust Company, I think.

Q. You there indorsed them?—A. I did.

Q. And left them there?—A. Yes.

Q. What instructions did you give about them?—A. To send the checks to my clients.

Q. To whom did you direct them to be sent?—A. There the question comes up again. I directed them to be sent to my clients in the city of New York.

Q. These [presenting them to the witness] are the three $50,000 checks, are they not?—A. It seems so; there is no doubt about it.

Q. Did you give directions to have those three checks sent to any person or to different persons?—A. To no particular person. I would not like to say that exactly. I directed them to be sent to my clients in the city of New York.

Q. Did you direct that they should be sent to different directions or all to one direction?—A. All to one direction.

Q. Why did you have three checks?—A. I had three checks by the direction of my client.

Q. Was that the same client that gave you the $275,000 paper?—A. No, sir.

Q. A different client?—A. Yes.

Q. One client gave you the $275,000 paper, and by the direction of that client you sent these three checks to another client?—A. Yes, with other checks.

Q. What other checks did you send with them?—A. Personal checks of my own on the $125,000 which had been placed to my credit.

Q. How much did you send with them?—A. As I have told you, I sent all of the $125,000, with the exception of about $10,000; that was my impression.

Q. Did you send it all to the one direction?—A. Yes.

Q. At the one time?—A. Yes.

Q. Then the checks that you sent with these three $50,000 checks, bear the same date with these, do they?—A. The checks were made out by the officers of the company, and I signed them. I think they were all of the same date, but I am not certain about it.

Q. The checks will show?—A. I would not say that the checks were made out on that date. I do not recollect the dates. I cannot tell the dates of those checks.

Q. How many other checks did you send with them?—A. Several.

Q. How many?—A. I cannot tell; not many.

Q. What was the size of any of them?—A. Some were over $20,000.

Q. You say that you told the officers of the bank that this $125,000 was placed to your credit by mistake, and you took this method to correct the mistake; did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You checked out the amount and sent it with the other checks?—A. Yes.

Q. That ought to have been done when the $275,000 check was originally deposited.—A. Yes; that is my impression.

Q. Then what occasion had you to correct the mistake in several different checks that were sent to the same client?—A. I have already answered you that I was directed to break it up.

Q. You found that there was a mistake, and that $125,000 had been passed to your credit, of which you were not entitled to more than about $10,000. The rest belonged to your client, you say, and to correct that mistake you drew several checks and put them in along with these three?—A. Yes.

Q. My question is, how came you to draw several checks?—A. By the direction of my clients in the city of New York. I was directed how to break up the $275,000 check.

Q. Did you have any communication with your clients after you found out the mistake?—A. There was no mistake about it, only as to form.

Q. I understood you to say that there was a mistake in passing $125,000 to your credit?—A. All the checks should have been drawn in the same way as the three.

Q. That was the mistake I allude to. You found out afterward that by mistake $125,000 had been passed to your own personal credit?—A. It was not a mistake. It was a mere mistake in form.

Q. I am speaking of a mistake in form. When did you find out that mistake in form?—A. At the same time that I called at the bank and indorsed these checks.

Q. How much time had elapsed between the time when you put the $275,000 in the hands of the Brooklyn Trust Company and the time when you called in and indorsed these checks?—A. I do not know; twenty-four hours. It may have been the same day.

Q. In the mean time had you any communication with your client, to whom you were instructed to send these checks?—A. I cannot say that; I cannot be positive about it.

Q. You cannot be positive whether within that twenty-four hours you had any communication with him?—A. I cannot.

Q. State how you happened to correct the mistake in form by giving several different-sized checks.—A. You know that I have already told you there was no mistake about it on my part. The particular manner of breaking up the checks was a mistake on the part of the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Q. I inquired about the correcting of the mistake which the Brooklyn Trust Company had unconsciously fallen into.—A. I do not know that it was much of a mistake. I did not consider it a very serious mistake. I did not make any trouble about it.

The CHAIRMAN. When I inquire whether it was serious or not, an answer on that point will be in order.

WITNESS. I know that, but I say voluntarily that I did not consider it a mistake of any importance, only that I preferred it in a different form.

Q. I am asking you whether when you corrected this immaterial mistake you corrected it by telling the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company to draw it out in different checks of different amounts?—A. I did that under the instructions of my client.

Q. I inquired of you a moment ago if you had any instructions from your client between the time you deposited that $225,000 and the time when you found that it was a mistake in their crediting you with the $175,000, and you told me that you had not.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then your client instructed you beforehand?—A. I had instructions when I went to break up the check for $275,000.

Q. Had your client any knowledge beforehand that the Brooklyn Trust Company was going to fall into any such mistake as to pass $125,000 to your credit?—A. I do not know anything about what my client did.

Q. Your client couldn't have thought that?—A. I don't know what my client may have thought or what he may not have thought. I know what I thought and what I did.

Q. I am inquiring how your client came to give you instructions beforehand which would cover this mistake on the part of the Brooklyn Trust Company in placing $125,000 to your credit.—A. You will have to inquire of my client about that.

Q. Were the instructions in writing from your client?—A. I cannot be certain as to that.

Q. Did you have any instructions of any kind in writing from your client?—A. I have no decided recollection about what the instructions were, but when the instructions were fresh on my mind I did as I supposed my clients directed, and it was satisfactory.

Q. Do you say that no part of the $125,000 which the Brooklyn Trust Company passed to your credit as part of the proceeds of that $275,000 check went to your own personal use in any way, except $10,000 or thereabouts for your fee?—A. I do.

Q. No other part of it beyond the $10,000 or thereabouts went to your own personal use?—A. I say so.

Q. It went to the use of other persons?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us who they were.—A. I cannot, for I do not know.

Q. Tell us to whose use you directed it to be placed?—A. I directed it to the use of no person, except one check which I recollect.

Q. Which check was that?—A. I collected one of the $50,000 checks from Riggs & Co., and paid it as directed.

Q. I am not speaking of the three $50,000 checks, but of the $125,000 that was left to your credit after the three $50,000 checks were drawn out. You say that of all that $125,000 credit no part of it went to your own personal use, except about $10,000.—A. Yes; that is my confident opinion.

Q. Now, we will leave that $10,000 entirely at rest. That leaves about $115,000 to your personal credit in the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose so.

Q. And of that sum you say that no part was ever diverted by you for your own personal use, directly or indirectly?—A. I am as positive as a person can be of any transaction. I do not think it possible that I used any of that money. I never do use money belonging to my clients.

Q. If you did not use it yourself you directed it to be used by somebody else, did you?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did the Brooklyn Trust Company transfer it from your credit without your order?—A. I suppose they transferred it on checks that I gave.

Q. The Brooklyn Trust Company transferred it either on its own motion or on your order?—A. I suppose the money was drawn out on checks, which I made payable either to my own order or to bearer.

Q. In either case that would be your order?—A. Yes.

Q. Then it was diverted from your credit by your order?—A. Yes.

Q. And the avails of it you did not have?—A. I did not.

Q. Now one step farther. Tell us who did have the avails of it.—A. My clients in the city of New York.

Q. Any one client, or different clients?—A. You know that the plural is applied to corporations and the singular to individuals.

Q. What is the corporation?—A. I will not say unless I am obliged to.

Q. Was it to one person or corporation—was it to different beings or to one being?—A. If I were not standing in the relation that I am, of client and counsel, I would very frankly tell you; and I will tell you if my client permits me.

Q. Have you had any conference with your clients on the question whether you may tell or not?—A. Yes.

Q. Have your clients requested you not to tell?—A. Yes, one of my clients has.

Q. This one to whom you paid the money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, so far as this client is concerned, you are at liberty to tell?—

A. Yes; but, you know, I ought not to tell without permission; and it is doubtful whether I have then even the right to tell.

Q. Then you decline to tell to whom you paid the money?—A. Yes; for the reason that I am standing in the position of attorney and client. With the consent of my client I will tell.

Q. I do not ask you for communication between yourself and your client. I ask you the fact to whom you paid it. This person or corporation or being to whom you paid it, was it the same entity from whom you received it?—A. That is a very grave question of law in my mind.

Q. I know it, and I put it to you as a lawyer; do you not know whether it was or not?—A. It is a matter which would be open to a very wide range of debate. If it was in the House of Representatives, I think you would make a speech on either side.

Q. Give us the benefit of your answer to the question. In your opinion, was it the same entity that you received it from (whether that be person, corporation, or being) that you directed it to be sent to?—

A. I would rather not answer the question.

Q. If you ever had any instructions from your clients to keep that matter dark——

The WITNESS. That is going into confidential relations; you know you ought not to ask me that question.

The CHAIRMAN. I am only asking as to facts.

The WITNESS. But you threw out the idea that I have been engaged in a very dark transaction.

The CHAIRMAN. O, no.

The WITNESS. Yes, you do; you say that this is a dark transaction between my client and myself. It was not; and with the permission of my client I could tell the whole story. I even went and saw parties in relation to the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. I have not the slightest desire to intimate anything of the kind. We have a duty to perform here——

The WITNESS. You know that I ought not to be asked for a communication between client and counsel.

The CHAIRMAN. We have a duty which is entirely official.

The WITNESS. I know that; our relations are of the pleasantest kind, and have been for years.

The CHAIRMAN. I dislike to put questions that may seem unpleasant.

The WITNESS. It is a very unpleasant thing for me. I assure you it is not the sweetest morsel to roll under my tongue.

The CHAIRMAN. You would oblige me very much if you would give me your own opinion whether this was the same being or not.—A. It was not the same being.

Q. The same entity; the same creation?—A. It would be rather a fine distinction to say it was not.

Q. Assuming that it would be a fine distinction, do you mean to say that it would be a distinction without a difference?—A. No, I do not mean to say that.

Q. Would it be a distinction with a difference?—A. Being the representative of my clients, I would probably say that it had a difference.

Q. State wherein that difference consisted.—A. If I could have an argument with you to any great extent, I would do so.

Q. You say it would be a distinction with a difference. I ask you to state what that difference consists in.—A. I do not think that I have a right, standing here, as I do, as counsel for one man who is now in jail, and as the counsel of a soulless corporation, and as the counsel of another man who is in Europe, to give any opinion on the subject.

Q. Whom do you represent when you say that the confidential relations between client and counsel do not permit you to tell?—A. That is a very ingenious question, and asked for the purpose of finding out this client.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; I want to find out whether it is Irwin or the "soulless corporation."

The WITNESS. That is another ingenious question to get an answer from me.

The CHAIRMAN. I know it is; and I ask you which it was. Do you decline answering that?

The WITNESS. I do not wish to object to any reasonable, fair question; but I think you ought to consider my position here.

Mr. NIBLACK. I call your attention to this distinction, that the confidential communication between attorney and client does not preclude an attorney from stating who his client was.

The WITNESS. There are some decisions on the subject; but if the committee come to the conclusion that I ought to answer, I will do so.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you ought to tell us who your clients are.

Mr. NIBLACK. I am anxious that you should appear like yourself in this matter.

The WITNESS. Well; I gave directions to the Brooklyn Trust Company to have these checks all sent to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And you received the $275,000 check from Mr. Irwin or from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I should not like to say from whom I received that check.

Q. Did you receive it from a different client to the one that you sent those checks to?—A. I will endeavor to get the permission of my client to state from whom I did receive that check. I have not been able to get it yet.

Q. To what officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company did you send those checks?—A. I will not be positive, but my impression is that I gave directions to the Brooklyn Trust Company to have them sent to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, to Mr. Stockwell, or as he might direct.

Q. Do you mean to say that you were directed by the person from whom you received this $275,000 check to divert the whole of it back to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, except the $10,000 that was for your own personal services?—A. No, I do not mean to say that. I had such instructions.

Q. From whom did you get those instructions?—A. Those instructions I received as attorney and counsel for the parties for whom I was transacting business in the city of New York.

Q. The parties from whom you received the $275,000 paper?—A. I have said that I did not get such instructions from the party from whom I received the paper.

Q. You received those instructions from a different party?—A. Yes.

Q. What instructions did you receive from the party who gave you the paper?—A. Scarcely any at all.

Q. The paper was given to you by him without instructions?—A. I will not say that; I do not recollect any particular instructions.

Q. Were you directed by the party who gave you the $275,000 paper to make any disposition of its avails?—A. I do not recollect what the instructions were from the party from whom I received the paper.

Q. Did you have instructions from anybody else before you received the paper what to do with the avails when you did receive it?—A. I cannot be positive in regard to that.

Q. Did you receive instructions from anybody after you received the paper as to what disposition you were to make of its avails?—A. I think I did.

Q. What person was that?—A. I think it was my client in the city of New York.

Q. What person was it?—A. I am not at liberty to state.

Q. You have just told us one client; why not tell the other?—A. I told you the name of my client, but I did not tell you the communications between us.

Q. I do not ask you what the instructions were, but only the name of the client who gave you the instructions how to dispose of the avails of this $275,000 check.—A. I would like to tell you if I could, but it relates to confidential communications.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not ask you what the communications are.

The WITNESS. Yes, you do.

The CHAIRMAN. I only ask you the name of the client.

The WITNESS. You have asked me what client in the city of New York gave me the instructions.

The CHAIRMAN. The reason that I have asked you all these questions is the difficulty of getting an answer.

The WITNESS. I hope you do not consider that I am an unnecessarily unwilling witness.

The CHAIRMAN. O, no.

Q. Is there any more reason why you should retain the name of one client than there is why you should retain the name of the other?—A. No, sir.

Mr. BECK. It seems perfectly evident that Mr. Schumaker is going to make an issue to the committee about our right to inquire into this matter. Had we not better make the issue, and let the House decide it? [To the witness:] You wish the House to decide upon it, do you not?

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. My idea was that there was a good deal which Mr. Schumaker might tell us before we made that issue.

The WITNESS. If it were not for the sanctity of communications between client and counsel, I would tell you all that I know about this matter as freely as I would talk about any subject; but if I reveal confidential communications I would be scandalized throughout the world as a man without honor toward my client.

The CHAIRMAN. I supposed we would ultimately come to that issue with you; but I thought there would be a good deal of information that you would be very glad to give us before we came to that issue.

The WITNESS. I am glad to give you information. I particularly want to say that I never drew the money on those checks from Jay Cooke & Co. I never bribed any officer or member of the Forty-second Congress, or attempted to bribe any officer or member of the Forty-second Congress.

Adjourned until 9th January.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 9, 1875.

JOHN G. SCHUMAKER recalled.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you desire to correct any statement or to change any statement which you made yesterday?—Answer. I have not read my testimony of yesterday, and I do not know that there is anything in it to be changed; but I wish to state that when I testified yesterday I had not seen my bank-account, but I have since seen it and have read some of the evidence.

Q. With your mind refreshed by that, do you desire to modify any of your testimony?—A. I do not know, as I have not yet read my evidence.

Q. Do you wish to add anything to it?—A. Yes; by permission of my clients, I undertake to make the following statement: On the 28th of May, 1872, I was handed a check by Richard B. Irwin, agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, of New York, for the sum of $275,000, on the American Exchange Bank of the city of New York, signed by Richard B. Irwin. I was directed by my clients to have the same broken up into a number of other smaller checks. I went to the American Exchange National Bank to get the check certified. That was on the 29th of May, 1872. I went to that bank unaccompanied. I left my office, 17 William street, alone. I went to the bank alone, and I returned to my office alone. There were quite a number of people going in and out of the bank. I never saw the cashier or the president of the bank as I now recollect, but I saw the assistant cashier, who did not certify the check, for the reason that he did not know me, or that his superiors were absent, and that the check was of such a large amount that he did not like to take the responsibility of cashing it in the absence of the president or cashier. That is my recollection of the interview which transpired on that occasion. If Colonel King, the postmaster of the House of Representatives, was in the bank at the time, I do not recollect having seen him. He may have been there, but I do not recollect the fact. He had nothing whatever to do with the business which I was there to transact, and I do not recollect of having seen him at that time in the city. I next took the check to one of the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company, Mr. Mills, whom I met in New York that day, and then and there I gave him the check, with instructions to break the same up, and he promised that he would do so under directions, which I then and there gave him. On the following day, May 30, he broke up the check, making three checks on the Marine National Bank for $50,000 each, and drawing further checks of my own on my account, which I signed. I directed him to return the same to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I think that in the aggregate the checks amounted to about $265,000. Mr. Mills did as I requested him. He returned said checks, broken up, to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the city of New York. On the same day, the 30th of May, one of the $50,000 checks was handed to me in my office, 17 William street, by one of the persons employed by said company, whose name I cannot now recollect, with instructions to go to the office of Lyman Elmore, in the city of New York, a person doing business in the city of New York and Washington, and to pay the check to some persons whom Mr. Elmore represented at that time. I did so. Mr. Elmore was not in his office. I was then instructed to go to Washington, which I did that night or the day following. I took the check to the banking house of Riggs & Co., by direction of Mr. Elmore, and received the money in bills. I was identified by Mr. Kennedy. I returned to Mr. Elmore's office and paid the money which I had received from the bank to a gentleman whom he introduced to me in his office. In examining my bank-account, which I have not seen until recently, I find that it does not show all the checks drawn by me. Some of the money was allowed to remain in the bank by some persons holding back the checks until the fall of that year, as I was informed by the officers of the bank. I will indicate on my bank-account the checks that represent the deposit of $125,000, as shown by my bank-account up to June 19, 1872. I think that the account is deficient in only two checks, one for $5,000 and one for $10,000, which had not been presented up to that time, but which were subsequently presented and paid.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Does your bank-account contain any charge against you of any check which you did not draw ?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then it is true that of that $275,000, there stood to your credit on the 30th of May, 1872, $125,000 ?—A. It was as I told you yesterday.

Q. That is true, is it ?—A. It seems to be so.

Q. Then I wish to call your attention to the state of your bank-account. On one side was a credit of $125,000, and on the other side, on the same day, instead of drawing all that money out, as you thought yesterday, you drew a check of $500 ?—A. No, sir, I do not think that my bank-account shows that I drew $500.

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

The WITNESS. I will explain that. I had private funds there.

The CHAIRMAN. It contains a charge against you of $500, drawn out on that day ?

A. That is unquestionably correct.

[The witness here marked upon his bank-account the various checks drawn by him against the $125,000 placed to his credit in the Brooklyn Trust Company.]

Q. The checks that you have marked were sent to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company ?—A. Yes ; by my directions.

Q. And there are two other checks which are not in here ?—A. I think so.

Q. What is the amount of those checks that are not in?—A. One for $5,000, and one for $10,000, I think.

Q. Of what date?—A. I cannot say anything as to the date. I think they were delivered at the same time as those which I have marked were delivered.

Q. Are you quite sure that on the same day that you deposited this money you directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to send the Pacific Mail Steamship Company those checks which you have marked?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why were they to be sent on the 5th and 8th and 11th and 13th of June, which appear to be the dates?—A. That I cannot answer, because I do not suppose I have any of them.

Q. Did you direct the Brooklyn Trust Company to send them on those days?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know any reason why they were sent on those days?—A. None whatever.

Q. Then they could not all have been sent together, could they?—A. Yes, but the dates shown in the account are the dates when they were paid by the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Q. I understood you to say yesterday that on the 30th of May the three $50,000 checks and those other checks that you drew against the $125,000 were all sent to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.—A. Yes, that was my direction.

Q. Do you know whether they were, in point of fact, sent on that day?—A. I know that I received from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, on the afternoon of the 30th of May, one of the $50,000 checks, endorsed by me, and for which I drew the cash at Riggs and Co's. That is the only evidence I have that they were sent.

Q. Be kind enough to state again where you took that $50,000 check.—A. I took it to Lyman Elmore, at his office in the city of New York.

Q. Did you find him in?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you see him?—A. Not in New York.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. I saw him in Washington.

Q. You came to Washington that night?—A. I think I came on that evening.

Q. You found Mr. Elmore here?—A. I think I did.

Q. What is Mr. Elmore's business?—A. He is a practicing lawyer in the city of New York; his specialty is railroad law.

Q. Where did you meet him here?—A. I think I found him at his rooms.

Q. At what place?—A. On F street.

Q. Has he an office there?—A. Yes.

Q. What transaction had you with him after you met him?—A. I told him that I was directed by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to deliver him this check; he said that it was not for him, but that it was for parties or for a party whom he represented.

Q. Did he say who that party was?—A. He did not say at that time. I told him that my authority was to give it to him or to parties whom he would designate or represent. Said he, "I cannot take the check; you must give the bills; I am not known here, and I could not get the money on such a large check." I took the check by his directions and went to Mr. Kennedy, and got Mr. Kennedy to go with me to Riggs & Co. They asked me there how I wanted the money. I said in large bills. They said they could not give me large bills at that particular time; that they would have to get them somewhere, I do not know where. In the course of two hours I received the money, and went down to Mr.

Elmore's rooms, and in his back room I counted out the money to a gentleman, in his presence, whom I do not think I had ever seen before, but whom I have subsequently seen, and whom he introduced to me at the time by the name of Smith. I supposed then that it was a fictitious name, but since then I have found out that it was not a fictitious name.

Q. What was this gentleman's name?—A. Mr. Elmore introduced him to me as General Smith.

Q. What other name?—A. I do not know. I saw him since, a year or two ago.

Q. When did you last see him?—A. I cannot say the particular time, but it was within a year or two.

Q. How lately?—A. I saw him in company with Mr. Elmore in front of the National Theater, I think about six months after the affair.

Q. Have you seen him since?—A. I do not recollect having met him since.

Q. Did he take this whole $50,000?—A. He did; I counted it out to him.

Q. What did he do with it there?—A. I left the room.

Q. Where was the money when you left the room?—A. On the table.

Q. Who were present?—A. Mr. Elmore and General Smith.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. A very few moments.

Q. Did you take any memorandum that you had converted this $50,000 check into money and had delivered it over to a General Smith?—A. I made a memorandum.

Q. Did you take any?—A. Not from them; I was not authorized.

Q. Did you take any from anybody?—A. I took no receipt for the money from anybody.

Q. Did you take any memorandum from anybody that you had delivered the proceeds of this $50,000 check to any person?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any evidence to carry about with you that you have not got that money now in your pocket?—A. I have not the evidence.

Q. You have got no voucher for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no voucher to protect you from the fact that the proceeds of that $50,000 check were paid over to you?—A. I took the instructions of my client.

Q. I am not asking what were your instructions.—A. No, sir; I have no written voucher. My directions were not to receive any. My directions were to pay this check over to the parties in Lyman Elmore's office, in the city of New York, or to persons whom he would direct. I went there and found that Mr. Elmore was in Washington.

Q. Were you directed not to take any voucher for your own protection?—A. I do not recollect any instructions further than I have just stated.

Q. In the ordinary course of business, if you receive other people's money to any considerable amount, and pay it out, do you not take some voucher to show that you have done so?—A. That depends in a measure on the instructions of my client.

Q. As you did not get instructions from this client, why did you do it?—A. The instructions of my client were to pay this money to this man, and I did so.

Q. Did your client instruct you not to take any voucher?—A. I am not positive about it. I remember that I wanted to give the check to Mr. Elmore and that he refused to take the check, and said that he wanted the money. I said to him, "I want you to see me pay it to some person, so that I can get it properly out of my possession," or something of that kind.

Q. As the matter stands now, the cash is traced into your hands from the bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you have no evidence about you that you paid it out?—A. No, sir.

Q. You depend upon those parties to clear you from the money, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that the ordinary course of business with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What reason was there for doing this business in an unusual way in that respect?—A. I was requested to pay this money, and I did it in the manner which I have described.

Q. What was there in the transaction that led you to depart from your usual course of business and to take no voucher that you had paid the money out?—A. I will tell you if you will permit me.

Q. That is what I want.—A. The company said to me in New York that there were men from Washington running the office down, who represented that they had been employed by Mr. Stockwell in assisting in the passage of the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy, that the bill had passed the House, that they had all sorts of rumors in respect to it, and that they wanted to pay any person whom they had honestly and properly employed in prosecuting the case before Congress or the committees, and they wanted to get rid of that crowd.

Q. Go on.—A. They told me that a gentleman by the name of Elmore, whom I knew very well, represented most of those parties, or knew those parties; that they were willing to trust to him to direct me whom to pay of the men who were hunting the office down. There were men running in there all hours of the day, stating that they had been employed by Mr. Stockwell and others in the prosecuting of this subsidy measure before Congress, and they were so clamorous that no business could be done in the office. They came over to my office, 17 William street, and made this complaint to me, and they directed that I should take this check and give it to Mr. Elmore, or pay it to such parties as he directed. I hesitated about the matter. I did not want to do it. I told them that if it was to pay it to any member of Congress I should have nothing to do with it. They assured me that there was no member of Congress whom they had employed, or agreed to employ, and that there was no officer or member of the Forty-second Congress who was to have anything to do with the money. I went to Mr. Elmore's office, and he was not in. I understood that he was in Washington. I came on here and saw him, and said, "I have this check for you, and I want you to take it." He said, "I cannot get the money on it. I must have the money." I went and got the money as I was directed, and paid it in that way, asking for no voucher, for no receipt, particularly for the reason that it was to be paid, as I supposed, to different parties who had been employed by Mr. Stockwell and others in prosecuting the passage of the additional subsidy. Now, that is the reason.

Q. Who was the person representing the company who made this statement to you which you have just testified to as to the company being run down by persons from Washington?—A. I had a number of conversations of the kind with different persons about there; but I am under the impression, and I will so state positively, that it was told me by Mr. Stockwell, the president of the company.

Q. It was he who made the statement to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who came from the office of the company to your office and asked you to do this?—A. I cannot say. I was in and out of the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and I met Mr. Stockwell in the street and in other places.

Q. You understood that Mr. Elmore and General Smith were to disburse this $50,000?—A. That was my impression from my client and Mr. Elmore.

Q. Was there any reason why you should not take from them a voucher that you paid it over to them?—A. I think I was instructed by Mr. Stockwell to get rid of the nuisance the best way I could.

Q. Do you think you were instructed by him to take no voucher?—A. Yes; I think so.

Q. Did Mr. Stockwell or anybody else give any reason why you should not take a voucher?—A. I do not think he did.

Q. Did you report to Mr. Stockwell that you had paid out this money?—A. I reported to the company; I forget to whom.

Q. Did you take from the company any acquittance for that $50,000 that was put into your hands?—A. I am not positive.

Q. Do you not know whether you took any receipt?—A. I think not.

Q. Was there any reason why, if you did not choose to take any receipt from the two gentlemen at Washington, you should not take one from the company?—A. The company believed that I fulfilled my mission.

Q. Was there any reason why you should not take something which would protect you hereafter against any claim that the company might make upon you for that $50,000?—A. I did not take any.

Q. Supposing Mr. Stockwell should pass away, either by death or voyage to Europe, what evidence would you have at your command as to the disposition of that $50,000?—A. Well, that is what is troubling me. That is what is the matter. It has been no pleasant thing to me.

Q. As a lawyer, does it occur to you now that that was an ordinary way to transact business?—A. It was an extraordinary way, and I have told you for what reason. I disliked to do it; but I did it.

Q. What did you see in the transaction at the time that was extraordinary?—A. That I was being used to pay lobbyists. That is what I saw.

Q. This General Smith, to whom you paid this $50,000, was he the General Morgan L. Smith who died suddenly the other day?—A. I do not know.

Q. If he is dead, and Mr. Stockwell has gone beyond the reach of the company, and if the company should trace this $50,000 into your hands, what condition would you be in?—A. I would have to take the consequences. That is an argument instead of a question.

Q. What was said in the room of Mr. Elmore between you and him and this General Smith to whom you were paying over that money?—

A. I had the money in large bills. This gentleman came in and this money was paid.

Q. What was said?—A. Very little was said.

Q. Then it will take very little time to tell it. What was it?—A. He said that this was the party, and he introduced him as General Smith.

Q. Is that all that Mr. Elmore said?—A. He said that this was the party who was to receive the money.

Q. Will you not state it as you recollect it?—A. I have stated it.

Q. Have you stated all you recollect?—A. Yes.

Q. Then when you came into Elmore's office Mr. Smith was not in?—A. I will not say whether he was in or not. Elmore has two or three rooms there.

Q. Do you recollect whether he was in or not?—A. I do not recollect about the matter.

Q. Do you recollect whether anything more was said than that this was the party you were to pay the money to?—A. I do not know that those were the words exactly, but it was something tantamount or similar to it. It is three years ago, and I cannot recollect the words particularly.

Q. It was an unusual transaction, and could not have escaped your mind.—A. It has not, I assure you.

Q. Be kind enough to tell us all that transpired.—A. That is all that occurred.

Q. Was that all that was said between you?—A. That was all.

Q. Did you lay the money down on the table?—A. I did.

Q. Was it counted in your presence?—A. I counted it myself.

Q. And left it on the table?—A. Yes.

Q. How long were you in the room?—A. I cannot say.

Q. About how long?—A. Some few minutes. I cannot tell how long.

Q. Did you sit down?—A. I think I stooped over and sat down.

Q. Which did you do?—A. I cannot tell whether I sat down or stooped over.

Q. Were these other gentlemen sitting down?—A. No, they were standing too.

Q. Did either of you take a seat while you were there?—A. I do not recollect.

Q. Did you see which of them took up the money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know which of them did so?—A. I do not.

Q. If you were called to account by the company, could you tell which of those men you paid the money to?—A. I would say that I paid it as I have told you, and would leave the inference to be drawn.

Q. Into the hands of which of those men would you be able to swear that the money went?—A. I would swear that I paid it to Mr. Elmore and a party whom he directed me to.

Q. What did you do after he left the room?—A. I went out to my hotel.

Q. How long did you remain here at the time?—A. I remained here two or three days, I think, to look after the bill, and to see that it was approved by the President. The company in New York did not know whether the appropriation was theirs or whether the matter was open to competition, and they wanted to know how the matter stood. I think I returned to New York after the bill had been approved by the President.

Q. Did you see anything of either of those two gentlemen after that hour?—A. No, sir; I may have met Mr. Elmore, but not to talk to him. Nothing more than ordinary conversation.

Q. Let me now call your attention to the other two $50,000 checks. When did you next hear from them?—A. In January or February, 1873.

Q. Tell us all you know about them?—A. I only know of them through the company.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. Did you go from Washington to New York a short time prior to the receipt of this $275,000 check? Were you in Washington just before?—A. I was in Washington when the bill passed the House.

Q. How long after that did you remain in Washington?—A. The next evening or the next day.

Q. That was about the 21st or 22d of June, was it not?—A. It was about that time.

Q. You say that Mr. Irwin gave you the check for $275,000?—A. He did.

Q. In New York?—A. Yes, that was my impression.

Q. Do you remember where he gave it to you?—A. At my office, 17 William street.

Q. And did you there receive the instructions as to breaking up the check?—A. No, he did not say anything particular about it.

Q. From whom did you receive those instructions?—A. From the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Who were the officers from whom you got them?—A. I cannot be positive which officer it was.

Q. Where were these directions given?—A. They were given in my office in the city of New York.

Q. How long after you received the check?—A. I think a couple of hours.

Q. Was Mr. Irwin present?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you that you gave this $275,000 check to Mr. Mills, the president of the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. Yes. I met him in New York, and gave it to him.

Q. What did you say to him in reference to the use to be made of the check?—A. I told him that I was requested by my client to break it up.

Q. Did you give any directions how to have it broken up?—A. I did.

Q. At the time you handed it to him?—A. I think I did give him directions at that time, or at the time that I met him at the office of the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Q. When you went to the bank you found that it had not been broken up as you directed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It had been divided into three checks of $50,000 each, payable to your order, and the balance deposited to your credit?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you give the directions as to breaking up that $125,000?—A. I gave it, I think, at the time that I met Mr. Mills in the street, and also in the bank.

Q. Did you give it in writing or verbally?—A. I think I had a memorandum which I handed to him, and I think he afterward told me that the reason why the $125,000 had been placed to my credit was that he had forgotten the particulars as to the small checks.

Q. You think that you gave him the names of the persons and the amounts?—A. I gave him no names at all, but simply the amounts. The checks were to be payable to my order.

Q. What did you direct him to do with those checks?—A. My impression is that I gave him directions to make all the checks payable to my order, with the exception of about $10,000 or $11,000, and to send them to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. And when you got over to the bank the next day, you found that the checks were still there?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you direct him to have those three $50,000 checks drawn payable to your order?—A. Yes. I think I directed all to be drawn payable to my order.

Q. Did you expect that this check would have been sent to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company immediately, and before you had got to the bank?—A. It was necessary to be done as soon as it could be done.

Q. And when you got to the bank the next day you supposed that they had been all sent?—A. No, sir; I supposed that I had first to indorse them.

Q. You supposed that they would remain there till you called and indorsed them?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, you do not now think that you did direct Mr. Mills to send them to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I directed the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company, Mr. Mills and Mr. Rodman, who were the president and cashier, to send them over to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Was Mr. Elmore in New York during part of the time you were there?—A. I have no idea.

Q. You did not see him there?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that you received this $50,000 from the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and brought it to Washington?—A. I did.

Q. From which officers of the company?—A. I cannot recollect.

Q. You do not recollect whether it was the treasurer or president?—A. I say that it was from some person in the employment of the company, who I imagined had been engaged in the passage of that bill.

Q. Then you do not now know that it was an officer of the company?—A. It may have been Mr. Stockwell himself.

Q. Was it?—A. I have not any positive recollection on the subject. Two or three times during the day there had been persons from the Pacific Mail Steamship office to my office, stating that there was a lot of people there who insisted on being paid for their services in Washington, and saying that they had been working all the fall, winter, and spring in favor of the subsidy, and that there was nobody in Washington to pay them for their services, as the agent had gone away. I think they sent over this check to me, to take to Mr. Elmore to pay the men whom they said he represented, or the parties whom he might identify, and the directions were to pay them.

Q. Did you not direct the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company to send the checks, into which the $275,000 was split up, to Mr. A. B. Stockwell?—A. I cannot say. It was to send them over to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I cannot say positively whether I mentioned Mr. Stockwell's name or not.

Q. Where did you draw the checks on the Brooklyn Trust Company, into which this $275,000 was split up, aside from the three $50,000?—A. I think it was in the office of the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Q. Did you leave them there?—A. I think I left them with the cashier.

Q. Did I understand you to say that at that time they aggregated $115,000?—A. Yes, that is my impression.

Q. You drew checks there at the office of the Brooklyn Trust Company, on that company, to the amount of $115,000 and left them there?—A. Yes.

Q. To whose order were these checks payable?—A. I think they were payable to my own order, and were indorsed by me.

Q. Have you seen these checks since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are they in your possession?—A. No, sir. I saw them in January or February, 1873, when I was sent for by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to bring those vouchers to them.

Q. To bring your own checks to them?—A. Yes, sir; the checks representing this $115,000.

Q. And you brought them?—A. Yes; and Mr. Stockwell desired me to destroy them.

Q. Then Mr. Stockwell sent for you in 1873, and desired you to destroy these checks?—A. He did.

Q. Do you recollect whether there was any other indorsement on the checks except your own?—A. I cannot now say whether they were payable even to my own order. I have no recollection about the appearance of the checks, any further than to see that they were these checks. Mr. Stockwell directed me to destroy them, and I think I destroyed them.

Q. You are positive that you did not yourself send those checks for $115,000 to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, but left them in the office of the Brooklyn Trust Company, after you had drawn and indorsed them, and that you desired the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company to send them to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that they covered the whole amount of $115,000?—A. Yes.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. You destroyed them at the request of Mr. Stockwell, because you were acting as attorney for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In all that matter you regarded yourself as acting as the attorney of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And so you destroyed the vouchers which you had received from your own bank of deposit?—A. Yes.

Q. Was any reason given at the time why you had better destroy them, they being your own vouchers?—A. The reason was that they would show money paid to various parties employed in aiding the passage of the subsidy bill.

Q. But had not the Pacific Mail Steamship Company the same right to employ others as they had to employ you, in that matter, if the employment was honest?—A. Yes.

Q. And having that right, was there any disgrace in connection with the employment of the other men more than there was with your employment?—A. I do not know that there is. I was the general attorney of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and was attending to their legitimate business in New York. Our office did all their business at that time in New York.

Q. I wish to know the reason, if you can give any, why the evidence of payment of money to those other men should be destroyed any more than the evidence of payment to yourself.—A. They did not want it known that they had spent any money at all in obtaining the subsidy.

Q. But they were willing to leave the burden on your shoulders, and not give you any evidence that the burden did not remain there?—A. I do not suppose that they meant to put any burden on me at all.

Q. You understand the point of my question. The vouchers were not destroyed which left $275,000 in your hands, but they asked you to destroy the vouchers which would have showed that that money did not remain in your hands. The reason of that is what I am trying to get at. Can you give me any reason why?—A. They gave me as a reason that I was acting as their attorney in the matter; that they wanted these vouchers, and that no harm was to come to me.

Q. There are some sums here that are not in round numbers, but of such peculiar amounts that I want to ask you if the fact does not enable you to answer about them. For instance, here was a check of $13,200 paid on the 8th of June; have you no recollection to whom that check was given?—A. I have not; I only recollect that Mr. Mills gave me as a reason why he did not make all the checks payable to my order the fact that he did not recollect the smaller amounts.

Q. You say that you sent them all to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, either with your indorsement or without it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If they had been made payable to your order, no one could have used them until you had gone to the office and indorsed them?—A. If they wanted my indorsement I indorsed them.

Q. Can you not recollect to whose use some of these sums went; either the $27,000 or the $13,200 or the $18,450 or the $25,450?—A. No, sir; I cannot.

Q. And you have no recollection why that particular sum of $25,450 was put in the check?—A. No, sir; I have not. All that I remember about it is the peculiarity of there being a number of small checks for a large sum of money.

Q. Where is Mr. Elmore now?—A. In the city of Washington.

Q. From the statement which you have made, and which you say you are at liberty to make, are we to understand that you are now willing to state all that you know about the whole transaction?—A. Yes, sir; I went into Mr. Elmore's room the night before last, woke him up out of his bed, and told him what I was going to swear to. That was in the Imperial Hotel, about one o'clock at night.

The CHAIRMAN. Repeat that statement.—A. I heard that Mr. Elmore was in town, and I went to his room at the Imperial Hotel, the night before last, at one o'clock. I waked him out of his bed, and told him that I had been summoned to appear before this committee, and that I was going to tell the whole transaction that I had with him.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. And he is the man who gave you permission to make the statement which you have made here to-day?—A. No, sir.

Q. To whom did you allude in that connection?—A. Mr. Irwin gave me permission to state his name.

Q. Then, I will ask you to name any other person to whom you delivered a check.—A. I delivered no other check to anybody.

Q. Or any other party to whom you paid any money?—A. I paid no one whatever.

Q. All the money that was paid out of that $275,000 check by you was money which you paid to Mr. Elmore?—A. That is all.

Q. You recollect no man's name to whom the checks drawn by you on the Brooklyn Trust Company were to go?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any person at that time claim compensation from you for services rendered to the Pacific Mail-Steamship Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. What reason was given to you for drawing these three $50,000 checks?—A. I was instructed to have them so drawn.

Q. What reason was given you by the man who instructed you?—A. None at all.

Q. How did the man who instructed you know that you had received from another man this $275,000?—A. I suppose it was known; I told him that I had received it.

Q. And did you not know when you received it what you received it for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you knew before you got instructions from Mr. Stockwell what was to be done with this $275,000?—A. I knew that it was to be broken up; I had no particular instructions from Mr. Stockwell at that time in relation to breaking it up.

Q. You received the check from Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you now state that you knew what you received that $275,000 for?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I now ask you what you did receive it for at that time before you spoke to Mr. Stockwell about it at all?—A. I received it to be broken up and returned to the company.

Q. Could not the company have done that without its passing through your hands?—A. I suppose they could.

Q. Is it a satisfactory answer that you received it to be broken up and put back into the hands of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—

A. I was to receive some fee out of it, which, I suppose, Mr. Irwin thought I would have an opportunity to get.

Q. What did Irwin tell you was to be done with the balance after your getting your fee?—A. He said nothing particular about it; I knew that I was to obey the instructions of my client, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. The point I want to get at is, what did Irwin tell you to do with the balance of the money after you got your own fee?—A. He handed me the check, and said, "Your fee can be taken out of this, and you can take instructions as to the balance, which is to be broken up in small sums."

Q. But how could you have it broken up unless you were told how?—A. I was told how.

Q. What did Irwin tell you to do with the sums into which it was to be broken up?—A. He did not tell me.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Irwin did not tell you the details of how the sum was to be broken up, but other officers of the company did. Tell us what officer of the company did give you instructions as to how it was to be broken up.—

A. I cannot tell you; I cannot recollect positively to swear who it was.

Q. You can give us your best impression as to who did so. You must have some idea about it.—A. I have an idea about it.

Q. Give us your impression.—A. I have an idea that it was a person employed in Washington in connection with the company.

Q. Who was it?—A. I do not know his name; I did know his name; I knew that he was employed by the company.

Q. Have you any means of obtaining his name now?—A. I am in doubt who it was that told me how to break it up, but I am under the impression that it was a gentleman who was employed by the company here in relation to the subsidy.

Q. If it was that gentleman, can you ascertain his name so that we can ascertain from him whether he was in fact the person or not?—A. It was done by that person in the presence or under the direction of Mr. Stockwell.

Q. But you cannot tell us who that person was?—A. I have not the slightest idea of his name, but he was a friend of Mr. Stockwell's, and it was in Mr. Stockwell's presence and at his direction.

Q. There was some confusion in my mind when the chairman was questioning you, about the date of those checks. I want to see if I got it right. Do you tell this committee that as soon as you obtained that large check of $275,000 it was broken up and that the checks for all that except your own fee, (barring a mistake which you think existed,) were handed to you and indorsed by you to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then your bank-book in Brooklyn, which shows the payment of these checks on different days, only shows the dates when they were paid, not the dates of the checks themselves?—A. That is it.

Q. You had to turn them all over to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes.

Q. And when they were paid the bank-books show the date of the payment?—A. Yes, sir; that is what I was trying to explain.

Q. When you destroyed these checks in February, 1873, at the request of Mr. Stockwell, did you not know that there was a proceeding pending in the House to investigate the charge of fraud in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. I did not at that time. I did two or three days afterward, and I was very sorry then that I had destroyed them.

Q. The resolution offered by Mr. Randall referring the question to this committee, was on the 20th February, 1873?—A. I did not know that at the time, but after I saw that an investigation was ordered, I was very sorry that I had destroyed those checks, and I suspected that it was not right, and that I was laying myself open to be sued by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for that money. It has been a great source of regret to me ever since.

Q. You had no idea at the time that you were called upon to destroy those checks because of this investigation?—A. I had not.

Q. You tell us that you were ignorant of the fact that this investigation was begun, or about to be begun?—A. I was. I say that it was in January or February, 1873, because I am not positive of the time. I know that I did not know of this investigation being ordered at the time, and the moment I saw that the investigation was ordered, I saw the reason for the destruction of the checks. The checks were destroyed before I had any knowledge of the investigation, or I should not have destroyed them.

Q. Do you know about what amount you had to your credit in the Brooklyn Trust Company at the time you made this deposit of $125,000?—A. I have no idea; I have never looked at my bank-account.

Q. Here is your bank-account, and I find that you had a balance to your credit.—A. [After examining the bank-account.] I did have a balance to my credit.

Q. You have not yet told us about the two checks of $50,000 each that passed through the house of Jay Cooke & Co.—A. I did not draw the cash on them.

Q. Tell us all your connection with them.—A. I had nothing more to do with them than I have already described—to have them sent to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Was your indorsement on those checks?—A. Yes.

Q. So that they were presented to Jay Cooke & Co. either by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or by some person other than yourself?—A. That is true.

Q. And the proceeds were not paid to you, either directly or indirectly?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any information where the two $50,000 checks that passed through Jay Cooke & Co.'s house went?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. Can you not give us the names of some of the persons whose indorsement followed yours on the checks that were drawn on the Brooklyn Trust Company for that $125,000?—A. I do not recollect one. I cannot say positively as to the number of the checks. I do not remember a single indorsement, and my recollection is that there were no names on them.

Q. How could they get the money on them on your indorsement without placing their names below yours?—A. It is a very common occurrence to run a check through a bank without any further indorsement.

Q. Would it not occur to you that when a bank paid a check indorsed by you it would require the person to whom it paid the money to indorse it?—A. I only remember seeing upon some of those checks the bank-stamp, which appeared as if the checks had come through some bank. I remember no particular name on the check, but I remember a stamp upon the check.

Q. Assuming that Mr. Stockwell was requiring you to destroy those checks in February, 1873, about the time this investigation began, what possible object could he have in having them destroyed, unless there were other names upon them besides yours? What light would they have thrown upon the transaction?—A. I suppose that he wanted me to get those three checks and to get all the vouchers and to destroy them, for the reason that they might be traced through the different banks by the stamps upon them.

Q. Had your relations as counsel for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company continued up to that time?—A. Yes; they continued until I went to Europe, on the 5th of April, 1873.

Q. When did your engagement as counsel for that company begin?—A. At the commencement of the injunction-suits in Brooklyn, brought by Luther R. Challis against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. When was that?—A. At the end of 1871, or the beginning of 1872. Challis obtained an injunction in Brooklyn to prevent the company from speculating in its own stock, and from loaning the money of the company.

Q. Did you appear in court as counsel for the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you continued as its counsel up to 1873?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you in Washington during the spring of 1872, in connection with the subsidy to that company?—A. I was.

Q. What part did you take in it?—A. Before the referee in the city of New York there was a lot of questions being asked, and wranglings between counsel, and they were being published in the papers for the purpose of affecting the action of Congress in relation to the subsidy. Mr. Irwin requested that some one should come on here and explain to some members of Congress the nature of that suit, and I came over here once to explain it to some members of the Committee on Commerce.

Q. Was that the only connection you had in connection with the subsidy here in Washington?—A. That is all.

Q. Did you make any contract or employ any subagents or attorneys for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company while you were here?—A. Not at all; I said nothing to anybody on the subject.

Q. Was Mr. Irwin here during all that time, in the spring of 1872, while you were here?—A. I think he was.

Q. Did you have no conference with him as to the payment or employment of counsel or agents?—A. No, sir. I think I explained to some members of the Committee on Commerce and Committee on Appropriations in regard to those suits. Stokes at one time attempted to commence a suit against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; Joslin commenced a suit; and Henry A. Smith & Co. commenced a suit. All of these suits were brought in Brooklyn; and the litigations in Brooklyn I and others attended to. I came over here and explained to different members the position of the company, and, if I am not mistaken, I spoke to Mr. Niblack, of this committee, in reference to these suits.

Q. Do you recollect any of the persons who were here actively employed in obtaining the subsidy, or did you have conference with them?—

A. No, sir.

Q. Irwin knew that you were the lawyer of the company?—A. Yes; and Mr. Irwin begged of me to tell Stockwell to stop sending persons to Washington. He said that they were swarming to this city, and that Stockwell employed everybody that came. He said to me, "When you go to New York, for God's sake beg Stockwell to stop surrounding me with this horde."

Q. Do you recollect who of all that horde of men you saw?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Irwin tell you the names of any of them?—A. No, sir; I had very little conversation with Irwin in relation to the business.

Q. Had you ever seen this man Smith before?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he profess to be acting for the company in that conversation with you?—A. I had no conversation with him. I think it was understood from the company that he had been active in the matter.

Q. Was he a lawyer?—A. I do not know; I never saw the man before.

Q. Was Elmore a lawyer?—A. He was a lawyer, doing business in the cities of New York and Washington. I was to pay to the parties whom he directed me to pay to.

Q. And he directed it all to be paid to General Smith?—A. I so understood him.

Q. When you destroyed your checks did you keep no memorandum of them at all?—A. No, sir, I did not, and I am very sorry now that I did not.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Who transacted your business in Brooklyn and New York while you were here?—A. Homer A. Nelson in New York, and Sidney B. Lowell in Brooklyn.

Q. Is either of them your partner?—A. Not now.

Q. Was either of them your partner?—A. Yes; both were at one time interested in business with me.

Q. Had you a law-firm as such?—A. No, sir; we had no law-firm as such.

Q. You had no law-firm in 1872?—A. No; except that Judge Nelson and I transacted business together in the city of New York, and we divided what we made. I have not had a partner in a law-firm since 1855. What business I have transacted was done by myself.

Q. Did you keep any bank-account in the city of New York in 1872?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you keep any other bank-account in Brooklyn, in 1872, than you have stated?—A. I think not. I have a bank-account in the Nassau Bank, but I don't think I had then.

Q. You say that these personal checks of yours were destroyed, but you still retain your bank-book, I suppose?—A. I do.

Q. When you were credited by the Brooklyn Trust Company with this $125,000 to your own account, they made a charge upon your bank-book?—A. They did.

Q. Your check-books, of course, necessarily showed the amount deposited to your credit, and the amount drawn against that credit by yourself?—A. I have no regular check-book.

Q. Did you never keep a check-book?—A. I used to, but I am very careless in regard to checks. I have no great business transactions, and I never owe people much money.

Q. Your account shows that you were in the habit of depositing and drawing money?—A. I had a check-book, but I never kept any stubs. I used to try, and commence keeping check-books in regular order, but I never could succeed in doing so. Sometimes my bank-book is in the bank two or three months without my seeing it. Sometimes I pick up a loose check and fill it up. If I meet a man to whom I owe a debt, I draw a check in this way, and never keep a memorandum of it.

Q. What means had you for ascertaining what balance you had in bank?—A. I always find out my balance by inquiring of the book-keeper. I have never known any other way. I am very careless about such things.

Q. You are understood to be a man of some property, and you must, necessarily, have kept some accounts of your affairs?—A. Sometimes I have, and sometimes I have not. I generally can tell about my property.

Q. In order to get an intelligent idea of your affairs you have had, of course, some books or accounts kept by yourself or somebody else?—A. I have no books. I never had a ledger in my life.

Q. You had a check-book?—A. I have had a check-book.

Q. Had you in 1872?—A. No, sir; not with a single stub in it. I have not had a check-book for years.

Q. In this account, which you have presented here, after this $125,000 was credited to you on May 30, there is a subsequent credit on June 19 of $27,775. Where did that come from?—A. I have no distinct recollection. It did not come from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. It may have been from the sales of some stock or property that I had. I will not be certain. When I saw it to my credit it struck me as a novelty. I did not recollect the transaction.

Q. It is a very large sum, and most of us would have some recollection of such a sum.—A. Well, it is three years ago, and I cannot give an intelligent answer as to where it did come from.

Q. You have no stubs of the checks drawn, nor any record that would enable you to correct your own recollection?—A. I have not. That item of $27,775 to my credit was certainly a novelty to me. I cannot give you any idea where it came from except it was some piece of property or security that I sold.

Q. You say that you retained, out of this $125,000, $10,000 or $11,000 for your own services. Please state what they were.—A. Services rendered to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in every capacity.

Q. In what capacity?—A. In the capacity of attorney and counsel, doing business in New York.

Q. When you say "every capacity," what do you mean?—A. I mean in the capacity of attorney and counsel attending to business in New York; and I mean what I did for them coming on to Washington and attending to matters here as I have described.

Q. In connection with the subsidy?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you render any formal bill or account?—A. No, sir; I did not render any formal bill or account. I stated what it should be. I think it was $10,000, and something for my actual disbursements and expenses.

Q. Did you subsequently render to the company a statement as to how you had disposed of this $275,000?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they ever ask you for one?—A. No, sir; I did it after their direction.

Q. When you were called upon subsequently to produce your own checks, did you object?—A. I did not.

Q. What reason did they give you?—A. They claimed that it was part of the transactions of the company, and that they wanted them.

Q. Did they in that connection mention any names of persons?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you examine the checks yourself when you gave them up?—A. Not particularly.

Q. Not to see what indorsements were on them?—A. I thought they came merely through the banks without any personal indorsement on them. I think that if there had been any striking indorsement on them I would have noticed it.

Q. Did you give them to Mr. Stockwell in person, or to Mr. Irwin?—A. I did not give them to Irwin.

Q. Do you recollect to whom you gave them?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. Was it at the company's office in Wall street?—A. It was.

Q. Was anybody present?—A. I do not know if there was anybody present besides Mr. Stockwell and myself or not.

Q. Are you certain there was not?—A. I cannot say positively.

Q. Did you see them destroyed?—A. I did.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Mr. Elmore was here pretty nearly all the session of 1871-'72, was he not?—A. Yes.

Q. In what interest was he here?—A. I do not know.

Q. Was he one of the recognized attorneys of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I understood he was not. I do not know the fact.

Q. From your testimony this morning I inferred that he was.—A. I do not know the fact that he was. I understood him to be assisting in some railroad bill.

Q. Were you before the Committee on Appropriations that session?—A. No, sir; I was not. I did not go before any committee. I went once to the room of the Committee on Commerce, and there was somebody there explaining the matter as fully as was necessary. I think I was present in the Committee on Commerce when Mr. Sargent made an argument in favor of the subsidy.

Q. Can you not give us, on reflection, any clew as to which General Smith it was?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you know Mr. Giles H. Smith, Third Assistant Postmaster-General?—A. I do not.

Q. There is more than one General Smith in Washington.—A. I never knew this man before.

Q. There was, also, a General Baldy Smith, I believe.—A. I do not know. I thought, when Mr. Elmore introduced me to General Smith, that it was a fictitious name.

Q. Describe his appearance.—A. He was a dark-looking, ordinary-sized man, not a slender man—a good-looking man. I am under the impression that he had some beard, but whether it was a mustache or side-whiskers I do not know.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. When you were asked to have this $275,000 check divided, was there any reason given why you were made use of to bring about this division?—A. No particular reason. I suppose they thought I was a man of wealth, or some considerable property, and that I was a safe man to intrust with so large an amount of money.

Q. Did not the fact present itself to you that Mr. Irwin could have drawn his own checks for those several amounts?—A. My impression was that the company wanted to put the money into the hands of somebody that would not steal it.

Q. But Mr. Irwin had the $275,000 in his hands.—A. Mr. Irwin was about to leave for California; they told me in the office that people were coming into the office saying that they had been employed to aid in the subsidy matter; that there was no person in Washington to represent the company, and that they could not be paid for their services.

Q. Would it not have been just as easy for Mr. Irwin to have drawn his checks for these several amounts?—A. Irwin did not tell me to break this check up and to give any particular sum to anybody.

Q. He gave you the check for $275,000?—A. Yes.

Q. And then you were subsequently told by an officer or agent of the company to have the check divided into the several amounts?—A. Yes.

Q. Did it not strike you at the time that the object was to mystify this transaction?—A. No, sir; the thing struck me at the time in a different light; I did not dream that that amount of money was to be paid at Washington at the time; but I knew, or I was informed, that these men were very clamorous for their pay, and that they represented to the company that Mr. Irwin had gone to California, and that there was nobody to pay them.

Q. Did it not strike you at the time that, as an ordinary business transaction, that disbursement should be made through your checks instead of through the checks of the company?—A. It is a very common thing in New York to break up checks for people; I have done it a hundred times for different persons.

Q. Then I understand you to say that it did not strike you at the time as a strange and extraordinary transaction?—A. It did not strike me at the time that it was to be used as a corruption-fund.

Q. On the day that you received this money at Riggs's bank, had the bill been signed by the President?—A. I do not know.

Q. Was Congress in session at the time?—A. I think so.

Q. You say you staid here to ascertain in what shape the bill had passed?—A. Yes; I was directed to look particularly at the amendment in the post-office appropriation bill, and to inform the company if the bill became a law. It was a sort of general instructions given by client to counsel.

Q. When you were called upon by the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for your returned checks, were they in your possession at the time, or were they still in the possession of the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. They had been returned to me long before.

Q. During the time they were in your possession, did you never take occasion to observe the indorsements on them?—A. I never looked on them. I never in my life compared the vouchers with my bank-account. I am a very careless person in regard to such matters.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. At what point did Irwin's connection with the $275,000 check cease?—A. When he gave it to me, as far as I was concerned.

Q. He gave you no instructions as to what you were to do with the check?—A. No, sir.

Q. Absolutely nothing?—A. He said to me, "You are an attorney and counsel of the company, and you take this check."

Q. Then, as this was his check and as he gave it to you, it was altogether in your discretion what to do with it, was it not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he state to you for what purpose he gave it to you?—A. He did not go into any particulars.

Q. It was his own check; and as he gave it to you without instructions, under what limitations were you as to what you should do with it?—A. He gave it to me to get instructions as to the breaking of it up.

Q. He gave it to you in order that you might receive instructions from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company as to what to do with it?—

A. He did not say it in that way, but that was my impression.

Q. Was there any understanding that you should give the portion of that check over and above your $10,000 to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. It was to be given to the company.

Q. That was the understanding?—A. Yes, I understood it so.

Q. How did you obtain that understanding?—A. From what Mr. Irwin said and from what the officers of the company said.

Q. I am asking now as to Mr. Irwin's connection with it; did he say anything which gave you the understanding that this money was to go to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. That the money was to be disposed of under the direction of the company.

Q. Now, setting aside the fee that you had, all the rest of the money went back to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes.

Q. Two hundred and sixty-five thousand dollars or thereabouts?—A. Yes.

Q. Into the hands of what officer of the company did it go?—A. The officer whom I directed the checks to be sent to.

Q. Are you able now to state specifically who that officer was?—A. I cannot. I told the bank officers to take the check over to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. You received back out of that $265,000, $50,000 which you brought here to Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive back out of that money any sum whatever?—A. No, sir.

Q. Neither directly nor indirectly?—A. Neither directly nor indirectly.

Q. To go now to the checks which you drew on the Brooklyn Trust Company—you say that Mr. Stockwell sent for you and asked you to produce those checks of your own?—A. Yes; some person did at his direction.

Q. Substantially it was he?—A. Yes.

Q. He asked you to produce your own checks on your own bank in order that they might be destroyed?—A. Yes.

Q. Did I understand you to say that he asked you also to produce the three $50,000 checks?—A. I understood him to say something in regard to where they were or what was done with them. I told him, I think, that they were vouchers belonging to the bank.

Q. Why were they the vouchers of the bank any more than your checks were?—A. Because they were the individual checks of the bank, payable to my order on the Marine National Bank of New York, and were returned to the Brooklyn Trust Company as its own vouchers.

Q. These were the vouchers of the Brooklyn Trust Company, and therefore you had no control of them?—A. Yes; but I do not suppose he recollected that at the time.

Q. I want to call your attention to the visit that you made to the American Exchange Bank in New York. Have you read the testimony of George S. Coe, president of that bank?—A. Yes; but I do not know what version of it.

Q. I will call your attention to a statement that he made. He states distinctly that a person whom he afterward identified as Mr. King, and a gentleman who brought the $275,000 check to the bank, were there together. He says, after stating that he looked at the checks, "Therefore I said, 'Gentlemen, how do you propose to use this large check?'"

If you are going to use this in a bank you can relieve me from all embarrassment.' And the gentleman who had presented the large check said, 'Yes, I am going to use it in a bank.' Said I, 'Then have it certified, and you can deposit it, which will save you and us the trouble of counting this large amount,' and he assented." Is that in accordance with your recollection?—A. No, sir; it is not. My recollection of the circumstance is that he would not certify it.

Q. He swears positively that he did certify the checks; and that is the point to which I wish to direct your attention. He says again, this question being asked him: "The two men who came to your bank together, demanding the payment of the $275,000 check and the $115,000 check, respectively, were they not evidently acquainted with each other?—A. O, yes, they seemed to be; they came together, and talked together." Do you say, in view of that evidence, that you did not go there with Mr. King?—A. I do, most decidedly. I certainly did not see Mr. King there, that I recollect.

Q. Mr. Coe says also, with reference to the fact of identification, that the answer of the gentlemen was something like this, or to this effect: that they had reasons for not wanting to be identified, and that they declined to be identified. Is that true?—A. That is not true; I do not remember any such conversation.

Q. Then I desire to read these questions and answers to you: "Q. But I understand you to say that, when you proposed to certify the checks, one of them said that they had reasons for not wishing that done?—A. No; that they had reasons for not wishing to identify themselves. Q. Was it the one who received the certified check, or the one who received the currency, that made that reply?—A. I cannot distinctly state, but my recollection is that it was the gentleman who had the largest check, the one for $275,000. He was the shorter and younger of the two." Refreshing your memory by that evidence, state now whether you had that conversation.—A. I did not have any such conversation.

Q. The point that I desire to emphasize is this: whether or not you stated at the bank that there were reasons why you did not desire to be identified.—A. I did not.

Q. You say that with that evidence before you?—A. I do.

Q. I pass now to another point. Will you state why you supposed that the gentleman introduced to you in Mr. Elmore's room as General Smith was presented to you under a fictitious name?—A. Because Smith is such a common name.

Q. Why should you be willing to pay $50,000 to a gentleman whom you at the time supposed to bear a fictitious name?—A. I was directed to pay it to the person whom Mr. Elmore would indicate to me, and I wanted to get rid of the money. I knew Mr. Elmore, and knew that the payment to any one in his presence would be satisfactory to my clients.

Q. When did you learn that that was not a fictitious name?—A. I cannot tell you. I saw him afterward with Mr. Elmore. I did not think at the time of its being a fictitious name; but after I left the room, it struck me on my way to the hotel, "Suppose this is a fictitious name."

Q. When you paid the money, the only person really known to you in the transaction was Lyman Elmore?—A. He was the only person whom I knew.

Q. The other person you knew nothing about, could not identify him, and knew nothing about his responsibility?—A. No, sir. I was directed by the company to pay to Mr. Elmore, or at his direction.

Q. Are we to understand you now to say that you paid this money to Mr. Elmore, or to some one else?—A. The facts are just as I have told you, that I paid the money, at his directions, to him and some other person.

Q. In regard to your checks on the Brooklyn Trust Company which you destroyed, you said that they were destroyed because they would show the connection of persons here with the subsidy?—A. Yes.

Q. It was clearly understood, at the time they were destroyed, that that was the reason?—A. I do not say that. I say that that was my opinion.

Q. Your opinion at the time they were destroyed was, that they were destroyed because they would show the employment of some persons?—A. Yes.

Q. How could a check show the employment of some person?—A. I suppose by tracing the checks.

Q. You say that there was no endorsement on them?—A. I do not recollect the name on them.

Q. Do you recollect that there was no name on them?—A. I cannot say positively.

Q. Can you tell us through what banks any of them passed?—A. I cannot. I did know at the time, or I thought I remembered at the time some of them.

Q. Did you ever report to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or to Mr. Stockwell, as its president, that you had paid this money to Lyman Elmore and another?—A. I reported to the officers of the company; I think to Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Did you receive from them any release for the $50,000?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, I ask you as a matter of law, whether you are not personally responsible to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the $50,000?—A. I think not.

Q. You have no release from the officers of the company in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no voucher for the money?—A. No, sir.

Q. You could not identify the person other than Mr. Elmore to whom you paid the money?—A. No, sir.

Q. You cannot even tell us his first name?—A. I cannot.

Q. Can you describe the individual?—A. I have described him as a dark-complexioned gentleman.

Q. Large or small?—A. He was not very large, and was not a slender person.

Q. Has it never occurred to you that your own interests require that it would be well for you to know who the person was?—A. I felt protected in the fact that Elmore knew about it.

Q. And your entire protection, then, depends on your own testimony and that of Mr. Elmore?—A. Yes.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. You say it occurred to you after leaving Mr. Elmore's room that you had possibly paid that money to a fictitious person?—A. The idea ran through my mind, I wonder if that is the man's name?

Q. What difference was it to you whether it was a fictitious name or a real one?—A. It was not any difference. It did not give me any care or trouble.

Q. Then it was not at all connected with your responsibility or release that the idea occurred to you?—A. It occurred to me from the fact that the name was given as Smith.

Q. And it did not occur to you from the nature of the transaction?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You had no claim on the $125,000, except for your own fee of $10,000?—A. No, sir.

Q. In footing up all those checks that you have marked, you say that there are two checks that are not included?—A. Yes; they were outstanding at the time, but I suppose that my subsequent accounts show the checks that will make up the balance. I was told by the officers of the bank that some of the money was not drawn until later.

Q. Then your answer would be that the balance was drawn by checks which were not presented until after the 19th of June?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon after you received this $275,000 check from Mr. Irwin was it that you got from the other gentleman directions how to break it up?—A. A few hours, I think. It may have been a day.

Q. Which was it?—A. I cannot tell exactly.

Q. Where were you when you got these directions?—A. Either in my office, or in the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Do you recollect which?—A. I cannot say.

Q. You took the check from Mr. Irwin, and you went either to your own office or that of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes.

Q. You do not know which?—A. I do not.

Q. And you got your directions as to the sums into which it was to be broken up?—A. Yes.

Q. You took those directions on some piece of paper?—A. I think I did.

Q. How soon after you left the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or your own office, with those directions, was it that you deposited the check with the officer of the Brooklyn Trust Company?—A. The same day, I think.

Q. What did you do with the little memorandum on paper of the sums into which this large check was to be broken up?—A. I never kept it.

Q. Did you hand it over to them?—A. Not that I remember.

Q. Do you recollect what you did with it?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you think you gave the check to the officer of the Brooklyn Trust Company without any memorandum as to the sums into which it was to be broken up?—A. I will not be certain but that the memorandum was returned to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company with the checks.

Q. There were at least nine different items into which it was to be broken up, some of them in odd hundreds and odd fifties?—A. That was the peculiarity of it.

Q. Do you think you gave that from your head?—A. No. I think I did it from the paper.

Q. Do you think you gave it to Mr. Mills on paper?—A. I do not think I did give it to him, unless I put it in with the checks and sent it over to New York; and I do not recollect anything about it.

Q. I understood you to say that you met Mr. Mills in the street?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you think you met him in the street and gave him, without a memorandum, nine sums of different amounts into which to break up this $275,000 check?—A. No, sir; I only judge from the fact that he could only recollect about the three $50,000 checks.

Q. Do you think now that you did not give him any memorandum?
—A. I am not certain whether I did or not.

Q. If he had a memorandum it would show the other items as well as the three $50,000 checks?—A. It would.

Q. Have you any idea that you charged his memory only with those sums, or that you gave him this paper?—A. I have no idea. I am under the impression that I did not give him the paper in the street at the time, but that afterward I looked it over and gave it to him.

Q. You found the same day, when you went to the bank, that there had been a mistake made?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you give him the paper then?—A. I do not know. I had the paper then.

Q. If your professional fee from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was for your services as an attorney in New York, what occasion had Mr. Irwin to pay you out of the funds which he had received for this purpose?—A. I was Mr. Irwin's general attorney also.

Q. When were you retained by Mr. Irwin as his attorney?—A. In the fall of 1871.

Q. Besides being retained by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. The company knew that I was Mr. Irwin's general lawyer in New York, attending to what business he had there.

Q. What business had he there?—A. He was a member of the firm of Eldridge & Irwin, of San Francisco.

Q. What business had he in New York that you could attend to?—A. I do not recollect.

Q. Can you tell me anything that you did for him as an attorney in New York?—A. I made some negotiations with parties in New York.

Q. What were they?—A. There was a negotiation in regard to some matters with Captain Bradbury.

Q. What were they?—A. I have not now any particular idea.

Q. What did you do for him as an attorney at law?—A. I think I saw Captain Bradbury in relation to the matter.

Q. What about?—A. In regard to some business transactions.

Q. What were they?—A. I cannot say now; but I think they related to some purchases in New York.

Q. Purchases by Mr. Irwin on his private account?—A. No, sir; I think it was the firm of Eldridge & Irwin.

Q. Purchases on their private account? Can you tell us any one thing to the amount of six cents that you did for the firm of Eldridge & Irwin, on their private account, in New York?—A. They engaged me as counsel to transact certain matters with Captain Bradbury.

Q. Can you tell me a single thing you did on their private account in New York?—A. I was engaged in regard to the settlement of an account with some corporation.

Q. What corporation?—A. I have forgotten.

Q. What was the account about?—A. I have no particular recollection.

Q. What was the amount of it?—A. I do not recollect particularly; it is three years ago.

Q. What did you do?—A. I went to see the parties.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I met Captain Bradbury at his office. I have forgotten the particulars of the transaction.

Q. Captain Bradbury was an officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at the time? A.—No, sir; not then.

Q. Can you not give us some sort of description of the business?—A. Nothing more than that it was a business transaction.

Q. How much did you charge Mr. Irwin for this particular business that you cannot tell us anything about?—A. I have not said that I could not tell anything about it. I said that I was employed in 1871 as his general counsel. Mr. Irwin came to me in 1871 and employed me as his general counsel, and wanted me to transact his business for him.

Q. Not business in relation to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes; in respect to persons connected with the subsidy.

Q. Separate from getting the subsidy, were you his private counsel?—A. Yes.

Q. For what?—A. As general counsel to attend to his business.

Q. And still you are unable to state a particle of that business?—A. There was a transaction with Captain Bradbury, and with a corporation in New York, which I do not recollect.

Q. Do you recollect the nature of the transaction with the corporation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it for a large or a small amount?—A. It wasn't a great amount.

Q. About how much was it?—A. I have not an idea.

Q. How long were you engaged in transacting this business with this unknown corporation?—A. I think it was a direction to go up and see some person in relation to it.

Q. Where did you go when you went up?—A. It was on Broadway.

Q. Whereabouts?—A. In the lower part of Broadway.

Q. Tell me where you went?—A. I think it was the corporation that had an office where Captain Bradbury was.

Q. What was the business of that corporation?—A. I haven't any idea at all in relation to the matter. He only asked me to look after some matters for him in New York, and I went there, either to deliver an account, or to get an account paid, or to see that an account was paid.

Q. Did this $10,000, or a part of it, go toward paying you for your services in the Brooklyn suits?—A. Yes.

Q. How much of it?—A. No particular amount, but I took it as a general fee.

Q. Did you ever receive any instructions from any other officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, except Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir, except it may have been from Mr. Bellows, and I do not recollect particularly having seen him. I do not wish the matter to appear as if I were not Mr. Irwin's counsel in regard to the transaction of his assisting in getting the subsidy through Congress. He came on and employed me. He insisted on retaining me.

Q. My attempt has been to endeavor to separate his private business from that of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I have stated that I was his general counsel and attended to some private business of his in New York of no great importance; but he particularly insisted that I should be retained by him in relation to the passage of this subsidy.

Q. Do you think you would know General Smith again if you were to see him?—A. I think I would; but Mr. Elmore told me he is not alive.

Q. He was the Mr. Smith who died at Jersey City?—A. I do not know that Mr. Elmore did not say that he died at Jersey City; but that he was the same person who died lately suddenly.

Q. You say that you went the night before last, about 12 o'clock, to Mr. Elmore's room, and told him you were going to give this testimony?—A. I did.

Q. Was that before you appeared before this committee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, before you appeared here at all you had got released from somebody so that you could tell?—A. No, sir. I was determined to tell it.

Q. You stated yesterday that you had been endeavoring to get the consent of Mr. Irwin to testify to the whole transaction here?—A. Yes, so far as his giving me the check.

Q. Did you fail to get that consent from Mr. Irwin after you had been to Mr. Elmore's room, and had told him what you were going to testify? Which happened first, your failure to get Mr. Irwin's consent, or your disclosure to Mr. Elmore of what you were going to testify?—A. I received the intimation from Mr. Elmore since that time.

Q. Where did you get it?—A. I received it from a gentleman who brought it to me yesterday.

Q. Who brought it to you?—A. A friend of Mr. Irwin.

Q. What is his name?—A. I would rather not tell the name.

Q. Was he a stranger to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Please to give his name.—A. It was Judge Nelson.

Q. Homer A. Nelson?—A. Yes.

Q. When had you last seen Mr. Elmore yourself, before you got this message?—A. I went to see him the day after he gave his testimony here.

Q. Was that the last time you have seen him?—A. I have seen him since.

Q. When did you see him last?—A. The night I was subpoenaed to come here. That was the night of the 5th of January.

Q. Did you see him at his room?—A. Yes; I went to his room at Wormley's.

Q. Who was present?—A. I think his father-in-law and his lawyer, Mr. Chapman.

Q. Any others?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Judge Nelson was your old partner?—A. Yes; and my personal friend.

Q. He came on here on Wednesday morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him before he went to Mr. Irwin?—A. I did.

Q. Did he take any message from you to Mr. Irwin?—A. No particular message.

Q. Did you know that he was going to see Mr. Irwin?—A. I did.

Q. Did you ask him to learn from Mr. Irwin whether he was willing you should testify?—A. He had no such errand as that particularly.

Q. Nothing to that import?—A. No, sir.

Q. When he came back, what did he tell you Mr. Irwin had said on the subject? What transaction of yours did Mr. Irwin request you, through Judge Nelson, not to disclose here?—A. He did not say anything about not disclosing anything.

Q. I understood you to say that you had failed to get Mr. Irwin's consent to testifying to what transpired between him and yourself?—A. Mr. Irwin refused, when I first saw him, to have me say anything about the transaction.

Q. I understand you to say now that Judge Nelson brought you word from Mr. Irwin not to disclose the transactions between you and himself?—A. I cannot say that particularly. I cannot say that he brought me that word.

Q. I asked you when you got it, and you said you thought you got it yesterday after you had seen Mr. Irwin at midnight, in his room, and I then asked you from whom you had got it, and you said Judge Nelson. Are you mistaken about that, on further reflection?—A. I am not mistaken. My information came from Mr. Irwin through Judge Nelson.

Q. Without regard to the particular time, let me inquire of you what particular transaction of yours with Mr. Irwin did Mr. Irwin require you not to disclose?—A. I got no such request.

Q. He did not request you, through Judge Nelson, to withhold anything from this committee?—A. He was not asked in reference to that. I think Judge Nelson went, by my directions, to ask him whether he would consent to let me say that he had given me this $275,000 check.

Q. And Judge Nelson returned and said that Mr. Irwin had declined to give it?—A. He did not say that when he returned.

Q. When did he say it?—A. Judge Nelson sent me word yesterday that Mr. Irwin had given, or would give, his consent to my stating the fact of my receiving that check from him.

Q. Did you learn from Mr. Irwin, through Judge Nelson, that he declined to have you disclose anything else?—A. He was not asked in regard to that.

Q. He was simply inquired of, through Judge Nelson, whether you might disclose the fact that he had given you that check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any anxiety about that when the fact appeared from his own testimony?—A. He did not swear that he had given me the check.

Q. Did you ever get any instructions through anybody from Mr. Irwin not to disclose any transaction?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you are at liberty to disclose every transaction between you and Mr. Irwin, whether as his counsel or otherwise?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have disclosed it?—A. Yes. [After a pause.] What did you mean to say—that I disclosed all the transactions between Mr. Irwin and myself, as his counsel, bearing on the Pacific Mail subsidy? I have not.

Q. Then there are other transactions between you and Mr. Irwin, in reference to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which you have not disclosed to us?—A. I have not disclosed to you the private and confidential communications which Mr. Irwin made to me in reference to the passage of the subsidy.

Q. Have you disclosed all that has passed between you and Mr. Irwin in reference to that $275,000 check?—A. Yes.

Q. There were some private and confidential communications between you and Mr. Irwin, in reference to the passage of the subsidy, which you decline to disclose?—A. Yes.

Q. Because you consider them confidential?—A. Yes.

Q. Without asking you what they were, I simply ask you when they were given to you?—A. They were given to me at the time that he retained me as his counsel in the city of New York.

Q. He gave you then some private and confidential instructions, when he retained you to aid in procuring the subsidy?—A. When he employed me as his counsel in the city of New York.

Q. When he employed you as his own private counsel?—A. He never employed me as his own private counsel. I was his general counsel. He insisted on employing and retaining me.

Q. Did he at any time employ you to aid him, as his counsel, in procuring this subsidy?—A. He employed me to assist him in whatever manner I could, in the city of New York, and to bring him such information as he might impart to Congress and others, in regard to his business here.

Q. There were instructions given to you at that time, in reference to the passage of the subsidy, which you are not at liberty to disclose here?—A. Not particularly in reference to the bill itself.

Q. In reference to the business?—A. The business was his connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. You said that after you obtained the $50,000 at Riggs's and delivered it over to this General Smith, by the directions of Mr. Elmore, you staid two or three days in Washington, in the service of the company, and in order to ascertain, first, whether the bill had become a law, and next whether it was really a subsidy to the company or whether the matter was open to competition, and that you were so requested by Mr. Stockwell. Did Mr. Stockwell say that he did not know, up to that time, whether it was a subsidy to his company or not?—A. He was under the impression that some other bidders, or some company in which Mr. Irwin might be interested, whose stock was owned in England, might get the subsidy away from him.

Q. After all this money had been expended?—A. Yes.

Q. He was afraid that the company which Mr. Irwin was interested in might get the subsidy?—A. No; I do not know that Mr. Irwin was interested in it.

Q. Repeat what you said.—A. Mr. Stockwell said that it was understood by the company that there was to be opposition in a bid, or something of that kind, and that he would like to know the exact status of the matter.

Q. Do you recollect how many days it was after you made this deposit in the Brooklyn Trust Company, and after some officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company brought this $50,000 check to you, that you came over here with it?—A. I think it was the same day or the next day; I think it was the 30th of May.

Q. You came over here that night, and it was the 31st of May when you got here?—A. I think so.

Q. Then the check must have come around pretty rapidly from the Brooklyn Trust Company to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company if it reached the latter company the same day as you deposited it, and if it came back to you the same day. That was a pretty rapid transit.—A. I do not know of any reason why they should keep it until the next day.

Q. You deposited the $275,000 check on the 30th of May, and directed the Brooklyn Trust Company to send it on in smaller checks to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. The check was broken up.

Q. With directions for them to send the smaller checks to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that you afterward went to the Brooklyn Trust Company, to indorse these checks?—A. That was on the 30th of May, I think. I gave the $275,000 to the Brooklyn Trust Company on the 29th of May.

Q. It appears to have been deposited on the 30th?—A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Coe says it was certified on the 29th of May, and that it was not returned to the bank till the 31st of May. It appears in the accounts of the Brooklyn Trust Company that it reached that bank on the 30th of May, and your check for $500 was drawn against it on the 30th of May.—A. It was not drawn against that sum particularly. I had more money than that.

Q. You stated that you drew those three sums of $50,000 each, on the 30th of May, and that you went there after that to indorse all those checks. When did you do so?—A. I think the same day.

Q. And then you found that mistake which was made by the Brooklyn Trust Company, in placing $125,000 to your credit?—A. Yes.

Q. And then you directed the checks for $115,000 to be sent to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes.

Q. And you think that they sent all those checks to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and that one of those checks came back to you on the same day?—A. Yes.

Q. And you left that very night with one of them for Washington?—A. Yes.

Q. That brought you to Washington on the 31st of May, and you had this transaction with Mr. Elmore and General Smith, that day or the next night?—A. I do not know whether I came to Washington that day or the next day. I cannot be positive whether it was the 30th or the 31st.

Q. How long did you stay here to ascertain whether the bill was signed or not?—A. I looked after the general features of the bill.

Q. The bill was signed on the 30th of June.—A. I staid after that.

Q. What did you stay for after that—after it became a law?—A. For no particular business.

Q. I thought you had some further business with the company.—A. No, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. It has not been made quite clear to me how you ascertained that Smith was not a fictitious name, but a real one.—A. Mr. Elmore told me, and I saw General Smith afterward.

Q. And talked with him?—A. I will not be positive that I talked with him.

Q. Your merely seeing him did not show to you that he was a genuine General Smith. What means had you of identifying him?—A. I think that I understood that his name was General Smith.

Q. Did you understand it from anybody, except that introduction by Mr. Elmore?—A. I think so. I cannot bring to my mind now. It is what I understood.

Q. You spoke of having permission to state freely what you know about that transaction, and that that permission came from Mr. Irwin. Do you regard Mr. Irwin as authorized to release you from the confidence of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. That company being your client, he cannot release you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then you have not yet been released by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I have been.

Q. When?—A. I was released before I came here.

Q. By whom?—A. By no particular party.

Q. Must it not be a particular party to release you. Must it not be the same client who engaged you?—A. That does not necessarily follow in a corporation of this kind. I have not been released in regard to Mr. Stockwell.

Q. But it was the company, and not an officer of the company, for which you acted, or supposed you acted.—A. It was the company. I was the private counsel of Mr. Stockwell.

Q. In that matter did you act as the counsel of Mr. Stockwell individually, or did you act as the counsel of the company?—A. I acted as the counsel of the company.

Q. Then who has released you from the company's confidence?—A. I was told that the company said I might say what I pleased about it.

Q. But who was it told you that?—A. I was told so by Mr. Nelson.

Q. Whose authority had Mr. Nelson for telling you that?—A. I do not know. He had been the counsel for the company also. We had been together.

Q. Then you do not know, except by the statement of Mr. Nelson, that you are released from your confidences to the company, and you now state that Mr. Nelson is not one of the counsel of the company?—A. He is not one of the counsel.

Q. Not being a counsel of the company, do you suppose he is authorized to release you?—A. He obtained the information. He told me he understood (I do not know from what person) that I was released.

Q. And that is all you know about your being released?—A. Yes.

Q. One word further, and the essence of this whole matter. Have you any information, in connection with your services or with the payment of this money, that any portion of the $275,000 went or was directed to go, to any member or officer of the Forty-second Congress?—A. I have no information of the kind.

Q. You mean to be directly understood, then, that, so far as your knowledge or information goes, none of this $275,000 was actually paid to, or was directed to be paid to, any member or officer of the Forty-second Congress?—A. Yes, I mean to say that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have no information of the kind of any character?—A. No information that I could form a belief upon. I have heard plenty of hearsay.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. Do you recollect from whom you had that hearsay?—A. I have no idea from whom; I have heard rumors and talk about it.

Q. From any of the officers of the company at the time?—A. No, sir.

Q. From Mr. Irwin?—A. I received no information from Mr. Irwin in regard to that matter.

Q. From any other person in the employ of the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then your information is merely outside rumor?—A. That is all. I was asked in reference to the business of Mr. Irwin in New York. At one time Mr. Irwin had a prospect of getting up a steamship company from New York to Liverpool, and I was his general counsel in regard to that.

WASHINGTON, January 9, 1875.

RICHARD J. CAPRON sworn and examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. What is your business?—Answer. I am a banker and broker in New York.

Q. What was the name of your firm in 1872?—A. R. J. Capron & Co.

Q. It has been testified before this committee that on or about the 21st of May, 1872, a check for $4,000, on the American Exchange National Bank of New York, drawn by Richard B. Irwin, was deposited by your firm with the Bank of North America and passed through the clearing-house.—A. We did business with the Bank of North America, and we received from Fant, Washington & Co., of this city, $12,000 that morning in different checks. This $4,000 was one of the checks which we received, and deposited with the Bank of North America.

Q. Who are Fant, Washington & Co.?—A. They were bankers in Washington.

Q. Have you examined your books and correspondence to see the entries of those checks?—A. I have the register here with me.

Q. Are there entries in it in reference to that transaction?—A. Nothing whatever. I received the check on the morning of the 21st of May and deposited it in the Bank of North America to our credit.

Q. Did you receive it by mail?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you the letter that accompanied it?—A. I did not bring the letter, but I have brought the register.

Q. What does the register show?—A. Only the deposit.

Q. Does it describe the check?—A. No, sir.

Q. Does it give the name or simply the amount?—A. It gives the name of the drawer of the check of course, and the amount; it was Richard B. Irwin's check for $4,000, indorsed by Fant, Washington & Co., and by R. J. Capron & Co., and deposited in the Bank of North America.

Q. Did the check have any other indorsement than that?—A. I do not know.

Q. There are no other entries in your register indicating any other indorsements?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. You received $12,000 that morning from that banking-house?—A. I think it was $12,000; we did a large business with different bankers in Washington that season, Jay Cooke & Co. and others.

Q. Were any of the other checks except this $4,000 one the check of Richard B. Irwin?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you had any other checks of Richard B. Irwin from that or any other Washington house?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you looked?—A. Not thoroughly, but I did not see his name on any other check. All bankers keep a book in which all the checks received by the house are registered.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Do you recollect to whom this $4,000 check was made payable?—A. I do not. I never saw the check; my clerk took it.

Q. You seem to have a distinct recollection as to the indorsement on the check?—A. Not at all, except that the books show that the amount was placed to the credit of Fant, Washington & Co.

Q. Is there any clerk of yours who would be apt to recollect to whom that check was made payable?—A. No, sir; the most correct way to get at that would be to get the man who sent the check.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. You say that this check was deposited in the Bank of North America?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whose credit was it deposited there?—A. To the credit of Richard J. Capron & Co., bankers.

Q. It went to the credit of Fant, Washington & Co., on your books, and to your credit in the Bank of North America?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you seen any members of the firm of Fant, Washington & Co. since you came here?—A. I saw Mr. Fant the first day I came here.

Q. Did you ask him anything about the check?—A. I asked him if he remembered sending that check; he first said he did not, and afterwards he said that he did recollect it.

Q. Did he give you any information as to where he got it?—A. I think he told me, but I do not recollect.

Q. How long ago did you confer with him?—A. The evening before last.

Q. It did not make any impression on your mind as to where he got the check?—A. Not a bit.

Q. You knew that that was what we were after?—A. I did not know that that was any of my business; I thought that you could get him, and that he would tell himself.

Q. Did you see his books?—A. Not at all, but I think he mentioned the name of the person from whom he got the check. I know that it was not Mr. Irwin he got it from.

Q. How do you know that?—A. I would have recollected it if he had told me, and I know that he told me some name which I do not now remember; he said he recollected the circumstance of his sending the check.

Q. Then the night before last Mr. Fant knew from whom he got that check?—A. Yes.

Q. If it has slipped his memory it has slipped it since then?—A. He told me from whom he got the check.

Q. And the name has slipped your mind?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Since the night before last?—A. Yes.

Q. And if Mr. Fant cannot recollect it now, it will have slipped his mind too since the night before last?—A. I suppose he has his book here and can tell.

WASHINGTON, January 9, 1875.

SAMUEL J. RANDALL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. This investigation last Congress originated on your motion. If you have any information which you can communicate to the committee, as the ground on which you set the investigation on foot, the committee would be glad to hear it.—Answer. From conversations which I had, I believed that members of Congress had been approached frequently to vote, for a consideration, for the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy.

Q. Give us all the information which you have, and which it is possible for us to have, on that subject.—A. The remarks which I made in debate at the time were made because I had been told that a member of Congress had been offered $1,000 for his vote on that subsidy bill.

Q. From whom did you hear it?—A. I think I heard it in two ways. Once through General George W. Morgan, of Ohio, and once through the member of Congress himself.

Q. Give us what you heard from the member himself.—A. It is proper to say that that member did not, in any conversation that I had with him, indicate any purpose whatever to vote for the subsidy, nor did he vote for the subsidy. My impression was then, as it is now, that they had got hold of the wrong character of man. He had steadily opposed the subsidy as much as I had. His name is John B. Storm, of Pennsylvania.

Q. How did Mr. Storm say he had been approached?—A. If my recollection serves me right, he said to me one day, "Are you aware of the means that are being used to secure the passage of that subsidy?" General Morgan stated substantially the same thing.

Q. Did Mr. Storm go there to ask you if you were aware of the means that were being used?—A. He mentioned it as warning to me as to what was going on, so as to stimulate my energies against the bill.

Q. What did he say had been done in reference to himself?—A. I understood him to say that he had been approached and offered $1,000.

Q. Was General Morgan's statement in reference to the same instance, or to another instance?—A. I cannot say. My impression was that it was to the same instance.

Q. Have you any other information which you can give to the committee?—A. Nothing that I can think of. I think it due to Mr. Storm to say that at not one moment did he entertain a thought of voting for that subsidy. This warning to me was in order to stimulate my energies against the bill by letting me know what was going on around me.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. I desire to have it appear in the evidence whether you had any other grounds of direct information, except what you have stated, why you offered the resolution?—A. I do not think I had at that time any particularly direct ground, except what was the general floating rumors, which it would not be proper for me to repeat, even if I recollected them.

Q. Have you any other direct information except that which you now submit?—A. No, sir; if I recollect anything else, I will cheerfully state it.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Look at the Congressional Globe for the proceedings of the House on May 21, 1872, and see whether, on the call of the yeas and nays, Mr. Storm did not vote "no" on that subsidy.—A. [After looking at the Globe.] Yes, sir; I find that the record shows that Mr. Storm voted in the negative. I conferred frequently with Mr. Storm, and I know that there never was an instant when he contemplated the idea of voting for that subsidy.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Our object was, inasmuch as you incited this inquiry, to satisfy everybody that the committee had expended all its means of information.—A. In my judgment, it is very proper for the committee to put this evidence of mine on record, but it is desirable also to say that the committee, or at least some of its members, were well aware of what I now testify.

The CHAIRMAN. Our purpose in calling you was merely to make it part of the record.

Adjourned till Monday, January 11, 1875.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 11, 1875.

JOHN B. STORM sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. The occasion of our calling you was some testimony that was given by Mr. Randall, on Saturday. Among the reasons about which we inquired of him, and which induced him to move this inquiry, was a remark made to him by you, that during the pendency of the subsidy-bill you had been approached in some manner to influence your vote. Will you state whether that was so; and, if so, all the circumstances?—Answer. Mr. Randall is partly correct and partly incorrect. I recollect having a conversation with Mr. Randall at that time or immediately after the passage of the bill, in which I stated to him that a member of the House had been approached, but I did not say to Mr. Randall (or at least if he says I did he is mistaken in saying so) that I myself was the person approached. I was not approached by any one on that subject, directly or indirectly.

Q. But did you say that a member was approached?—A. I related to him, as I think I did to several members, friends of mine, the circumstance of a member informing me that he had been approached, and it is that which I presume Mr. Randall has reference to.

Q. State what you know about that.—A. I presume that I have the gentleman's permission to tell it, although he never said that I should or that I should not. Mr. Parker, of New Hampshire, informed me about the time the post-office appropriation bill of 1872 was before the House, in which bill was the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy, that as he was coming down the stairs from the ladies' gallery, a man stopped him and told him that he had better go back to the gallery and not go down and vote against that measure. That is what Mr. Parker told me—that the man said he would give him $1,000 if he would go back to the gallery and not go down and vote against the bill. Mr. Parker said that he ought to have kicked him down stairs, or something like that. That is all I know about it. I suppose that in mentioning that fact to Mr. Randall he supposed that it was my own personal experience which I was relating, but it was not. No man ever said a word to me on the subject.

Q. Did Mr. Parker say who the person was?—A. He said that he was a stranger to him and that he did not know him.

Q. You voted against the bill?—A. Yes, sir; I voted for Mr. Holman's amendment, which was considered an adverse proposition. I think Mr. Holman's motion was to strike out the amendment of the Senate and leave the amount of the subsidy $500,000, as it was originally. I voted for that amendment, and I also voted directly against the subsidy.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Did you hear of any other member who was approached?—A. No, sir, except what I have seen in newspaper reports since this investigation commenced. I remember intimating in my speech that I believed that such influences were being used, but that statement was made from rumors. I presume that what I said to Mr. Randall led him to believe that the circumstance related to myself.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 11, 1875.

HOSEA W. PARKER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Are you a member of this Congress?—Answer. I am.

Q. And you were a member of the last Congress?—A. I was.

Q. Pending the passage of the post-office bill in 1872, which had the steamship subsidy in it, were you approached by anybody in relation to your vote upon it?—A. I do not recollect to have been.

Q. Mr. Storm testifies that he recollects your stating to him that on one occasion, when the vote was being taken on that bill, you were going down the stairway from the ladies' gallery, when a man approached you and said to you that if you would go back to the gallery and withhold your vote, he would give you $1,000.—A. I do not recollect ever having said that; I remember overhearing some conversation as I was coming down from the ladies' gallery at that time between some gentlemen who were at the foot of the marble stairway, but the conversation was not directed to me.

Q. What did you hear—that which I have stated?—A. Not as applied to me.

Q. State what you did hear.—A. It really had gone from my mind. I do not recollect the words, but it was to this effect: These men were talking about the carrying through of the measure, and that it would go through, and that members who felt as if they could not vote for it need not necessarily vote at all. That was the substance of the remark I heard. But I did not intend to convey the idea to Mr. Storm that the conversation was directed to me.

Q. Is that all that you recollect about the conversation? Was there anything said about $1,000 or any sum of money?—A. I do not recollect anything of that kind, while it may have occurred. My mind has not been directed to the occurrence since then.

Q. Do you recollect who the gentlemen were?—A. No; I do not think I knew them at the time.

Q. Do you recollect having any conversation with Mr. Storm on the subject?—A. I have no definite recollection about that; I presume I did mention to Mr. Storm, about that time, my having heard some such conversation.

Q. Were you up in the ladies' gallery when the vote was being taken?—A. I think I was up in the ladies' gallery during the progress of that vote. I ought to say, though, that I think I voted every time against the measure.

Q. Do you recollect being in the ladies' gallery any of the time that the roll was being called?—A. I have no definite remembrance about that. I presume I was. I have an indistinct recollection of coming down out of the gallery, where perhaps my family was, and overhearing some conversation of these gentlemen at the foot of the stairway. I never should have thought of it again. I do not think I was approached by anybody.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Mr. Storm says that you were approached when you came down the stairs, and were offered $1,000 to go back to the gallery; and that you said you ought to have kicked the fellow down-stairs.—A. I do not think that anybody offered me money. I presume that I spoke to Mr. Storm about that conversation. I may have said something about kicking the man down-stairs. I know that that would express my sentiment about the matter.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Does that express your memory?—A. I really have not any definite remembrance about the matter. I know that I was unalterably opposed to the subsidy from beginning to end, and I believe that first and last, and all the time, I was opposed to it.

Q. We want to know whether you did make any such communication to Mr. Storm.—A. I think Mr. Storm must be mistaken.

Q. You say positively that nobody approached you on the subject?—A. I am very confident that nobody approached me.

Q. You could not have any doubt upon such a circumstance.—A. No; I have no doubt about it whatever. I may have communicated the circumstance to Mr. Storm in the House, and in the confusion of the occasion he may have misunderstood me.

Q. You are positive that nobody approached you on the subject?—A. I am confident that nobody approached me.

Q. Will you say positively that you did or did not overhear any conversation between other parties in which any sum of money was mentioned?—A. No; I would not say but that I may have heard these parties speaking about $1,000, or any other sum, but I cannot say. I am confident, however, that that conversation was not directed to me. It was coming down from the gallery on the east side, and the halls were pretty full of people.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. The conversation to which Mr. Storm refers and this offer of money would have been an important conversation. Would you not have remembered such a conversation if you had heard it?—A. I think I should have remembered it.

Q. Then do you desire us to understand that there was or was not an offer or a suggestion of an offer of money in the conversation which you did hear?—A. My recollection is, so far as I have any recollection on the subject, that these gentlemen were talking about the matter, and that money was talked about; but I certainly cannot give the words.

Q. But can you say distinctly that money was talked about as being offered for votes, or for the withholding of votes, upon that occasion?—A. I do not know that I can say so distinctly. It was a mere casual matter. I was coming down the stairs, and these gentlemen were talking. I do not think I stopped long, if at all.

Q. This matter has been before the country now for more than a year. Have you not endeavored to refresh your memory as to the conversation?—A. No; I do not think that the matter has ever occurred to my mind since.

Q. Can you say whether any members were in the group in which the conversation occurred?—A. I do not recollect, but I should think not. It is my recollection that no members were in the group.

Q. Was any person in the group whom you can name?—A. I think not; I do not think I knew the gentlemen who were talking.

Q. Was there anybody in the group who was at the time known to you as an officer of the House?—A. I cannot recollect that there was. I do not recollect now that there was a person there whom I recognized as an officer of the House.

Q. But the conversation, bearing, as it did, on the question of legislation, would naturally impress itself upon your mind?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you state distinctly that impression as it was made on your mind in view of the importance of it?—A. The impression made on my mind was this: that these gentlemen were lobbyists endeavoring to put this measure through, as I thought, by unjustifiable means, and that is probably why I remember anything about it.

Q. That impression being made on you, would it not be natural that you should recollect something of what was said?—A. I have stated something of what was said, so far as I recollect it at all. It was that members who did not feel like voting for the measure were not obliged to vote at all. I overheard something of that kind, I think.

Q. And you heard the suggestion that money might be had for refraining from voting?—A. That was the impression I obtained.

Q. Of the persons who were there gathered, did you meet any one afterward?—A. Never, to my knowledge.

Q. You have no way in which you can indicate to us, by description or otherwise, who the persons were?—A. No, sir; I have none.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Have you talked with Mr. Storm or Mr. Randall about their testimony?—A. No, sir; not at all. Mr. Storm saw me a few minutes ago and told me what he had stated here.

Q. That is the first time that your mind has been recalled to that circumstance?—A. Yes; that is the first time.

Q. So that it has been sprung upon you rather suddenly?—A. Certainly. I said to Mr. Storm, "I think you must be mistaken about that." He said he remembered me telling him something of that kind.

Q. You and Mr. Storm were quite intimate?—A. Very much so.

Q. You sat near each other?—A. I do not recollect how near we sat. I think I was as intimate with Mr. Storm during the Forty-second Congress as I was with any member of the House.

Q. And you frequently talked together?—A. Yes.

Q. We had at first defeated that subsidy measure in the House.—A. We had, and my vote helped defeat it.

Q. Then the Senate put it in the post-office appropriation bill, and it was carried by yeas and nays in the House?—A. Yes.

Q. Did that fact not cause a good deal of talk as to the means by which it was carried?—A. Yes, sir; we talked about it.

Q. And the chances are that whatever you heard anybody say in the lobby you went and repeated to Mr. Storm at once?—A. Very likely that was so. I think that whatever I said to Mr. Storm was said there in the excitement of the House.

Q. If any remarks were made by you not quite so pious as a New England gentleman would be expected to make, the excitement of the occasion would be the excuse?—A. I presume I did say something of that kind; it would be quite natural. I do recollect coming down from the gallery and going into the House when the excitement was pretty strong, and I think I recollect having some talk with Mr. Storm on the occasion. I know that I was unalterably opposed to the subsidy from beginning to end, and regarded it as a swindle.

Q. Were you asked by any of these gentlemen whom you heard talking on the stairway whether you were a member of the House?—A. I do not recollect that I was.

Q. Do you recollect any conversation, while you were in the gallery, in reference to the subsidy by any of those parties?—A. I do not recollect any conversation. I presume it was talked about while I was up there, for the gallery was very full.

Q. You have no recollection now of having heard money mentioned, or any sum of money, by these gentlemen on the stairs?—A. I will not say that I have no recollection of having heard money mentioned by these gentlemen, but I have no definite recollection of hearing any sum mentioned.

Q. Were they talking to any members of the House?—A. I do not recollect that they were; they were talking there together, and my recollection is that I overheard something about money, but really I cannot give the language, it was not directed to me.

Q. May you not have suspected that you were being talked at by these men?—A. I presume that that was my idea when I came into the house, that perhaps they were talking for my benefit, but I do not know the fact.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 11, 1875.

LYMAN ELMORE sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Where do you reside?—A. I reside in Brooklyn, New York.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am an attorney at law.

Q. Where is your place of business?—A. I have an office at 69 William street, New York. I am generally here in Washington about one-half of the year.

Q. Have you an office in Washington?—A. I have had until within the last few months.

Q. Where was your office?—A. 1304 F street.

Q. What was the nature of your business in Washington?—A. Almost entirely departmental business, attending to accounts, abatements, and refunding claims of railroad companies, and other interests of theirs which may happen before Congress.

Q. Have you had any business in the city of Washington for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. None whatever.

Q. Have you been employed by them?—A. I have never been employed by them; I never received a dollar from them.

Q. You took no part in the matter of aiding any one in procuring the passage of what is called the subsidy measure of 1872?—A. I have never believed in subsidies. I never advocated one. I certainly did not advocate the Pacific Mail Steamship Company subsidy.

Q. And you aided nobody in that regard?—A. Nobody.

Q. Did you know of any persons who were aiding the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at that time?—A. I believe I did.

Q. Who do you suppose they were?—A. I recollect hearing Governor Randall, of Wisconsin, saying that he was aiding them.

Q. Any other gentleman?—A. Mr. Moran, of Philadelphia. They both boarded at the same hotel I did. I only got it from themselves.

Q. Any other person that you know of?—A. I have heard a gentleman claim since then that he was employed.

Q. But at the time did you know of any others?—A. I did not.

Q. Has anybody since then claimed that he was aiding them?—A. A gentleman named Averill, I think, told me he had done considerable service for them.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. My impression is that he resides in Western New York, and he is generally here during the sessions of Congress.

Q. Any other gentleman?—A. Mr. John G. Schumaker. I have heard him state that he was acting as attorney for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. What do you know about Mr. John G. Schumaker's service in connection with that matter? State all you know about it.—A. I can state it exactly as the transaction occurred, which I presume is what this committee wish to know about. At my office in Washington there were from twenty to fifty people a day calling, and I met and was introduced to a great many people at saloons and elsewhere. In this way I was introduced to a gentleman by the name of General Smith. I met him probably three or four times during the spring of that year. One day, passing from the Treasury Department down F street, he was talking with a group of gentlemen, and he called me and came up to me in the middle of the street, and asked me if I knew the attorney of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I said that if it was Mr. Irwin I did not know him except by sight. "No," he said; "he is the agent. I mean the attorney in New York. You have a New York office, have you not?" I said that probably I knew most of the attorneys in New York, and he said: "They are to send over their attorney from New York to pay me some money. Have you any objection to identify me?" I told him certainly not. I passed along down the street. Three or four days passed, when one morning John G. Schumaker came into my office and threw down a check for $50,000, saying: "I was instructed to give that check to you." I did not even pick up the check. I saw it lie there. I said, "Not for me; you are mistaken." "No," said he, "the Pacific Mail Steamship Company told me to pay that to you or to somebody whom you were to identify." I told him then that I knew who the gentleman was and would see him during the day probably, and would let him know. I then made a suggestion to him different from what the report in the newspapers seems to indicate. I did not say that I could not draw the check and that he must get it cashed, because I could have drawn the check very easily if I had wanted to; but I remember making this remark: I said, "You are not going to pay in a check, are you?" He then said he would get it cashed. My remark was a natural remark of caution. I made an appointment with him between 2 and 3 o'clock. I met this gentleman, Mr. Smith, and he came to my office about half past two. My own desk being in the back room, he sat there reading papers, and became very nervous, and kept suggesting that he thought Schumaker had made up his mind not to come around again, but some time after three o'clock Mr. Schumaker came in. The only remark that I made to him was, "This is the General Smith who I believe was to meet you here." After shaking hands he stepped up to the dressing bureau back of my desk, and he pulled a roll of bills out and said, "Count that." After counting the money he said, "That is all right." After making some remarks about Brooklyn, Schumaker left the office. I then made the jocular remark to General Smith that that was too much money for one man to carry. He said if it was for him he would be very glad to make a divide, but that he had nothing to do with it, except that he was receiving it for other parties. He left the office. A few days after that I left Washington and was not here for several months. I came on again the next winter and was introduced to General Morgan L. Smith. Supposing that he was the Mr. Smith I had met in my office, I recollect making the remark that I guessed we had met before, and he neither assented nor dissented. I asked him if he had not changed his whiskers, under the impression all the time that he was the same gentleman. Again, in December last, I said to him when this investigation came on, "I suppose they will have us before the committee." He said he did not know anything about it; that he could tell them all he knew about it in five minutes. That is the only thing I know about the transaction.

Q. Was that the General Smith you introduced to Mr. Schumaker?—

A. I supposed it was, but subsequent events have led me to believe that it was not.

Q. What were those events?—A. Simply that Mr. Morgan L. Smith never intimated that he was the man, or that we had met, until that time. He seemed to regard it, this December, as a strange circumstance that I should think that he would be before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Q. Had General Morgan L. Smith whiskers?—A. He had a mustache, but my impression is that the gentleman who was at my office had a mustache and chin-whiskers; and with the hundreds of introductions that I had in Washington, it is natural that I should make mistakes.

Q. When you met this man who was introduced to you as General Morgan L. Smith, did he resemble the man who was introduced to you as General Smith?—A. He did; and if I had been called upon I should have said that it was General Morgan L. Smith that the money was paid to.

Q. State more distinctly what has transpired since which leads you to doubt his identity.—A. Nothing more than this: In the first place, I did not receive a dollar of the money; that is not like General Morgan L. Smith. This gentleman left the office, simply thanking me for having given him the use of the office, and saying if he had had anything to do with it he would have been very glad to divide. I think that General Morgan L. Smith would have found a way of saying, "Here is so much for your self, as you have had some trouble in the matter," for he was by nature a generous, big-hearted man. Afterward, when we became quite intimate, and when I spoke to him about it, my impression is that if he were the same person he would have talked the matter over, for we talked on all subjects that we were connected with. This circumstance makes me believe that I was merely used to identify the person to whom this money was to be paid, without there being in reality any necessity for my use.

Q. Is it your belief now that that was General Morgan L. Smith?—A. I would not want to swear positively on that either way.

Q. Have you doubts now?—A. I doubt whether it was Morgan L. Smith.

Q. Tell me why you made that remark "Are you going to pay the money in check?"—A. It has got—even without any necessity existing for it probably—that men rather object, here in Washington, to receiving checks—even checks payable to bearer—especially if the checks are in connection with legislation, for fear of suspicion attaching to them.

Q. You mean in matters which it would be best to keep secret?—A. I always give checks.

Q. Men in fair, open business transactions have no objections to taking checks?—A. None in the world.

Q. Then, when you say it has got to be a little skittish to take checks here in Washington, to what kind of transaction do you allude?—A. I allude to the uneasy timidity which exists, for fear there might be a suspicion attached to the receipt of a check.

Q. About any particular class of transactions?—A. It runs throughout almost all transactions, although it only refers to certain transactions which are illegitimate.

Q. What kind of illegitimate transactions?—A. Those in which money goes to influence legislation.

Q. And it has grown out of that suspicion?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that what you alluded to to Schumaker when you remarked, "You are not going to pay in check?"—A. It was. That was a large amount of money $50,000, and I presumed it was to be distributed up by Mr. Smith; and I did not suppose that he would want it traced back to a check.

Q. State a little more distinctly this first interview with Mr. Schumaker, and your subsequent interviews with General Smith. When did you first come in contact with this Mr. Smith?—A. I was introduced to him, I believe, in the Ebbitt House saloon.

Q. By whom, do you recollect?—A. I do not recollect. I may have met him two or three times, and not recollected his name, and bowed to him. I may have drank with him a few times. I came down from the Treasury Department, and I recollect where they were standing at this corner by Willard's Hotel, opposite the Ebbitt House. He called me, and I stopped; and he came out in the street and asked me if I knew the attorney of the Pacific Mill Steamship Company. I told him if it was Mr. Irwin I did not know him, except by sight, and that I was not personally acquainted with him. He said, "No, the attorney in New York." He said, "You have a New York office?" I told him I had, and that I thought I would be acquainted with any attorney in New York, as I had been there a great many years. He stated then that the attorney of the company was coming over to pay him, he either said a large amount of money, or some money, or something of that kind, and he wanted to know if I would identify him. I do not think he said that the attorney was coming over; but I think he said he was going to pay him a large sum of money. I said I had no objection, and then I left him and went away.

Q. When Mr. Schumaker handed out this money to him and left, was there anything said between you and this gentleman, who went by the name of General Smith, as to the amount?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you observe the size of the bills?—A. It was not a thick package. I saw a $1,000 bill; I remember that it was a package of, I should think, not more than an inch in thickness; I could not tell the amount; I never counted it or had it in my hand.

Q. I suppose you allude to the bill on the top of it, that you saw?—A. I saw it as he rolled it up; he rolled it up and put it down in his pants pocket. I have a pretty good memory, and remember circumstances a great many years better than I remember faces, and as he rolled it I saw a $1,000 bill. That is what caused me to make the remark that that was too much money for one man to carry off.

Q. When the check was left on the table, did you notice the check?—A. I did notice the check.

Q. For what amount was it?—A. I think for $50,000, even money. It was on Riggs & Co.

Q. Was it on Riggs & Co., or was it merely indorsed to them?—A. I think it was a check drawn on Riggs & Co. The check was for $50,000, because I made a remark as to the amount.

Q. The check cashed by Riggs & Co. was not a check drawn on them?—A. I cannot tell exactly about that. The check was before me, but I did not even take it up. It might have been on a New York bank, or it might be a check cashed by Riggs & Co.; but I got the impression that it was drawn on Riggs & Co. I never had the check or money in my hand. I never had anything to do with the Pacific Mail subsidy, and never received a dollar from it.

Q. You never had anything to do with either the check or money, and had no interest in it?—A. None whatever, and I had no money in my hand. I never received a dollar, and never heard the matter mentioned afterward.

Q. Did you ever have any directions as to the disposition of it from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or from any other person?—A. No, sir; and I admit that, as a lawyer, it was a matter of surprise to me that such a trifling identification was all that was required to deliver over that sum of money. I admit that I thought of it very often since.

Q. When did you communicate these interesting facts to anybody?—

A. I have spoken of the matter within the last ten days. Mr. Schumaker himself spoke to me, and asked me if I remembered the circumstance. I told him I did. Said he, "I wish you would state what you remember," and I stated my recollection of it.

Q. When did he communicate with you?—A. Five or six days ago.

Q. What time of the day?—A. I think it was about half-past nine in the evening of last Wednesday.

Q. After you had retired to bed?—A. No, sir; it was at his hotel. I first stated the fact to Mr. Crooke, a member of Congress from Brooklyn, and said that I had learned that Mr. Schumaker was going to bring my name into the matter, and that I did not see the necessity of doing it, as it would injure my business, and I did not want anything of the kind. Mr. Crooke did not seem to agree with me. I waited till half-past nine, when Mr. Schumaker came into the hotel, and I went up to his room to induce him not to mention my name. He pretended to say that it would not injure me at all; that it was a transaction that I had nothing to do with, and he insisted that he should say something. He afterward came down to my house and came up to my room, and said that he hoped that I would not dodge the responsibility. I told him that he should tell the truth; but that I would prefer, if he could get along without mentioning my name, that he would not mention it, as it would annoy clients of mine, who would read his version of it before they would get mine. Mr. Schumaker makes a mistake when he says that I said that I could not draw the check. Although I do not consider it a matter of very great importance, still I did not make that remark.

By Mr. KELLEY

Q. And you say that when Mr. Schumaker put down the check, you asked him whether he was going to pay the money in a check?—A. That might not have occurred at the moment of his laying down the check, but before he left my office I said, "You are not going pay in a check, are you?"

Q. Why did you make that remark?—A. It may have been a remark to indicate to him, in a joking way, that it was a transaction that I thought had better be covered up, and that a check would enable it to be traced.

Q. General Smith had told you that the payment was in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any doubt now that this person was General Morgan L. Smith?—A. I have doubts, though I think it more than likely that it was he. My doubt arises merely from the circumstance that for the last two and a half years that I have known him he never mentioned the matter to me, and when I suggested it to him last December, my remark did not even call out any response from him that alluded to the transaction in my office.

Q. How did you know him sufficiently to identify him?—A. This was the identification. I said to Mr. Schumaker, "This is the General Smith who says he was to meet you here." I was not going to assume the responsibility that he was the man to whom the money should be paid.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. When Mr. Schumaker came to you did he ask you to take the money yourself?—A. He laid the check down on the table and said that he was instructed to give me either the money or the check.

Q. And you declined to receive it?—A. For a moment I did not know what it was, and said that it was a mistake, and that it was not for me.

But when he said that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had sent him and had told him to pay it to me, or to some one whom I would identify, I said, "Oh, I know now who the money is for," and then I told him of the circumstance of the gentleman having asked me to identify him to an attorney of the company. He said "That is the man," and he requested me to see him, which I did.

Q. Were you to identify the person to whom the money was to go?—

A. Yes; this gentleman had told me that the attorney of the company was to come here and pay him the money, and Mr. Schumaker came to my office and told me that he came to pay the money to a man whom I was to identify.

Q. Did you have any other reason for identifying this Mr. Smith than that?—A. None whatever; I knew nothing of the transaction.

Q. If you had been asked the next day whom you had identified, and to whom the money went, what would you have said?—A. I should have said General Smith. I could have then, probably, gone to the parties who had introduced me and ascertained which General Smith it was, and what section of the country he was from. I know two or three General Smiths. I know a General Giles A. Smith; it was not he.

Q. The amount was pretty large, and you were in a certain sense responsible for it?—A. There was no privity of contract between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and myself which would require me to do anything more than I did. I did nothing more than my knowledge permitted me to do, and as soon as the company paid on that kind of an introduction it was their responsibility and not mine.

Q. The identification was similar to the identification which you would have expected to make to get payment of a check at a bank?—

A. O, no; I am acquainted with two hundred and fifty persons in the city of Washington who come and shake hands with me, but whose names I do not know, but yet if one of them told me his name, I would remember in a moment his associations and connections, and with whom I had met him. I told Mr. Schumaker directly that a General Smith told me that he was to meet an attorney of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and he might have said that he was to get $50,000 from me.

Q. Mr. Smith stated to you that he was to receive this money?—A. Yes.

Q. Might he not just as well have made that statement to Mr. Schumaker, so far as your identification went?—A. No, sir.

Q. What was the essence of your identification?—A. My impression was that the company wanted to get that money here, and did not want it to go directly to the parties who were to receive it, and that this man said, "There is Elmore, he is a New York man," and they said we know him. It was to get the money here and to find a man whom they could get to notify parties in New York and that would see to its delivery. I do not know that Mr. Smith had anything to do with the money. I think if it was General Morgan L. Smith he might have done it as a kindly act. I do not think there is a corporation in New York of which some of its members do not know me, and perhaps some member of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company would say, "Yes, I know Mr. Elmore, and that identification will be sufficient."

Q. Then this money was paid in the way you have indicated, because the officers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company knew you?—A. Because my name had been indicated to them by General Smith or somebody else who said the money should be paid to Mr. Smith at the office of Lyman Elmore. If they asked Mr. Schumaker, "Do you know Elmore," he would have said, "Yes; I know him intimately."

Q. I want to get at what knowledge you had of the person whom you identified?—A. I had no more acquaintance with him than I have with one-half the people I know here in Washington who pass current as certain individuals, and whom I meet in social and business relations.

Q. But the name of Smith is a very common name, and the sum of $50,000 is a very uncommon sum to be paid.—A. It is a pretty large sum of money.

Q. Do you wish us to understand that you identified a Mr. Smith, whose first name you did not know, on his own statement?—A. Simply that he was to receive this money. You put that in the nature of an identification of the man, as though I guaranteed the man to be the person who was to receive the money. I did not. I stated exactly to Mr. Schumaker what had been stated to me, and he remarked that that was the man, or that he supposed it was the man. When Mr. Schumaker came into my office I was sitting at my desk, and I simply said to him, "This is the General Smith who said he was to meet you here." I would have done that for any man whose introduction I could not guarantee, but it was a transaction which I was very sorry occurred in my office.

Q. Then you simply said to Mr. Schumaker that this was the Mr. Smith who was expecting to have the money?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you mean us to understand that you had no knowledge of this Mr. Smith in connection with this affair, except that he told you that he expected to get the money?—A. I had been introduced to him, and met him, and known him socially, probably three, four, or five weeks. I am not much out of my office except at the Department, and I knew him as well as I knew any other man in the lobby.

Q. Was this General Smith in the lobby? Did you know him as being in the lobby?—A. That is a very difficult body to define.

Q. But you have just said that you knew him as well as you knew anybody in the lobby?—A. The term "lobby" here would apply to all those who are hanging around to see if they cannot induce clients and others to think that they have influence to help them to secure legislation. Now they may succeed in getting fees and opportunities to work, or they may not, and yet they will be designated as being in the lobby.

Q. Was that General Smith known to you as a man of that class?—A. He was not.

Q. Did you know any of his antecedents or where his residence was?—A. I did not.

Q. Or his services in the Army?—A. I did not.

By Mr. NIBLACK :

Q. What time of the day was it that Mr. Schumaker last called on you at your hotel?—A. It was pretty late at night—pretty near midnight. I had gone to bed. He tried to show to me that the transaction was entirely simple and did not involve me at all. I told him then that my clients would not understand it, and that it would consequently create annoyance with them in making them think that I was mixed up with the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy.

Q. Had you acquaintance with any General Smith except this general to whom you refer and Giles A. Smith?—A. I became very well acquainted with General Morgan L. Smith.

Q. This person who came to your office was not General Giles A. Smith?—A. It was not he.

Q. And afterwards, when you became acquainted with General Morgan L. Smith, you thought that he was the man?—A. I always thought so.

Q. Did you become acquainted with any other General Smith?—A. I met General Baldy Smith.

Q. It was not he?—A. It was not he; and if it was not General Morgan L. Smith I do not know who it was. Up to this December I should have sworn that it was General Morgan L. Smith.

Q. And the only reason why you doubt it is that he parried off your allusion to the circumstance?—A. Yes. When I referred to the probability of our being before the Committee on Ways and Means he looked rather strange, as if he had nothing to say about it; and I thought it rather strange that he should have forgotten that circumstance.

Q. He might have simply tried to throw you off your guard by his manner?—A. O, yes.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. What time of the day was it that Mr. Schumaker brought the check to your office?—A. I think it was in the morning, shortly after I got to my office from the hotel. It could not be far from nine or ten o'clock.

Q. I understood you to say that your introduction to General Smith in the saloon was three or four days before this occurrence?—A. O, no. The introduction must have been three or four weeks before that, but his stopping me in the street was only three or four days before.

Q. Then there was something of an interval between your first acquaintance and his meeting you in the street?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that the first time you recollect seeing this General Smith?—A. I think it was.

Q. Did you ever see him about the Capitol?—A. I do not think I ever did. I am pretty positive I never did.

Q. Did you know at what hotel he was stopping?—A. I did not. I recollect that I met General Morgan L. Smith the next winter, and I know that his not recollecting me when he was introduced to me was a matter of some surprise.

Q. Have you been here a number of winters?—A. Yes.

Q. And every session of Congress?—A. I have been at every session of Congress for the last four years.

Q. Mr. Morgan L. Smith has been a resident of Washington for some time?—A. I never knew him before that.

Q. Did you ever know of him before that?—A. I never knew of him before that.

Q. Who introduced you to General Morgan L. Smith the last time?—A. It was either E. C. Ingersoll or John C. Conner, a member of Congress.

Q. Where were you introduced?—A. At Willard's Hotel, up in Mr. Conner's room.

Q. Did Mr. Smith then recollect you as having met you before?—A. He did not seem to. I asked him about his change of whiskers, and he passed it off as though he did not regard it worth answering.

Q. Did you recollect him as a person whom you had met before you met on that occasion?—A. There were two or three persons in the room, and I was introduced to all of them, and I think that when I spoke to General Smith, I believed that I had met him before.

The CHAIRMAN. If you change your mind before 12 o'clock on Monday next, please to notify the committee.

The WITNESS. I will do so.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 11, 1875.

CHARLES ABERT recalled and further examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. By order of the House of Representatives I again ask you, will you give us the names of the persons to whom you distributed the $106,500 belonging to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, according to the directions of Mr. Irwin?—Answer. In view of the position in which I am placed by the opinion of Mr. Johnson, given last week, I desire to submit a statement to the committee, and at the conclusion of that statement the answer to that question will come in.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

The witness read a statement as follows :

To the honorable the Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives :

I return before you in accordance with the understanding on Thursday last, when you kindly relieved me, after patiently listening to the paper I then submitted.

You have declined the request made therein, and insist on an answer to the question pending.

The only thing left for me to do is to decide whether I shall answer it or not. I think the committee have appreciated my position toward Mr. Irwin, and have been satisfied that my reluctance to reply to this question has been caused entirely by that position. If I had felt at liberty to consult my individual opinion and interest only, I would not have hesitated to answer the question when first put me, and thus have avoided the appearance which delay may have suggested.

In consequence of his refusing his consent that I should give the names of the persons to whom I made payments, as directed by him, and in compliance with his suggestion, I asked the opinion of my friend, the Hon. Reverdy Johnson, which was given in my statement on Thursday, in which he says, "If you were employed by Mr. Irwin as his counsel, and in that capacity were directed by him to employ other persons, and to pay them out of the funds placed in your hands for the purpose, you cannot legally or morally, without his consent, disclose their names."

I was employed by Mr. Irwin, as counsel and attorney, and acted for him, but was not directed by him to employ any of the persons whom he directed me to pay out of the funds placed by him in my hands for that purpose. This opinion of Mr. Johnson's does not therefore reach my case and protect me. I was merely directed or requested to pay them, in some cases not previously knowing that they had been employed, and some I never saw until I paid them. The opinion was asked as a guide to my conduct, and I would have felt bound by it had it been applicable to my position, no matter what the result would have been.

I have felt obliged, therefore, since before the committee on Thursday last, to examine for myself, more carefully than I had done, the question of confidential or privileged communications between client and attorney or counsel, and find that as the rule on the subject is one of policy or necessity, and operates to the exclusion of evidence, its operation is strictly limited to communications made in the course of professional business, pending the relation of counsel or attorney and client * * * and does not extend to any communications, although made to an attorney, if only employed as a mere agent at the time. The principle declared is too clear for doubt, that "when an attorney is consulted on business within the scope of his profession, the communications between him and his client are strictly confidential, and the attorney should not be required nor permitted by any judicial tribunal to divulge them against his client, if the latter objects to his evidence, * * * which immunity, however, does not extend to the case of an agent or steward ;” and “the privileged communications are confined to such as are made in strictly professional intercourse.” (1 Wheaton Crim. Law, 773.)

I have examined this question with special view to the relations of client and counsel, which have existed between Mr. Irwin and myself, and most sensitively affected by the long-subsisting family relations, which, I trust, may remain unimpaired, and with which this committee have nothing to do.

If there were any higher obligations of conscience, duty, and honor resting on me to prevent me from answering the pending question than those under which I stand before you as a sworn witness, you would not, I believe, ask me to violate those obligations, and if you did I could not be induced to violate them. On my application, my client has refused his consent for me to answer the question, for reasons which he may satisfactorily give when the opportunity arrives, in his judgment, for him to do so ; and he expressly leaves me to testify or not testify to any or all the facts which have come to my knowledge as his counsel and attorney, according to my conscience, sense of duty, and knowledge of the rights and relations of counsel or attorney and client.

Whatever reasons Mr. Irwin may have for the course he has felt it his duty to pursue under this investigation, his case being different from mine, I find none to sustain me in refusing to answer. I can see no higher obligation resting on me in conscience, honor, sense of duty, or knowledge of my position as counsel, than my oath as a witness. Better for me, with my views, under the circumstances, to have refused to be sworn, than now refuse to answer.

While acting as Mr. Irwin's attorney and counsel, he placed in my hands certain sums of money to pay to certain persons, according to his direction. Such payment of money was not a professional duty ; any trustworthy person could have done it as well as an attorney or counselor. It was not a confidential or privileged communication made to me in the course of professional consultation, as expressed and provided for in the law. No professional consultation was necessary. It was a direction to me only, making me an agent to pay while holding the relation of counsel.

My confidence in my client, whom I had known from childhood, led me to follow his direction implicitly, without examination. That confidence is not yet lost, not even under the circumstances in which he is now placed ; and I cannot doubt, but believe and hope, that in the course of conduct he has laid out for himself, he sees his way clear to an honorable conclusion. And while men whom he employed and paid largely, stand by and see a prison's doors open and close on him without saying a word or extending a hand for his relief, he boldly acts up to his convictions of duty.

If any of the money paid by me has been used improperly by those who received it, it has been, I need scarcely say, without any such direction by me, or any agreement with me that it should be so used. If there has been no impropriety, there is nothing to fear from my answer. If it has been misused, my silence, under the circumstances, having no valid reason for a refusal to answer, renders me liable to suspicion of complicity. If there has been no misuse, an opportunity is afforded for explanation. I therefore feel in duty bound to answer.

Since I was before the committee on Saturday last, I have seen Mr. Johnson, at his residence in Baltimore, according to my understanding with committee, having felt confident that my position had not been fully stated to or understood by him. The result of that interview has been an opinion which I will now read.

BALTIMORE, January 9th, 1875.

MY DEAR SIR: In the opinion which I gave you a few days since, I stated that, without the consent of Mr. Irwin, you had no right, either legal or moral, to answer some of the questions propounded to you by the Investigating Committee in relation to the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy. In that opinion, I assumed that you not only had been employed by Mr. Irwin as his counsel in matters of a professional character, but that you had been authorized by him to employ others to act in the same capacity. If this assumption was well founded, your professional engagements would embrace both duties. Now, however, as I understand from you, all that you were engaged by Mr. Irwin to do, beyond your professional engagement to him as counsel, was to pay certain money placed in your hands to persons whose names he gave you. This was a mere financial employment and was entirely devoid of any professional character. If, therefore, the committee ask you to disclose those names, I think you are bound to do so.

The communication to you by Mr. Irwin, in this respect, is not within the range of professional confidence. Any person, whether lawyer or not, could have been authorized, as mere agent, to disburse the money placed by Mr. Irwin in your hands for disbursement. The confidential relation of counsel and client should never be violated, for, to do so, would tend seriously to injure the interests of the client, and, in a great degree, to defeat the cause of justice. The principle upon which this confidence rests is as old as the common law itself, and has never been questioned, wherever the principles of that law have prevailed. Members of Congress might as well be called upon to answer for words spoken in debate, as counsel to make known the words spoken to them professionally by their clients. I conclude, therefore, by repeating that you are bound, if requested by the committee, to give the names of the persons to whom you paid the money placed with you by Mr. Irwin for that purpose, but that you are not bound to disclose, without his consent, any communication made to you professionally.

I remain, with regard,

REVERDY JOHNSON.

CHARLES ABERT, Esq., Washington, D. C.

In view of this opinion, and also in view of the order of the House, and also of my own convictions of duty, I feel bound to answer. According to the best of my knowledge and recollection, the first payment which Mr. Irwin directed me to make was:

On the 6th of March, 1872, to Mr. Sherrold, cash.....	$500
18th of April, 1872, to R. C. Parsons.....	1, 500
25th of April, to Mr. Moran, cash.....	200
27th of April, to Mr. Carmick, check.....	500
4th of May, to H. G. Fant, check.....	1, 000
9th of May, to A. W. Randall, check.....	1, 000
	4, 700

Of the amount placed in my hands by Mr. Irwin on the 27th of May, $125,000, already in testimony—

I paid, May 28th, to Mr. Macfarland.....	$25, 000 to A. W. Randall.....	5, 500
to W. B. Shaw.....	15, 000

I paid, May 28th, to Mr. Ingham ..	$5, 000 to A. B. Corwine ..	1, 500
to J. M. Morris.....	1, 500
to J. G. Berret, for self and S. Ward.....	7, 000 to J. H. Hersey ..	11, 000
to H. G. Fant ..	9, 000
to O. J. Averill ..	9, 000
May 29th, to Charles Abert ..	5, 000
to Donn Piatt.....	5, 000
May 31st, to John Boyd.....	1, 000
to H. G. Fant.....	1, 000
June 5th, to S. E. Chittenden.....	5, 000
	106, 500

On the 5th of June, having discharged my trust, I deposited in the American Exchange National Bank, New York, to the credit of R. B. Irwin, the sum remaining in my hands, $18,500, and reported to Mr. Irwin, returning his memorandum and the receipts from the persons above named.

On the 8th of August I received from Mr. Irwin, by bill of exchange of Bank of California, on Messrs. Lees & Waller, New York, the sum of $10,600.

Which bill was cashed in this city, at the office of Messrs. Riggs & Co., on the 12th of August, and deposited to my own credit there..... $2, 000

I had asked this additional allowance in view of my increased expenses in living away from my home for about five months, the consequent neglect of my farm, which is one of my means of support; and I considered myself entitled to a larger sum than had been paid me, in consequence of my unexpected and unwarrantable removal from the control of the case.

On the 13th of August I paid to John Boyd ..	3, 500
On the 24th August, to J. G. Berret.....	2, 500
On the 6th September, to A. B. Corwine.....	1, 600
	9, 600

The remaining $1,000 I sent by check, September 10th, to the American Exchange National Bank, New York, to be placed to the credit of Mr. Irwin, and thus closed my financial connection with this matter.

No relation, confidential or otherwise, existed between me and any of the persons to whom these payments were made; I had employed none of them.

I believe I have fully answered the question.

I ask the committee to bear in mind that while they are now looking at this case under its present aspect, and without the light which its chief witness might cast on it, they will view my acts as they were when performed.

The CHAIRMAN. I am directed by the House of Representatives to ask you also the following question. Will you state the names of the person or persons who introduced to you any of those individuals to whom you distributed any portion of said money?—A. I will first state the persons that I knew. A number of them I had met before I became connected with Mr. Irwin in this business. Mr. Moran, I knew; Mr. Carmick, I knew; Mr. Fant and Mr. Randall, I knew. Mr. McFarland,

I did not know. I have endeavored to ascertain by whom he was introduced. My impression is that I was directed to address him at the Ebbitt House, but whether he called on me with a Mr. Fauchot or not, I cannot say. Mr. Fauchot either introduced him or Mr. Ingham. I cannot tell who introduced Mr. Averill to me. He was introduced to me by some one, for I had never seen him before, nor have I ever seen him since. Mr. Piatt I had never met before, but I addressed him a note, and, in compliance with that note, he sent a card first, and then called on me. Mr. Hersey I knew, and he introduced Mr. Boyd, whom I had never seen before. Mr. Chittenden I had met before, and had become acquainted with him. Mr. Ward I had nothing to do with. Whatever amount he received went through Mr. Berret. I believe that answers your question.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Please identify the persons to whom you paid this money, so far as you can, by occupation or residence, beginning with Sherrold.—A. I do not know anything about the occupation of Sherrold, Moran, or Carmick. Mr. Fant was a resident of this city, a banker. Mr. Randall was formerly Postmaster-General of the United States. Mr. McFarland I do not know. Mr. Shaw is known to this committee. I only know him by reputation as being the correspondent of several newspapers. I do not know positively what he is. Mr. Ingham I do not know, nor do I know Mr. Corwine. He was residing in Washington that winter; he rooms here. Mr. Morris was connected with the Chronicle. I took articles to him to have inserted in his paper at different times. He lived on Capitol Hill. I understand that he is since died. Mr. Berret is a gentleman whom I had known for many years. He was formerly mayor of this city. I knew him when he was clerk in one of the Departments several years ago. What his occupation is now, whether he is an attorney or not, I do not know. He is still a resident of Washington. Mr. Ward I know by sight. I do not know what his occupation is.

Mr. NIBLACK. That is a very grave question, and has been for a long time.

The WITNESS. I regret that I cannot throw any light on the subject. Mr. Hersey is a door-keeper, or assistant door-keeper, or messenger, of the House of Representatives. Mr. Averill I do not know. I do not remember ever to have seen him, except when he called upon me. Charles Abert I believe I do know. Donn Piatt is an editor. John Boyd was introduced to me by Mr. Hersey, and I did not know at the time that he was in the employ of the House of Representatives.

Q. Do you know now that he is?—A. I do not know whether he is now or not.

Q. Do you know now that he was then?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Chittenden, I believe, is a lawyer. I think I have gone over them all.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Please to read again that part of your introductory statement referring to the persons who, you say, stood by and saw the prison-door close on Mr. Irwin.—A. Well, sir, I will state that I thought it probable, when I was here before, that the committee might compel me to answer this question then, and I had prepared the early part of this statement to read at that time.

Q. Please read it again; I wish to ask you a question based upon it.

The WITNESS, [reading.] "I cannot doubt, but believe and hope, that in the course of conduct he has laid out for himself he sees his way clearly to an honorable conclusion, and, while men whom he employed and paid largely stand by and see the prison's doors open and close upon him without saying a word or extending a hand for his relief, he boldly acts up to his conviction of duty."

Q. To whom did you refer in that part of your statement?—A. I did not refer to any one specifically. It is applicable to any of those gentlemen.

Q. To no one else?—A. To none but those embraced in my paper. If any of those gentlemen or persons are here, it is applicable to them.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Q. Do you know whether any of the persons to whom you paid money are here in this room? Can you identify any of them?

Mr. NIBLACK. I think that is hardly necessary.

The WITNESS. I think the committee can ascertain the facts without calling on me to do that.

By Mr. WOOD :

Q. One sum of $25,000 was paid to one gentleman there. Did you understand for what purpose that money was paid?—A. I did not, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Irwin tell you?—A. He did not. I relied implicitly upon Mr. Irwin, just as any gentleman would do with any member of his family. I asked no questions.

Q. Have you no idea of any service which that gentleman rendered?—A. I have not. I have no idea what he did, or whether he did anything.

Q. You have spoken of cases in which articles were inserted in the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir. I mentioned Mr. Morris and Mr. Moran in that connection.

Q. What service did those gentlemen connected with the newspapers render for this money which you paid them?—A. I have no idea, sir. In the cases of Mr. Morris and Mr. Moran the services came under my own observation. Mr. Moran would bring newspapers containing articles, or he aided Mr. Irwin in preparing articles and statistics, and the columns of the Chronicle were open to such articles at any time. I have gone there late at night with articles, which were immediately printed. Gentlemen who are familiar with the matter will know how the newspapers were used at that time to present statistics, showing the subsidizing of the foreign lines, and all that sort of thing.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. The largest sum appears to have been paid to Mr. McFarland?—A. That was the largest payment.

Q. I wish you would tell us who he was or what you understand about him.—A. I have not the slightest idea about it. I did not know where he resided. I never saw him before he came for his money, and have never seen him since that I can recollect.

Q. There is one clerk of that name, and I thought he might be the same.—A. I know some of the clerks, and if this was one of them I should know it, I think.

Q. Does this statement embrace all the money received from the company, or from the agents of the company, and paid out by you?—A. I received no money from the company. The moneys that were placed in my hands were placed there by Mr. Irwin. When I say that, of course I exclude the $1,000 which was paid to me individually at the beginning of the case.

Q. This statement, then, covers that $1,000 that you personally received from the company, and what you have stated here as having been disbursed by you covers all that you received?—A. To the best of my knowledge, it covers every cent that I received for disbursement.

By Mr. WALDRON :

Q. Did you take receipts for this money?—A. I did.

Q. Do you hold those receipts yet?—A. I do not know.

By Mr. NIBLACK :

Q. Did Mr. Irwin furnish you with the list of persons and amounts to be paid?—A. He furnished me with a list of persons and amounts, and directed me to return that list with the receipts.

Q. You paid them upon a list furnished by him?—A. I did.

Q. You paid out the money upon that list furnished by him?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. Will you read again the last few lines of Mr. Reverdy Johnson's last opinion?—A. [Reading.] "I conclude, therefore, by repeating that you are bound if requested by the committee to give the names of the persons to whom you paid the money placed with you by Mr. Irwin for that purpose, but that you are not bound to disclose without his consent any communications made to you professionally."

Q. Now were there any communications made to you professionally by Mr. Irwin in this connection that you have not disclosed to this committee?—A. Some letters passed between us that I have not disclosed.

Q. I will read you the law as it passed Congress, and then I want to know how you bring either the Pacific Mail Steamship Company or Mr. Irwin, or anybody employed by him, into any sort of honest relation with this passage as client, attorney, or anything else. The law reads thus: "For steamship service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, $500,000. And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to contract with the lowest bidder, within three months after the passage of this act, after sixty days' public notice, for a term of ten years from and after the 1st day of October, 1873, for the conveyance of an additional monthly mail on the said route, at a compensation not to exceed the rate per voyage now paid under the existing contracts, and upon the same conditions and limitations as prescribed by existing acts of Congress in reference thereto, and the contractors under the provisions of this section shall be required to carry the United States mails during the existence of their contracts, without additional charge, on all the steamers they may run upon said line, or any part of it, or any branch or extension thereof: provided, &c. * * * And the Government of the United States shall have the right, in case of war, to take for the use of the United States any of the steamers of said line, and in such case pay a reasonable compensation therefor."

That is the law. Now, can you see anything in this law, or in anything that was going on in Congress in connection with it, that gave the Pacific Mail Steamship Company any right to consider itself a party in the matter, to employ counsel, or to intervene in any way in the passage of a public act in which it was not itself concerned; and can you see how Mr. Johnson or yourself can establish the relation of client and counsel for Mr. Irwin, or any one that he employed, in regard to that public act? You are both lawyers. I want to know how either you or the Hon. Reverdy Johnson can establish that relation in this case?—A. I do not feel at present able to answer that question. It is a legal question that I cannot now answer.

Q. You have been standing on the right of an attorney, and assuming that you have still some secret professional letters. You have not communicated how much, according to Mr. Johnson's opinion, you are not at liberty to lay before the committee. Now, sir, in view of the law that passed, I want to know what relation you can possibly see existing between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and the Congress that passed that law. I want to see how you find anything which establishes the relation of attorney and client, or any professional relation whatever in the matter.—A. Well, sir, I have gone into that question as closely as I could in my statement.

Q. You have heard this law read just now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is the Pacific Mail Steamship Company known in it at all? The law authorizes and directs the Postmaster-General to contract with the lowest bidder, not with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, nor with Mr. Irwin, nor with any particular person; now how do you establish the relation of attorney and client in the case?—A. Well, sir, because they came here to obtain the passage of that law. That very law was passed on the application of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. It was a public act putting money into the hands of an executive officer of the Government, and directing him to contract with the lowest bidder, not with this company, or any particular person or corporation; what right, then, had you to employ counsel, and set up the relation of counsel and client in connection with the matter at all? That is what I want you, as a lawyer, to state, as you seem to be standing on your rights as a lawyer. [A pause.] If you cannot answer that, then I will ask you this: whether or not, in your opinion, Mr. Irwin and yourself, and every human being who came here to intervene in the passage of that public act, was not an officious intermeddler, acting contrary to public policy, good morals, and for corrupt purposes? Is not that your opinion, as a lawyer, in view of the law as I have read it to you?—A. Well, sir, I certainly should not have come before Congress to obtain the passage of a law with any such opinion of myself as you suggest, if I understand you correctly. I consider that to come before Congress to obtain the passage of a law is a legitimate occupation.

Q. And to pay money for it?—A. To pay the agent employed I should consider legitimate. I have been myself a professional man here for years, and have obtained the passage of laws by the presentation of my views, and by the presentation of memorials of persons asking relief in various cases.

Q. But this is a law where the party seeking to set up the relation of client is not known at all. I can see how a private party has a right to employ any attorney he pleases and pay him anything he pleases for presenting his case in the ablest manner he can; but this is a public act, having no relation to any private party.—A. It is a public act, for the benefit of a corporation.

Q. No, sir; it is a public act authorizing a public officer to contract with the lowest bidder for this service. But, dropping that for the present, I wish you to give us those communications that passed between you and Mr. Irwin.—A. I think they were two letters with regard to the disbursement of this fund. Mr. Irwin called me to New York on the 7th of December last, mentioning that there was a suit pending there against him, and he desired me to bring with me all my papers connected with this transaction, to show, I suppose, that this money had been paid to me, and that I had accounted to him for it; and at that time I gave him those letters.

Q. Is that all the communication that passed between you on this subject? So that you have not, in consequence of your supposed obligation as counsel, withheld any fact that this committee ought to know about the disbursement of this money?—A. I do not know that I have. I have not consciously done so.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Do you know, by any communication from Mr. Irwin, of any payments of money made to any member of Congress or to any officer of either House, except those which have been now stated?—A. I do not know to whom Mr. Irwin paid money other than to the persons I have named.

Q. Or any person to whom he had agreed to pay any money?—A. I did not know that he had any agreement to pay any person any sum of money.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Do you know of a General Smith who had anything to do with the passage of this bill or the disbursement of the money?—A. I do not.

[Mr. JOSEPH MACFARLAND here took the witness-stand.]

The CHAIRMAN, [to Mr. Abert.] Is that gentleman the Mr. Macfarland to whom you paid the money?

Mr. ABERT. O, no, sir; the gentleman was larger. My recollection is that he was a larger man than that.

JOSEPH MACFARLAND sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your business?—Answer. I am a newspaper correspondent.

Q. Are you the gentleman to whom Mr. Abert paid $25,000?—A. I am, sir.

Q. Will you state all the circumstances connected with that $25,000 that you know of?—A. All that I know of it is that I was deputed to go to Mr. Abert and get it; and I did so, and delivered it to Colonel Forney.

Q. By whom were you deputed to go and get it?—A. By Colonel Forney.

Q. You were requested by Colonel Forney to go and get it, and when you obtained it of Mr. Abert, you did what?—A. I carried it to Colonel Forney.

Q. Did you have any portion of it yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know what was done with it by Colonel Forney?—A. I do not know, sir; I never inquired.

Q. Did you ever hear him state?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any portion of that $25,000 beyond what you have stated?—A. I have not, sir.

Q. How soon after you received it did you pay it to him?—A. Right away. I came right from Mr. Irwin's house, where I saw Mr. Abert, with the money to Colonel Forney.

Q. The same day?—A. Yes, sir; I came right up with it to him.

Q. You state that you know nothing of what became of it after that, or any portion of it?—A. No, sir; nothing.

Q. Was there any understanding between you and Colonel Forney as to the disposition of that money?—A. No, sir; not at all.

Q. Did you hear Colonel Forney make any statement in regard to the disposition of it?—A. Not at all.

J. C. G. KENNEDY sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK :

Question. The committee have been advised, by the testimony of Mr. Riggs and Mr. Schumaker, that a gentleman named Kennedy introduced Mr. Schumaker to Mr. Riggs. Are you the gentleman?—Answer I am.

Q. Please state the circumstances attending that introduction, and what was done.—A. Mr. Schumaker came to my office, and mentioned to me that he had some pecuniary transactions to consummate, and was not personally acquainted with any banker in Washington, and asked me if I would go and introduce him. I do not know whether he mentioned Mr. Riggs or not; but, whether he did or not, I went with him to Mr. Riggs's banking-house to identify him, and introduced him to the cashier. I understood that he either wanted a draft on New York cashed—

Q. Do you remember the amount of that draft?—A. I cannot say that he told me. I heard indirectly, though.

Q. How much was it?—A. Mr. Riggs came into my office—I do not know that this is testimony though—Mr. Riggs came in and said, “Kennedy, do you know what amount of money the gentleman wanted that you introduced to our cashier?” I said, “No, and don't care.” Said he, “He wants $50,000.” Said I, “I don't know anything about it, but I know Mr. Schumaker. He won't draw anything that he is not authorized to draw or is not able to meet.” There was some other remark made, and he said, “Well, you are satisfied?” and I said “Yes.” This is not testimony, however.

Mr. BECK. But still we want it.

The WITNESS. But I don't know that I should give it. All I can say about it is what Mr. Riggs said to me.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. State the whole conversation.—A. Well, Mr Riggs said, “What in the devil does he want such big notes for?” I said, “I don't know; that is a matter of taste. Let him have what he wants.” He said, “We have not as many as he wants, but we told him we could get them;” and I think Mr. Riggs then remarked that Mr. Schumaker seemed a little disappointed at their saying that they had not that amount of money in large notes, and that he said he would go somewhere else. I said, “Very well; if he has gone anywhere else he will soon come back again, because no bank in Washington keeps fifty $1,000 notes on hand. He won't find them in any other bank in Washington; so you had better have them ready for him.” I heard nothing more about it except, I think, that Mr. Schumaker came back and got the $50,000; but what he got I really don't know. This was merely a conversation between Mr. Riggs and myself on that occasion.

Q. Was there anything said on that occasion about “Don't you know the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?”—A. Do you mean did I say so?

Q. Yes.—A. If I did it would not be testimony here.

Q. That is not exactly what I inquired.—A. I should not like to answer that question; it would be very impertinent if I did.

Q. If you made any such remark to Mr. Riggs, what was the foundation for it?—A. I will say candidly and frankly that if I made any such remark, Mr. Schumaker said nothing to me on the subject; nor did anybody else say anything to me that would justify me in drawing such an inference.

JOHN BOYD sworn and examined.

Question. Are you the Mr. John Boyd to whom Mr. Abert paid some money?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. How large a sum was it?—A. He paid me at one time $1,000, and at another time $3,500.

Q. Was that all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what service did he pay you that money?—A. The first acquaintance that I had with Mr. Irwin was this: I met him in the lobby, right opposite my door, and I think he had some pamphlets which he asked me to distribute. I did so. I met him again the next day and he had some that were directed to certain members. He asked me to deliver them as they were directed, and I did so. I met him from time to time during the pendency of the bill, several times in the lobby and at my door. He would call to see members and I would send a boy to find those that he wanted to see. The bill was defeated in the House and it went over to the Senate. I did not see him again until the bill passed the Senate and came back to the House. I met him then in the lobby. The way I came to meet him was this: A gentleman by the name of Colonel Bee came over from the Senate, and as he entered the hall, (he not being entitled to the floor,) I heard him say that no subsidy bill should pass at that session of Congress, as the Pacific Mail had defeated his bill in the Senate. I went down to the door and met Colonel Irwin, and I told him what Colonel Bee had said, and he then said that he wished me to notice who Colonel Bee communicated with. I did so, and I saw Mr. Irwin about 12 or 1 o'clock and gave him a list of those members, and I think Mr. Irwin then asked me to see that when the bill was up his friends were in the House, and I think I did so. That is all the connection I had with the subsidy bill, with the exception of receiving the $4,500. Mr. Irwin never promised to give me anything during the pendency of the bill, but he sent me that after the result was accomplished. There was no arrangement made between him and me. I never mentioned money to him in any way, shape, or manner.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. This was a gratuity to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But no agreement had been made with you in advance to pay you for anything that you did?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you solicit any member to vote for the bill?—A. I did not. Mr. Irwin never requested me to do so.

Q. And there was no member of the House whose support for the bill you asked in any way?—A. No, sir.

Q. In distributing those documents, you did what you are in the habit of doing in any matter that is pending?—A. Yes, sir; I do it every day.

Q. Was this money retained by you or was any part of it paid to anybody else?—A. It was retained by me.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. You say that Mr. Irwin was in the habit of calling members out during the first pendency of the bill. Can you tell who those members were?—A. I cannot, sir; I don't recollect who they were, because it is a thing that occurs every day, calling members out.

Q. The chief portion of your service was in exposing to Irwin the persons to whom Mr. Bee spoke, was it?—A. I don't know whether he considered that any more valuable than the rest of the service, distributing the documents around. He never said anything to me about it.

Q. Are you sure there was no service of any other kind rendered? This is a very large sum of money to be paid for the services that you have stated.—A. I have stated all that I recollect, sir.

Q. Do you think that you could have rendered him other service without recollecting it?—A. Well, I don't think that I could, very well.

Q. You say this was a gratuity?—A. Yes, sir; so far as I was concerned. I never made any arrangement with Mr. Irwin, and never asked him for anything.

Q. Did you expect, when you rendered that service, to be paid for it?—A. I never expect to receive anything from anybody when I do anything around the hall, because it is in the line of my duty to do it. When a gentleman presents any bills or pamphlets or anything of that kind to be distributed, I always distribute them.

Q. You say, "in the line of your duty." Do you regard it as in the line of your duty to receive such large gratuities?—A. No, sir; I do not often receive such.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Have you ever received any money from anybody else for getting bills through?—A. No, sir; I never received a dollar for getting bills through.

Q. Did you ever receive any money for rendering any assistance to persons in the lobby who were desirous of getting measures passed?—A. Not for lobbying on the floor.

Q. For anything?—A. I have received sums in letters several times.

Q. Anonymously?—A. Yes, sir; no name to the letter; $10 sometimes, and sometimes $5.

Q. You have never received $4,500 in any other case?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whatever you have received you have retained it all yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

JOHN H. HERSEY sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your occupation?—Answer. Messenger of the House of Representatives.

Q. What was your business in the Forty-second Congress?—A. I was a messenger at that time.

Q. Did you receive any money from Abert?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?—A. Eleven thousand dollars.

Q. On what account?—A. I don't know what account; perhaps substantially for the same reasons that Mr. Boyd gave. I paid some attention to the gentlemen.

Q. State all that you know connected with the payment of that money to you.

A. I became acquainted with Mr. Irwin some years ago; and when he came here on this business it necessarily brought him around the House somewhat, and I showed him some attention, as I generally aim to show to any one that comes near my door, and that is all. As Mr. Boyd said, Colonel Bee came to the House, and I don't know whether Mr. Irwin spoke to me or who spoke to me about that; but somebody requested me to take a little notice, as I was passing in and out, of what members he communicated with, as it was supposed that he was endeavoring to defeat Pacific Mail. I did so, and I either gave Mr. Irwin a list of a few members that I saw Colonel Bee talking with, or I have it to Mr. Boyd—I don't remember which. That is all the service

I did in the matter, except helping to distribute his documents, and finding members for him when he came.

Q. You received this $11,000 for your own use, then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any sum fixed between you and Irwin that he was to pay you?—A. No, sir; never any money mentioned.

Q. Was this all received at one time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there an understanding beforehand that you were to receive money?—A. No, sir; there was not.

Q. How came you, then, to be found in Mr. Irwin's rooms to get the money if it was not understood beforehand that you were to have some?—A. I don't remember about that. I think I met Colonel Abert, and he asked me to go to his room—to meet him at his room, and I did so.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Did you retain the whole amount for yourself, or was any part of it paid to anybody else?—A. None, sir.

Q. No part of it has ever been paid out by you?—A. No, sir.

Q. There was no understanding that any of it was to be paid to anybody else?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Did you render any service in that matter other than what you have described?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any understanding that any portion of this money was to go to any member of Congress?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to any person other than yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know Mr. Abert previous to your receiving the money?—A. Yes, sir. I had met him here occasionally.

Q. Were you introduced to him by any one at the time you received the money from him?—A. No, sir; I knew him already. I did not require an introduction.

Q. Did you introduce any other person to him?—A. I might have done so; but I don't remember who it was, if I did.

Q. Is it your habit to report to people who pay you what gentlemen call on members of the House?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever done it in any other case than this?—A. No, sir. I have often had men, who have been here with business before Congress, request me substantially to see what members certain men communicated with.

Q. Is this the largest sum of money you have received for any such service?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you received other money for like service?—A. No, sir; not to any amount. I have received a little present occasionally.

Q. What is the largest "little present" that you have ever received besides this one for like service?—A. I cannot tell; probably $50 or $100.

Q. For what service was that?—A. That I cannot remember. I have been here a good many years, and there have been a good many things up before Congress since I have been here.

Q. Did you speak to any member of Congress with reference to this Pacific Mail subsidy bill?—A. No, sir.

Q. What State were you appointed from?—A. Wisconsin.

Q. How long have you been in the service of the House?—A. I was appointed on the 10th of July, 1861.

Q. And you have been here substantially the whole time since?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KELLEY :

Q. Do you remember how you invested that sum of $11,000?—A. No; I cannot tell now; it was some time ago.

Q. You received it all at one time?—A. Yes.

Q. It was an unexpected receipt by you?—A. Well, it was.

Q. There was nobody owing it to you?—A. O, no.

Q. You had not been looking forward to it?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. FOSTER :

Q. Nor to any part of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You do not remember whether you bought a farm, or a house, or stocks with it?—A. No, sir; I cannot tell.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. Before you went to Irwin's room to receive the money, had you any idea how much you were to receive?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you not surprised at the liberality shown towards you?—A. Well, it was a very agreeable surprise.

By Mr. FOSTER :

Q. Was the money paid to you in currency?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What sized bills?—A. Pretty large denominations; $1,000 bills—some $1,000 bills, at any rate.

By Mr. WOOD :

Q. What is your pay?—A. $1,440 a year.

Q. Has it always been that since you have been here?—A. No, sir; I have been changed around. Sometimes I have had more, and sometimes a little less.

Q. What is the largest pay you have had?—A. $1,800.

Q. And the lowest?—A. $1,200.

Q. Are you a man of family?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you own any property here?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you consider yourself a man worth any amount of money?—A. No, sir; I am poor; it takes all I can earn to support my family.

Q. Did you ever have so much money as $11,000 paid to you before or since?—A. Never, sir.

Q. What did you do with that money?—A. I paid up some debts—used it in various ways.

Q. Used it all up?—A. Yes, sir; it is all gone; all used up.

Q. What did you think it was given to you for?—A. Well, I suppose for some attention shown to those men; no more, either, than I am in the habit of showing to almost any gentleman that comes.

OSCAR J. AVERILL sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. In Bath, N. Y.

Q. What is your business?—A. Previous to the last four years, I was a collector of internal revenue. From that time until the present I have been in various engagements, but not any permanent business.

Q. Where have you pursued those "various engagements"?—A. There and here.

Q. What portion of your time do you spend here?—A. I have been here, I should think, perhaps fifteen months, in all, during the last four years.

Q. Were you here during any portion of the Forty-second Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What time did you spend here during the Forty-second Congress?—

A. I was here from about the 1st of March, 1872, until the close of the session, I think. I hesitated very much about coming here to-day to testify, because I have no memorandum of dates with me, and I cannot be accurate as to dates.

Q. But, as far as you can recollect, you were here from about the 1st of March, 1872, to the close of that session of Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What were you doing?—A. I came here to introduce an excavator, which I thought could be made very useful here in the District; and also, in connection with another gentleman, to establish a machine for making brick. That was the business that brought me here.

Q. Did you pursue any other calling while you were here?—A. I did not, sir. I had some little business of an unimportant character at the Treasury Department.

Q. With the exception of that "little business of an unimportant character at the Treasury Department," and your excavator, and the brick-making machine, you had no other occupation?—A. I had not.

Q. Did you receive any money from Mr. Charles Abert?—A. I do not know the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Please to stand up, Mr. Abert. That is the gentleman.

The WITNESS. I do not remember ever seeing him before.

Q. Did you receive $9,000, while you were here at that time, from anybody?—A. I did.

Q. Where were you when you received it?—A. In Mr. Irwin's room on I street.

Q. Was it before or after Mr. Irwin left the city?—A. It was the day he left.

Q. Were you introduced by anybody to the gentleman who paid you the money?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Were you acquainted with him?—A. I was not.

Q. You got $9,000 from a man that you did not know, and who did not know you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How did you do it?—A. Well, sir, I had an engagement to call for that amount of money, made some long time previous to that.

Q. With whom did you make it?—A. With Mr. Irwin himself.

Q. Was he present when you got the money?—A. He was not. I told the gentleman my name, and who I was, and he said that Mr. Irwin had gone, and handed me a letter from Mr. Irwin, which inclosed the $9,000.

Q. Nobody identified you, then?—A. No, sir. I hope that, in justice to myself, the committee will allow me to state this matter fully, as detached portions of my testimony might be used to put me in a light which I do not like to occupy.

Q. You have a right to state it as fully as you please.—A. There is nothing about the transaction but what is an open book, so far as I am concerned. I desire to conceal nothing, but to make a frank, clear statement of it, at the risk to-day of being a little inaccurate, because I have no memoranda to justify me in mentioning dates. Mr. Abert, if it was Mr. Abert, had left his card at the Ebbitt House, and I paid no attention to it. The next day, or the second day after, I received a note signed by Mr. Abert, asking me to call at Mr. Irwin's rooms on I street, and I did so—not that day, but the day following. I went there, but I have no recollection of being introduced to Mr. Abert. He may have been sitting there, but I do not recollect him. I introduced myself to Mr. Irwin, and showed him the note that I had received. We sat down, and the gentleman that was in the room (whether it was Mr. Abert or not I do not know) retired from the room. I think this was about the month of April, 1872, and the money was paid to me afterward; but to show you how the $9,000 came to be paid to me it will be necessary to explain. I made an arrangement with Irwin by which I was to receive $10,000—10 per cent. of it down, and the remaining $9,000 in case of the success of this measure; and I went there and received the balance, $9,000.

Q. What was that arrangement?—A. When I called on Mr. Irwin he told me that he had received a letter from Mr. Stockwell, in New York, suggesting me as a good person to assist him in a certain work that he wanted done. He said that I was probably aware of the character of that work; that I had seen from the papers that he was here for the purpose of procuring the passage of the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy-bill. I told him I had seen it. Mr. Irwin then said to me—I cannot repeat these conversations exactly as they occurred, because it is a good while ago, and I had dismissed the subject from my mind, but I can give the substance of what was said—Mr. Irwin said to me, as near as I can recollect, that in view of the fact that he had been written to on the subject he desired to see me, and he had sent Mr. Abert to me with a card two or three days before, but I had not called. I said that I had been very busy, (as I had been, with a gentleman from Elmira,) so that, as I told him, I could not call at the time the card had been left. Mr. Irwin said he was very glad to see me there, and then he said, “I want you to take hold of this matter and assist me in what I want done here.” He said that in addition to the fact that Mr. Stockwell had written to him about me, another gentleman connected with the company, Mr. Fellows, or Bellows, or some such name, had also written on the subject, and, said he, “I think you can do me a great deal of good here. Mr. Stockwell and myself have both become convinced that there is a very extensive combination here to defeat the passage of this subsidy, and that money is being used for that purpose. I want to find out, if I can, who the men are that are here for that purpose, and what they are doing, and, if possible, I want to check them in every direction. Therefore I want you to take hold of the case and do all you can to assist me.” I said to him that if I did take hold of it I should have to neglect my other business; that I had come here purely as an experiment with the other matter, and that if I neglected it then I was afraid it would fall through altogether. I said that I did not like to make any engagement with him unless I could see my way clear to make at least as much as I anticipated making in the other business; that I had had several interviews with men here which I thought were going to result in a good thing to myself and the gentleman who was with me in the business, and that I would not like to let go of it for the sake of this, unless for some strong inducement. Mr. Irwin said it was very important; that the matter was all given in charge of Governor Randall, who was here for that purpose, and that he wanted me to take hold of it and assist him all I could. Said he, “You are pretty well acquainted here and in New York, and you know exactly what I want.” He said he thought the subsidy would pass without any trouble whatever if there was no opposition to it from what was called the “short interest” in New York. He had no hesitation in saying that the temper of Congress was in favor of the bill unless it was changed by this adverse influence. I then said that if I did take hold of it at all I would do it upon certain conditions, viz, that I should receive $10,000—$1,000 down, and the balance when the bill passed. Mr. Irwin agreed to that proposition, and he paid me $1,000.

Q. What did you do?—A. I put myself, in the course of a day or two, in a position to know what was going on with reference to the adverse influences that were here.

Q. State what you did.—A. I talked with parties about the hotels and at the Capitol here, and learned, in a quiet way, everything that I could on the subject. It was the information that Mr. Irwin wanted, and I informed him of whatever I discovered. As soon as I learned, as I did on almost every corner and at every turn, that there were men here opposing the passage of the bill, and hearing from almost everybody that there was money here, and that it was a mere question of who had the most money, I informed him of that fact. I felt my way along as well as I could, and whenever I heard any name of any importance I reported it to Governor Randall.

Q. Can you give us the names?—A. I cannot; I have no memoranda, and it is utterly impossible for me to give any names.

Q. Can you give us the name of any man that you reported?—A. I cannot; I cannot remember names. If I knew the names of every member of this committee I would forget them all in an hour.

Q. Can you give us a single communication that you made to Mr. Randall about it?—A. I made the communications in the form of memoranda. I would go around and gather up all the information I could—

Q. Do you mean to say you went around incog.?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not make known your name or business?—A. O, I never concealed my name.

Q. But you did not disclose it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you did not disclose your business?—A. No, sir; I did not disclose my object.

Q. Can you give us any information which you gathered in the capacity in which you then acted?—A. I cannot; I may have some account of it in my diary, but I have not got it here.

Q. Then you mean to say that your memory is an entire blank as to work that you did?—A. No, sir; it is not an entire blank.

Q. Give us what there is in it then.—A. Well, it is a good while ago since these transactions occurred, and with a memory for dates as imperfect as mine is, I am very well aware that I shall probably be put in an unfavorable light here; but it is a fact that I cannot recall a name, and the transactions have passed so entirely out of my mind that I am unable to recall anything about them.

Q. Will you give the committee any information which you obtained in your capacity as Mr. Irwin's agent in respect to the use of money here in connection with the subsidy bill?—A. To defeat the bill?

Q. To be used in any way in connection with the bill.—A. O, I have no knowledge of any money being used on the side that I was engaged on; none whatever.

Q. I did not ask you in respect to the side.—A. No, sir; I have no knowledge of it. I have a general recollection that I found persons here who I suspected had money, and I reported their names to Governor Randall.

Q. What evidence had you that those persons had money here in that connection?—A. It seemed to be in the air.

Q. What did you see in the air?—A. I did not see anything in the air, sir.

Q. What did you hear in the air?—A. I heard the voice of almost every man that I talked to to that effect.

Q. Will you please give the committee the benefit of the information that you gathered in that way?—A. I cannot. All I know is that whenever I met a man that I had reason to believe was fresh from New York, or fresh from the influence of Mr. Drew, I reported that fact to Mr. Randall, because it was determined to counteract that influence if possible.

Q. Whom did you find from New York in that capacity?—A. They were strangers to me, mostly.

Q. How did you succeed in putting Mr. Randall on his guard against them?—A. By hearing somebody that I knew mention the name of somebody that he supposed was here for that interest.

Q. Can you give us the names of any of those persons whom you reported to Governor Randall?—A. I cannot. I am testifying here without my memoranda.

Q. Have you any memoranda that will show the names of any of those persons?—A. I may have.

Q. Can you tell whether you have or not?—A. I cannot. I have got a little memorandum at home; but beyond that I can say nothing more.

Q. Where did you report to Mr. Irwin?—A. At his room.

Q. How often did you report to him?—A. I did not see him more than three or four times.

Q. Did you report to anybody else?—A. Yes, to Governor Randall.

Q. How often did you report to Governor Randall?—A. Forty times, I presume.

Q. How came you to get more money than the governor himself?—A. I do not know that I did get more than he got; I am not aware that I did.

Q. Do you know how much was paid him?—A. I do not. I understood, however, that Governor Randall was prepared to deal with these parties and get them out of the way.

Q. To deal with them in what way?—A. I do not know. I have no definite knowledge on that subject.

Q. What did you mean by saying that he was prepared "to deal with them and get them out of the way?"—A. I mean just this, that Mr. Irwin told me that Governor Randall had the matter, so far as that branch of it was concerned, in charge, and that any information I got I was to report to Governor Randall.

Q. You took your orders from Governor Randall, then?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were to act on your own discretion?—A. Yes, sir; I considered myself entirely competent to do that.

Q. How long did you act in that capacity?—A. From that time up to the passage of the bill.

Q. Did any one of these men that you reported to Governor Randall disappear?—A. I do not know whether they did or not. This is a pretty large city, and it would be difficult to say whether they did or did not.

Q. Did any of them change their tactics in reference to this bill?—A. Yes, sir. Governor Randall gave me the names of several parties that he had seen who were opposing the bill, some that I had reported to him and some that he had discovered from other sources.

Q. Who were they; members of Congress?—A. No, sir; parties sent here from New York.

Q. Governor Randall reported to you that he had changed their views?—A. That they had changed.

Q. Can you tell us one of those persons?—A. I cannot, sir. If I heard the names I would not remember them a second.

Q. They were not members of the House?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were they officers of the House?—A. No, sir. It is but just that I should say that I never spoke to a member or officer of the House on the subject, except in some general way, as, "What do you think the prospects of this bill are?" or something of that kind.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. What did you do with this $10,000?—A. I used the first $1,000, I do not know where. Mr. Irwin gave me a check for that money payable to his own order. My impression is that I drew that at the bank of J. Cooke & Co. The other money was paid to me in nine one thousand dollar bills, which I sent to my bank and had credited to me there.

Q. Was that money all retained to your own use?—A. Every dollar of it, as I can show by my bank-account.

Q. You have no recollection of having paid out any of that money, or any other money on account of that, to anybody else?—A. No; not one dollar nor one cent.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. You never had any conversation with any officer or member of the House in regard to the merits of this bill you say?—A. No, sir; I never had. In fact, I never had anything to do with the passage of the bill proper; I only made inquiries by way of getting information.

Q. Was there any arrangement by which you were to endeavor to influence any members of Congress?—A. No, sir; I never was asked to speak to one. Mr. Irwin did not ask me to influence any one, or even to speak to any member on the subject.

Q. Was there any officer or member of Congress who was a relation of yours?—A. Well, sir, General Averill, of Minnesota, is a sort of relation of mine. We call ourselves cousins, although I have only made his acquaintance within two years.

Q. Did you have any communication with him on the subject of this bill?—A. I never spoke to him on the subject in any way, shape, or manner.

Q. Were you acquainted with him at that time?—A. I was, but I had only known him about six months. He does not spell his name as we spell ours, and I had not met him until a short time before.

Q. Did you have any dealings in stocks, in Pacific Mail stock, during that year?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you have any arrangements to carry stock for anybody?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you do with your excavator?—A. It is here yet; it is in a warehouse. I was trying to form a company.

Q. Whom did you endeavor to get into that company?—A. I saw the board of public works, and got them to visit me out where I was using the excavator. I procured a man and a team and experimented with it.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Your effort was to get in with them?—A. My effort was to form a company for the use of that machine.

Q. You wanted to get the board of public works into it?—A. Yes, sir; I wanted to get them to indorse it, and I believe that I should have succeeded but for one thing. It was what was called a self-loader; and when I was using it down on Seventh street, the men who were working on the streets were so enraged against it that they threatened to break it; they were so incensed at a machine that would load itself being brought here. They feared that it would break up their business, and I heard afterwards that the board of public works were afraid to indorse it.

Mr. NIBLACK. Mr. Waldron suggests that the machine could not vote.

The WITNESS. Yes, that was one of the expressions used at the time. I tried very hard to introduce the machine here, and if I had succeeded, I should have made some money out of it.

WASHINGTON, January 11, 1875.

WILLIAM B. SHAW sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Please give the committee your residence and occupation.—

Answer. My residence is Washington, D. C. I am a newspaper correspondent.

Q. How long have you been in that employment?—About twenty-three or twenty-four years.

Q. Do you know Mr. Charles Abert?—A. I do; very well.

Q. Did you see Mr. Abert at any time during the first session of the Forty-second Congress?—A. I saw him frequently.

Q. Did he pay you any money?—A. He did, sir.

Q. When?—A. I cannot tell you the exact time; it was in the room occupied by Mr. Irwin, on I street.

Q. After the passage of the subsidy bill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much money did he pay you?—A. I think it was $15,000.

Q. On what account?—A. Well, for my services, and so forth.

Q. What services?—A. I will state to the committee, if they will allow me, how I became connected with this matter. I was in New York, I think it was in October or November, prior to the meeting of Congress. I was in the office of Mr. Henry Clews, where I always go. He had been doing business for me for years, and I had furnished information; and in conversation I asked him if there was anything going to be done in Washington this winter that would be interesting, and about which I could furnish him information. I had been furnishing him information for ten years past, on which he had operated in gold, stocks, and so forth, and he had always given me my commission, or bought something for me and carried it. I said to him that I had heard that the Pacific Mail Company were going to renew their application for a subsidy at the coming session, and I asked him whether he knew anything about it. He said he would be very apt to know, because he was a director and a member of the executive committee. I said I was very glad to know that, because if they made the application and the Postmaster-General recommended the subsidy, the stock would undoubtedly advance; "and," said I, "the very moment that is done I think it will be a good opportunity to buy some stock." He said yes, it would. I asked him if he knew Mr. Stockwell, and he said he did. Then I said, "You know me very well. Would you have any hesitancy in telling Mr. Stockwell who I am and what I have done for you, &c.?" And he said, "None in the world." Said I, "I would like to have some stock bought for me and carried, and I will furnish him information from time to time, as I have furnished it to you." He said yes, that that was perfectly proper and right, and he would do so; he would either see Mr. Stockwell, or fix it in some way. I then came back to Washington, and I wrote to him about it, and in reply he stated that he had seen Mr. Stockwell or communicated with him, and that I could communicate with him. I then wrote to Mr. Stockwell and asked him to buy me some stock; and in reply he said to me that he had given directions to buy some. I think I asked him how much to buy. I am not positive about that, but I know there were several hundred shares. The stock, at that time, was about 48 or 50. Somebody told me that Mr. Irwin would have charge of the matter here, and that when he came on, and while he was in Washington, anything that I had to say or to communicate on the subject I could communicate to him. I asked what Irwin it was, and the person, whoever it was, told me. I then said that I was very willing to do that; that I had known Mr. Irwin for years, while he resided in this city. When Mr. Irwin came here I called on him and told him what I had done, and he said that was all right. Said he, "I am going to have charge of this matter here, and whatever you do, keep me posted, as well as the people in New York, and I will see that you are liberally compensated." I told him that that was part of my business here—furnishing information—and had been for years. I saw Mr. Irwin frequently after that, and communicated with him, I guess, every day. I saw him about the Capitol here, and in other places, and I told him everything that I knew that was going on. I do not know of any particular conversation that I had with him, except that the subject came up in a general way every time that I saw him. When the thing was over Mr. Irwin, or Colonel Abert, or somebody—I don't know who it was—told me to go to this place on I street, and I went up there, and Colonel Abert paid me the money—$15,000. I asked him no questions about anybody else or anything else. I took it and used it for my own purposes—paid my debts, and paid some losses that I had made in other directions. I had lost some on one or two occasions, outside of that, on my own hook. I also took up some notes on my house. I took the money and used it myself.

Q. Was there any sum agreed upon beforehand that you were to receive?—A. No, sir; not particularly. I do not remember any sum being agreed upon.

Q. Had you any knowledge of what amount you were to receive until you received it?—A. No; I did not know exactly.

Q. Did you give a receipt in full?—A. I did, sir; for the whole amount.

Q. I mean in full for all demands.—A. I merely gave him a receipt for that amount of money—"received $15,000," and signed my name.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Did you pay any of that money to any member of Congress or any officer of the House?—A. Not a dollar. I kept it all, sir.

Q. Was there any talk between you or any arrangement that you should disburse any of this money to any other person?—A. There was no talk about my disbursing the money, that I can remember.

Q. Did you carry stock for any member or officer of the House?—A. I did not. I carried stocks for myself.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Did you seek to influence any member of Congress in his vote?—A. None in the world.

Q. You never asked a member to vote for the subsidy bill?—A. Never. I frequently asked members how they thought it was going, because I was very much interested, and I asked, I guess, everybody that was of any prominence. I would say, "How does Pacific Mail look; do you think she will go through?" or something of that kind; and there is one member of this committee that I talked with about it, because his judgment, I thought, was first-rate.

Q. And in doing that, don't you think that your own wishes were expressed to the members?—A. I do not think so. I was in favor of the bill on general principles. I am in favor of subsidies always.

Q. And you advocated it in your correspondence?—A. Yes, sir; I was in favor of the subsidy; I am in favor of subsidies on general principles, to build up our commerce.

Mr. KASSON. Especially when a nice bit drops by the way.

The WITNESS. It would depend altogether on circumstances. I was in favor of the Pacific Railroad, and on the same principle I made some money out of that on the purchase of stock that was carried for me. I have done it for the last twelve years.

Q. Was there anything said between you and Mr. Irwin, or Mr. Stockwell, to the effect that you should influence any member of Congress?—A. Nothing in the world, sir. They knew that I was well posted here, and they wanted me to keep them thoroughly advised about this matter, which I promised to do, and did do. I gave them all the information I obtained.

Q. Was it for information, or for newspaper correspondence, that they paid you this money?—A. For information. I will state one thing which will show the committee how it worked. There was a very large "bear" movement, headed by Daniel Drew; a gentleman came to me from Daniel Drew—I do not know his name, for I did not inquire—he came to me and asked me if the bill would pass, it having already failed in the House. You remember it did fail at that time by four votes. I remember it very well, for I lost several thousand dollars by the operation. This man came to me and said, "Do you believe that bill is going to pass the Senate?" I said I believed it was. Said I, "I have gone over the field, and I believe it will pass by a large majority." He said, "It would be very important for me to know that fact, because Mr. Drew has been advised by parties here in Washington that it will not pass, and he has sold a very large short-interest in the stock, and it is very important to me to know about it." "Well," said I, "I give it as my opinion that it will certainly pass the Senate; when it goes to the House, of course I do not know anything about it." It was then about being considered in the Senate. Said he, "If you could assure me of that, I would hedge and get out." I said, "You had better stay here and attend to the matter yourself, and then you will see." He did stay; and when it passed the vote was 30 to 15, and he was very thoroughly demoralized.

Q. So your services consisted in giving information?—A. Yes, sir; giving information—telegraphing on anything I could get. I communicated very freely with Mr. Irwin.

Q. Tell us whether you knew of anybody else in the employment of the Pacific Mail Company here?—A. I do not know that there was a soul, and I did not know that there was any money in this thing beyond the fact that there was a large block of the stock being carried for the benefit of the company.

Q. Do you know of any stock being carried for any member or members of Congress?—A. I do not. I heard there was—not for members of Congress, but for individuals.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Did you communicate to any newspaper the information with reference to the Pacific Mail subsidy bill which you gathered here?—A. No, sir; not all of it.

Q. With what paper were you connected at that time?—A. I had the Chicago Journal, I believe, the Cleveland Herald, the Boston Transcript, and some that I may forget.

Q. You were employed in gathering information, and you say positively that you knew of nobody but yourself who was in the employment of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at that time?—A. Not that I know anything about. I saw persons around, but I did not know what their business was particularly, and I never inquired. I attended to my own affairs exclusively.

Q. Do you know of the payment of any money, in reference to the subsidy, to any member of Congress or to any officer of either House?—A. Not a dollar.

Q. Do you know of the payment of any money, in reference to the subsidy, to any person other than yourself?—A. I do not know; not that I know positively.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. That last answer of yours, "not that I know positively," is suggestive. Why do you use the word "positively"?—A. I did not mean anything, particular by that. I may have known the fact, probably, that the $25,000 was paid to Mr. Macfarland.

Q. Did you know that?—A. Not till afterward.

Q. If you did not know the fact positively, had you such information as induced you to form a belief that money was paid to other people?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you say that you retained all the $15,000 for yourself?—A. I did.

By Mr. WOOD :

Q. What services did you render for that?—A. Imparting information which I got from the Committees on Appropriation in both Houses, and keeping the general current which was running in that direction. I found out everything I could and kept them posted. If I could get important information from the committee I would send it.

Q. Then you were paid this $15,000 for the information which you obtained from the committees and elsewhere?—A. I was paid for my services.

Q. I want to know what your services were?—A. Just what I told you.

A. Getting information?—A. Getting information, posting them, and letting them know everything about the matter.

Q. Is it a common thing, with gentlemen of your profession, to sell their information in that way?—A. I do not know that it is. I have been in the habit of doing it for ten or twelve years. I have furnished brokers with information for a long time. I commenced with Livermore, Clews & Co., and was paid for it sometimes by the week, but mostly by their carrying stock for me. If I found out important information in regard to finance, the first thing I would do would be to sit down and telegraph to my broker. If the information was likely to influence the price of gold he would so understand it, and would immediately buy $10,000 or $20,000 of gold for me, and would operate as much as he chose for himself, and it was so in regard to stocks.

Q. Did you consider the information which you gave in this case worth $15,000?—A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. How did you value it?—A. I considered it worth all I could get. If they had offered me $50,000 I would have taken it, and I never would have asked any questions.

Q. Was that information which you furnished in reference to the probable vote of members on the subsidy bill?—A. Not at all.

Q. What was the information?—A. The general information which a man gets in his profession.

Q. Predicated on your opinion of the probable results?—A. Yes.

Q. That opinion was predicated on the probable votes of various members?—A. Not entirely that.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say that if you obtained any information from this committee, or any other committee, you communicated it. Did you disclose to those from whom you got the information, your relation to the brokers of New York?—A. No, sir; I do not think I did. They never asked me.

Q. You presented yourself to them in the capacity of a newspaper correspondent?—A. Not entirely. I think I have mentioned that Mr. Clews would like to know so and so, if the member had no objection. I used to do that frequently with James Brooks, and I got a good deal of information from this committee, of a general character and not confidential. He was a personal friend of Mr. Clews.

Q. Did Mr. Brooks understand exactly what you wanted?—A. Yes, he understood it from Mr. Clews, and he would say to me, "Tell Mr. Clews that I gave it to you."

Q. Did you always, when you sought information of what was going on in the committee-rooms, disclose your relations to brokers in New York?—A. O no!

Q. Were you at any time a clerk to a committee?—A. Never; I never held a clerkship in my life.

Q. You say that you conferred with Mr. Irwin?—A. I conferred with him daily.

Q. So that what you communicated to New York, you also communicated to Mr. Irwin?—A. He knew everything that I knew.

Q. Your communications were in reference to the strength of the measure in the two Houses from day to day?—A. Yes.

Q. As the measure grew in strength, or weakened, you communicated your opinion of that fact?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever talk over with Mr. Irwin, at any time, the standing of members in regard to the measure?—A. Never.

Q. Did Mr. Irwin at any time inquire of you as to the ground of your opinion in regard to the strength of the measure?—A. No, I do not think he did.

Q. You never talked with him as to the probable vote of any member?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never talked with him as to the opinion of any member in regard to the measure?—A. I do not know; possibly I may have done so. I cannot tell.

Q. You never went over the list of members with him?—A. Never.

Q. You communicated to this agent of Daniel Drew that the measure was going to pass the Senate by a very large majority, and that you did not know of any Senator that was opposed to it. Did you ascertain that from actual conversation with Senators?—A. I may have spoken to a good many Senators and asked their opinion about the measure. I might say to them, "What do you think about the Pacific Mail subsidy; is it likely to pass?" And the Senator would say, "I am going to vote for it."

Q. Did you suggest any reason to any of these Senators?—A. None in the world. That was not part of my contract.

Q. Then you were not in the light of an advocate of the measure?—
A. O, no, I was not advocating it.

Q. Although you were in favor of all subsidies, you did not advocate this subsidy to any member?—A. I might possibly have said a kind word about it.

Q. Do you think you did so?—A. I presume I did. I do not think that I ever asked any member to vote for it; in fact, I know I did not.

Q. Did you labor with any member?—A. Never in the world.

Q. Did you take the list of yeas and nays on the vote when the subsidy first failed in the House?—A. I did not. I was too much demoralized.

Q. Did you notice any change in the votes of members between the time when it failed and the time when it passed?—A. No, sir; I never took any notice of it that I remember.

Q. Did you report to your principals, after its defeat in the House and its passage in the Senate, that it would be likely to go through the House?—A. No, sir; if I had known that fact, I would have made more money out of it. I would have loaded up at that time.

Q. Are you not aware that the stock went down after the passage of the measure?—A. Yes; I lost by the operation, but if I thought that the subsidy was going through when it came back from the Senate I should have bought stock when it went down.

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1875.

LEWIS J. DAVIS sworn and examined.

To Mr. KASSON:

I am a member of the firm of Lewis Johnson & Company, bankers, of this city, and was a member of that firm in 1872.

Question. Do you know anything of certificate No. 2548 for $10,000, which passed through that bank on or about the 7th of June, 1872? [Handing it to witness.]—Answer. I recognize our indorsement on the back of the certificate.

Q. Describe the certificate.—A. It is a certificate for $10,000, issued by the Park National Bank of New York, on May 30, 1872, for $10,000. It reads: W. S. King has deposited $10,000 payable to his order. It is indorsed, "W. S. King" and "Lewis Johnson & Co."

Q. State whether from that certificate and the indorsement on it you recollect to whom the amount was paid.—A. I have no recollection of the check being paid; but I would infer that the check was cashed for Mr. King. The Park Bank of New York is our own correspondent, and we would have cashed the certificate for any one on proper identification. The evidence in the certificate itself is that it was paid to Mr. King himself by our bank.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Had you any account-current with Mr. King?—A. I do not know. I have already investigated that certificate to see if the money had been put to Mr. King's credit. I have ascertained that there was no deposit of that amount on that day; so that it was paid over the counter.

Q. Have you examined your books to see whether King had an account with you or not?—A. No, sir; I merely looked as to that particular day to see whether that amount had been cashed or credited on the books. [The witness subsequently stated that King had no account with his bank.]

Q. This certificate having been indorsed by Mr. King, would you have paid the money to another party known to you, without indorsement?—

A. It is possible that that might have been done, if Mr. King came with him; but the ordinary practice is, where we cash a certificate of deposit for any one else to require his indorsement. If Mr. King had come in with the party holding it, the money could have been paid to the other party, at Mr. King's request to the teller, upon Mr. King's indorsement.

Q. If Mr. King had not come himself, and if somebody else had identified the person presenting the check, would you have paid him?—A. The practice is to require his indorsement.

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1875.

HAMILTON G. FANT sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. State your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside in Washington City, and was formerly in the banking business. I am not engaged in any business at present.

Q. It appears in evidence before this committee that Mr. Charles Abert, as the agent of Mr. Irwin, disbursed a considerable amount of money, having relation to the obtaining a subsidy for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and among these disbursements appear some sums that were paid you by him. Be good enough to state what amount was paid to you by Mr. Abert in the summer of 1872.—A. In the spring of 1872, Mr. Abert deposited to my credit with Fant, Washington & Co. $10,000. Previously thereto, I think, he handed me his check for $1,000, making in all, I think, $12,000.

Q. To whom did you pay out that sum, or any part of it?—A. To myself.

Q. Exclusively?—A. Exclusively.

Q. For what consideration were those sums paid to you?—A. I have made a little memorandum, which, with the permission of the committee, I will read:

Early in the spring of 1872, being engaged in the banking and stock business in this city, Mr. Irwin having known me for several years, employed me to render such legitimate service as I could to obtain the subsidy, and agreed to pay me $2,000 cash, and $10,000 contingent on the passage of the bill. It was known that there was a large, influential body of stock-operators, and who had sold the Pacific Mail stock short, and who were opposing the subsidy, and Mr. Irwin, fearing this opposition, thought that I could mollify it in some way by my personal influence; therefore employed me. He also knew that I understood these operations, and could keep him informed. I was also to use all legitimate means I could to secure the subsidy. It was distinctly agreed that my compensation was not to depend on my carrying any vote in Congress. I was paid the $2,000 cash at the time of the agreement, and, after the passage of the bill, Mr. Abert deposited to my credit, with my firm, about 20th May, 1872, $10,000, the balance due me under the agreement.

Q. State what particular thing you did in aiding to procure the subsidy.—A. I advocated it in every way. I was in favor of the measure, and aided it in every way I could.

Q. That is the general statement that you made in the paper which you have read. State any act that you did to further the obtaining of the subsidy.—A. That is a matter that is very hard to describe. I certainly did all that I could in advocating it. I do not suppose there was a member of Congress who was not spoken to on the subject. I believed in it then, as I believe in it now. I think it brought down the price of tea.

Q. You were not paid $12,000 because you believed in it?—A. In the first place, I doubted myself whether Mr. Irwin could afford to pay me that amount of money; but he seemed to think differently.

Q. The point we wish to find out is, for what this large amount of money was distributed, if we can trace it. Can you state why this amount was paid to you?—A. As I have stated in the paper.

Q. That does not state anything you did.—A. I did all I could by advocating the measure.

Q. How did you advocate it?—A. Just as you did in Congress, by supporting it, with not half the ability.

Q. To whom did you advocate it?—A. I talked to a great many people, though I do not think I was in the Capitol three times; but when I met a gentleman I talked to him about it.

Q. Was it of any advantage to talk to persons who could not vote for it?—A. But I talked to persons who could vote for it.

Q. Did you advocate it to members, personally?—A. Yes; and to everybody else who I thought would be of any service. That was the essence of my arrangement.

Q. I understood you to say that you were not at the Capitol more than three times?—A. Not more than three times; but I met members at my banking-house and elsewhere, and sometimes I got others to go and see them on the subject.

Q. Who were the persons whom you employed to go and see members?—A. To illustrate my services, I will state there was one gentleman whom I did not employ, but whom I asked to go and see Mr. Beck, and secure an interview between Mr. Beck and Mr. Irwin. This gentleman succeeded in procuring an interview between Mr. Beck and Mr. Irwin. I supposed that something would come out of it, but nothing came out of it. Mr. Wylie secured the interview.

Q. This Mr. Wylie was one of the men whom you employed?—A. No; I did not say so.

Q. Whom did you employ?—A. I did not employ any one.

Q. Did you not send Mr. Wylie to Mr. Beck?—A. Yes; but I did not employ him.

Q. Was that the only employment of persons by you?—A. I did not employ any one. I generally transact my own business.

Q. Did you pay any money to any of the other persons whom you sent or employed?—A. No, sir; I did not employ or pay any one.

Q. They were never paid for anything they did for you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You paid nobody, either out of this money or any other money, for anything in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anybody else who was employed to aid in procuring the subsidy, who was paid money by Mr. Irwin, or the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or anybody else?—A. I cannot say that I do.

Q. Are you certain that you know of no one who was paid for his services in aiding to procure the subsidy?—A. At this moment I cannot recall that I do. It was an independent matter between Mr. Irwin and myself, and I had nothing to do with his arrangements, or whom he employed. I was more astonished than any person in the world, perhaps, when I saw the amount of money he used for the purpose.

Q. I should like to know what you agreed with Mr. Irwin at the time he paid you that $12,000?—A. I cannot state it any more plainly than I have done.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You were to believe in it?—A. No, sir; I was to advocate it; I did believe in it just as you did.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. At the time that this agreement was made, was there anything to be done by you that could be called a consideration justifying the payment to you of $12,000? You say that you were to do "what I could." Is that all you can state?—A. That is all; and I did do that.

Q. So that when you agreed to advocate this measure and to do all you could for it, Mr. Irwin agreed to pay you $12,000, without knowing what the subsidy would amount to?—A. Yes; I was engaged in the banking business at that time, and was in New York most of the time, and I told him that he could not afford to pay me what I thought my services were worth; but he thought differently, and he named the amount.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Did you disclose to the members of Congress to whom you talked, that you were paid for that work?—A. No, sir.

Q. You spoke to them when they came about your banking-house, and you advocated it generally, without telling them that you were employed for the purpose?—A. It was not my duty to tell them anything about my employment.

Q. And whenever you found a man who was a friend of a member, you employed him to go and talk to the member?—A. I employed all the legitimate means possible to secure the subsidy.

Q. You got Mr. George W. Wylie to do so?—A. I think so.

Q. You got him to talk to me for the purpose of seeing if he could get me to vote for the subsidy; was that your idea?—A. You do not put it exactly right. Mr. Irwin was possessed of all the statistics in regard to that matter. He was a very intelligent gentleman, and it occurred to me that he, Irwin, could convince you to support the measure if you would grant him an interview. You did grant him an interview, and I was very much in hopes that he would accomplish what he wanted, but he failed, totally failed. That is about the character of my services in the matter.

Q. I believe I never spoke to you before?—A. No, sir; I do not think I have the pleasure of your acquaintance.

Q. The fact is developed that I made some pretty ugly speeches against the subsidy, and voted against it and resisted it at every turn?—A. Yes, sir; you did.

Q. But that was the way you worked the thing—to try and get members of Congress persuaded in that way?—A. Yes; to convince them of the justice of the measure.

Q. Concealing the fact, however, that you were employed for the purpose?—A. I did not think it necessary to state so.

Q. Do you think that it was exactly right for a gentleman to come and lay statistics before members and try to persuade them to vote for a measure, concealing the fact that he was getting money for it?—A. Undoubtedly; but, if you had asked me the question, I should have told you very frankly.

Q. I suppose that numbers of members of Congress came about your banking-house?—A. I cannot say that numbers did, but several.

Q. And you made it your business, when they did come, to urge this thing upon them?—A. As I would in regard to any measure which I believed in so strongly as I did in that.

Q. You believed very much more strongly in it on account of your having this $12,000 interest in it?—A. There is no doubt that it did have some effect upon me, but I believed in it then and I believe in it now. I do not pay quite as much for my tea now.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You think that the fact that the subsidy passed, although not a dollar has been paid by the United States on it, has reduced the price on tea?—A. I do not know. I think it very likely. That is one reason why I advocated it.

Q. You say you believe that it has reduced the price of tea. Please tell us how.—A. I said that the price of tea now is less than it was then.

Q. But as the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has not received a dollar of the subsidy yet, how has it had that effect?—A. That I do not know. I only know that the tea is less in price.

Q. How did you suppose that it had reduced the price of tea?—A. I think it very likely that it has done so, because the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has built iron steamers and facilitated communication with China.

Q. Were you aware that not a dollar of the subsidy had been paid?—A. Sometimes the anticipation gives us credit.

Q. You recollect having requested Mr. Wylie, a friend of yours, to talk with Mr. Beck. Can you recollect requesting any other individual to talk with any other members?—A. I do not know that I can just now; they were so numerous.

Q. You were up at the Capitol three or four times?—A. I was up here several times.

Q. More than three times?—A. I cannot tell; it may have been four times.

Q. While you were up at the Capitol, did you ever have a member out to talk with him on the subject?—A. I do not think I did.

Q. Did you talk with any member on the subject while you were here?—A. I do not think I did. I was up in the reporters' gallery most of the time, I may have done so.

Q. And you do not remember having talked to members?—A. Not to any particular member.

Q. How many members did you meet at your place of business whom you talked with?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Do you recollect any member whom you talked with at your place of business?—A. It is three years ago, and that is a long time to recollect a circumstance.

Q. Can you recollect any member?—A. No, I do not recollect any by name.

Q. Did you report from time to time to Mr. Irwin the amount of service which you were rendering in behalf of that subsidy?—A. No, sir; it was not necessary.

Q. Before you received the $10,000 did you report to any person the amount of service which you had rendered?—A. I do not recollect; I may have done so.

Q. Can you recollect any one thing that you did do, which you can testify to now, except the fact of requesting Mr. Wylie to speak to Mr. Beck?—A. Except in the general way I have mentioned.

Q. Can you recollect any one thing?—A. I cannot say now.

Q. Then your answer is that you cannot recollect any one thing except that one thing?—A. Not at this moment; except what I have mentioned in my written statement.

Q. Do you desire to take time to consider that question?—A. I do not think it necessary to take time.

Q. You then do not recollect any one act which you did as consideration for that $10,000 beyond the single item of requesting a friend of yours to speak to Mr. Beck? If you can I wish you to tell what it is.—

A. Nothing except what is in that general statement.

Q. That is not any particular thing. You cannot recollect any one particular thing that you did, except that one?—A. I cannot add anything to my statement.

Q. Can you tell how much time you devoted to that matter?—A. I devoted a good deal of time to it one way or another. I went over to New York once or twice.

Q. What was your business in New York on behalf of the subsidy?—

A. As I have stated, there was a very large interest opposed to that measure.

Q. What did you do for the measure when you got to New York?—A. My purpose was to change the interests of those parties there, if I could.

Q. Whom did you see there for that purpose?—A. I saw a good many.

Q. Tell us one.—A. I talked with members of several houses—Capron & Co., Scott, Strong & Co., and other houses there.

Q. Do you mean to say that Capron & Co. were fighting the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then it would not do any good to attempt to mollify them?—A. It would, if they had a large number of customers on the bear side.

Q. Do you not know that Capron & Co. were in favor of the subsidy?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you not know that Scott, Strong & Co. were?—A. Scott was in favor of it, but many of their customers were not.

Q. What did you do when you got there?—A. I represented my belief that the measure would pass. My object was to change the interests of those who were opposed to it, and bring them in favor of the measure.

Q. The men who were opposed to it were men who had sold short?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you wanted to convince them that the measure was sure to pass?—A. That I thought it would pass.

Q. What effect did you represent to them that the passage of the subsidy would have upon persons who sold short?—A. I represented that the stock would go up.

Q. And would not that make it worse for them?—A. Decidedly.

Q. Would not that make them more opposed to it than ever?—A. Not at all; if they bought the stock in, they would cease to have an interest against the measure and would be in favor of it.

Q. But suppose they had sold the stock short?—A. They would not necessarily be opposed to it.

Q. Did you say that that was the class of men whom you desired to appease?—A. Yes; in order to induce them to buy in their short stock, and become the friends of the measure instead of its enemies.

Q. Then your purpose was to induce men to buy in stock, in the expectation that the subsidy would pass?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you recollect any firms which you went to for that purpose?—A. I have stated the firms of Capron & Co. and Scott, Strong & Co. Brokers themselves are very seldom interested in stock speculations; it is their customers who are.

Q. How many times did you go to see those two firms?—A. I was there pretty much all the time.

Q. On this business?—A. On this business and on my own business.

Q. Which was it?—A. Both.

Q. How many times did you see those two firms?—A. I saw them every day.

Q. On this business?—A. I did not speak about it every day.

Q. Did you speak more than once on the subject?—A. Yes; frequently.

Q. You found them all friends of the subsidy?—A. I think Mr. Scott was.

Q. And Capron & Co.?—A. I think so; I cannot recollect. They may have been friends of the measure, but they were not satisfied that the measure would pass.

Q. You were to operate on the bears to try to take care of them?—A. Not to take care of them, but to convince them that they were mistaken, and that the subsidy would pass.

Q. To thwart the opposition of the bears?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know there was another man here employed for that purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were not aware that there was a man here named Averill for the very same purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Irwin did not communicate that fact to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. How early were you employed?—A. I think in February or March. I do not recollect.

Q. Do you think that $12,000 to you and $10,000 to Averill was a fair compensation for that class of work?—A. I do not know anything about Mr. Averill.

Q. What about your own?—A. I think it was worth more, even if I had accomplished nothing.

Q. You think that your services were worth more than that?—A. I intimated that to Mr. Irwin. I was engaged in business, and did not care to be devoting myself to his business unless I was paid for it. You may not estimate my services as I did.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Was there any understanding, at the time you made the agreement with Mr. Irwin, that you were to pay any portion of the money to anybody else?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any understanding that you were to lend any money to any person, as an inducement to him to aid the measure?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you, in fact, lend any money to any person for that purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you know of any money being lent for that purpose?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you carry any stocks for any member of Congress, or for any officer of either House, for the purpose of affecting a vote on the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or for anybody?—A. Yes; I dare say I have for other persons.

Q. For the purpose of securing their support of the subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. During that spring did you see any agents of the short interest here opposing the subsidy?—A. I do not call any to mind now.

Q. Was there anybody here, that you knew, outside of Congress, opposing this subsidy?—A. No, sir; not to my personal knowledge.

Q. Were you employed by any person other than Mr. Irwin to aid in procuring that subsidy?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any officer of the company ever employ you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you a member of the banking-house of Fant, Washington & Co.?—A. Yes.

Q. The testimony shows that a certified check of Rich. B. Irwin, on the American Exchange Bank, was received by Mr. Capron & Co., from the house of Fant, Washington & Co., for $4,000, on or about the 21st of May, 1872. Have you any knowledge of that check?—A. I had a conversation with Mr. Washington on that subject last Sunday. He was the cashier of the bank, and cashed that check. I had an impression that the check was paid to a certain individual, but Mr. Washington thinks that it was paid to Mr. Irwin. I cannot enlighten you on that subject. He was the teller, and it is a very common thing to cash a check at the counter.

Q. At what time did you go to New York on this business for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; were you there at the time that this check of about $4,000 was drawn?—A. I think I was.

Q. Did you take the check on to Washington?—A. No, sir; it was sent by mail.

Q. It was not paid to you?—A. Not at all; it is not a part of the $12,000 that was paid to me. I was in New York at the time that Mr. Abert made the deposit of $10,000 to my credit.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. How many members of Congress had accounts in your bank?—A. I cannot tell you. I know that several had—two, three, four, five, six, or perhaps more.

Q. Did you, in consideration of their action in favor of the subsidy, either advance money to them, or allow them to overdraw their accounts?—A. No, sir; never. I never had any such transaction with any member of Congress in connection with any measure.

Q. Did Mr. William S. King have any account in your bank?—A. Yes, some years ago; but not within the last five or six years.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know Mr. Capron?—A. Yes.

Q. You saw him last Thursday night?—A. No, sir; last Friday.

Q. You had a talk with him then?—A. Yes.

Q. He testified here that you told him that night who it was that this $4,000 check was paid to?—A. I told him that it was my impression that it was paid to a newspaper correspondent, but on Sunday last I had a conversation with my partner on that subject, and it turned out that I knew nothing about the check, and that it was cashed by him.

Q. What did you tell Mr. Capron?—A. As it was but a mere impression on my mind, I think it would be unjust to the gentleman that I should mention his name here.

Q. His memory may be better than yours, and perhaps you had better give us your impression. What I want to know is, what you told Mr. Capron.

The WITNESS. In other words, you wish me to give you the name of this gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. I only want you to tell us what you told Mr. Capron.—A. I do not know whether I told Mr. Capron the name or not. I think I mentioned to him the name of a newspaper correspondent. The gentleman whose name I mentioned is not a member of Congress.

Q. What I asked you is, what did you tell Mr. Capron?—A. I think that I mentioned to Mr. Capron the gentleman's name which I had on my mind at the time. It was a mere impression. I do not think that the committee should require me to give my impression. I think that I mentioned the name of Samuel Hatch, and I was under the impression at the time that the check was paid to him. Since then I have conversed with my partner, and we both came to the conclusion that it was paid to Mr. Irwin.

Q. Who is Mr. Samuel Hatch?—A. I think he was at that time the correspondent of a New Orleans paper. He resided then in New Orleans.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 12, 1875.

DONN PIATT sworn and examined.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Question. You are aware that Mr. Abert testified before this committee that he had paid you $5,000, in connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's subsidy?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive that sum of money from Mr. Abert?—A. I did.

Q. At the time he mentioned?—A. Yes.

Q. Will you state to the committee on what account that money was received by you?—A. Just before Mr. Irwin left this city, he promised me to let me have that money in the shape of a loan.

Q. Were you in the habit of borrowing money from Mr. Irwin?—A. I find on looking over my accounts that this is not the only sum I got from Mr. Irwin. Some time before the 26th of March I received $800 from him, which was repaid to him by this check, [handing the check to the committee.]

Q. You submit this check to show that you had previously borrowed $800 from Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir, and that I repaid it.

Q. And that this check of yours, indorsed by him for deposit, indicates that you paid that sum?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other loan from him to you, about that time?—A. There is another transaction which I cannot recollect. There seems to be a check of the Metropolitan National Bank paying me some money. I cannot recollect the transaction at all, nor can Mr. Irwin.

Q. How large a sum was it?—A. I understand that it is a small sum of $100 odd.

Q. This sum of $5,000 was a loan to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had it any connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. None whatever; I opposed that measure from beginning to end.

Q. Individually and through your newspaper?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you in any way seek to influence the action of Congress on the subsidy?—A. Yes; I did all I could to defeat it.

Q. You did not in any way give, even indirectly, any support to the measure?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you understand that that loan came in any way from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. This loan of $800, which is represented by the check which I hold in my hand, or the $5,000 to which you refer, did you understand that either of them came from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—

A. No, sir; they came from Mr. Irwin's private means, as I understood.

Q. The money seems to have come from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. The money was paid after Mr. Irwin left here, and he sent it to me through Mr. Abert.

Q. Did you have any relations with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in the return of this loan?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the loan repaid?—A. Yes.

Q. To Mr. Irwin as an individual?—A. Yes, to Mr. Irwin as an individual.

Q. Then you desire the committee to understand that in all that transaction you did not understand that you had any connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I could not have. It was out of the question.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How was the $5,000 loan repaid?—A. Here is the note which indicates the time when it was paid. [Handing the paper to the committee.]

Q. This note you gave for it at the time that you received the loan?—A. Yes.

Q. To Mr. Abert?—A. No, to Mr. Irwin.

Q. Where was Mr. Irwin when you received this money?—A. In New York.

Q. Did you get the money in New York?—A. No, I got it here.

Q. Then you did not get the money from Mr. Irwin?—A. I gave the note to Mr. Irwin and got the money from Mr. Abert.

Q. Did you give the note before you got the money?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you give this note actually at the time that it bears date?—A. I presume so. My recollection is not very distinct. I was asking Mr. Irwin about it, and he does not recollect any more about it than I do. I may have sent him the note; I do not recollect.

Q. You do not recollect how he got this note?—A. No, not very clearly.

Q. When you received the money from Mr. Abert, what did you give him?—A. I do not recollect; I think I gave him a receipt for the money.

Q. Tell us how you paid Mr. Irwin back this $5,000.—A. It was paid by a friend of mine. I do not know whether he paid it in New York or in San Francisco. He was going to San Francisco and he said he would take the note up.

Q. Did you give him the money to do so?—A. Yes.

Q. Who was the person?—A. That takes me into another private transaction which I do not think is connected with this inquiry. I would rather not go into it. It has nothing to do with this inquiry. As it is entirely outside of the inquiry, and is a private transaction of my own, I do not see that I am called upon to state it.

Mr. KASSON. The duty of the committee is to trace this fund, and this sum of $5,000 appears to be a part of $125,000 that was used in procuring the subsidy. The committee would subject itself or somebody to suspicion if it did not follow the matter up.

WITNESS. If you recall Mr. Irwin, I think he will tell you that this money was loaned to me out of his private funds, and was not connected with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. One thing is very certain, that when the money came into my hands, it was not used to corrupt Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Irwin is more willing to answer to his friends than he is to the committee.

WITNESS. I do not wonder at that. The man has been a good deal afflicted here lately.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. On the back of this note I see the words "Paid July 22, 1872. R. B. Irwin." Is that in Mr. Irwin's handwriting?—A. Yes.

Q. What does that mean?—A. I do not know; that is the way that the note came to me.

Q. How did it come to you?—A. It came to me through the mail. The gentleman who took the note up sent it to me through the mail.

Q. This note appears to be payable to the order of Richard B. Irwin, and is indorsed by him "Paid, July 22, 1872. R. B. Irwin." You gave this note to Irwin, in person?—A. That is my recollection of it.

Q. And you are not quite sure whether you gave it to him in this city or in New York?—A. I did not give it to him in New York, for I was not there, but I might have sent it to him. We had a correspondence about the matter, but my impression is that I gave him the note here.

Q. Then you did not receive the money from him, at the time?—A. No, sir; I did not. He told me at the time that he would have to go to New York before he could help me.

Q. What did you do with the money you got from him?—A. That goes again into my private affairs. I can say to the committee that I paid none of it out to any Congressman, any lobbyist, or any door-keeper. I paid my creditors.

Q. Did you ask this friend of yours to take up this note for you?—A. The friend volunteered to take it up for me.

Q. Do you still owe that friend for having taken up the note for you?—A. No, sir; not all of it; I owe him some of it.

Q. How much have you repaid to him?—A. I cannot go into my private affairs.

Q. Do you mean to say by that that you decline to answer?—A. Certainly. If your inquisition was in private, and if I had the confidence of you gentlemen, I would bring my bank-book and all my papers here.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. I understood you to say that you used this $5,000 for your own private affairs exclusively?—A. Altogether. I was in great distress for money at the time, and I used it altogether. Every transaction connected with it can be shown by the books of the First National Bank, if the committee insists on it. My impression was, till I found that check, that I was doing business in another bank, but I find that it was in the First National Bank.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 12, 1875.

J. H. HERSEY recalled.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. The committee desires that you shall furnish us with the facts relative to the expenditure of that $11,000 that you received. Can you do it?—Answer. No, sir. I do not know that I can, any more than I stated yesterday.

Q. You can tell to whom you paid it, and can furnish us with the evidence of its payment?—A. It has been used up in the ordinary expenses of living. As I stated yesterday, I had owed considerable money, and when I got that I paid up my debts.

Q. You can furnish us a statement of those debts?—A. I can of part of them. I have no memorandum of all of them.

Q. What income had you been receiving up to that time?—A. I was probably getting $1,800 a year.

Q. How much debts did you pay at that time?—A. Probably $1,500 or $2,000; I cannot tell exactly.

Q. Did you pay that $1,500 or $2,000 of indebtedness immediately after receiving this $11,000?—A. I paid it pretty soon after.

Q. Do you recollect to whom you paid it?—A. I do, part of it.

Q. Can you furnish the committee with the amount which you used in paying your debts?—A. I cannot.

Q. Why not?—A. Because I have no memorandum of it, and no recollection of it. I owed various sums, from $150 to $700 or $800.

Q. To whom did you owe $700 or $800?—A. To my brother-in-law, in Rochester, N. Y.

Q. When did you pay him?—A. Pretty soon after I got this money.

Q. You have his receipt for the payment?—A. I do not know.

Q. Did he hold your note?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you got the note?—A. No.

Q. Did he return it to you?—A. No, sir; it was destroyed.

Q. When did he loan you that money?—A. At various times during the winter previous.

Q. When did you give your note to him?—A. At that time. I think he had perhaps three notes; I borrowed $200 at three different times.

Q. To whom else did you owe money? Who was your next highest creditor?—A. I probably owed a clothing bill, and some grocery bills about Washington. I paid perhaps $100 to a tailor in Baltimore.

Q. And your grocer's bills and other bills ran up to how much more?—A. Seven hundred dollars.

Q. That would account, in all, for about $1,500 of indebtedness that you paid?—A. Perhaps from $1,500 to $2,000.

Q. Call it $2,000, and that leaves $9,000 more that you had. What became of that money?—A. I used it.

Q. Did you deposit it anywhere?—A. Yes, in the First National Bank of this city. I had an account there and deposited different amounts there at different times.

Q. All the money you did not need with you for immediate use you deposited in that bank?—A. No, not all of it. I bought some $2,000 of Government bonds.

Q. Who made that purchase for you?—A. Mr. Latham, the cashier of the First National Bank.

Q. Have you those bonds yet?—A. No, sir.

Q. What became of them?—A. I sold them. I bought them when they were somewhat down, and I sold them when they were high.

Q. About what time was the purchase?—A. Some time in the fall of 1872, perhaps.

Q. And when did you sell them?—A. I sold them about New Year's.

Q. That transaction was all done through the First National Bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And their books will show the purchase?—A. I presume so.

Q. The balance of this money, (assuming that you spent about $2,000 of the $11,000,) what did you do with it? Did you deposit the other $7,000 in the First National Bank?—A. No, sir; not all of it.

Q. How much did you deposit there?—A. I do not recollect. I can tell by looking at my bank-book.

Q. Have you got that bank-book here?—A. No, sir; I can produce it by going to my house.

Q. Prior to the time you received that money had you kept an account with the bank?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you continued it on after the receipt of that money?—A. Yes.

Q. Leaving out what you deposited in that bank and the bonds which you purchased, did you deposit the balance of the money anywhere, or what did you do with it?—A. I bought some personal property.

Q. To about what amount?—A. Nearly a thousand dollars, I should think, or perhaps more than that.

Q. Did you keep a check-book?—A. I did part of the time, and part of the time I did not.

Q. Have you got a record of your checks?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. Was the $11,000 paid in large bills?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you carry these bills about your person, or deposit them?—A. I carried them about me. I think I deposited $2,000 or $3,000 pretty soon after that, but the balance I carried with me.

Q. For how long a time?—A. I cannot recollect now. During the summer and fall.

Q. Did you lose any of those large bills?—A. No, I never lost a dollar except in speculation.

Q. You paid out all this money in settlement of debts and investments?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. You say that about $7,000 which you do not account for you carried around in your pocket for several months?—A. I carried a good deal of it for several months.

Q. In your pocket?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is that a habit of yours, when you have so many thousand dollars, to carry it about in your pocket, when at the same time you have a bank-account?—A. Yes, sir. I have done business before I came to Washington, and handled pretty large sums of money, and carried them about me.

Q. When at the same time you had a bank-account?—A. No ; I probably did not have a bank-account.

Q. Here you had a bank-account, and yet you carried several thousand dollars in your pocket for several months?—A. Yes.

By Mr. FOSTER :

Q. Why did you deposit $2,000 and retain $9,000?—A. I supposed I might want to use it, and I wanted to save myself the trouble of drawing checks. I went to New York soon after that, and I did not know but I should want to use it there.

By Mr. KELLEY :

Q. If you had deposited it, could you not have drawn upon it in New York?—A. Yes, no doubt I could.

Q. Did you owe any money to any persons around the Capitol?—A. Not to any considerable amount ; nothing but a little borrowed money, perhaps.

Q. Do you recollect having owed any borrowed money to any friends around the Capitol?—A. I do not recollect. I have a good many acquaintances here, and they often borrow money from me, and I from them ; and perhaps at that time I owed some friends some borrowed money in that way.

Q. Can you mention any names now of persons to whom you owed any money in that way?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Did you put any of this money in an envelope at any time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see any of it put into an envelope?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. FOSTER :

Q. You intimated something about your having lost some of the money in speculating.—A. I lost some money in a pork speculation once.

Q. You lost nothing in stock speculations ?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. When was this pork speculation ?—A. The winter before. I lost nearly $1,500 in it. That was part of the money I owed ; and I know that that was part of the money that I paid.

Q. Where did you get the money to go into the pork speculation ?—A. I had about $1,000 saved up about that time. I was induced to go into that speculation, expecting to make something out of it, and I lost about $1,500.

Q. And $500 of that was part of the indebtedness you owed ?—A. Yes.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Q. Have you the checks that were returned to you from the bank ?—A. I may have part of them ; but usually, when my account is settled, I look it over and burn up the old checks.

Witness appeared again on the 13th of January, 1875, and was examined as follows :

By the CHAIRMAN :

Question. At the close of your examination yesterday, you had given some account of what you had done with a portion of the $11,000 paid to you by Mr. Abert. Will you commence anew and give that account as far as it is in your power ?—Answer. I have here my check-book with the First National Bank. As I stated yesterday I never had but one check-book, and that a small one, and the checks were all used and destroyed when the bank failed. I suppose that in looking over my checks I destroyed them, for I have not been able to find any of them.

Q. By the help of your book, or by any other means which you have of refreshing your memory, state to the committee how it was that you disposed of that $11,000.—A. I stated yesterday that I had paid a brother-in-law of mine a debt of $700, I think. I also had used in my family in the neighborhood of $1,000 in the purchase of furniture and things of that kind. I am unable to say how much I owed at that time, as I have no memorandum to show me. I know that I was considerably in debt. I think I stated yesterday that it was between $1,500 or $2,000 that I owed in various sums. This book [handing his bank-book to the committee] shows my entire bank account.

Q. How much of this account is it that you cannot call to mind what disposition you made of it ?—A. On May 29, 1872, I deposited $3,150, and on June 5, $2,700. On the opposite page of the book the different checks drawn against my credit are shown—$25, $93, $35, $100, &c. These sums were used in paying my bills. On July 10 I find that they balanced my book, showing $4,509 to my credit. On 11th July I deposited $800, on the 12th $1,100, on the 17th $2,000. The last entry is evidently a mistake. That deposit was not on July 17, but on 17th October. On November 9, after I returned from the West, I deposited $595 ; on November 29, $216 ; on December 4, $988.25 ; and January 16, 1873, $500. In 1873 there are various sums deposited : $750, $100, $300, $500, &c., so that this account covers a considerable period of time.

Q. How much of what you have testified to having deposited there were the proceeds of that $11,000?—A. All of it. Various sums were drawn out and returned. For instance, when I went West I drew out $1,800, and when I returned I deposited $575. When I left for the West, I left some money with my brother-in-law to use, but he did not use it. He returned it to me after I came home. That money I put right back in the bank again. There are some large checks here, which I have drawn at different times—$500. They went to pay for some stock which I had bought. If the committee takes the trouble to look at the checks I can explain them as I go along.

Q. State how you disbursed this $11,000.—A. I have used that entire sum for my own benefit. I disbursed it to no one except in my proper and legitimate business, which I had a right to go into, entirely independent of that matter.

Q. Tell us what that business was.—A. I bought $5,000 of stock with part of it.

Q. What kind of stock?—A. Texas and Pacific Railroad stock.

Q. What did you do with the stock?—A. I have it now.

Q. Did you pay cash for it?—A. I paid it in installments.

Q. How much did you pay for the stock?—A. $3,750, being 75 per cent. of the $5,000 which the stock represented.

Q. What did you do with the rest of the money?—A. I think that there must be $8,000 or $9,000 already accounted for. I gave my sister about $500, and I loaned my nephew here $300, and I bought a horse and buggy for $400. If I could have time to go through the entire schedule I think I could account for the whole of the $11,000.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. [After examining the check-book of the witness.] I find on June 27, 1872, a check for $500, in round numbers. What is your recollection about what that check is for?—A. I do not find any memorandum of it, and I do not recollect it. It was, probably, drawn to be used in my family.

Q. The next considerable item is on September 19, $500, and on the same date $250.—A. That was the time when one of the installments on my stock was due.

Q. On October 19, 20, 21, you drew, respectively, $1,000, $1,500, and $500. Do you know what those checks were for?—A. Before going out West I bought a lot in Washington, and I left $1,000 with my lawyer that he might investigate the title, and, if he found it correct, purchase the lot and pay the money. The title proved to be imperfect, and the money was returned to me when I came back. The $1,500 I drew to take out West. The $500 was an installment on my stock.

Q. What did you do with the checks drawn September 4?—A. That was when I bought Government bonds.

Q. On December 27 you drew $500?—A. That doubtless went to pay an installment on the stock. My receipts will show the dates when these installments came due, and when the money was paid.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Did you make any bargain with Irwin as to the amount of money which should be paid to you?—A. I did not.

Q. When did you first learn that you were to get $11,000?—A. Probably pretty soon after the bill passed.

Q. Who did you learn it from?—A. Either from Abert or Irwin, one or the other.

Q. How long before you received it?—A. Probably the day before. Mr. Abert requested me to call at his room the next day.

Q. Were you not a good deal surprised at the amount of the sum to be paid to you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you express any surprise at it?—A. No, I don't know that I did. I took the money very agreeably.

Q. Who first employed you?—A. No one employed me.

Q. How was the suggestion made by which you became entitled to receive any money at all?—A. There was no suggestion made in any way or shape.

Q. Was this the first you knew that anybody wanted you to do anything, when they called and told you you were going to be paid this money?—A. No, sir; I have treated Mr. Irwin the same as I have treated anybody at that door since I have been there; nothing more nor less.

Q. Was no suggestion made by you that you could control the votes of members or keep any members away?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make no suggestion that you would divide this money?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. And neither he nor any of his friends had a right to understand that you were going to divide with anybody or to take any extra steps to aid them in getting votes?—A. No, sir, not to my knowledge.

Q. Did you suggest to them that you could do so?—A. No, sir.

Mr. NIBLACK. The point with me is, how these people attempted to give this witness $11,000 for the trivial service which he seems to have performed, and not pay anybody else connected with the Capitol. I cannot understand that. It has been suggested to me, (and I say it in the witness's hearing,) that he did claim that he could control three votes, and that this money was paid to him under the supposition that he had something to do with controlling three votes in the House, and that $3,000 was given for each of those votes and $2,000 for himself.

The WITNESS. I did not make any such suggestion. It would be the most absurd thing for me to do. You all know how many rumors there are round the Capitol, and that is doubtless one of them. It is perfectly absurd to suppose that I should make any such statement as that.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Is that any more absurd than that they should pay you $11,000 for the services which you claim to have rendered?—A. I think it is. I do not think that a man of my age and appearance would make any such assertion.

Q. Can you indicate any reason why this sum of money was paid to you?—A. I cannot.

Q. Can you state the grounds on which you received the money?—A. It may be well enough for me to state that Mr. Irwin and I have known each other a good while and have been good friends.

Q. Do you mean to put it on that ground that he paid you the money?—A. It is possible that something of it may have come out of his good feeling toward me. I do not know that that is so, but possibly that may have had something to do with it.

Q. State in full all the grounds which you know as having had any effect in bringing this money into your pocket.—A. I do not know that I can state any. I have no grounds to state any more than I stated in my testimony the first time I was here.

Q. Repeat what those grounds are, so that we may have all the considerations together, which you understand affected the payment of the money.—A. I told the committee the other day that it was substantially the same as Mr. Boyd had stated just before my testimony.

Q. State it in your own words.—A. Either Mr. Irwin or Mr. Boyd requested me to notice with whom Colonel Bee conferred. It seems that he was on the floor. How he came there I do not know, but Mr. Boyd says that he came in after him when he was receiving a message from the Senate. I did say that I either told him, or Mr. Boyd, of the several members whom I had seen this man talking with. It was at an evening session of the House.

Q. That was one ground of your being paid. You played the spy on members of the House?—A. No, sir; I did not play the spy on any members.

Q. What was it?—A. It was on these men, not on members.

Q. That is one ground on which you say you received the money; what other grounds were there?—A. None that I know of.

Q. Were you in the habit of admitting to the floor persons representing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and who were not members of the House?—A. No, sir, I was not. My instructions were to exclude everybody from the floor who were not entitled to it.

Q. But as a matter of fact, did you admit lobbyists?—A. No, sir; I carefully avoided that.

Q. Do you mean now to state that you have given to us all the grounds on which you expected to receive and did receive this money?—

A. I did not expect to receive any money. It was a gratuity; it was a present.

Q. Have you stated to the committee all the grounds on which you received this money from Mr. Abert?—A. I have.

Q. Do you say that you did not claim that you had influence with any members or officers of the House?—A. I did not claim any such thing.

Q. Did you attempt to control the vote of any member of the House?—A. Never in my life.

Q. Or to influence any member?—A. Not a particle.

Q. Did you lend any portion of this money to any member of the House?—A. Not a dollar.

Q. Or to any officer of the House?—A. It may be that some friend among my associates may have borrowed $50 or $100 from me temporarily.

Q. Did you, as a matter of fact, lend any of this money to any officer of the House with a view to secure his friendship?—A. No, sir; never.

Mr. KELLEY. While this statement may seem satisfactory to other members of the committee, it is less satisfactory to me. Like Mr. Niblack, I have known the witness for a long time, and, in the kindness of friendship, I had a conversation with him yesterday on this subject, in which I urged him to account satisfactorily for the $7,000. (To the witness.) You stated to me yesterday that the difficulty about accounting for that $7,000 was, that it would constrain you to expose confidential operations which you and a friend had had; did you not?—A. It was this stock operation which I alluded to. I did not feel at liberty to tell the committee, but I suppose that all you gentlemen know me well enough to know that I have some regard for the solemnity of an oath. The newspapers had misrepresented the thing, and that worried me a good deal; but I have consulted with this friend, and I obtained his consent to show this account, and to show where the money went to.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. That account does not involve any confidence between you and any friend?—A. It exposes my household matters and my business.

Q. Was that the point you made with me yesterday?—A. Yes.

Q. Why, then, did you say that it would require you to expose confidential operations between you and a friend of yours, and that that had made you hesitate ; that you were willing to show your own affairs, but that you did not wish to bring in the name of a friend ?—A. Did I use the word expose ?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not know whether you used that precise word, but I have given you the idea as expressly as any language can permit me.

The WITNESS. You asked me to clear myself, and I told you that I could by showing my bank-account, but that that would lay open to the world my transactions with private matters.

Mr. KELLEY. But you put it in the form of a question to me, "Should I, if I would expose confidential matters between myself and a friend?" and I answered you that no confidence could be so valuable to you as the retention of the confidence of those who had so long held you in regard and esteem. If my memory serves me right you then said, "Well, I will come in the morning and tell the whole story."

The WITNESS. That is substantially so. I have no doubt about your statement of it. That is all I alluded to.

Mr. KELLEY. Were you telling me the truth yesterday when you told me that it would expose confidential operations between you and a friend ?

The WITNESS. I was.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. From whom did you purchase that stock ?—A. I purchased it through General Paine.

Q. Was there anything about the transaction which rendered it improper for you to state it ?—A. Not in the least.

Q. Why, then, did you hesitate ?—A. Because I thought it my duty to consult with General Paine. He had been a long time a friend of mine.

Q. Have you got the stock here ?—A. I have not.

Q. Where is it ?—A. He holds it for me in his name.

Q. Why is it in his name when you purchased it ?—A. Because he procured it, in the first instance, and allowed me to come in and take a portion of it with him. My bank-account shows a payment of $3,750 on that stock.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. I want to know if these deposits here were made in the identical money which you received from Mr. Abert.—A. Not always.

Q. This deposit of $3,250 on May 29, was that in the identical money ?—A. Yes.

Q. The $2,700 on June 5 ?—A. Yes.

Q. The $800 on July 11 ?—A. I presume that is a part of it.

Q. The $1,100 on July 12 ?—A. Yes.

Q. The $2,000 on the 17th, (which you say should be October ?)—A. Yes, that was part of it.

Q. All of these deposits were in the identical money which you received ?—A. Yes.

Q. In the bills which Mr. Abert paid you ?—A. Yes, in the identical bills.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 13, 1875.

H. E. PAINE sworn and examined.

The CHAIRMAN. You may state what you desire to say to the committee.

The WITNESS. Last evening Mr. Hersey called at my residence, and told me that the money with which he had paid certain assessments on some railroad stock which I had sold to him, or agreed to sell to him, in the fall of 1872, was a part of the money which he had received from Mr. Irwin, or from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That was the first intimation or the first suspicion I ever had that that money which Mr. Hersey paid to me on that stock was derived from any such source, and I never knew till yesterday morning that he ever received anything from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. Now the facts, so far as the purchase of the stock from me is concerned, are these: In the spring of 1872, about a year after I left Congress, a friend of mine called at my office, having come from Texas, where he had been employed in some southern railroad company, and he suggested to me to take some stock in the Texas Railroad Company. I considered it for six months before I finally decided to do it, and in the fall of 1872 I did take some stock in what is known as the California and Texas Railroad Construction Company. When I came to Congress in 1865, I became acquainted with Mr. Hersey, who is from my town and who had been then in his present position three or four years, and a warm friendship sprung up between him and me. In conversation with him I mentioned the fact of my purchase of stock, not in any confidential manner, and I do not suppose that Mr. Hersey means that, so far as that transaction is concerned, there was anything confidential in it. I mentioned to him that I had concluded to take this stock, and he suggested that he should take some, too. I did not advise him to do it, because I thought it might be risky. He decided to take it, and I agreed to sell him $5,000 of my stock on these terms: He was to pay me the assessments as they fell due, and as they were called for by the company, from time to time; and he did so. They were called usually, I think, at the rate of ten per cent., with quite an interval of time between them. They extended through a pretty considerable part of the fall of 1872, ending some time in 1873. Whatever payments he made to me I gave him a receipt, and he must have these receipts. He paid me seventy-five per cent. in installments on the $5,000 worth of stock. That is all that was ever paid on it, and it was all I ever paid on mine. I know nothing about the operations of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at all. I never was employed as an attorney or agent of that company, or in any other capacity. The company never paid me, or undertook to pay me, anything in the way of compensation.

Mr. KASSON. So far as I am concerned, it seems to me that the developments this morning seem to sustain the statement of Mr. Hersey that he retained all the money.

Mr. KELLEY. This explanation of General Paine and Mr. Hersey makes his statement to me last night entirely consistent.

Mr. HERSEY. I did not feel at liberty to bring in General Paine's name here without his consent.

The WITNESS. I was not a member of the Forty-second Congress. I remember that Mr. Hersey, when he left the city once, came to me and said that he wanted to buy a lot, and wished me to examine the title, and left $1,000 to pay for the lot if I approved of the title. I found the title to be defective, and I returned the money.

WASHINGTON, January 12, 1875.

JOHN W. CORSON sworn and examined.

To Mr. BECK. I have here the book of Jay Cooke & Co., formerly bankers in the city of Washington, embracing the transactions of 1872. I was cashier in the firm.

Question. State what entries you find in reference to the passing of two checks of $50,000 each by the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co., on or about the 30th May, 1872, drawn by the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank of New York in favor of John B. Schumaker.—Answer. Check No. 192 passed through the house of Jay Cooke & Co., of Washington, on June 3, 1872. I find it entered on the book called the "remittance-book," in which we kept the records of drafts drawn on other cities than our own, which were sent there to our credit. This check, No. 192, drawn by the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank of New York, seems to be the basis of the entry of $50,000 charged to Jay Cooke & Co., of New York, June 3.

Q. Is it the same in regard to both checks, Nos. 192 and 193?—A. Yes.

Q. Does the book indicate to whom they were paid?—A. From this record I would say that the checks were paid to John G. Schumaker, because it was our custom to have the party for whom we cashed the check indorse it, and our record shows always the last indorser, and the supposition is that he was the party to whom we paid the money. The check has the same record exactly. The only indorser is John G. Schumaker, and I should say that he was the party to whom the money was paid.

Q. Have you any correspondence referring to it?—A. Yes, [referring to the letter-book.] Here is the letter to Jay Cooke & Co., of New York, showing the remittance of a check on the Marine National Bank for $50,000, and another check of the same kind for $50,000, and two other inclosures in the same letter in regard to another matter, amounting to $107,000.

Q. Have you no memorandum-book that shows to whom money was paid that day?—A. No, sir; we never kept a memorandum as to whom we paid money. The check is the evidence of money being paid.

Q. Mr. Schumaker swears that he never saw these checks after he handed them to parties in New York, and I supposed that your books would show something as to who got them cashed. Suppose Mr. Schumaker did not come with this check at all; have you no memorandum to show who did come with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Suppose he did not come with that check at all, what would be the operation?—A. The transaction having been such a large one, and the check having the identification of H. D. Cooke, by his initials, which was a matter of information between himself and his teller or cashier, it is very probable that whoever presented these checks of Mr. Schumaker's was not known to the teller as Mr. Schumaker.

Q. And, if Schumaker did not present the check, Henry D. Cooke's initials on it were an indication to the teller that he should pay the party who handed the check to him?—A. Yes.

Q. And if the initials were not there, the teller would not have paid it but to John G. Schumaker, or would not have paid it without some identification of the man; is that the fact?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it usual to have such initials on checks?—A. Only for identification. It is merely a matter for information between the principal of the firm and his clerk that the party presenting the check is all right.

Q. And it is never put there except for that purpose?—A. That is the only purpose; simply for identification.

Q. So that if any other person than John G. Schumaker brought it there, and if Mr. Cooke instructed his teller to pay it to that person, that would be the way in which he would do it, by putting his initials in the corner and the teller would obey that?—A. Yes.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Do your books indicate that the money was paid to some person—that it was a payment of money and not a giving of a draft in exchange? Would not your cash balances on the evening of the 2d of June, and on the 3d of June, indicate to a certainty whether it was paid in cash or not?—A. Certainly.

Q. Look at your books and see.—A. [After referring to the books.] The books show that it was not paid in cash. I find that on the 3d of June, 1872, a certificate of deposit for $90,000 was issued to John G. Schumaker. That is the same day that the two checks passed through the bank.

Q. Repeat that statement.—A. The individual journal shows that a certificate of deposit, No. 2315, was issued on June the 3d in favor of John G. Schumaker, for $90,000. Our certificate was drawn in a form so that it might have been that John G. Schumaker had deposited the money and that it had gone to somebody else's credit, but I think it was drawn to his order.

Q. Has not the certificate been paid?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is it?—A. In Philadelphia, with the trustee.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That accounts for $90,000 of the amount. What became of the other $10,000?—A. I presume the other $10,000 was paid in cash, as it appears that it has not been placed to anybody's credit.

Q. Do your cash payments of that day show a payment of $10,000?—A. It is impossible to tell that.

Q. Where are the stubs of the certificate-book?—A. In Philadelphia. And if the certificate has been paid, it is also in Philadelphia.

Q. Look and see whether the certificate has been paid.—A. [Referring to the book.] It was paid on June the 5th. It is simply charged "Certificate of deposit, John G. Schumaker, $90,000, June 3."

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Would not that entry show that that certificate was indorsed by Mr. Schumaker?—A. Yes.

Q. The other entry would show simply that it was issued to his order?—A. Yes.

Q. This entry would show that it was actually indorsed by him?—A. Yes, sir; it was drawn to his order. The certificate will show that.

Q. Does not this entry show that it was drawn to his order?—A. No, sir. The certificate might be drawn in favor of John G. Schumaker to somebody else's order.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Look at the entries on the 5th of June, when the certificate was paid?—A. I find that there is another certificate, No. 2321, for $60,000, issued to John G. Schumaker on June 5, the day that the $90,000 was paid.

Q. Does the book show how the balance of the $90,000 was paid?—A. No; but I presume that it was paid in cash. That is a mere suspicion.

Q. There is no entry there that shows that the other $30,000 was credited to any one?—A. No, sir; I do not notice any large credit that day, with one exception, and that is the account of a gentleman whom I know, and which has nothing to do with this matter.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. Will you trace these two checks for $50,000 each to the end, in all their forms, and give us an abstract of it?—A. On June 7 this certificate of $60,000 was paid. The entry is charged "Certificate of deposit, John G. Schumaker, June 5, (meaning date of issue,) $60,000."

Q. Does that entry show whether it was paid by money or by check?—A. It does not, but this simple charge, I think, would mean cash.

Q. Would not the cash-book show whether it was paid in cash?—A. No, sir; our cash-book would simply show our cash on hand, coin, currency, bills receivable, checks, &c., that we carried on that day.

Q. But these two certificates of deposit, the first for $90,000 and the second for $60,000, if they were given to any one else than John G. Schumaker, would have to have some indorsement on them?—A. Yes; the certificates will show for themselves.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Q. This certificate of $60,000 seems to have been issued on account of the $90,000 certificate?—A. Yes; I think there can be no doubt about that at all.

Q. State whether or not, if the first certificate had been issued to some one else than Schumaker, the second certificate would have been likely to appear in his name. Does the fact that the second certificate was issued in his name indicate that the first was also?—A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If the first certificate had passed into another man's hands and he had come to your bank to get that changed into a new certificate of $60,000 and cash, would not that transaction appear in the name of the man who brought it there?—A. Yes; unless he requested it to be made out in Mr. Schumaker's name.

A. It would ordinarily appear in the name of the man who presented it to you?—A. Yes.

Q. If it does not appear in his name it is because of some special and unusual request—I mean out of the ordinary course of business?—A. Yes; it was usual to issue the certificate to the party who presented the money or its equivalent.

Q. So that that last entry on the books indicates, so far as the books are concerned, that the certificate of $90,000 was presented by Mr. Schumaker for that purpose?—A. Yes, sir; so far as the books indicate, certainly.

By Mr. KELLEY :

Q. Would it be legitimate to draw an order on the account of Mr. Schumaker, but payable to Mr. Schumaker, by direction of anybody else than Mr. Schumaker?—A. Yes; it could be done, just the same as a draft might be drawn to the order of anybody else.

Q. But could you draw an order on my account, if I had one, in favor of somebody else, on the instruction of that person?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then could anybody else but Mr. Schumaker have ordered you to draw a draft on his account for $60,000?—A. No, sir. We would not consider this exactly in the light of an account which Mr. Schumaker could draw upon. On having the certificate changed, he would have to present that certificate, indorse it, and have it renewed and reduced. In this case it was reduced to $60,000.

Q. But no third person could have it done unless he held that certificate or draft, indorsed by Mr. Schumaker?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Mr. Schumaker has sworn here that he never was at your bank, and had nothing to do with these checks. If Henry D. Cooke wanted these original checks paid to anybody else, than John G. Schumaker, his initials in the corner would have authorized his paying-teller to pay them?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, if Mr. Cooke desired to keep the transaction up in the name of Mr. Schumaker, would not similar marks on subsequent transactions have authorized it, so as to keep the matter in the same way, clear through to the close?—A. No, sir; not necessarily, at all.

Q. But suppose that Mr. Schumaker was not at your bank at all, and did not get either the $90,000 or the $60,000 certificate, could not Mr. Cooke, as manager, by his authority, (by putting his initials in the corner,) have kept the account in the same name?—A. Not if the certificate was drawn to Mr. Schumaker's order. That would necessitate his indorsement.

Q. But might it not be that there was a memorandum kept on your books to indicate that they were drafts relating to the original transaction?—A. I cannot say. They will show for themselves.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. From your knowledge of the business of the bank, and from the entries on the books, state how these checks, Nos. 192 and 193, were paid, in your judgment. Give the history of them according to the books.—A. I should say that these two checks for $50,000 each were presented by Mr. John G. Schumaker, and that there was a certificate issued for $90,000, and $10,000 paid in cash. Afterwards this $90,000 certificate was returned, was surrendered, and a new certificate issued to the same party, John G. Schumaker, for $60,000; and afterward that certificate was returned and cashed for $60,000. That seems to be the end of it, so far as it can be traced through the journal.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. Who was the paying-teller of Jay Cooke & Co. at that time?—A. We had no regularly appointed teller at that time. A gentleman named Sherman was acting teller at that time.

Q. Whose business was it to draw certificates of deposit?—A. It was the business of the receiving-teller.

Q. Who was he?—A. Mr. Joseph W. Barton, I believe.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. He resides in Washington now. It was customary, however, for any of us to draw certificates.

Q. Has the examination of the books refreshed your recollection of the transaction?—A. Not a particle. I have no recollection of the transaction at all. I do recollect something about large certificates going on the books at that time.

Q. Look at the certificate of deposit issued by the National Park Bank, payable to the order of William S. King, and state whether that passed through the house of Jay Cooke & Co.?—A. [After examining it in connection with the book.] Yes. It is a certificate for $5,000, drawn on the 30th of May, 1872, and numbered 2551.

Q. Read the indorsement on it.—A. [Reading.] "Pay John H. Rice or order. W. S. King. John H. Rice. Pay to the order of Jay Cooke & Co., New York. Jay Cooke & Co., Washington, D. C., per W. M. Tenney. For deposit to the credit of Jay Cooke & Co., New York, per Vorce." I think it was cashed. It does not appear to have been credited to any one on that day.

Q. On what day was it cashed?—A. June 3, 1872.

Q. Read the entries in reference to it.—A. [Reading from the remittance-book, under date of June 3, 1872.] "Charge Jay Cooke & Co., New York, certificate of deposit, No. 2551, dated May 30, 1872, drawn on the Park National Bank, New York, indorsed by John H. Rice, $5,000." That was a cash item. In other words, we sent it on for credit.

Q. You would state from this entry that on the 3d of June this certificate of deposit was by you cashed in favor of the last indorser, John H. Rice?—A. Yes, sir; it was not placed to the credit of any one.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Did William S. King have, in 1872, an account with the bank of Jay Cooke & Co.?—A. I think he had, but I cannot tell without looking at the ledger. The individual ledger is not here.

Witness appeared again before the committee on the 13th of January, 1875, and his examination was continued, as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What books have you received from the receiver of Jay Cooke & Co., since you were before the committee yesterday?—A. I received, this morning, the stub of the certificate of deposit book which was in use on June 3, 1872, and also two certificates of deposit which were in question yesterday, also the individual ledger in use at that time.

Q. State what the certificates of deposit are.—A. The first certificate is No. 2315, which reads as follows:

"JAY COOKE & CO., BANKERS,
" Washington, D. C., June 3, 1872.

" John G. Schumaker has deposited with us $90,000 to the credit of himself, subject to his order and the return of the certificate.

"$90,000.]

JAY COOKE & CO.,
"Per W. M. TENNEY."

It is indorsed "John G. Schumaker."

Q. Do you know Mr. Schumaker's handwriting?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Is there any other indorsement on it?—A. No, sir; no other.

Q. There is a memorandum in pencil, "$30,000, paid 6, 5, '72." In whose handwriting is that memorandum?—A. I think it is in the handwriting of Mr. Tenney.

Q. Read the next certificate of deposit.—A. This is certificate No. 2321. It reads:

"JAY COOKE & CO., BANKERS,
" Washington, D. C., June 5, 1872.

"John G. Schumaker has deposited with us $60,000 to the credit of himself, subject to his order and the return of the certificate.

"$60,000.]

JAY COOKE & CO.,
"Per W. M. TENNEY."

I see on the face of it the hand-stamp, "Jay Cooke & Co., June 7, 1872, Washington, D. C."

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Does that mean that it was paid on that day?—A. Yes, sir. On the back of it is, "Received $15,000 on the within, June 6, 1872, J. G. Schumaker." Then there seems to be a memorandum which says, "Balance $45,000, paid June 7, 1872;" and then an indorsement, "John G. Schumaker."

Q. Have you the stubs of the certificates?—A. Yes, [producing them.] The first stub reads, No. 2315, 6, 3, '72, (meaning June 3, 1872,) deposited by John G. Schumaker, credited to ———, $90,000. The next is, No. 2321, 6, 5, '72, (meaning June 5, 1872,) deposited by J. G. Schumaker, credited to ———, $60,000.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Q. The certificates show that the deposits in both cases were to his own credit?—A. Yes, sir; they both read subject to his order.

Q. As to this second indorsement, "John G. Schumaker," do you connect that at all with the memorandum "Balance $45,000, paid June 7, 1872?"—A. No, sir; I do not connect them.

Q. It may have been indorsed and that sum paid to some one else, so far as the certificate shows?—A. The first one is a receipt, I think; the second one is an indorsement on the surrender of the certificate.

Q. That is just what I want to make clear; whether you understand the second indorsement to be connected with the payment of $45,000, and to show that that sum was paid to Mr. Schumaker, so far as the certificate shows.—A. Yes. That memorandum is in the handwriting of Mr. Tenney, and, I think, it is simply a memorandum for information.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. In whose handwriting is the certificate filled up?—A. In the handwriting of John Sherman, jr. I recognize his handwriting.

Q. There is a pencil-memorandum on the face of one of these certificates; read it, and state in whose handwriting it is.—A. It is a pencil-memorandum in figures, $45,000; below that is $15,000, paid. That seems to be added, and makes a total of $60,000, paid. I think the writing is Mr. Tenney's.

Q. Compare the indorsement of John G. Schumaker on the certificates which you hold in your hand with the indorsements on this check drawn by the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank of New York, and state whether or not they are in the same handwriting.—A. [After comparing them.] Yes, sir, I would take them to be the same.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Turn to the individual ledger and see what that shows in reference to these papers.—A. Nothing whatever.

Q. Is there anything further about them on any of your books?—A. Not in relation to these certificates.

Q. Do you find on the books anything pertaining to this deposit further than you have testified to?—A. No, sir; I have not made a very careful examination.

Q. Do you find anything in relation to the disbursement of it beyond what you have testified?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Have you looked at the entries under the dates of those payments?—A. Only yesterday.

Q. You have not looked since you received these papers this morning?—A. No, sir.

Q. Be kind enough to examine further and see if these books throw any light on the disbursement of the proceeds of these certificates?—A. I will do so.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. State whether you have examined to see whether William S. King had an account with Jay Cooke & Co.?—A. [Examining the ledger.] I find the name of W. S. King on the ledger, and I take that to be Mr. William S. King's account.

Q. When did his account commence and when close, if closed in that ledger?—A. It seems to have been commenced on February 10, 1871, and to have been closed on this ledger on April 22, 1872, and transferred to another ledger, ledger 7.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. In whose handwriting is the memorandum on the $60,000 certificate of deposit, "Received $15,000?"—A. I think that that is in Mr. Tenney's handwriting.

Q. In whose handwriting is this "$45,000, June 7?"—A. That is Mr. Tenney's without any doubt.

Q. Where is Mr. Tenney?—A. In Corning, Adams County, Iowa.

Q. Where is Mr. John Sherman, jr.?—A. In this room.

Q. He is the gentleman who filled up these certificates?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the paying-teller of Jay Cooke & Co. at that time?—A. There was no paying-teller at the time, but Mr. Sherman was acting.

Q. Were there not two separate establishments in that house, Jay Cooke & Co. down-stairs and the First National Bank up-stairs?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were they connected in any way in general business?—A. No, sir; their transactions were entirely separate; as much so as those of any two banking-houses could possibly be.

WASHINGTON, January 13, 1875.

JOHN SHERMAN, JR., sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. What was your business in June, 1872?—Answer. I was paying-teller for Jay Cooke & Co.

Q. Examine this certificate of deposit for $90,000, dated June 3, 1872, and tell us who filled it up, and all you know about it.—A. I drew this up.

Q. Who directed you to draw it up?—A. I do not recollect, but I am under the impression that Mr. Tenney, the cashier, did.

Q. What did you do with it after you drew it up?—A. I believe I gave it to him.

Q. Did you see Mr. Schumaker there that day?—A. I do not recollect seeing Mr. Schumaker or knowing him at all.

Q. Do you recollect anything about the paper except the fact that it is filled up in your handwriting?—A. That is all.

Q. In whose handwriting are these pencil-marks on the back of it, "30,000 paid 6, 5, '72?"—A. That is Mr. Tenney's handwriting.

Q. Do you recollect whom that money was paid to?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Can you refresh your recollection in any way by looking at the books?—A. I cannot tell you whether I paid it in cash or not, [referring to the cash-book, and examining it under date of June 5.] I charged that $90,000, as being paid by $30,000 cash and the balance, $60,000, in another certificate.

Q. Have you any recollection at all of that transaction?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whose handwriting is this in? [handing stub of certificate to witness.]—A. It is in my handwriting.

Q. In whose handwriting is this indorsement: "$15,000 paid, $45,000.

$60,000. Received $15,000 June 6, 1872?"—A. I should judge it is Mr. Tenney's handwriting.

Q. The "balance, $45,000; paid June 7th?"—A. I should think that is in Mr. Tenney's handwriting.

Q. And the pencil figures are also Mr. Tenney's?—A. Yes.

Q. You were paying-teller also on the 7th of June when this money was paid out?—A. I was.

Q. Do you recollect anything of the transaction?—A. I do not.

Q. Look at your cash-book for the 7th, and see what your entries show?—A. [After referring to the book.] There is a charge of $60,000 paid out on that day.

Q. Do you recollect any one connected with this transaction in any form except what the writing shows?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you recollect two checks on the Marine National Bank, both dated May 30, 1872, for $50,000 each, coming before you?—A. I do not.

Q. I see the initials H. D. C. on the corner of each of these checks, [handing them to witness.] Would these checks come to you?—A. Yes, they would come to me.

Q. Do you recollect whether they were presented by John G. Schumaker in person or by some one else?—A. I do not know Mr. Schumaker in person. These initials, H. D. C., are all my instructions.

Q. They would have authorized you to pay the amount to anybody who brought checks to you with those initials, without any other indorsement?—A. They would have to be indorsed by John G. Schumaker; but anybody else might bring them, and these initials on the checks would authorize me to pay him.

Q. These two checks, you think, were paid by the payment of $10,000 in cash and the issue of this $90,000 certificate of deposit?—A. I should think so.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If they were not so settled, would not the $10,000 cash appear somewhere else on your books?—A. If the cash were not paid out, it should appear.

Q. If, instead of paying out the cash, they had been settled in some other way, that must appear upon your books?—A. That should appear on the books in some shape.

Q. If it does not appear upon the books, I understand the reason to be that the certificate of deposit and cash you called the same thing. Is that so?—A. Cash and certificates of deposit are both put to the cash-account.

Q. And the certificate of $90,000 and the $10,000 in cash would stand the same on your books—as $100,000 cash?—A. Yes.

Q. But if the $10,000 had been paid in any other way than cash, the fact must appear upon your books in order to make your books balance?—A. Yes; that would appear on our books.

By Mr. FOSTER:

Q. Was it the habit of your bank to make indorsements on certificates of deposit; I mean memorandums of payments?—A. No, it was not the rule.

Q. There are exceptions, I suppose, and sometimes these memorandums are made?—A. Yes.

Q. It is quite exceptional, is it not, to do so?—A. Yes, it is.

Q. It is a rare thing?—A. Very rare.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. When a certificate is paid in part, of course you indorse the amount that is paid?—A. No; it is our custom to take up the old certificate and to issue a new one, paying the difference in cash or some other way.

Adjourned to January 14.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1875.

C. C. CHAFFEE sworn and examined.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Question. What is your profession?—Answer. I am a physician.

Q. Were you in Washington during the winter and spring of 1872?—

A. I was.

Q. Did you favor the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. I do not know whether I did or not. I do not recollect having any discussion on the subject with any one.

Q. Were you in any way employed by the company?—A. I was not.

Q. Or by any agent of the company?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you take any part in advocating the subsidy?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you receive from the company any sum in connection with that subsidy?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you know of anybody being employed by the company in connection with that subsidy?—A. I know one man who told me that he was employed.

Q. Who was he?—A. Governor Randall, a former Postmaster-General.

Q. Did you know of any other person?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you seek to influence in any way the action of any member of Congress in connection with that measure?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you know of the disbursement of any money in connection with the subsidy?—A. I do not. Governor Randall told me that he had received money after the passage of the subsidy.

Q. How much?—A. $6,000.

Q. Do you know any other person who received any money?—A. I do not.

Q. Had you any interest in any way with Governor Randall?—A. None whatever.

Q. Did you assist him in any way in the matter?—A. None at all.

Q. Did you have any connection with the money which he received?—A. None whatever.

Q. As a loan, or otherwise?—A. None whatever.

Mr. BECK. What were you summoned here for?

The WITNESS. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. I was told by a gentleman that there was a rumor that Dr. Chaffee had received a portion of that money, and I thought it better to call him.

Mr. ROBERTS. That rumor came to me, and I thought that if the rumor was not correct the doctor should have the benefit of correcting it; and that if it was, the committee should have the benefit of his testimony.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1875.

GARDNER C. HUBBARD sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. Were you in Washington during the spring and summer of 1872?—Answer. I was.

Q. In what capacity?—A. Advocating the postal telegraph.

Q. Were you at that time employed as agent or attorney of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you render the company any aid in procuring its subsidy?—A. I did.

Q. But you were not employed?—A. I was not employed.

Q. You rendered the aid voluntarily?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you receive any money from the company, or from any officer or agent of the company?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you associated with any attorney or agent of the company who did receive money?—A. To my knowledge, I was not. Mr. Irwin was a friend of mine, and I saw a good deal of him.

Q. But you were not paid for any services you rendered?—A. I was not.

Q. Nor were you subsequently paid?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any money being paid at that time to any person connected with Congress, as member, officer, or employé?—A. I do not.

Q. Did you know of any money being disbursed at that time?—A. I did not.

Q. You received none yourself to be paid to anybody else?—A. I did not.

Q. What moved you to act in the matter?—A. I was in California in the fall of 1869, visiting a brother of mine, who was then an officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in California. I there met with Mr. Irwin, and received much attention from him, and from other officers of the company. I believed that the subsidy was a very important matter for the welfare of the Pacific coast and of the country, and therefore, as I met with gentlemen, I stated to them my views as to the importance of the subsidy.

Q. There was no consideration of any kind to be received by you either pecuniarily or otherwise?—A. None at all. I do not think that any gentleman connected with it even aided the postal telegraph for what I had done.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Did you receive any gratuity from the company, or any officer of the company?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you then, or at any time subsequently, have any reason to expect that you would receive any gratuity for these services?—A. I should not have been surprised if I had received some, but I did not receive any, and had no reason to expect any.

Q. Have you any reason now to expect any gratuity for those services?—A. Not the slightest; of course not. When I found out how much money was expended, I was very much surprised that I did not receive any.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Whatever you have learned since, you have learned as counsel?—A. Yes; I have been retained within the last few weeks as counsel for Mr. Irwin.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 14, 1875.

JAMES G. BERRET sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside in Washington, D. C. I am a lawyer by profession.

Q. Were you in Washington during the summer and spring of 1872?
—A. I was.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the pendency of what is called the Pacific Mail subsidy in the Post-Office appropriation bill of that year?
—A. I have.

Q. Did you do anything in connection with it?—A. I did.

Q. What did you do?—A. As counsel for Mr. Irwin, by whom I had been employed, I presented to gentlemen with whom I had familiar acquaintance, the strong points of the case, believing it to be a measure of public importance.

Q. Were you counsel in the matter?—A. I was.

Q. When were you retained?—A. I cannot give the exact date, but it was immediately after the first defeat of the measure in the popular branch of Congress.

Q. How long did you serve the company or Mr. Irwin?—A. I suppose five or six weeks. I was occupied in the discussion of the measure before the two branches of Congress. It finally became a law.

Q. Was any money put in your hands by any party?—A. I received, on being employed, a retaining-fee of $1,000 from Mr. Irwin.

Q. Was any other money put in your hands?—A. I received, subsequently to the passage of the bill, from Mr. Abert, $8,500; $7,000 at one time and $1,500 at another time.

Q. Was that all that you received?—A. That was all. I was the bearer of a check for $500 from Mr. Irwin to Mr. Sam Ward.

Q. In addition to that other sum?—A. In addition, making the aggregate sum which passed through my hands, directly and indirectly, just $10,000.

Q. What was done with that $10,000?—A. I gave $3,500 to Mr. Sam Ward.

Q. Besides the $500?—A. Yes; besides the $500. The balance of the sum in my hands which I received I shared with a brother of mine, Mr. Joseph H. Berret, of New York, who was here on a visit with me at the time. He rendered me assistance in the matter, acting under my directions.

Q. What services did he render?—A. Simply to make inquiries as to the condition of the bill before Congress.

Q. Make inquiries where?—A. I presume of members of Congress.

Q. What knowledge did you have of his services?—A. He would report to me from time to time the condition of the bill in the House or Senate, as the case might be.

Q. Did he report to you from whom he had made inquiries?—A. He made no special report, but in general terms he informed me whether the bill was likely or not likely to pass.

Q. He expressed no opinion?—A. Yes; he expressed a decided opinion that the measure would be adopted by Congress.

Q. How much did you give him for expressing that opinion?—A. I shared with him equally the fee that I had received.

Q. How often did he express his opinion at the time?—A. I cannot recollect?

Q. More than once?—A. I should think more than once.

Q. Have you any knowledge of his expressing his opinion more than once?—A. I think more than once, certainly.

Q. Do you think about twice?—A. Possibly more than that, because I felt an interest in the measure on his account as well as on my own.

Q. Did anybody else express an opinion to you?—A. No; I do not recollect to have inquired of anybody else.

Q. Did you not as his counsel make inquiries of people?—A. I frequently talked on the subject to members of Congress, and in doing so I presented what I considered to be a strong point in favor of the case.

Q. To whom did you express your opinion?—A. To a good many members of Congress.

Q. Did you not report to Mr. Irwin your opinion?—A. I did.

Q. Your brother expressed his opinion to you, and you expressed yours to Mr. Irwin; is that it?—A. That is it. I became satisfied very soon after my employment that the measure would become a law.

Q. What led you to that conclusion so soon after you were employed?—A. The measure so entirely commended itself to my own judgment as a measure of public importance.

Q. Did that conviction dawn on you suddenly?—A. No. I have been very familiar with the subject of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. You had a conviction on that point before you were retained?—A. Before I was retained I thought it ought to pass, and that it would pass if properly presented to the consideration of Congress.

Q. Tell us how you presented it to members of Congress?—A. I presented it in this way: that Congress had already granted to this line a subsidy for a monthly mail; that the testimony of the officers of the Government who had a right to speak on the subject was that the subsidy thus paid was more than returned in the shape of impost-duties, arising out of the trade which that line developed with China and Japan; and that in view of the fact that the President had, on three or four occasions, commended the measure to the favorable consideration of Congress, as also two Postmasters-General, and I believe the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Boutwell, on one occasion, and on my own personal observation, (having always felt an interest in the line from the day of its inauguration,) I believed it to be one of those measures which best commends themselves to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Q. You presented it to members in that way?—A. I think in that view.

Q. To what members?—A. I think I presented it to Governor Swann.

Q. You obtained this money at two different times?—A. At three different times.

Q. From whom did you get the last installment?—A. I got the $7,000 and the $1,500 from Mr. Abert. I got the $7,000 at one time and the $1,500 at another.

Q. How long after you got the $7,000 was it that you got the $1,500.—A. It was a very short time.

Q. Why did you not get it all at once?—A. Because Mr. Abert was not authorized to pay me more than $7,000.

Q. And you claimed $1,500 more?—A. I said that I expected more; that the compensation was not adequate in view of the fact that I had to divide it between Mr. Ward and my brother; I thought it a small fee for such important services.

Q. How long after you got the $7,000 was it that you got the $1,500?—A. It may have been a month.

Q. Where was Mr. Abert when you got the $1,500?—A. I really cannot recollect whether he called at my office, or whether I casually met him on the street.

Q. Did he tell you how he had got new authority while Mr. Irwin was on his way to the Pacific coast?—A. He did not. It may have been much longer than the time I have mentioned.

Q. Was it long enough for him to get a return from the Pacific coast?—A. It may have been.

Q. The $500 check which you got from Mr. Ward, when did you get that?—A. That check was a retainer for Mr. Ward. He got it at the date of his employment.

Q. What was the date of your employment?—A. A day or two afterwards.

Q. Did you procure the retainer for Mr. Ward?—A. I was invited by Mr. Irwin to consult with Mr. Ward on the subject, and see if he could be retained. It was at my suggestion that Mr. Ward was employed.

Q. And you obtained the check for him?—A. I did.

Q. And then you got $7,000 and you divided that with Mr. Ward?—A. I did.

Q. Then you got $1,500; did you divide that with him?—A. No; I divided that with my brother. The object was to equalize the three fees, as near as possible. Mr. Ward had received $4,000.

Q. Did Mr. Irwin know that you had employed your brother to express his opinion?—A. No; I think not. I employed him on my own account. He was here at the time, I guess.

Q. Were you authorized by Mr. Irwin to employ associates?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Abert that you did employ your brother, and must have more money?—A. No, sir.

Q. On what representation to Mr. Abert did you get $1,500 more?—A. I represented to Mr. Abert at the time that he paid the $7,000 that that was a very inadequate sum, in view of the fact that Mr. Ward was to have the half of it. Mr. Ward was entitled, in fact, under the original arrangement, to $5,000. When Mr. Ward was informed by me of the amount, we agreed to divide.

Q. You had received $1,000 retainer; when you got the $1,500, why did you not divide that with Mr. Ward?—A. I divided the $1,000 with my brother also. Mr. Ward was employed at my suggestion, but there was no partnership understanding.

Q. You felt that you were at liberty to take this money and give it to your brother instead of Mr. Ward?—A. Certainly, I did.

Q. And Mr. Ward acquiesced in the agreement?—A. Mr. Ward was not consulted about it; he had received his compensation.

Q. You do not mean to say that it was without his consent?—A. I do.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Are you an attorney at law?—A. I am.

Q. Are you a member of the Washington bar?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you practicing here?—A. I do not practice at the bar.

Q. Is your brother an attorney at law?—A. No.

Q. Is Mr. Ward?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you convince Governor Swann when you presented your argument to him?—A. No; Governor Swann was already convinced.

Q. Then you did not earn anything in that transaction?—A. I found Governor Swann taking a broad, statesmanlike view of the subject.

Q. Was this argument before the final passage of the bill?—A. Yes.

By Mr. KASSON :

Q. The aggregate of all the sums received by you was $10,000?—A. Yes.

Q. That sum went in distribution; $4,000 to Ward, $3,000 to your brother, and $3,000 to yourself?—A. That was it.

Q. And, as far as you know, it was retained by you three gentlemen for your own use exclusively?—A. I have no doubt about it—not the slightest.

Q. Do you know from your relations to this subsidy matter of any sums of money being paid to any persons other than you three?—A. I certainly do not.

By Mr. WOOD :

Q. You never had any disguise about your relation with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at that time?—A. Not the slightest. There never was a moment when I would hesitate to make it known.

Q. It was well known by your friends that you were retained by the company?—A. I cannot say that it was. When I am retained on any professional matter I do not generally speak of it.

Q. But there was no secret about it?—A. There certainly was not.

Q. You were acting as you would act in any other case in court or anywhere else?—A. Certainly, I was.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Q. You spoke to a number of members of Congress about that matter. Did any of them understand that you appeared as the paid attorney of the company?—A. Not unless they judged from my manner.

Q. They had no intimation that you appeared as an attorney?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Such public topics are very often talked about by persons who are not retained; you talk about public matters in which you are not retained?—A. I do. This was a public matter, and really, even if I had not been retained, I would have spoken precisely as I did.

Q. Then there was no reason why any gentleman to whom you spoke should have assumed that you were a paid attorney?—A. No; I think not.

Q. At the time you were so acting in behalf of the subsidy, were you proprietor of the Patriot in the city of Washington?—A. I was not.

Q. Did you hold any stock in the concern?—A. I had stock in it up to the period of its dissolution. I do not know whether the paper was in existence at that time or not; I think it suspended shortly after the last presidential election.

Q. You were a stockholder during the continuance of the Patriot?—A. I was.

Q. Was this money paid to you in order to influence that newspaper in any way?—A. Most undoubtedly not.

Q. Did you, during the pendency of the matter, secure the publication of any articles in that paper?—A. I did not.

Q. So that this payment, whatever it was, was not in connection with that paper?—A. Certainly not; my connection with the matter was purely professional.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1875.

SAMUEL WARD sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON:

Question. I suppose you were summoned in consequence of your name having been associated in connection with the distribution of money for the Pacific Mail subsidy?—Answer. I received a subpoena about an hour ago, particulars not specified.

Q. Therefore the committee desires you to state how much money you received in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy.—A. I think it was after the first failure of the measure in the House that Mr. Berret called at my rooms one afternoon, and said that he had been requested to see if I would accept a retainer to help this subsidy along. I asked him how much? He said five hundred dollars, and five thousand contingent on success. I said, "All right." He sent to me that afternoon or next morning a check for five hundred dollars, signed by a gentleman I had never seen, Mr. R. B. Irwin, and some days after Congress adjourned I was agreeably waited upon by Mr. Berret, who said to me: "They have cut us down three thousand dollars, and there is seven thousand dollars paid; shall we insist on more?" I said, "No; let us take what we can get. It is all right." He handed me $3,500 in bills, and I went to New York that same night.

Q. I suppose it is unnecessary to ask you if you retained all that sum and applied it to your own use.—A. I did; I must say that it was a very liberal compensation for the moderate amount of work which that subsidy seemed to require.

Q. State the nature of the services rendered by you.—A. Simply stating on all occasions, where it was proper to do so, that I was in favor of the measure; that I thought it a good measure. I had a right to say that, because, as an old Californian, having sailed often on those steamers, I had a sort of friendship for them. I thought well of the line; I thought that it was a national undertaking; that our ship-building was going to the dogs, and that if those ships were to be built in this country it would give an impetus to iron ship-building. I thought that a subsidy to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was a proper thing, particularly as the Cunard Steamship Company had a subsidy from the English government, and had attained a colossal success. I wanted to see the American flag flying again on the seas, and I would have helped the Pacific Mail Company without one penny of compensation.

Q. You used all your influence to secure the passage of the subsidy?—A. Certainly. There was not much time to act; only a fortnight, I think. I was rather agreeably surprised at being retained, because that clinched my determination to do what I could for what I regarded as a great national enterprise.

Q. Do you know of any other sum of money being paid to any parties for their services in procuring that subsidy?—A. I never heard of any, and, until I was surprised the other day by Mr. Abert's list, which I saw in the Star, I never knew who was in the combination. I did not know there was any combination, except that I found that people generally were very favorably inclined toward the bill. I did not know Mr. Abert. I had never seen him to my knowledge. I never saw Mr. Irwin till the day the vote was taken, when I saw a pale man standing around this corner, and was told it was Mr. Irwin.

Q. My question was if you knew of any sum of money being paid directly or indirectly, in connection with the subsidy.—A. Not a penny;

I might have been at liberty to suppose that the whole thing was confined to Mr. Berret and myself.

Q. The $500 which you received was paid by check?—A. Yes; payable to my order on the Metropolitan National Bank of this city.

Q. Do you know of any money being paid to any member, officer, or employé of either House of Congress in connection with that subsidy?—

A. No, sir.

Mr. BECK. I have heard it suggested that you had remarked that there was a great deal of difficulty in a gentleman living in Washington on the oxygen of the atmosphere, and that a gentleman was obliged to do something.

WITNESS. This business of lobbying, as it is called, is as precarious as fishing in the Hebrides. You get all ready, your boats go out—suddenly there comes a storm, and away you are driven. Everybody who knows anything about Washington, knows that ten times, ay, fifty times, more measures are lost than are carried; but once in a while a pleasant little windfall of this kind recompenses us, who are always toiling here, for the disappointments of the session. I am not at all ashamed—I do not say that I am proud, but I am not at all ashamed—of the occupation. It is a very useful one. In England it is a separate branch of the legal profession. There they have parliamentary lawyers who do no other business. There the committees sit all day to hear these lawyers and they sit in Parliament all night, whereas here committees are only allowed to sit for an hour and a half, and so it is very hard to get through four thousand bills in a session. The disappointments are much more numerous than the successes. I have had many a very pleasant “contingent” knocked away, [laughter,] when everything appeared prosperous and certain, and I would not insure any bill if I were paid fifty per cent. to secure its passage. That is the general rule. In this matter I think that the gentleman (Mr. Irwin) paid more money than he need have paid.

Mr. NIBLACK. And he distributed it rather badly.

WITNESS. I am satisfied with what I got.

Mr. NIBLACK. You got much less than others got?

The WITNESS. I do not know. I was retained, I suppose, because the “King’s name is a tower of strength,” and I am called the “King of the lobby.” But I am not the treasurer of the lobby, that is certain. If you were here for entertainment, I could entertain you with histories of well-concerted plans which all disappeared just at the crack of one member’s whip; perhaps a matter of caprice, perhaps a matter of accident; you cannot tell which. We who are of the regular army know when we are whipped. But gentlemen of little experience come down here, and peg on and peg on till the end of the session, and never understand when they had better go home. To introduce a bill properly, to have it referred to the proper committee, to see that some member in that committee understands its merits, to attend to it, to watch it, to have a counsel to go and advocate it before the committee, to see that members of the committee do not oversleep themselves on the mornings of important meetings, to watch the coming in of the bill in Congress day after day, week after week, to have your men on hand a dozen times, and to have them as often disappointed; to have one of those storms which spring up in the Adriatic of Congress, until your men are worried and worn and tired, and until they say to themselves that they will not go up to the Capitol to-day, and then to have the bird suddenly flushed, and all your preparations brought to naught—these are some of the experiences of the lobby. Another point—the question of entertainments —is spoken of. There is nothing in the world so excellent as entertainments of a refined order. Talleyrand says that diplomacy is assisted by good dinners, but at good dinners people do not “talk shop,” but they give people who have a taste in that way a right, perhaps, to ask a gentleman a civil question, and to get a civil answer; to get information which his clients want, and that can properly be given. Sometimes a railroad man wants information; sometimes a patentee wants his patent renewed; that is a pretty hard fight. Then a broker wants to know what the Treasury is going to do about a certain measure. Sometimes the banker is anxious about the financial movements in Congress, or a merchant about the tariff. All these things we do constantly, and we do not make any charge for them. We keep up a certain circle of friends, and once in a while an opportunity comes of getting something that is of real service, and for which compensation is due and proper. But the entertainments are proportioned to the business of the session. When the business is good, so are the entertainments, and when the business is not good, the entertainments are meager. Washington Irving tells a story of a King of Spain, who was lost in the woods with his hunting-party; he ordered one of his attendants to climb a tree and see whether there was any building in sight. The man saw a château on the top of an adjacent hill, and the King said, “Let us go there.” They went and were received at the door of the château by the grandee, with his head uncovered. The King announced who he was, and said the party wanted dinner. The family had dined an hour before, and the servants had consumed everything that was left. The cook was sent for, and said His Majesty would be served in an hour’s time. They had a very pleasant dinner, and the King was rather surprised at the taste displayed in some of the dishes. After dinner, commending the excellence of the repast, he asked what it was composed of. Luckily, it was not Friday. The grandee sent for the cook, who came in and said, “Your Majesty, no animal has contributed its life to your dinner,” and he went to the window and showed the King fifty-two pigs with their ears all cut off. Said the King, “A man who can make such a repast as that from the ears of fifty-two pigs should be made a governor of a province.”

MR. NIBLACK. Is there not a great deal of money wasted on good dinners?

WITNESS. I do not think money is ever wasted on a good dinner. If a man dines badly he forgets to say his prayers going to bed, but if he dines well he feels like a saint.

THE CHAIRMAN. Were you aware that Mr. Berret, in point of fact, had received $10,000, instead of $7,000?

WITNESS. No; I did not know anything about it until I saw it mentioned in the papers. It is quite right; he probably did more work than I did. I was satisfied with what I got.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 15, 1875.

DONN PIATT recalled.

MR. ROBERTS. When you retired from the committee the other day, you had been asked through whom you made payment of the note of $5,000 to Richard B. Irwin in the summer of 1872. I desire now to repeat that question.

THE WITNESS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee: In my testimony before the committee the other day I committed an error. I made a mistake which I wish to correct now, with your permission.

When it first came out that Mr. Abert had paid me $5,000 (as it is stated abroad) from that corruption-fund, I came here for the purpose of explaining that transaction. I had put myself in the hands of my enemies, had given them jurisdiction, and the burden of proof lay with me to show that I was not concerned in the use of that corruption-fund. I did not consider what the committee was engaged upon. I looked only at myself, and I committed a grave mistake. If I understand it, Mr. Chairman, you are engaged in investigating the use of a corruption-fund, and you wish to trace it from the hands of the people who sent it here to the lobby, into the hands of members or officers of the House. If, in this investigation, you find any man, as lobbyist, offering or giving a bribe to a Congressman, it is your duty to turn him over to the courts for trial. If, on the other hand, you find any Congressman guilty of receiving such bribe, you report him to the House for punishment. Am I right in that?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know that it is the purpose of this committee to hold any argument with a witness. If you have any correction to make in the testimony you gave the other day, that, of course, is proper.

The WITNESS. I do not want to go into any argument. I simply want the chairman to inform me, if he pleases, what this committee is engaged upon.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you desire to make any correction of the testimony which you gave the other day?

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we will direct ourselves to that question.

The WITNESS. I should feel a good deal more comfortable and safer if the chairman would tell me precisely the object of this investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The object this moment is for you to correct the testimony which you gave the other day, if you desire it.

The WITNESS. I understand the chairman, then, to decline telling me the object of the investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. If you understand me correctly, you understand me to say that if you desire to correct anything which you stated the other day, you have now the opportunity to do so.

The WITNESS. The correction runs through the entire extent of my testimony on that occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. You are at liberty to correct it to any extent you require.

The WITNESS. I am very much obliged to the chairman for his gracious permission. Looking at it, then, as I do this morning, it is my duty to come here and show what I did with the money which I received. Whether that money was a gratuity, or recompense for services, or a loan, has nothing to do, in my estimation, with this investigation. But, recognizing the power which this committee has to make me account for this money, I have brought here my bank-book and receipts for the year of 1872.

Mr. ROBERTS. I understand the chairman to waive that matter until you can correct your testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. Be kind enough to state whether or not you made a mistake in your testimony the other day.

The WITNESS. I made a mistake in appealing to the committee for justice before the public. That I now withdraw, and desire to appear as a witness only.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you do not desire to correct any statement that you made?

The WITNESS. Yes, I do. I want to appear now as a witness before the committee, and to offer my bank-book, and to show all the payments I made.

The CHAIRMAN. Appearing now as a witness, will you be kind enough to answer the questions put to you?

The WITNESS. Does the chairman understand that I now make the offer of my bank-book and receipts?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. I will ask you some questions in relation to your bank-book after you answer the question I now ask by order of the committee. It is, through whom you paid a note of $5,000 to Richard B. Irwin in the summer of 1872?—A. I answer that question under protest. I am not on trial here. My private affairs are not before this committee, and this committee has nothing whatever to do with them. Under protest, I answer that I do not know who took the note up. I only know where I got the money to do it with.

Q. You stated the other day before the committee that you sent the money or that the money was paid by some person either in New York or San Francisco.—A. I supposed at that time that I knew, but in conversation since with Mr. Irwin I find that of my own knowledge I do not know. I know exactly where I got the money.

Q. State where you got it.—A. With the same protest as before, I tell the committee that I got a large amount of that money from Wm. Neeley Thompson. Part of it was earned money and part of it borrowed money.

Q. Was Mr. Thompson in Washington at the time that that subsidy was under consideration?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he connected with the movement for the passage of the subsidy?—A. No.

Q. Do you know whether he supported the subsidy, or favored it?—A. I believe he did not favor it.

Q. This money which you obtained from him had no connection whatever with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Not the remotest.

Q. What was the business of Mr. Thompson in Washington?—A. God bless my soul, I cannot tell you what Thompson was doing.

Q. What is his profession or avocation?—A. He is a gentleman.

Q. Do you know what business he had here in Washington?

The WITNESS. Do you want me to go into Thompson's private transactions?

Mr. ROBERTS. I want you to tell us what his avocations in Washington were?

The WITNESS. That I most positively decline to answer. It is as much as I can do to answer about my own private transactions, and now I have to tell about Mr. Thompson's.

Mr. ROBERTS. No; I ask you what was publicly understood to be his business in Washington, in the spring and summer of 1872?

The WITNESS. You can ask Judge Kelley about that; probably he can tell you.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Kelley is not a witness, and you are.

The WITNESS. You can make him a witness, for he voted for the subsidy, and he would be an excellent witness.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do you decline to tell what was the business of Mr. Thompson in Washington, in the summer of 1872?

The WITNESS. Most positively.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do you know whether he had any business here in connection with Congress, in the summer of 1872?

The WITNESS. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. ROBERTS. You can answer as to whether or not you know?

The WITNESS. Certainly I can.

Mr. ROBERTS. You said just now that you could not.

The WITNESS. I did, because it is not your right to ask such a question.

Mr. ROBERTS. Do you decline to answer whether or not you know what business Mr. Thompson had here in connection with Congress in 1872?

The WITNESS. Most positively.

Q. You obtained from Mr. Thompson the money with which this note of Irwin's was paid?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell where this note was paid and when?—A. I do not know of my own knowledge. The note came to me in a letter through the mail. I supposed when I was here last that I did know, but I find on further inquiry and information that I do not know.

Q. Can you state that the note was sent by this gentleman whose name you then declined to give?—A. That is my impression, but I am not so sure of it now that I can swear to it.

Q. Where was the note in the interval between the time of your getting it and the time of your paying it?—A. I do not know: it was in the possession of Mr. Irwin, I suppose.

Q. Do you know how the note was paid—by whom?—A. I do not know. I thought when I was here before, that I did know, but I find on further conversation with Mr. Irwin and from my own recollection of this matter, that I do not know.

Q. Did the money come into your hands for Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes.

Q. And it was sent by you through some other party to Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir; when Mr. Thompson left here he left with the understanding with me that he was to take that note up, but whether Mr. Thompson did it himself or not I do not know. He mailed the note to me. I only know that I got it.

Q. Did Mr. Thompson give into your hands personally the money?—A. No; why should he? When he was going out to California he took the note up.

Q. He took the money to California in your behalf?—A. I presume so, for the note came back.

Q. He never gave you the money in fact, but gave you the note?—A. I presume he gave me the note; the note came back to me.

Q. The money never came into your hands, but simply the note which the money represented?—A. That is so.

Q. You were kind enough to say just now that you would show, from your bank-account, what had become of the $5,000 which you obtained from Mr. Irwin. Be kind enough to make that statement.—A. I was under the impression, when I was here before, that I had deposited that money in the First National Bank. I find now that I deposited it with the late Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. I recollect that I went there because the company gave me some advertising, and as it patronized me I patronized that institution. You will find the sum entered here, [presenting his bank-book.]

Q. Read the entries yourself.—A. The entries are: June 1, a deposit of $5,000; July 2, $600; August 1, $1,000; making $6,600.

Q. Be kind enough now to give us the checks against that amount, indicating the checks against the $5,000 especially, if you can.—A. I cannot separate them. The whole amount deposited to my credit was $6,600.

Q. Do the other deposits besides the $5,000 connect themselves in any way with the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. Not one of them.

Q. Now be kind enough to give the checks against that amount.

That is all, and it exhausts the $6,600 deposited in the Freedman's Bank.

Q. And the book shows that the account is thus settled?—A. Yes. In addition to this, I had an account at the First National Bank. This morning I stopped at the Metropolitan National Bank to ask the custodian of the books to give me an account of my transactions with the First National Bank in 1872, and he promised to do so. I have the checks here, and am ready to go through them.

Q. Are those checks connected with the money which you obtained from Richard B. Irwin?—A. No, sir; they having nothing at all to do with it.

Q. I understood you to say that the money you received from Mr. Irwin is accounted for in your bank-book account with the Freedman's Bank?
—A. Yes.

Q. And that the other checks which you now hold in your hand have no connection with that money?—A. None whatever; but I would suggest that while I deposited $5,000 in the Freedman's Bank, I might have been paying congressmen out of my money in the First National Bank.

Q. Did you do so?—A. No, sir; I never paid anything to a congressman, and do not propose to.

Q. Do you know of any money being paid to any congressman or to any officer of either house in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy?
—A. I have my opinion on that subject, but it is not positive knowledge.

Q. Have you any information on the subject?—A. I was very much interested at that time in the Brazilian line of steamships. Mr. Davidge, who appeared here for Mr. Garrison, had a little project by which the increased commerce produced by the line would pay the subsidy, and I thought that rather a good thing. That made me interested in subsidies so that I watched the thing, and I found that while Mr. Garrison's project running upon its merits, was defeated fifteen minutes after the passage of the Pacific Mail subsidy; and as I saw all the carpet-baggers on the floor, and all the suspicious characters of the House on the floor, voting for the Pacific Mail subsidy, I came to the conclusion that they had been paid for it.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to any of them being paid?—A. As I said before, nothing but information.

Q. Have you any information as to any money that was paid to any person in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. No, sir, I have not. I was opposed to it at the time.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. I understand you to say that this account at the Freedman's Bank embraced all the money that you got from Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. You have said that you have no knowledge of the payment of any money; have you any information?—A. No, sir; none whatever, only my observations from the reporters' gallery of the situation of affairs, which convinced me that money was being circulated.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. State as to the time when and the place where you gave the note for $5,000 to Mr. Irwin.—A. If my recollection serves me right, it was in my library.

Q. You gave it to him personally?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you give it to him?—A. I do not recollect; I think it is on the note.

Q. Was it at the time that the note is dated?—A. That is my impression.

Q. If I understand you to-day, instead of your sending the money to San Francisco to take up the note, a gentleman went from here to San Francisco, and took up the note, not with money which you gave him, but under an arrangement by which he did it?—A. Yes.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. On the back of the note is this entry: "Paid July 22d, 1872." Can you tell us whether that was the time it was paid?—A. I do not know; the fact is, since I have been looking at the note, that the entry on the back is a puzzle to me; I do not understand it at all.

Q. Can you state about the time the note was paid?—A. I cannot.

Q. State about the time you received it back.—A. I cannot do that; it was not long after this date, however.

Q. You have observed on the back of the note what seems to be the calculation of interest for about two months.—A. Yes; and it bothered me a good deal to know what that calculation was.

Q. The entry on the back of the note, "Paid July 22, 1872," would indicate that the note had run about two months when it was paid.—A. So I am told.

Q. Can you state whether or not the note was paid at that time?—A. That is the presumption; I cannot come any nearer to it than the committee.

Q. Can you give us any information as to the time when the note was paid, or the time when you received it back?—A. No, sir; I cannot recollect.

Q. It was some time in the summer of 1872?—A. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You stated the other day that when you obtained this money from Mr. Irwin you were in great distress for money; will you now state which of the items that you paid, and which you have read here to the committee, were pressing you at that moment?—A. I do not know; I was then, as I am generally, surrounded by creditors who wanted their money.

Q. How much time does the disbursement of that $5,000 cover, as shown by the stubs of your check-book?—A. It runs from June 10 to September 6.

Q. Some of those items would appear, from your statement, to have been contracted after the date when you got the money; is that so?—A. Some of them—yes.

Q. They did not press you much at the time?—A. No, sir; they could not very well press me, you know, unless they had a prophetic soul.

Q. Which of those items was it that put you in such distress about money?—A. Bless my soul, all of them.

Q. All of them, including those that were contracted after you got the money?—A. I recollect that the Capital was in a very bad way at the time, and was pressing for money, and my creditors were all around me.

Q. You volunteered to give the committee the items of disbursement, and you lead me thereby to ask which one of them was it that so pressed you at the time that you borrowed this money?—A. I am very sorry I cannot gratify the Chair in making that statement of my private affairs, but my recollection is that they were all pressing me.

Q. You do not know of any one pressing you more than any other?—A. Yes; the Washington Capital bothered me more than anything else.

Q. Turn to your stubs and point out which one of those bills, in regard to the Capital, was pressing you on the 23d of May, 1872.—A. All of them were.

Q. Will you not turn to the stub of the first one that you find?—A. It is not necessary; the Capital was in debt for paper and in debt for various expenses, and these debts were pressing on me.

Q. Be kind enough to point out the items that were pressing you on the 23d of May.—A. That I cannot do.

Q. You say that the money which paid the note was part of it earned money and part of it borrowed money; how much was earned money and how much borrowed money?—A. Well, really, Mr. Chairman, I cannot go on with this thing. It is absurd. I do not mean any disrespect to you or the committee, but I cannot go on with it.

Q. Some of it was a loan to you, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. How much of it was a loan to you?—A. I decline answering. I think I have gone far enough into my private affairs.

Q. Without waiving that question, let me ask another question: Did you give the man who loaned the money to you any paper evidence of the loan?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you repaid him?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you repay him?—A. I cannot say; I do not recollect.

Q. How did you repay him?—A. I cannot answer; I am getting tired.

Q. Is that the only reason why you cannot answer?—A. Yes, sir. I feel that I am being treated with disrespect.

The CHAIRMAN. If you are tired take a seat and rest.

The WITNESS. I am not tired in my legs but in my patience. I do not desire to sit down; I want to relieve my vexation.

Q. You decline to answer that question, and you give as a reason to the committee that you are tired in your patience?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell us where you were when you paid the money to this man.—A. No, sir; I decline answering.

Q. Tell us how you paid it.—A. No, sir; I decline answering. I feel that I am being trifled with here as a witness. I mean no disrespect to the committee, but that is the impression at this moment.

Q. Do you decline to answer?—A. Certainly.

Q. Will you tell us in what way you paid the money?—A. No, sir; I will not.

Q. Will you tell us when you paid it as near as you can?—A. I must respectfully decline. That is going entirely into another transaction not connected with the subject before the committee.

Q. Will you tell us where the gentleman was when you paid the money to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you tell us whether you took any paper from him?—A. I have answered that already.

Q. I asked you if you gave him any paper evidence of the loan; I now ask you if you took any paper evidence from him that you paid it back?—A. I decline answering.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. The evidence shows that you have had the sums of $100, $800, and $5,000; have you had any other moneys from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I never had a cent from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. From Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir. I never had any other moneys than those.

Q. Or from any other agent of the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then the $5,900 is the total of your receipts from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or from any of its agents?—A. That is all.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know whether this Mr. Thompson you spoke of had at that time any connection with what is called the New Idria quicksilver mining claim?—A. I decline answering that. I consider the question an insult.

Q. Do you know that there was such a claim pending in Congress at that time?—A. Not any better than you do.

Q. Will you answer the question?—A. No, sir; I do not answer it.

Q. Do you refuse to answer whether this Mr. Thompson was at that time pressing that claim on Congress?—A. I decline answering anything about it. You have got entirely beyond the jurisdiction of the committee.

Q. Do you state now that Mr. Thompson did owe you a part of this money with which he took up the $5,000 note?—A. Yes.

Q. How much of it did he owe you?—A. I do not recollect.

Q. About how much?—A. He may have owed me $3,000 of it, I think.

Q. And $2,000 of it was a loan?—A. I cannot say, unless I had some data to refer to.

Q. For what did he owe you this $3,000?—A. I respectfully decline answering. It has nothing to do with this transaction at all.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18, 1875.

WITELAW REID sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside at 23 Park avenue, New York. I am editor of the New York Tribune.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has been very much gratified to see the interest taken by the New York Tribune in this investigation, and it has occurred to the committee that you might render it some aid. Therefore the committee invited you here. If you can render us any aid we would be very much obliged. The committee has observed, in the editorials of the Tribune, hints as to the best method of pursuing this investigation, and I have one editorial now before me in which it is intimated that you have some knowledge of a list of members whose votes were supposed to be controlled in reference to the subsidy, and that there were two members of this committee on that list; tell us what you know about it.—A. That was a matter of rumor, and substantially what I knew I communicated to a member of the committee in New York. I said at the time that it was rumor, but that I thought certain people would be able, if summoned, to testify as to what they had been understood to say about it. I gave the name of one member of this committee, I think, in my letter on that subject, but I have since been informed that the witness who was supposed to know about the matter had been before this committee and had declared positively that he knew of no such list.

Q. Have you any knowledge yourself as to there being such a list?—A. No personal knowledge.

Q. Have you any knowledge that any person engaged on the Tribune has any knowledge in reference to such a list?—A. I should think that none of them would have any personal knowledge of it.

Q. What ground had you for supposing that anybody had in his possession such a list?—A. The same ground which we had had up to the beginning of the developments by the committee for supposing that there was any corruption at all in the matter—current and increasing rumor.

The CHAIRMAN. I put these questions solely for the purpose of getting evidence before the committee, not for the purpose of harassing anybody, and if you have the slightest evidence that can aid the committee in this investigation, you will oblige the committee if you will communicate it.

—A. I do not know whether it would be quite fair to report a remark which was made to one of my reporters when the committee was in session in New York, and yet I am inclined to think that as there was no injunction of secrecy in the matter, it would be. I do not undertake to vouch for the nature of the evidence it may elicit. I do not know whether the man would swear to what he was reported to me as saying, but I put among my papers (thinking that it might possibly come within the scope of your inquiry) a memorandum made to me in the regular course of his business by the city editor of the Tribune. I do not see it now among my papers, but the substance of it is that Mr. Oakey Hall had said that day that a member of this committee was in some way implicated in the Pacific Mail transactions, and that he could probably give evidence on the subject, or could put the committee in the way of evidence.

Q. Please to repeat that statement.—A. The city editor of the Tribune informed me that it had come to his knowledge that day, during the session of this committee in New York, that Mr. Oakey Hall had said that a member of the committee was concerned in Pacific Mail, and that he might be able to give some evidence upon it. I give you that in the faint hope that it may lead to some clew, though I will not undertake to vouch for it. It is a sample of the sort of rumors that have been flying around in New York since this investigation began, and which I presume have been equally current in Washington.

Q. Have you taken any pains to ascertain whether Mr. Oakey Hall made that remark?—A. I have no doubt that Mr. Oakey Hall made that remark.

Q. Do you know what was the ground for his making the assertion?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you taken no pains to ascertain?—A. No. That was about the time that the committee was leaving New York, and I think I communicated the fact to a member of the committee, saying that while I did not attach any importance to it, I should prefer the committee to have the benefit of it.

Q. Have you any information touching the use of the money that was brought here by Mr. Irwin to secure the passage of the subsidy?—A. I did know a great many things, without knowing them of my personal knowledge, and which the committee has since developed.

Q. Do you know of anything that has not appeared in the testimony taken by this committee in relation to the use of the money brought here by Mr. Irwin?—A. As the chairman has alluded to editorial remarks in the Tribune, I will say that a short time ago I made a suggestion in the Tribune that the committee might advantageously summon Judge Pierrepont.

Q. I was going to call your attention to what you said about Judge Pierrepont. After Judge Pierrepont made a statement to your paper, you still seemed to think that he could be of service to this committee. I should like to know what was the ground for that opinion.—A. Briefly this: that it came to my knowledge that a statement had been made by the president of the Pacific Mail Company, that after the payments, which have already been put in evidence, by Mr. Irwin to Mr. William S. King, a further demand was made upon the company or on its president by Mr. King in writing, for an additional sum of $25,000; that the letter in which this demand was made stated that he thought more attention ought to be paid to his demands, since he was writing with the prison-bars behind him, and that the president of the Pacific

Mail Steamship Company had said that he replied, saying that if the writer did not stop sending letters of that sort to him, he would be soon writing with the prison-bars in front of him; and that the letter making this demand had been presented to the company, or to its president, by Judge Pierrepont, accompanied with the recommendation that the claim be allowed and paid. It came to my knowledge that the president of the company stated this story just as I have given it, and I took some little pains to get at the witnesses to it.

Q. Which president of the company do you refer to?—A. Captain Bradbury. I think he succeeded Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Is he a resident of New York?—A. I first met him in New York, and I think he resides near the city of New York, on the Palisades.

Q. Your paper of Saturday intimated that there was something mysterious about the books of the Sergeant-at-Arms. What was the ground for that statement?—A. I have repeatedly heard that payments were made with the part of the money which I think you have already traced from Mr. Irwin's hands in thousand-dollar bills, and it has been repeatedly alleged that the books of the Sergeant-at-Arms would probably show (not the open public accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms, but the private accounts which he is understood to keep with individual members) deposits at that time in thousand-dollar bills, and it seemed to me that, if there was any ground whatever for believing that, it would be wise on the part of the committee simply to ask the Sergeant-at-Arms to produce those accounts, confidentially if not publicly.

Before passing to the Judge Pierrepont story, if you will allow me, I would like to give the witnesses whom I found for that statement which I made. As I have suggested already, it is impossible for me in my position to have personal knowledge of these facts, but I think that if the committee will summon the witnesses whom I will name, they will testify to the story as I have stated it here. One of these witnesses is A. W. Bradbury, a brother of the late president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, who is to be found at the office of Homans & Lemans, No. 5 Wall street. I took pains to send to Mr. Bradbury to ascertain if he had any knowledge of the fact, and he stated that his brother, (the late president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company,) who is now absent in London, had shown him the letter from King, and had told him the circumstances, and what his reply to Mr. King was. He did not give me any information as to the alleged recommendation by Judge Pierrepont. That I learned from a former agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in Japan, a Mr. A. Senter, who, I think, can be found in Washington now.

Q. Can you name any other witness?—A. I have heard the same thing as a matter of current rumor for a long time, but these are the only men whom I have inquired of through my reporters.

Q. Do you know of any other evidence than that which you have stated which will lead the committee, either directly or indirectly, to the tracing of any of this money into the hands of members of Congress?—A. I must repeat, that personal evidence of the kind it would be impossible for me to give. I never bribed a Congressman myself, and was never in the lobby myself, consequently I have no personal knowledge of it, but I have heard a good deal about it, enough to make me think it worth while to have a search and examination into the private accounts of Congressmen with the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Q. Tell us the ground of this statement in a Tribune editorial: "Time and again the evidence has led to the very doors of Congress, and there it has been stopped."—A. I think the declarations that have been already made concerning the accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms are getting very near to the doors of Congress.

Q. Have you any other grounds for that statement than your suggestion in relation to the accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms?—A. I think that there are a great many circumstances which have been developed in the evidence laid before you that would lead a candid critic to that opinion.

Q. Tell us one of those circumstances that leads to the fair conclusion that we have stopped the investigation as soon as it got to the doors of Congress.

The WITNESS. Then I am expected not to give facts, but to vindicate my editorials.

The CHAIRMAN. We are here to get upon the trace of evidence, and we suppose that when a person undertakes to tell us where we can find evidence it would be of some service to us to learn. That is all. We are not arraigning you.

The WITNESS. So I understand.

The CHAIRMAN. As I stated in the beginning, we are engaged in the search for light, and wherever it leads there we propose to follow.

The WITNESS. You are not arraigning me, but you are proposing that I shall arraign the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. No, we are not; we are trying to vindicate the committee. The least of our ambition is to arraign the committee.

Mr. ROBERTS. Or without vindicating anybody or arraigning anybody, we are anxious to get at the facts, wherever they may be found.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is anything aside from this matter about the Sergeant-at-Arms, (about which I will ask some questions in a few minutes,) if anything has transpired or is in existence which you know, and which is the foundation of the remark in the Tribune editorial, that we have "led our investigation up to the doors of Congress directly, and there stopped," we would like to know what it is, so that we can go along.

The WITNESS. In reply to that remark, I will say that I have been assured that sundry pieces of evidence have been brought before the committee which, it seemed to me, might develop important results if closely followed out, and of which no use has yet been made by the committee, so far as the public has any knowledge.

Q. What are these?—A. I was going to refer, as I have already done, to the books of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I think, then, that the books of the late firm of Rufus Hatch & Co., in connection with Samuel A. Hatch, would be of value.

Q. In this connection—as to tracing the money through the doors of Congress into the hands of members?—A. I cannot undertake to say that any specific inquiry would trace the money directly into the hands of members of Congress, but I think that a development of the facts will locate it there. I could not have undertaken to say, before the examination of Mr. King, that a specific inquiry would have traced so much money into his hands, but I had a strong suspicion that it would, and I had some facts which seemed to warrant that suspicion.

The CHAIRMAN. I only ask you for evidence. What is your ground for supposing that in the books of the late firm of Rufus Hatch & Co. there is any evidence which will lead us to trace the money into the hands of members of Congress?—A. I have not said that either that or any of the other points of evidence (with the exception of the one I have given about the books of the Sergeant-at-Arms) would necessarily and directly lead to members of Congress, but I think it would lead to the development of the use of money, and I believe (as I think the public generally believes) that that money would be finally traced in a considerable part into the hands of Congressmen.' One ground for my belief is that whatever else may be said in regard to Colonel Irwin, who is represented as having been a reputable and gallant officer in the Army, nobody has ever accused him of being a fool, and it seems to me that he has spent a large sum of money here which has not been traced into his hands.

The CHAIRMAN. Although all this may be very interesting, still the time of the committee is short, terminating on the 4th of March next, and therefore we must confine ourselves to practical questions. This reasoning about Mr. Irwin the committee does not care to hear.

The WITNESS. Then if you do not ask me for my opinion I will not give it.

The CHAIRMAN. I ask you for the ground for intimating that in a certain quarter we can get facts. That is what I want to know.—A. First of all, I have given the ground that this large sum of money was spent here, and that I do not believe it was spent by a man who was likely to throw it away.

Q. Have you any facts of any kind, which can aid us in tracing it into the halls of Congress, more than you have given?—A. No facts of my personal knowledge.

Q. Did Mr. Irwin ever give you the name of any member of Congress into whose hands any of the money passed?—A. No, sir, Mr. Irwin never did; I never saw him but once. I beg your pardon, he did give me the name of a member of Congress elect, but perhaps the committee does not care to refer to that now.

Q. Was that member of Congress elect a member of Congress at the time the subsidy was passed?—A. No, sir; he was a public officer, but not an officer of Congress. I see no reason why I should not mention his name. I refer to Mr. Parsons.

Q. How much did Mr. Irwin tell you that Mr. Parsons had received?—A. I think that, in order to do Mr. Irwin justice, and Mr. Parsons justice, I had better repeat the conversation. It was on the single occasion when I ever saw Mr. Irwin. He had called first to thank me for having published a letter from him during his absence from the country, in reply to the charge that he had run away fearing this investigation, and fearing a suit by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I tried to improve the opportunity to find out what I could about this Pacific Mail subsidy, and about the expenditure of the money to secure it. I said that I had heard that $650,000 or $750,000 had been unaccounted for, which had probably passed through his hands, or been used in the subsidy in some manner. He replied that the sum was considerably larger than that. I said "How much?" He said "that he knew about $900,000 within his own knowledge, and that Mr. Parsons either handled or knew about the handling, (I am not sure which was his phrase,) of $300,000 more." This was the conversation, as I have stated it. I remember it quite distinctly. I do not think I could have misrepresented or misunderstood him; but I ought to say, in justice to Colonel Irwin, that I received a message from him this morning to the effect that I had misunderstood him, and that the sum of $300,000 which he mentioned was not in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy, but was a payment made back to Mr. Stockwell. I got the impression from his message that it was connected in some way with stock operations.

Q. When did you receive that message?—A. I received it this morning, since I reached the city.

Q. Had you communicated with Mr. Irwin that you were about to come here?—A. No, sir; but the fact, I suppose, was reasonably well known.

Q. Since your arrival here, Mr. Irwin has been correcting his statement to you?—A. Mr. Irwin sent me a message to the effect that he had heard that I had said this. I had spoken of it freely, and I communicated it to a member of this committee while the committee was in session in New York.

Q. Was there any other fact which Mr. Irwin stated with reference to the expenditure of that money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he state how he expended it?—A. No, sir.

Q. When he said that he knew of $900,000 which had been expended here, did not your curiosity lead you to inquire the manner of its expenditure?—A. I had a good deal of curiosity, but I regret to say that Colonel Irwin did not gratify it in all respects.

Q. To the extent to which he did gratify your curiosity, will you tell what he said?—A. He left on my mind an impression that $1,200,000 had been used here, and I think he also left (though at this length of time, and with what has passed on the subject since, I cannot be clear about it) the same impression which he subsequently gave this committee, that he had not personally paid it to any Congressman, and was not personally cognizant of its being paid to any Congressman or officer of Congress.

Q. He left that impression on your mind?—A. I think he did. I find it a little difficult to distinguish between that conversation and the testimony which came out afterward. The first thing that he seemed anxious about was to convince me that he had written me the truth from abroad, saying that he was not running away from an investigation, and he seemed indignant at the idea that any one should suppose that he would run away.

Q. Have you any other interest in this inquiry than that of a journalist?—A. None whatever.

Q. You had no interest in the Pacific Mail, directly or indirectly?—A. None whatever, directly or indirectly.

Q. I will now call your attention to what you have stated in relation to the Sergeant-at-Arms's books. Have you any knowledge of the fact that the committee has omitted to examine the Sergeant-at-Arms's books?—A. Simply what I have stated in my evidence, that the public is not aware that those private books have been examined.

Q. Are you aware of the committee's suppressing any testimony?

The WITNESS. Do you mean by suppressing testimony failing to get it?

The CHAIRMAN. No, but suppressing testimony which it has got.—

A. I have heard such reports, but I have no personal knowledge of the fact.

Q. Do you know that any person connected with your paper has any knowledge of that fact?—A. I think not; although I have never conversed with my representatives here on that point.

Q. Who represent you here in communicating facts in reference to the manner in which this investigation is pursued?—A. I hear from all manner of persons. The representations that I receive from our own regularly accredited representatives are generally printed and are accessible to the committee.

Q. Those that are printed are those which the attention of the committee has been called to?—A. Those that are printed, generally, not always, come from or through the hands of our regular representative here, Mr. White.

Q. He holds himself responsible to you, I suppose, for them, and would have no objection to holding himself responsible to the public for their accuracy?—A. I think not. I have generally found him singularly accurate in his statements.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. I did not quite understand the witness as to the statement made to him by Mr. Irwin, where he spoke of the $300,000 being repaid to Mr. Stockwell. Can you state more particularly what his language was about that?—A. That was merely a verbal message sent to me this morning by Mr. Irwin; but I should prefer that you would get Mr. Irwin's statement on that subject from himself.

Q. We would very much prefer it ourselves, and to get from him several other statements, but unfortunately we cannot get them. I do not know but that you may give us some impressions in connection with evidence which we have already had. To be more specific, Mr. Schumaker testifies that a large amount of checks, with which he drew $265,000 from the Brooklyn Trust Company, were sent back to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and I think, without being positive, that he supposes they went to Mr. Stockwell's office; and it is possible that those allegations about the $300,000 might have some connection with that sum which was repaid to Mr. Stockwell. Can you state more specifically the message received by you in reference to that $300,000.—A. I think it was, substantially, that I must have misunderstood Mr. Irwin, and that he must have been speaking of the $300,000 that was repaid to Mr. Stockwell. I have no recollection of his referring to that in our interview, although the interview lasted two hours.

Q. He did not say how the money was paid, or when?—A. No; his message simply was, that I must have misunderstood him, and that I must have mixed the two things together. My own recollection of the conversation is quite clear, but of course it is possible that Mr. Irwin is right and I wrong. I only swear to my belief.

Q. Who brought the message to you from Mr. Irwin?—A. The same gentleman whose name I have already given, Mr. A. Senter.

Q. Have you any facts within your own knowledge, or derived from any person representing the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in connection with the subsidy, or any agent in that business, beyond what you understand has already come out in the testimony before the committee?—A. I have alluded in the Tribune once or twice to the names of witnesses who, I thought, might give information, and in these cases I have nearly always heard rumors more or less well authenticated, which I believe would prove important clues.

Q. That is hardly the point of my inquiry. We have taken the liberty, on the mere general rumor that men knew some things in this connection, to summon them as witnesses, and when they got here we found that they knew nothing about it. I ask you, therefore, (confining the question to the facts within your own knowledge or derived from persons connected with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company either in its general business or in this subsidy business,) whether you have any facts further than those you have already produced?—A. I think nothing further than I have mentioned. I had from a former agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company the statement that Mr. Laidlaw, of New York, would be a good witness as to the receipt by Mr. Schumaker of a check for $25,000, through the Bank of California, from Mr. Irwin, I think after the transaction in Washington, in the spring. I sent to Mr.

Laidlaw to inquire about it, but he professed (and no doubt sincerely) entire ignorance of the circumstance. It seems to me, however, that his books would be worth examining. I think that if Mr. Irwin were brought out of jail and asked the question, he would testify that he continued to pay money on the subsidy account after he went to California; that he took a considerable amount of money there and paid it out, and that this was one of those checks.

Q. Tell us why you think, first, that Mr. Irwin would testify, and, second, that he would testify in that manner?—A. Mr. Irwin has stated, in a letter to me, that Mr. Laidlaw could give this information if his books were examined.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. Is this the Mr. H. B. Laidlaw who was examined by the committee in New York?—A. My impression is that it is the same gentleman, but I am not certain.

Mr. BURCHARD. This information was then entirely unknown to the committee?

The WITNESS. I understand this Mr. Laidlaw to be the agent of the Bank of California, in New York, although I am not clear about that. The reporter whom I sent knew about Mr. Laidlaw's business, and came back and said that Mr. Laidlaw had told him he had no knowledge of the matter. I have been assured, however, by Mr. Irwin, that his books would show the fact.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. You spoke of receiving, from one of your reporters, a statement as to Mr. Oakey Hall; I do not think you gave the name of the reporter.—A. It was the city editor, Mr. H. F. G. Shanks. Here is the memorandum which Mr. Shanks gave to me at the time. This is an ordinary daily report from the city editor, giving different points which it was important for me to know of his work that day. I see that I made a memorandum that it was received about midnight of the 28th of December. He says, "Mr. Oakey Hall intimated to-day that Mr. Fernando Wood was interested in Pacific Mail stock; he did not say how." I give that simply as a sample of the rumors which are current, and which are believed by a great many people. They have been coming to me from all quarters. My disposition has been not to couple any man's name with them, but the committee must be aware that these rumors are in the mouths of many men.

Q. Did I understand you to say that you communicated the fact of such rumor to a member of the committee in New York?—A. I addressed a letter to a member of the committee in consequence of a message which was brought to me by a personal friend of mine to the effect that the committee was talking of summoning me. I addressed a private letter to a member of the committee, saying that I naturally knew very little, of my personal knowledge, but that I had heard such and such rumors, and that I thought that some witnesses might be summoned, and that I was also at the service of the committee if I could be of any use.

Mr. BECK. That letter was written to me, but it did not reach me until I got to Washington. I laid the substance of it before the committee after we met here in January. The only fact referred to in that letter was the conversation of Mr. Irwin relative to Mr. Parsons.

The WITNESS. That was the only fact which seemed to me coming within my personal knowledge; and that did not seem to me a thing on which I ought to give evidence, unless Mr. Irwin was first called.

Q. Do you know anything about that list of names which Mr. Garrison was summoned about?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you ever talked with Mr. Garrison yourself about it?—A. No; I never did. I learned more from your reply than I knew before—to the effect that Mr. Garrison denied it.

Mr. BECK: We have had Mr. Garrison before us, and have had his testimony, and we have summoned him again. He stated, when he was before the committee, that he did not remember a single name of those which Mr. Sypher had called his attention to. Do you know any gentleman who has conversed with Mr. Garrison, and who recollects any of the names; or have you any knowledge that would lead us to get those names from Mr. Garrison or anybody else?

The WITNESS: Not unless Mr. Garrison is willing to tell them.

Mr. BECK. He says he has forgotten them. That is all that it is proper for me to say.

The WITNESS. I have heard of that list, just as I have heard a thousand other things about this investigation, which are freely talked of among business men, and which they say can be proved, if the committee could get hold of the right witness; but when the committee gets hold of him he does not wish to swear to it.

Mr. BECK. It seemed to us that Mr. Garrison was the right witness.

The WITNESS. It seemed so to me, too.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. Do you know anybody to whom Mr. Garrison at any time repeated that list or any part of it?—A. I have not been able to get so close as that. I think perhaps that if I had the power to examine persons and papers, and to study the case up thoroughly, I might do so, but I do not know.

Q. We want you to help us by giving us the names of witnesses who, on being summoned, would give us that information.

The WITNESS. If my help is to be of any avail, would it not be better for me to give some hints to the committee in private?

Mr. KELLEY. You can make them privately and confidentially to the chairman.

The WITNESS. That I would be very glad to do. I would be very glad to give the committee a number of points which I think may be of some service.

Mr. Beck here read to the witness some extracts from Mr. Garrison's testimony, in which Mr. Garrison stated that he could not recollect a single name upon the list, and stated to the witness that if he had any means of obtaining that information the committee wished to have it.

The witness suggested that Mr. Sypher would be a good witness.

Mr. Roberts stated that Mr. Sypher had been summoned and had testified that not a dollar had been mentioned by him to Mr. Garrison, or by Mr. Garrison to him, and that no money proposition of any kind had been made, and he asked the witness whether he could throw any light upon the subject.

The WITNESS. I was aware of that testimony being given, but it seemed to me that a diligent cross-examination of the two witnesses, one after the other, might perhaps reveal something. Yet I cannot say.

Mr. ROBERTS. We examined Mr. Sypher immediately after Mr. Garrison was examined, and that was the result.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. You have taken a very deep interest in this investigation?—A. Such an interest as I take in most public affairs, because it seemed to me that it might lead to something important.

Q. You have given us in this examination all the information you have on the subject?—A. All that would seem to be at all in the nature of evidence, and a good deal which I think would not be admissible in a court of law. My own impression was that it would have been vastly better to give such hints as I have given in private, and I was ready to do that at any time.

Q. Do you not feel it to be your duty to give us any information, without reference to whether it is evidence in any court of law, that would lead us to ascertain the facts?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Have you done so?—A. I have, except as to a number of points, which are quite at the disposal of the committee, but which I think it would be better to give privately.

Q. Have you any suggestion to make, which you can make publicly, that will enable us to prosecute more thoroughly this investigation?—A. They are all of the class of which I have spoken—suggestions that point to the summoning of other witnesses.

Q. Have you ever examined the official record of the debates and votes on this subsidy matter?—A. Yes; I examined it at the time pretty carefully, I think.

Q. Have you not done so recently?—A. Not recently in detail.

Q. Did you not deem it necessary, before you said anything implicating members of Congress, to ascertain what their records in the matter were?—A. That I knew pretty well, I think.

Q. You have referred in two different articles in your paper to members of this committee as being, in your phraseology, "fit subjects of investigation," and intimating that they were not proper persons to sit on this inquiry. Please to name them.—A. I have given the name of one who was mentioned. I think, however, that I have never stated it as my opinion that they were not fit members to sit upon this committee, but simply that that was a reason why they should redouble their vigilance.

Q. Did you examine my record?—A. My understanding was that you were opposed to the subsidy.

Q. When Mr. Shanks made this communication to you of what you understood to be a statement to him from Oakey Hall, were you not fully aware of what my course on the subsidy question had been from beginning to end?—A. I have just stated what I supposed it to have been.

Q. I am speaking now of absolute knowledge from the Congressional Record.—A. I had not looked at the Record for a year or two beforehand, with reference to the subject.

Q. Are you not aware that I made three speeches against it, and fought it in every attitude from beginning to end?—A. Not quite so positively as that, but I understood that to be your position.

Q. Then had you no doubt as to the information received from Mr. Shanks?—A. I think I never have said that I personally accepted it as truthful.

Q. And yet you communicated it in this public manner.—A. I said at the outset that I should prefer to give it in private.

Q. Who is the other member of the committee to whom you refer?—A. Another member of the committee whose name was mentioned in the same current way is Mr. Dawes.

Q. Is it the usual custom in your office, or is it the general practice of leading metropolitan newspapers to assail public men on such information as that on which you appear to have assailed us in this case?

The WITNESS. First, have I assailed you?

Mr. WOOD. Undoubtedly you have.

The WITNESS. Will you let me see the nature of the assault?

Mr. WOOD. You have assailed us in the communication which you have just made.

The WITNESS. I proposed to give that in private, and said that I gave it merely as one of the current rumors which the committee must be aware of.

Mr. WOOD. But in the Tribune you did not refer to it as current rumor, but as a substantial charge against two members of this committee. Now, I want to know what evidence you have on the subject.

The WITNESS. First produce what I have said; my impression is not that I made the charge as of our own knowledge, but simply said that there was a current suspicion concerning two members of the committee, and my recollection is that the articles very plainly showed, what was certainly very clearly our own intention, that the fact of such a rumor should stimulate the committee to extra exertion. You never were included until this morning. Your name was never mentioned or pointed out in any way in the Tribune.

Mr. WOOD. Now, I want to say to you that from the beginning of this investigation, and all through it, there has been one unanimous, determined effort on the part of every member of this committee to get at all the facts, and if you or anybody else can give us the slightest hint that will enable us to investigate this whole matter, this committee will follow it out, even into the halls of Congress. You think we have got to the door and will not enter; but we will enter if you only show us the way.

The WITNESS. I think you have got in on one or two cases.

The CHAIRMAN. State a little more distinctly what you said a moment ago in reference to Mr. Dawes's name.

The WITNESS. I said simply that in the same way, and in the same sort of rumor which connected Mr. Wood with this matter, the name of Mr. Dawes was also mentioned as having been in some way on the list of Commodore Garrison or some other man.

Q. Did you ever hear of any other list except Commodore Garrison's?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you ever hear that Mr. Dawes's name was on Commodore Garrison's list?—A. The rumor was that Mr. Dawes was implicated in some way with the distribution of this money.

Q. Do you not know that Commodore Garrison's list was a list of those names whom this man Sypher thought he could control?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you learn anything about Mr. Sypher's local or other influence that would lead you to suppose that he could have any control over me?—A. It would not seem natural that he should have.

Q. Do you not know that from the very outset I was an avowed supporter of the subsidy?—A. I have so heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Then there was no occasion to put me on anybody's list as one who could be controlled.

The WITNESS. You will do me the justice, Mr. Dawes, to observe that I have no more undertaken to say that there was a particle of truth in that rumor than in the other. I have mentioned these as rumors which are current and which come to us. You will do me the further justice to remember that I wrote in a letter to a member of the committee: "If Dawes does not know, he ought to know, that his name is currently talked about in this connection."

Q. Have you any supposition that that intimation ever reached me?—A. I supposed it would naturally when I sent it to a member of the committee. I sent it to Mr. Beck.

Q. Did you request him to communicate it to me?—A. I put it in the exact language I quoted: "If Dawes does not know he ought to know."

Q. Will you give the committee the ground for the rumor that I was implicated in that matter?—A. The rumor was simply repeated from mouth to mouth.

Q. Did any ground for the rumor ever reach your ear?—A. Nothing that I ever accepted, or that I said to any one led me to believe it.

Q. Then it was a rumor without any reason accompanying it?—A. Exactly; the same kind of rumor, except that I did not follow it, that connected a number of other people with the Pacific Mail subsidy, that have since been proved to have been connected with it.

Q. Have you any evidence or any suspicion that furnished any ground for such a rumor?—A. If you ask me if I have any evidence against you, I say at once no.

Q. Have you any ground for a suspicion?—A. I do not think I should say that I suspect you in the least, but I should say a great many others have done so, evidently.

Q. Have you anything which you can furnish the committee that has been considered a ground for any such rumor?—A. I should say I can give no reason for believing the rumor save its current repetition in well-informed circles.

Q. Give us the circles in which it was current.—A. It is the sort of report which New York newspaper-men, who go down into Wall street, and go among the bankers and business men, bring back.

Q. Was the gossip which you said reached you in reference to me confined to this list of Commodore Garrison's?—A. No; the gossip which I heard and which I hear at different times, and to which I attached so little importance that I retained no particulars of it, hearing it as I hear a thousand other rumors, connected you in some way with the payment of the money by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. And you communicated confidentially to a member of the committee a suspicion in regard to one of his colleagues, and did not communicate it to himself?—A. I had received a message from Mr. Beck concerning the affairs of the committee, and had received no message from you; I certainly did not think that was a matter which I had any warrant to approach you about any more than I had to approach Mr. Wood.

The CHAIRMAN. I never heard my name mentioned in regard to the matter until last Thursday, and then I summoned before the committee the man who was represented to have had something to do with it, and it turned out that he never had the slightest thing to do with it himself. I refer to Mr. Chaffee.

Q. State who communicated that rumor to you.—A. That I cannot say; I have heard it almost as often as I have heard the names of other persons connected with it—very frequently.

Q. And you are unable to give the names of any of the individuals from whom you heard it?—A. Precisely as I would be unable to give the name of a single individual connecting Mr. Wood's name with it, except for the mere accident of my having kept this memorandum from the city editor.

Q. Had you that rumor in your possession when you intimated in your paper that I was an unsuitable man to preside over this investigation?—A. I do not recollect making that intimation.

Q. Had you it in your possession when such an intimation was made in the editorial columns of the Tribune?—A. I do not recollect any such intimation being made in the editorial columns of the Tribune; if made there, I should be responsible for it; but I do not recollect such an intimation.

Q. You have known me for a good many years?—A. A good many.

Q. You never communicated to me the existence of such a rumor.—A. I thought it would have reached you in the manner in which I communicated it to Mr. Beck.

Q. Were you aware that I was in New York part of the time that the committee was there?—A. I was.

Q. Would it have been more difficult for you to communicate the fact to me at that time than to Mr. Beck?—A. Not at all.

Q. Was there any reason why you preferred to communicate it to a third party rather than to me?—A. It was simply that the message, as I understood it, came to me from Mr. Beck; that the committee was talking of summoning me, and would summon me if I had anything to tell.

Q. Was there any newspaper man who brought the rumor to you?—A. Yes; I think it was brought to me by different reporters in the office.

Q. Be kind enough to give the committee the benefit of their names.—A. I do not now recall the name of any one who reported the rumor to me.

Q. Do you mean to say that it came to you through your reporters from Wall street, and that you cannot give us the name of a single reporter that brought it to you?—A. I cannot swear now positively that I recollect any one reporter who brought it to me. A dozen reporters bring in their statements in a day, but I do not charge my memory with them afterward.

Q. Can you give us the name of a dozen reporters, one of whom may have brought you in that rumor?—A. I think I might if I had the list here.

Q. Will you give us the names of the reporters among which will be found the one who brought it to you, and I will ask the committee to summon the whole dozen?—A. I should say that the most natural reporter to bring the rumor to me is W. P. Sullivan.

Q. Is there any other one who would probably have brought it to you?—A. I should think that Mr. Shanks, the city editor, probably repeated the story.

Q. Is there any other one who it is possible brought that rumor to you?—A. I should think that Mr. George E. Mills was as likely as any one to have brought it in, after Mr. Sullivan.

Q. Is there any other one who can be put in the list as having probably communicated the rumor to you?—A. If you give me time I will look over the list of reporters and communicate the names.

Q. What is the name of the money editor of the Tribune?—A. John F. Cleveland.

Q. Could he possibly be of the number?—A. I should think not; I have had very little conversation with Mr. Cleveland concerning Pacific Mail.

Q. How long a time do you want to consider your list of reporters?—
A. I can give you the names to-day, but I should doubt being able to give any more names of reporters who were likely to have brought the rumor to me.

Q. Are you willing to say that that rumor must have reached you from one of these three men?—A. No, I should not undertake to say that, but I think it probable.

Q. Did you stop to inquire of them the grounds on which such a rumor was supported?—A. Not in such a way as to convince myself of it at all.

Q. Did the person communicate to you in what manner the rumor said that the money had reached Mr. Dawes?—A. I think that in a general way there had been talk about some friend of Mr. Dawes having received it.

Q. Who was that?—A. I do not now recall the name. I think he has been since examined and has denied it.

Q. Do you mean Mr. Chaffee?—A. I think that that is the name.

Q. And the rumor connected my name with Mr. Chaffee as having received the money through him?—A. I should not say that it did, positively. Rumors are very vague things.

Q. Was there any other friend through whom I was said to have received the money?—A. No; I heard no other name mentioned.

Q. Was there any reason given to you for the suspicion that Mr. Chaffee had received any money?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. For me or anybody else?—A. Nothing that seemed to me in the nature of evidence at all.

Q. You saw Mr. Chaffee's testimony here three or four days ago; did you intimate in your paper that that relieved any member of Congress from any suspicious rumor in connection with him?—A. I did not. I do not recall the intimation having been made, although it may have been.

Q. You left the matter as it was before; was that exactly square?—
A. I think it was, considering that I had never mentioned your name, and should not now have done so, if it had not been drawn out in this way. There was no allusion to you in the Tribune which anybody could trace; there was no occasion, therefore, for any explanation.

Q. Are you ready to answer this question: whether any rumor ever reached your ears affecting me which you had the slightest ground for believing to be true?—A. I should not say (as I have said before) that I ever heard anything against you which seemed to me in the least partaking of the nature of evidence. The only ground for attaching any importance to it was the persistency with which it kept coming up. It kept coming up for years, I think.

Q. The rumor that I had had anything to do with this matter?—A. I think I was first conscious of the existence of the rumor over a year ago.

Q. You have seen me since then yourself?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you been kind enough to intimate anything of the kind to me?—A. I do not go about telling people of the unkind things I hear about them. I generally dismiss them from my mind when I can.

The CHAIRMAN. I am not speaking of your paper, for everybody knows you would not say any unkind thing in your paper, but I thought you might do it privately.

Mr. BECK. This letter of which Mr. Reid speaks probably needs a little explanation on my part. It was written to me at the suggestion of Mr. David A. Wells, who spoke to Mr. Reid about our summoning him.

The WITNESS. He left that message for me. I did not see him myself.

Mr. BECK. Then it was that Mr. Reid wrote a letter to me which was mislaid by the messenger in some way, and I did not receive it until I got to Washington. That letter was marked "confidential."

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. BECK, [to witness.] Do you think that I ought to have communicated anything in that letter to anybody when it was marked confidential?

The WITNESS. Perhaps I had better answer that by saying that you did mention one part of it, and I left the whole of it to your discretion in that way. I meant by marking it confidential that it was not a thing to be talked about.

Mr. BECK. All that you did say in that letter about Mr. Dawes was this: "Dawes ought to know, and probably does know, that according to gossip, his name is also in that list." I want to say that, not knowing what to do with a confidential communication, and Mr. Reid not making any charge or intimation except as mere gossip, I thought the proper thing was to have Mr. Reid, Mr. Sypher, and Mr. Garrison summoned here, as I have done.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Has it not occurred to you that some degree of secrecy as to what is communicated to us from time to time is necessary in order to connect it with other testimony which we are in pursuit of?—A. Undoubtedly it has occurred to me.

Q. And has it not occurred to you that we may get into the possession of fragmentary information with which we want some connecting link?—A. Certainly; and two or three times to-day I have intimated that these things had better go privately to the committee. I certainly never dreamed that some of the things you have asked me would have been asked publicly.

Q. In examining the private accounts of members with the Sergeant-at-Arms, do you not think that a great deal of caution and reserve should have been exercised until we can first by some evidence connect a member's name with this money?—A. Very possibly. At the same time I doubt whether it would not be well to get at these accounts promptly.

Q. Have you any evidence that we have had all the private accounts examined?—A. Certainly not. I have only said that the public have no knowledge of it.

Q. Suppose that some members of the committee have examined privately these accounts and thought that, perhaps, some other points had better be reached in the case before any public reference was made to them, do you not think that it would be fair all around for us to reserve what information we have until those points shall be reached, if they ever shall be?—A. That is a point as to the propriety of the action of the committee on which I cannot express an opinion without a knowledge of the facts.

Q. Is it not fair to presume that men of some experience in life, as members of Congress and as public men, do act with some discretion on matters of this sort?—A. Unquestionably.

Q. Is not that the charitable way of treating the question?—A. Yes.

Mr. NIBLACK. I regret very much your cross-examination this morning, and that the names of Mr. Dawes and Mr. Wood were brought out in an unpleasant way and unnecessarily; but they have come out, and I do not see that you could have helped it very well; but I think it illustrates the impolicy and often the injustice of the mere random examination of a witness without having some idea as to what information he possesses.

The WITNESS. I think that constant injustice is done to gentlemen of my profession in presuming that they must have personal knowledge about what they write, while, in the very nature of the case, they cannot have it once in a thousand times.

Mr. NIBLACK. I appreciate that very fully, but I think that the idea of putting yourself in another man's place sometimes is about one of the best suggestions of the age. You can realize the effect which an injurious statement against a man's reputation can have when published in a great paper like yours, and how unpleasant it is to have a gentleman's name connected with any such transaction.

The WITNESS. There is no question of that, and I was careful not to connect these names with the transaction.

Mr. NIBLACK. That is the reason why I regret that you, as editor of a paper like the Tribune, should have been called upon to speak this morning, and compelled to testify, as you have been. I think it illustrates the impolicy and injustice of relying on mere rumor that cannot be verified. I also beg of you and all others to bear in mind that there are a great many other witnesses yet to be examined; also that Mr. Irwin, who is in prison for not answering, and who has presumed to know most about this matter, may yet come before the committee and testify. Mr. King is understood to be evading the process of the committee, and so we have to reach everything in the most indirect way possible. After we are through with the examination, we will be entirely willing to be judged as to the wisdom and fairness with which we have conducted it.

Mr. BURCHARD. I wish to ask the witness if he would suggest that we would change the order of examination which we have been pursuing. We have hitherto commenced tracing the money which was paid out through the hands of the company into the hands of Mr. Irwin, and through Mr. Irwin's hands into those of the parties to whom he paid it, and through those parties down to the last man who received any of it. Would you suggest that we change that order, and bring in the 314 members of Congress, or bring in their private accounts, and examine those accounts, and require each of those members to give an account of how he came by his money?

The WITNESS. Without undertaking to make any suggestion to the committee as to the way in which it should conduct this examination and should embody the suggestions in evidence, I should say that, under the circumstances, I do think that the committee would be justified in going pretty promptly to the private accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I ought to say that I did what I could, some time ago, to get at those accounts, as I believed that they would reveal a good deal, but Mr. Ordway very frankly told me that they would not. I have always supposed, however, that he referred to his public accounts as Sergeant-at-Arms, but I could not get him to talk about what I wanted to know—the private accounts which members kept with him. I think that in view of the fact that over a million dollars has been spent here by a man who is reputed to be reasonably careful and capable, and who knew what he was about, with the avowed object of getting legislation from Congress, the accounts of the Sergeant-at-Arms or any other accounts that would show what Congressmen had unusual sums of money about that time, would be an important piece of evidence. That is my opinion.

Mr. BURCHARD. We have been occupied all the time in tracing this money, and you would suggest that we stop our examining Mr. Schumaker, and such men, and commence at the other end and make the whole 314 members of Congress present their private accounts.

The WITNESS. No, I have made no such suggestion as the stoppage of this examination, but I was going on to suggest, in addition, a careful examination of these accounts.

Mr. BURCHARD. We have not had time, as yet, to make that examination; we have been working as fast as we can.

The CHAIRMAN, (to witness.) I wish to state to you that if hereafter any rumor reaches your ears in regard to me, in connection with this subsidy, which you think is worthy of the slightest credence, you will lay it before the committee in such a way as you suppose will promote the public good, without reference to my own private character.

The WITNESS. Mr. Dawes will have the kindness to observe that I did precisely that in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. You did it in the shape of a confidential communication?

The WITNESS. I made it to a member of the committee on business of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. What I ask you is a little broader than that; it is that you lay it before the committee. I do not suppose that Mr. Beck would for a moment suppress anything reflecting upon me, if he supposed that he was at liberty to communicate it to me; but I want you to communicate anything of that kind to the committee, in such a shape as that I cannot escape the action of the committee upon it; and if you have anything now which you believe deserving of the slightest credence, connecting my name with this transaction, you will do me a special favor to lay it before the committee. I do not mean in this remark to reflect on what you have done to-day, because I know that you did not voluntarily mention my name or that of Mr. Wood.

Mr. NIBLACK. My view of the subject is this: that if the chairman and every other member of this committee has not character enough to stand up against a mere rumor of that sort, not supported by any testimony and being nothing but a floating rumor, the chairman and all the rest of us have lived pretty much in vain.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 19, 1875.

CHARLES A. WETMORE sworn and examined.

To the CHAIRMAN:

I reside in San Francisco; I am a correspondent of the Alta California and other California papers; I have been in that business since 1871, I believe.

Q. Were you in Washington during the spring of 1872, when the Pacific Mail subsidy was pending?—A. I was not.

Q. You had no particular knowledge at the time of the manner in which that legislation was procured?—A. None whatever.

Q. If you have any such knowledge now, you have acquired it from somebody else?—A. From circumstances and from the efforts of this committee to investigate the matter.

Q. You have taken an interest in this investigation, have you not?—Yes, sir; unquestionably, as it affects the Pacific coast and is a matter of peculiar interest there.

Q. You have communicated to the California papers very interesting information in reference to the mode in which this committee has pursued its investigation?—A. I shall have to qualify my answer. I do not know whether it was interesting or not.

Q. You stated in your correspondence that many Congressmen were guilty of taking bribes, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you state?—A. I said, if I recollect right, that it was charged that Congressmen would be implicated.

Q. Did you say this: "Your correspondent calls attention to his former dispatches concerning Irwin, and particularly to Irwin's hints that if the transaction is pursued many of his calumniators would suffer, and some of the committee would feel the crash?" State what you meant by that.—A. Simply to call attention to a former dispatch which I have in my pocket.

Q. In which you stated that some of the committee would feel the crash?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you mean by that?—A. Simply in connection with circumstantial evidence.

Q. What is the evidence on which you based the information to the California public that the committee was implicated or would feel the crash?—A. The basis is simply from Irwin's statement.

Q. Give us the statement on which you found it.—A. If I had the privilege of looking over my dispatches, I could tell you. There are other circumstances, but I do not recollect them now.

Q. Irwin made some statement on which you based this?—A. Yes.

Q. To whom did he make it?—A. He made the statement to Mr. Joseph Irwin, my assistant, while I was in New York, but I have since seen Mr. Richard B. Irwin, and he said that my dispatches appeared all right.

Q. Pick out of that volume before you [alluding to files of witness's correspondence which he had in his hands] so much of it as was the basis of the statement that the committee would feel the crash.—A. In my dispatch of the 29th of December I had the first reference to that subject. The substance of it was telegraphed to me from here by Mr. Joseph Irwin, my associate. I was in New York at the time. The checks had then been traced to Mr. King, and I telegraphed to my associate to interview Irwin on the subject and to get from him what he knew about the transaction. The second day after that he interviewed Mr. Irwin.

Q. All that we want is, what was communicated to you as the basis of the information to the public that the committee would feel the crash?—A. The dispatch contains its own statement. It says: "Your corespondent called upon Mr. Irwin this afternoon, and found him in good spirits. He is almost entirely recovered from his recent nervous attack. He said that, from the testimony taken before the investigating committee in New York, it appeared that they were pulling away a lower boulder that was supporting a pile of rock, which would fall and crush under it a number of his calumniators. He also hinted that some of the Committee on Ways and Means might also feel themselves affected."

Q. This you had from your assistant, Joseph Irwin, as coming from Richard B. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir. I understood that I was to be questioned in reference to some of these dispatches, so I cut them out and brought them to Mr. Richard B. Irwin, to see how far he was willing to corroborate them, and I have his statement last night that they were all right.

Q. Is that statement in writing?—A. No, sir; I called upon him and got his statement.

Q. Did you read over this dispatch to him: "Inside parties have joined the politicians in attempting to put a stop to the investigation?"—A. He read it himself.

Q. Did he say anything about that?—A. He did not specify anything particularly about it. He read the dispatches there aloud before a company there assembled. I asked him if any modification should be made with reference to anything traceable to him or anybody else, and to give me the benefit of his information on the subject.

Q. Who were present last night when your dispatches were publicly read there?—A. I do not know the names of the gentlemen to whom I was introduced.

Q. Do you recollect any of them?—A. Yes; Mr. Senter and another gentleman were there part of the time. I think Mrs. Marden was there, and at some stage of the reading Mr. Marden was there.

Q. What is the meaning of this sentence in one of your dispatches: "Leading members of the committee, particularly Dawes and Beck, and others who at first were very severe in denouncing Irwin, have become singularly silent or slow in their pursuit of news."—A. I got that from the observation of circumstances which were very apparent to almost everybody.

Q. Tell us what they were.—A. In the first place I inquired carefully as to what the committee had been doing, and found, for instance, that evidence had been brought before the committee in New York by which a check of Richard B. Irwin's was traced to A. H. Whiting, and then I heard that the committee had subpoenaed or intended to subpoena Mr. B. C. Whiting, a brother-in-law of Senator Cole's, and I could not find that the committee was attempting to find Mr. A. H. Whiting.

Q. And so because you did not find out what the committee was doing, you charged the committee with not doing anything.—A. No; I charged that they appeared to be singularly silent or slow in the pursuit of news.

Q. What particular evidence had you that two of them were singularly silent or slow more than the rest?—A. Mr. Dawes was chairman of the committee and seemed to take a leading part in all its action.

Q. It is what I did not do that I am inquiring of. What was it that I omitted?—A. This statement related back to previous statements in other dispatches.

Q. You will observe that this dispatch of yours is dated during the holidays.—A. Yes; it is dated the night before the re-assembling of Congress.

Q. Do you not know that the information about A. H. Whiting was obtained by the committee in New York, during the holidays?—A. Yes.

Q. Had you any means of knowing whether the committee had done one thing or the other in New York while you were here?—A. No other means than what the committee gave to the public.

Q. And the committee had not given forth to the public that it had sent a subpoena for Mr. A. H. Whiting, and therefore you charged two of the committee with being singularly silent or slow.—A. That is one instance.

Q. What is the other?—A. Of course the committee will understand that I am taken somewhat at a disadvantage in being questioned in regard to dispatches sent so long ago, without an opportunity of my refreshing my memory as to the circumstances which led me to make certain remarks.

Q. Do you know anything which these two gentlemen either did or omitted to do justifying that statement of yours?—A. No, sir; I only know from judging of the circumstances that came before me.

Q. Do you know of any one thing which they did or omitted to do, and which is the foundation of this charge, that they had become singularly silent and slow?—A. If I recollect right, I had a statement prior to that dispatch that Mr. Beck had lost his interest in the affair, or that he would not pursue it with the same interest he had done before. And while I was in New York, I heard a variety of opinions expressed by a great many people as to the effect of the discovery of money having gone to Mr. Schumaker, and that that would produce an effect on Mr. Beck's course in the committee.

Q. When did you hear that?—A. I heard it in New York, and I heard it since.

Q. When?—A. I heard it subsequent to the discovery of these checks having been traced to Mr. Schumaker.

Q. You heard it since the time of your reading Mr. Schumaker's testimony, and the time of your sending this dispatch?—A. Yes.

Q. How much time did you spend in New York?—A. I stayed in New York about a week while the committee was there.

Q. Did you go to the committee-room?—A. No, sir.

Q. You took your information as to what the committee was doing from outsiders, and did not go yourself; did you not know that the committee-room was open to the public?—A. Yes; I was not well while I was in New York.

Q. You did not go out?—A. Yes; I did go out when I was obliged to go.

Q. Can you tell us one person who communicated this fact to you?—A. I do not recollect. That is, I would not trust my recollection as to any of those specific statements.

Q. You are unable to give us the name of a single person who communicated it to you, are you?—A. I cannot recollect as to that statement, because I am satisfied that a good deal of it was made up from my own observation of things as they passed along.

Q. Do you know a single thing which Mr. Dawes or Mr. Beck did omit to do in the discharge of their duty?—A. I have no positive knowledge any further than what was furnished by the circumstantial evidence which I observed myself.

Q. Did anybody tell you of any particular thing which either of those gentlemen had done or omitted to do?—A. I cannot answer that question categorically.

Q. Do you know from any source whatever of anything which either of those gentlemen did or omitted to do which justified that remark of yours?—A. I am not a judge in this case.

The CHAIRMAN. We consider you a witness.

A. I do not mean to be disrespectful at all to the committee, but I cannot say positively that I know a thing. Very often a thing is very clear to a man's mind when he cannot give any authority for it. I was obliged to make up my dispatches from a variety of statements and incidents.

Q. Can you tell us one of that variety of statements and incidents which led you to charge two members of this committee with having either done or omitted to do something which was their duty in this investigation?—A. I have referred to the incident of Mr. A. H. Whiting.

Q. What did they do or omit to do in reference to Mr. Whiting?—A. As I said before, I have not any proved information on the subject to refer to as a fact that a thing was so.

Q. Is it true or is it not true that you have not now the slightest foundation for that statement?—A. No, sir; I do not think that that is so.

Q. Then state to us what the foundation is.—A. I was informed that the committee had not subpoenaed Mr. Whiting.

Q. Who told you that?—A. I cannot recollect; I cannot trace any specific statement to a particular person.

Q. Did you make inquiry of any of the committee as to whether Mr. Whiting was summoned or not?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Or of any officer attending on the committee?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. And you made the charge without having made this inquiry?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know who was the chairman of the committee which conducted the examination in New York?—A. I believe that you were chairman.

Q. Having charge of that examination?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you make any inquiries to ascertain that fact?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you knowledge enough about what the committee was doing in New York to know whether that was so or not?—A. Only from the reports that I saw in the papers.

Q. Did you see any report in the papers intimating that I was chairman of that subcommittee?—A. I have not stated that here. I have not charged that in any sense.

Q. Do you not know that Mr. Burchard had the conduct of that examination in New York, as chairman of the subcommittee?—A. I think I was informed of that fact.

Q. What made you state then that you supposed I had?—A. Simply from your activity in the case in the beginning.

Q. If my activity in the case attracted your attention, why did you state that I had become singularly silent?—A. So I supposed and so I believed after that time.

Q. Which was it, that I was singularly silent or singularly active?—A. I referred to your previous action in the matter.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. In your dispatch of January 4th is this statement: "Leading members of the committee, particularly Dawes and Beck and others, who were at first very severe in denouncing Irwin and in calling for an investigation, have become singularly silent or slow in the pursuit of news." Tell us what reason you had for making this statement, that I was very severe in denouncing Irwin and in calling for an investigation. If you know of any denunciation of Irwin by me, please to state it.—A. The phraseology there may not be absolutely correct as to your denouncing Irwin, but it refers to your efforts in bringing Irwin to the bar of the House, &c.

Q. If you have heard of any denunciation or words used by me looking like denunciation, I want you to state them.—A. I think that if I were to go back to the record I could do so. I think I would find in your speeches or remarks things tending very severely against Mr. Irwin in this matter.

Q. In what regard?—A. The action of the committee toward Mr. Irwin may have partially actuated that dispatch.

Mr. BECK. I want my own action now, nothing more.

The WITNESS. Perhaps your vote may have indicated to me the idea, and if the committee will give me the opportunity to go back and find where I got my impressions, I will be able to inform the committee.

Q. Can you tell any word that I ever used in denouncing Mr. Irwin?—A. I do not know that I can.

Q. Have you any reason to believe that I used any words in particular denunciation of him?—A. I think I will qualify that, so far as denouncing Mr. Irwin, personally.

Mr. BECK. I want to say to you here, that there is not a word of truth in it, and if you think you can find out any proof of it, find it.

The WITNESS. I think I am wrong there. If I could get my original dispatches they might modify the dispatches as printed, because errors are very often made on the wires and in making up the dispatches.

Q. You also say that Dawes, Beck, and others were active in calling for an investigation. Do you recollect anything that Mr. Dawes or myself did toward calling for an investigation; do you not know the fact to be that this matter was sent to the Committee on Ways and Means without the consent of the committee, and that we tried to have it sent to some other committee?—A. That is a part of the same answer that I made before, that if the committee would give me an opportunity to go back to the record, I could show that my dispatches in that respect were justified. I may have taken my ideas from the debates which I have listened to or read in the House.

Q. Do you recollect any call by Mr. Dawes or myself for this investigation? Do you think that the record will show any such thing?—A. I think so—that there was a demand made for the testimony of Mr. Irwin.

Q. I suppose, therefore, that all you mean in this is, that when the matter did come before us, we pursued it earnestly. That is what you meant?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And only that?—A. That is all.

Q. This dispatch is dated on the 4th of January, before Congress met after the holidays, and you say that we have become singularly silent or slow in the pursuit of news. Do you not know that I was in New York during all that investigation there?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know of any question which I omitted to ask a witness that ought to be asked, or did you hear anybody say that I failed to ask a single witness a question which would elicit the truth?—A. I heard statements made that the committee had refused to call for or had neglected to call for evidence which was brought to their attention. For instance, books of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for 1872. I was also informed that Mr. Irwin was not permitted to go into certain evidence, and that a page of his evidence was torn out by Mr. Dawes.

Q. Bearing on what subject?—A. Bearing on the relations of Mr. Irwin to stock-operations.

Q. You have answered to this committee that it was told you that after Mr. Schumaker was implicated, it was believed that I would become suspiciously slow; do you know any fact that indicates that there is any truth in that intimation, or that shows that I have in any shape or form done anything which indicated a letting-up on Mr. Schumaker, or a failure to investigate all the facts?—A. I was so informed several times while I was in New York.

Q. What I want to get at is whether I have either failed to ask a question that should be asked, or to endeavor to get every fact out of Mr. Schumaker. Do you know anything on that subject?—A. I simply know that Mr. Schumaker has not yet testified before the committee what he has done with the money, and that no efforts are being made to expel him or to put him in jail like Mr. Irwin.

Q. Do you know the fact that Mr. Schumaker has not yet been discharged as a witness, and that he has answered every question asked him by the committee?—A. It does not appear so from any public statement.

Q. Does anything to the contrary appear? Has the committee failed to ask him any question that ought to be asked him?—A. I do not know.

Q. And do you not know the fact that Mr. Schumaker is still a witness before this committee?—A. I do not know that.

Q. This dispatch of yours bears date January 4th, before the committee re-assembled in Washington to examine Mr. Schumaker.—A. Yes, I was told in New York on various occasions that Mr. Schumaker was in town and was walking on Wall street.

Q. What significance has that?—A. My inference from that was simply that the committee had not found out where he was.

Q. Do you not know the fact to be that the subcommittee was sent specially to New York to examine the books of bankers and brokers, which could not be brought here without great expense and inconvenience, and that Mr. Schumaker and Mr. King, and every other witness who could be brought here was to be brought here before the full committee, and that summonses were sent for them all, and that special deputies were sent for all, including Whiting? Why did you not ask the Sergeant-at-Arms, if you wanted to ascertain the truth, instead of blackening members of the committee by indirection?—A. If the committee will allow me to go back on my dispatches published previously, I think they would throw some light on this question, because they are continuous in character.

Mr. BECK. If I have done anything wrong I want the charge to be made; and if the witness knows anything that I have done or omitted to do, I want you to tell it out now before the world.

The WITNESS. I simply know it as I have observed the results of the committee's work.

Q. And did you not think that the result of the committee's work in New York was to make as thorough an investigation as could be made under the circumstances and within the time? Have you read the testimony there?—A. Yes.

Q. Has it occurred to you that it was as full as it could be made within the limited time?—A. In one of my previous dispatches, I stated, as I was informed by Mr. Irwin, that the attorneys of the railroad companies were not going to be idle, and that they intended that certain information should come forth, and that the committee had so far refused to summon witnesses that had been called for. He told me at the time that the committee had refused to admit his evidence on the subject of his connection with stock operations, and that Mr. Dawes had torn from the testimony offered by him a page on that subject, and had left him without any statement to go before the public. And he said that if the committee thought that that was to go on, it would be mistaken, because his counsel or his attorneys would not be idle, and the committee would be compelled to have certain witnesses brought before them.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. What reason, if any, was given to you as to why I would not examine Mr. Schumaker?—A. Because he was a democrat.

Q. Was that the only reason?—A. Yes.

Q. I did not know but that somebody might have told you that I had had part of the money?—A. No.

Q. You speak in your dispatch of "strange rumors being afloat regarding Mr. Beck and the Pacific Mail subsidy." What are they?—A. I expect that part of that statement arose from very strange rumors which I had heard, that you would not pursue the matter now that Schumaker was involved in it.

Q. That I would "weaken on" a democrat?—A. Yes; the rumors, I think, came to me that Mr. Fant had sent somebody to you; and there was some reference made to checks having been traced, or something of that kind.

Q. Checks traced where?—A. To you.

Q. Who told you that?—A. I do not know that there was more than one check.

Q. Who told it to you?—A. The statement came to me from a party whom I do not recollect.

Mr. BECK. I want the man's name.

The WITNESS. I think it can be verified through Mr. Fant.

Mr. BECK. Give me the man's name.

The WITNESS. It was not stated to me as a fact, and I did not publish it as a fact, and I do not state it now as a fact.

Mr. BECK. I want the author of the rumor. Give the name of the man who told you.

The WITNESS. I appeal to the committee. I have not charged anything here.

The CHAIRMAN. No matter about that. Answer the question.

Mr. BECK. If you have not charged anything directly, you have done it by indirection. It is a flat lie, which you should be glad to clear yourself of by telling its author.

The WITNESS. I have not stated it.

Mr. BECK. Tell us who told you what you did hear.

The WITNESS. The information came to me from a friend of mine.

The CHAIRMAN. You know your friends. Give the name.

The WITNESS. It is impossible for me, without seeing him first, as it was in the nature of confidence.

Mr. BECK. There can be no confidence in such a matter.

Mr. NIBLACK. I insist upon the question being answered speedily.

The CHAIRMAN, [to witness.] Will you answer, or do you decline to answer?

The WITNESS. I shall have to decline to answer until I see the party.

Mr. BECK. I put the question to you again. I have already put it in a form which I thought would certainly require an answer from any one calling himself a gentleman, when I said that it was a baseless, malicious lie. Now, I again put the question to you. Tell us the name.

The WITNESS. If the committee will give me until to-morrow, I will ask the party for permission to state his name.

Mr. BECK. The committee will not give you, with my consent, one moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Let us understand. Do you decline to answer the question?

The WITNESS. I must decline until I can see the party.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. State to the committee whether Mr. Irwin stated to you that he had taken from his testimony a single word of what he testified to before the committee.—A. I do not know whether the evidence that he alludes to was sworn to or not. I was told that it was not admitted into the testimony; that it was written out by him and offered as testimony, but was refused, and that he was not allowed to swear to it.

Q. Did he not state to you that it was a statement which he had written out of the committee-room, and appended to his testimony without the knowledge of the committee?—A. He did not.

Q. Did he tell you that it was anything which he had testified to before the committee?—A. No; I believe he told me, as I have stated before, that after being requested by the committee to make any further statement in writing which he could swear to, he had prepared this, and that it was excluded.

Q. Did he tell you that he was requested to write out anything which was not before the committee and append it to his testimony?—A. That is my recollection exactly. I will not say that it was that he was told so by the committee; it may have been that he was told so by you.

Mr. Clark Bell, attorney for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, presented and read to the committee the following resolutions of the board of directors of that company :

“Extracts from the minutes of a special meeting of the board of directors of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, held at the company's office on Saturday, the 9th day of January, 1875.

“Whereas it now appears that large sums of money were fraudulently abstracted from the treasury of this company during the years 1871, 1872, and the first five months of 1873, by Alden B. Stockwell, then president of this company, and claimed to have been expended by one Richard B. Irwin, then one of the agents of this company at San Francisco, and other parties, without the knowledge, authority, or approval of the board of directors, or the stockholders of this company, which abstractions were covered and concealed from the knowledge of the board of directors by false and irregular entries upon the books of this company; and

“Whereas it is now falsely claimed and pretended that a large amount of the money, so irregularly drawn from this company, was unlawfully used and expended in Washington for the corrupt purpose of influencing legislation by the Congress of the United States, during the years 1871 and 1872, in favor of this company; and

“Whereas this company is advised and informed that certain persons who have been, or may be, called as witnesses to testify before the House Committee on Ways and Means, upon the pending congressional investigation, have, or may, refuse to answer certain questions, on the ground that they were acting in the relation of attorney or attorneys for this company, without the consent of this company to so answer; and

“Whereas this company has never authorized the expenditure of one dollar in money, either to corrupt any member of Congress, Senator, or officer of the Government, or to improperly influence legislation in its behalf by Congress, and has never employed any attorney or counsel, or person for such purpose, or any improper purpose in connection with securing favorable legislation by Congress: Now, therefore,

“Resolved, That any attorney, counselor, or person claiming to have acted as such for this company, in relation to the legislation of 1872, claimed to be in favor of this company, and now under investigation by Congress, is hereby fully released from any professional obligation not to testify, and he is hereby authorized and requested to testify fully before such committee—this company waiving all its rights in that behalf as between attorney or counsel and client.

“Resolved, That Rufus Hatch, managing director and executive officer of this board, or Clark Bell, esq., its attorney and counsel, is hereby authorized and directed to present a copy of these resolutions to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, or to any person so refusing to answer as a witness before such committee.

“I, Thomas T. Gamble, secretary of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, certify that the foregoing preamble and resolutions are a true copy from the minutes of a meeting of the board of directors of said company held at the company's office on the 9th day of January, 1875.

“In witness whereof I hereunto subscribe my signature and affix the corporate seal of the company, this 11th day of January, A. D. 1875.

The chairman submitted the following telegram:

NEW YORK, January 18, 1875.

To N. G. ORDWAY, Sergeant-at-Arms:

Some one has been hoaxing the committee. I know nothing directly or indirectly about any subject, celestial, terrestrial, or devilish, within inquiry of the committee. My incessant professional engagements forbid my coming.

A. OAKLEY HALL.

Mr. Niblack also submitted the following telegram:

TERRE HAUTE, January 18, 1875.

Hon. WILLIAM E. NIBLACK or Hon. J. B. BECK,

Washington, District of Columbia:

Specials from Washington to the Saint Louis Democrat, Cincinnati Gazette, and Chicago Inter-Ocean seek to implicate me in the Pacific Mail subsidy on Dillon's testimony. No greater outrage was ever perpetrated. Took leave of absence May 21 for the balance of the session, knowing nothing about the bill. I had no thousand-dollar bill at that time, nor the tenth of it, and I made no deposit of any amount with any one. If necessary for my vindication, summon me at once. I court and defy investigation. I never heard tell of the lobby in the interest of the subsidy. My innocence is absolute, and must be made to appear.

Answer.

D. W. VOORHEES.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, January 20, 1875.

SCHUYLER R. INGHAM sworn and examined. (Before a subcommittee consisting of Messrs. Roberts and Niblack.)

Mr. ROBERTS. State your residence and occupation.—Answer. For nearly a year past I have resided in Chicago. I am not engaged in any active business at present.

Mr. ROBERTS. You were subpœnaed in consequence of your name being mentioned on the list of persons to whom Mr. Charles Abert paid money belonging to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?

The WITNESS. Permit me to correct you. I was not subpœnaed, I came here voluntarily. I understood that my name was mentioned in the paper, and therefore I came on.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then I understand that you desire to make a statement in regard to your name appearing on Mr. Abert's list?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. You are the person whose name appears on that list as Mr. Ingham simply, to whom $5,000 was paid by Mr. Charles Abert?—A. I am. That is, I suppose, he is the person who paid me. I did not recall the name.

Q. You did receive the $5,000 from Mr. Abert?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you receive any other money of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much?—A. Five thousand dollars.

Q. In addition to the first $5,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom did you receive it?—A. From Mr. Irwin.

Mr. ROBERTS. If you prefer to make a statement in your own words you may do so.

The WITNESS. During the winter of 1871-'72 I was interested, with other gentlemen, in a bill before Congress for the irrigation of a tract of land in Bear River Valley, Utah. While here looking after that bill before Congress, the bill for the Pacific Mail subsidy was introduced in the House, and somebody, I cannot tell exactly who, told me that Mr. Irwin wanted to see me. Whether I was told so, or whether he wrote me a note, I am unable to recall at this moment; but at all events I went to Mr. Irwin's house, near the Arlington, and sent up my card. Mr. Irwin came down and called me into an adjoining room, and said that he understood that I was interested in a bill before Congress, and that he had reason to believe that I could be of some service in assisting the subsidy bill. I replied to him that I did not know that I could be; that I did not suppose I would be able to do much for myself, and that I did not know that I would be of much use to him. He gave me some little details of the matter, and finally I said to him, that if they would take hold and assist me to get my bill through, I would do all that I could for them in a proper, reasonable way. He remarked that they could better afford to pay $10,000 than to do anything of that kind, because they did not want to load themselves down with other matters, but wanted to give exclusive attention to their own bill. I told him that the matter of $10,000 would be really of no service to me; that if he could get my bill through it would be a much greater consideration to me, and that I thought that I could be of service to them, and they to me, and that I would like to reciprocate the favor. He repeated that it would be much easier for them to make a money consideration. I then told him that I should not be in Washington all the time; that I should only be back and forth here; that I had been a broker in New York, and was sometimes operating in the street, and that I had some other business interests to attend to in New York, but that I would be back and forth during the winter, and then asked him something about the value of the stock and the merits of the company, &c. He said that he had been on the Pacific coast all the while and did not know much about the intrinsic value of the stock, or about the New York operations in the street. I told him that when I came through I found that the house with which I usually did business in Wall street, kept by an old partner of mine, was largely short of the stock, and I called his attention to the fact as an incident which ought to be looked after, remarking that if people got short of Pacific Mail stock they would be interested in trying to defeat his bill. We talked further about the bill and about its merits, and I finally told him that I would think the matter over and let him know. I went away and within a day or two I returned to his rooms, and told him that I had thought the matter all over and that I saw no good reason why I could not undertake to aid him; that I was occupying no position which would prevent my doing so and that I would undertake to do what I could for him. He said, "Very well," and he went on and gave me further facts and figures about the China trade, and all the advantage which the passage of the bill would be, and he said that if the bill passed he would do what was right about it. It was left in that shape. I went away and did take hold, and did what I could among my friends to favor the idea of the passage of the bill; I did so both here and in New York, and advised my friends in New York that they had better avoid being short of the stock. I was not here at the time that the bill passed finally; I was in New York, but I came on here within a few days after its passage, and went up to Mr. Irwin's rooms again to call upon him. He was not there, and was reported as being in New York; but a gentleman, whom I suppose now to be Mr. Abert, said to me that Mr. Irwin had instructed him to pay me $5,000. I said, "Very well." He counted out the money in large notes and paid it to me, and within two or three days I went to New York and deposited that $5,000 to my credit with S. B. White, No. 8 Wall street, where I was keeping my bank account. Soon after that, not very many days, I went West to Utah, where I had a herd of cattle, and where I was interested in a couple of herds, and also in some mining interests. Soon after getting there, in July I think, I went to San Francisco to see to the sale of some beef-cattle which I had, and there I called upon Mr. Irwin, in accordance with an invitation he had given me. Mr. Irwin, in the course of the conversation, asked me whether his secretary or his confidential man had ever paid me $5,000, and said that he had expected to see me again before leaving the East. I told him that he had. "Now," said he, "about the balance; did you want to use money here?" I said that I might want to use a little of it; he said if not that he would give me a check for the amount on New York. I said, "Very well." He gave me his check on New York for $4,000, and gave me $1,000 there, either in currency or by a check on the Bank of California. I think that the check for $4,000 was on the American Exchange Bank of New York. That $4,000 check I sent to the First National Bank, at Salt Lake City, Utah. I remained in San Francisco a few days longer, and when I was leaving I had a certificate of deposit for eight or nine hundred dollars from the Bank of California, and deposited that also in the First National Bank at Salt Lake City. I then gave a check to Mr. Hussey, the president of the bank, for $3,000, which he had advanced me in my cattle-operations there, and for some five or six hundred dollars interest, which I had collected for him in New York. The balance of the money I checked out in the way of expenses, &c. A part of the $5,000 which I had deposited in White's in New York was lost in the depreciation of some stock which I had on hand, and the balance of it was checked out from time to time. If a dollar of the money found its way into the pocket of a member of Congress, or of a Senator or Government officer, I do not know it. Those are essentially the facts of the case.

Q. At what time was your interview with Mr. Irwin here in Washington?—A. I cannot state exactly, but I think it was after the subsidy bill was reported to the House; that is my impression.

Q. Have you stated the whole arrangement which you made with Mr. Irwin?—A. Yes, sir, everything; I have stated the facts as they occurred.

Q. What special service do you think you rendered for the $10,000?—

A. That is a very difficult question to answer; I have asked myself that same question many a time. Of course, on all occasions wherever I met friends, and where the subject came up in conversation, I spoke of the bill as favorably as I could. If, in conversation, I found a man favorable to the bill, of course that was all that there was about it, but when I found a person unfavorable to it I brought to bear upon him such arguments as were often heard on the floor of the House at that time in favor of the measure. That is about all that I did; I simply talked on general principles, just as I did in regard to my own business.

Q. Was there any member of Congress whom you were expected to influence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any suggestion made as to the names or number of members whom you were expected to influence?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any expectation, when this arrangement was made, that any particular advantage accruing from this money should go directly or indirectly to any member of Congress?—A. None whatever, so far as I know.

Q. Not by loan or advance of money in any way?—A. No, sir; there was not a member of Congress who knew that I was employed in the matter, to my knowledge.

Q. You spoke of having been dealing in stocks in New York; were you interested with any member of Congress in this Pacific Mail stock?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any understanding that any member of Congress should have any share in possible profits in the transaction?—A. None whatever.

Q. You were interested in the Pacific Mail stock in New York?—A. Yes; I operated in a few shares, but I was a little shy of it.

Q. In any such operations was any member of Congress, or any officer of either House interested, directly or indirectly?—A. No, sir; it was simply on my own account entirely.

• Mr. ROBERTS. The committee is anxious to get at why such a sum as $10,000 (which seems to have been a common sum paid) should be paid to any particular individual, and what the nature of the service expected was; can you give us any light on that subject?—A. I can only say just what I have said. Mr. Irwin knew that I had friends and acquaintances here, and he expected me, of course, to try and influence my friends in favor of his bill. I cannot think of anything else that I was expected to do.

Q. Were any friends suggested in any way whom you were to try to influence?—A. No, sir.

Q. The expectation, then, was that you would influence your friends in favor of the measure?—A. I cannot account for it in any other way, and I suppose that must have been the idea; he wanted that I should do for him what I could, and I promised to do so, both here and in New York.

Q. This suggestion of influencing friends included friends in both Houses of Congress?—A. I suppose so; but do not understand me as saying that he suggested anything of that kind. This is but my own idea of what he wanted; I said to myself, "He expects me, of course, to try and influence my friends and acquaintances in favor of his bill here." That was all that I could imply from his conversation in any shape or form.

Q. Was there anything said by which either you or he understood at the time who those friends in either House were?—A. No, sir; there were no names mentioned or talked about.

Q. Can you tell us whether, in fact, you did influence your friends?—

A. As I said before, that is a very difficult question to answer. For instance: meeting a gentleman casually, and the subject coming up, and he expressing himself as already in favor of the bill, nothing more need be said to him on the subject; but if he were opposed to the bill, and if I felt at liberty to talk to him in favor of the bill, I did so. Whether that member of Congress subsequently voted in favor of the bill in consequence of what I said to him would be a very difficult matter for me to say. I could not tell whether I had the slightest influence or not unless the man promised to vote for the bill in consequence of what I said to him, and nobody ever did make me such a promise.

Q. Can you name any person whom you think you did influence?—

A. No, sir; I do not think I can.

Q. Did you, during the time of the pendency of the bill, make any report to Mr. Irwin?—A. No, sir; I do not think I met Mr. Irwin but once after my first interview, and that was at the Capitol, either in the lobby or in the rotunda; I met him for a moment.

Q. Did you give to Mr. Irwin or send to him the names of any persons whom you expected to influence?—A. I did not.

Q. Or whose vote you thought might be counted on for the bill?—A. I did not.

Q. You made no tally-list encouraging hopes of votes?—A. No, sir; I made no list or anything of the sort.

Q. You did speak to members of Congress in favor of the bill. Did you lead any of them to understand that you were a paid attorney for the purpose?—A. No, sir; I do not think that any member knew anything of it.

Q. At the time when the money was received you gave Mr. Irwin no reason to believe that any member of Congress was to receive any part of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. And as a matter of fact no person at that time did receive any part of that money?—A. None whatever.

Q. Since then have you made any division of that money, or given any valuable consideration to any member of Congress for his action on the bill?—A. In no shape whatever.

Q. Neither by loan, transfer of stock, or otherwise?—A. Neither by loan, by implication, or by any means that can be named.

Q. We have pressed in other cases the detail of the use of the money received. Can you go any more into details as to the use of the money than you have done?—A. Not without being able to get my accounts to show how I checked the money out. It went into my business just as a salary might if I drew it from month to month and used it.

Q. You stated that the money which you deposited in New York was, in a large part, lost in stock operations. Can you state about how much was lost in that way?—A. I cannot tell exactly. I simply know that I lost on some stocks at that time; Western Union Telegraph stock, Rock Island stock, and, I think, some Pacific Mail stock.

Q. Can you say about how much you lost; $1,000?—A. It must have been more than that; perhaps in the neighborhood of $2,000 or $3,000.

Q. Can you tell us any more in detail as to the rest of the money?—A. I simply checked it out for expenses as I happened to get it from time to time. I usually kept my bank accounts, but this account was with an old partner of mine, S. B. White, No. 8 Wall street, and I did not keep any account of it.

Q. Can you give us any more in detail the use of the money which you deposited in the First National Bank of Salt Lake City?—A. I gave a check to Mr. Hussey, the president of that bank, for $3,500 or $3,600. The balance of the money was checked out in small sums. I have a memorandum-book which may give some light about the Salt Lake matters, (referring to a memorandum-book of cattle transactions, &c., in Utah.) On July 29th, 1872, I deposited in the First National Bank of Salt Lake City, $4,000, by a check on the American Exchange National Bank of New York; and on August 2d I deposited a certificate of deposit for $900 from the Bank of California, which was the balance of the $1,000 which I received from Mr. Irwin, in San Francisco, and which I had not used. On the same day, August 2d, I gave a check to Warren Hussey for $3,679.41. Three thousand dollars or thereabouts of the money was for a loan to me in my cattle-operations out there, and the balance was some interest which I had collected for him in New York on a call loan, and the interest due on my own loan from him. The balance of the account seems to have been drawn out in little checks. I find, for instance, checks to myself for $100, $50, $100, $72, and so on. These were for personal expenses, and to pay my hands out there.

Q. Name the largest check other than those which relates to that money.—A. One hundred and seventy-three dollars and sixty cents for freight on a car-load of lumber sent to my ranch.

Q. All this money was checked out by you in your general business, and that was the largest check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was that account balanced?—A. On December 5, 1873. I drew a check for $95.30, and that balanced the account, according to my figures.

Q. Is there anything in that memorandum-book referring to your transactions in New York City?—A. No, sir; it is merely a memorandum-book of affairs out West.

Q. And you have given us all the information that you have about the details out there?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Where did you reside during the winter of 1871-'72?—A. In 1869 I was obliged to close up business in New York on account of ill-health. While I regarded New York as my home, or rather as my headquarters, yet for three or four years I was there but little. I was traveling in California and out in the mountains trying to seek such a climate as was best suited to my health, not having my home at any particular point. My children were at school and my wife was with me.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Did you have such a residence during 1871-'72 as to be a voter at any place?—A. I do not think I did.

Q. Was there any friend of yours in either House whose action on any committee, or in the House, you influenced or sought to influence in favor of that subsidy?—A. No, sir; there was no one whom I could use or influence in the slightest. While I talked with all my friends and acquaintances in reference to the bill, I cannot say that I had the slightest influence on any single vote.

Q. My question was whether you sought to influence any vote?—A. Only in the way of talking in favor of the bill in a general way, whenever it was proper and when I could do so.

Q. Did you let any friends of yours in either House understand that it would be for your advantage in any way that the subsidy should pass?—A. No, sir; in no shape or form.

Q. Was your fee to be contingent on the passage of the subsidy?—A. Entirely so, as I supposed, from the fact that Mr. Irwin said that if the bill passed he would do what was right about it.

Q. Did you let any friend of yours in either House understand that fact?—A. I did not.

Q. Will you state to us the entire time covered by the services which you rendered?—A. I cannot recall the day when I had this first interview with Mr. Irwin, but my impressions are that it was soon after the bill was reported to the House. I have tried to recall it, but I have no memorandum or anything by which to refresh my memory.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. In brief, you disclaim having attempted to exercise any influence on anybody except simply by argument?—A. I did not attempt to influence any member of Congress or Senator, or Government officer, in any other manner than by argument, giving reasons that were frequently stated on the floor of the House.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Although you made no arrangement with Mr. Irwin to have him and his friends support your bill, at the time of your interview, did they in fact support your bill in consideration of your services to them?—A. No, sir; Mr. Irwin told me that he could not undertake to do it.

Q. But now I ask you whether, subsequently, he did in fact do it?—A. Not to my knowledge; I have no idea that he did.

Q. Did you render, for the money which you received, any services to Mr. Irwin or the Pacific Mail Steamship Company other than you have stated?—A. No, sir.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1875.

CHARLES H. HARNEY sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. State your name, residence, and business.—Answer. My name is Charles H. Harney; residence, New York City; business, banker and broker.

Q. How long have you been engaged in business in New York?—A. About twelve years.

Q. From what State did you go?—A. From Lexington, Kentucky.

Q. State how long you have known me?—A. I have known you since I was a boy of about nineteen, and I am now forty-one years of age.

Q. State what you know about the Pacific Mail subsidy, the introduction of Mr. Wiley to me, and any other matter connected therewith.—

A. The first I knew of the matter was when Mr. Wiley solicited from me a letter to you, suggesting that he wished such a letter as would be of service to him in recommending him to you, with a view to obtain your support upon the question of the subsidy which was about to come before Congress. I asked him why he wanted a letter, and he went on to say that Mr. Stockwell had agreed that if he could obtain your support he would give him an interest in some puts and calls on the Pacific Mail stock. I said, "George, I see nothing wrong in that; I will write you a letter to Mr. Beck." I did so.

Q. State the general character of that letter. Did you intimate to me anything about any calls or puts?—A. Not at all. I merely wrote, saying that I introduced Mr. George Wiley, a friend and customer of our house; that he visited Washington City interested in the Pacific Mail subsidy, and that if you could conscientiously support the bill I would like you to do so. It was a general letter.

Q. How early was that?—A. I hardly remember the winter. I think it was 1872-'73. It was very early in the beginning, and before scarcely any publicity had been attached to the Pacific Mail affairs.

Q. Do you remember whether it was as early as February, or about February?—A. I could not say that it was; but my impression is that it was about that time.

Q. After that time, did you see any proceedings in the matter, hear anything about it, or did you ever talk to Mr. Wiley about what I had done?—A. None whatever, except that after a while Mr. Wiley came back. First, however, he wrote me from Washington, asking if I could not write another letter to Mr. Beck and make it stronger. I wrote him that I could not; that I considered, after the letter I had written, any more in that direction would appear as an insult. I declined to do so.

Q. After that did he make a report to you?—A. He returned. The thing progressed; there was a good deal of excitement in Wall street attending the passage of the bill. I noticed that you made speeches against it, and when George came back I thought he was a little cut down that his influence had not been sufficient with you to get you to support the measure. I said nothing at all to him about it.

Q. About the last of December I wrote you a note, calling attention to a telegram which, I am sorry to say, I have searched for in vain. It was a telegram which purported to have come from Mr. Wiley to me. Do you remember my letter to you on that subject?—A. I do not remember the exact date, but I know it was written some month or so ago. That letter which I received from you stated that you had gotten a dispatch, signed G. W. Wiley, somewhat to this effect: "Don't go too far." You said in your letter also: "I hate mysteries; can you explain? I don't know what it means, unless it alludes to the Pacific Mail affair." I think it was about that time that the committee was organized and was meeting. That letter I immediately handed to Mr. Wiley, expressed my astonishment at it, and asked him if he could explain.

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Did he submit that reply to you before he sent it?—A. I think he did. He submitted a reply to me. When I submitted that letter to him I said, "I suppose you can explain?" He said, "Certainly I can; I didn't send such a dispatch." He can tell you more about that matter than I can.

Q. Do you remember that I said to you in that letter that I did not know Mr. Wiley's address, and therefore wrote you upon the subject, as you had introduced him to me?—A. Yes, sir; you said that you had received some communication through him from me; that you had seen him in my office, or something of that kind.

Q. In the Republican of yesterday morning this editorial appears:

"It is observable in the testimony of H. G. Fant before the Committee on Ways and Means that he testifies he employed one G. W. Wiley to see Congressman James Beck, of Kentucky, as to his course on the Pacific Mail subsidy. It is true that Mr. Beck claims to have spoken and voted against the subsidy. In a republican House of two-thirds majority, might not that have been the very thing wanted of Mr. Beck to insure the passage of the bill? Why have not the committee called Mr. G. W. Wiley? Why was Mr. Wiley, a New Yorker, engaged with the house of Harney & Searl, brokers, 67 Exchange Place, New York, sent to Mr. Beck? May it not appear that a distinguished democratic Senator from Missouri received, say, $30,000 through calls on the Pacific Mail through Stockwell, paid through Harney & Searl? May not an examination of Harney & Searl's books, Stockwell and his books, show to whom that was paid and how it was divided? Let this branch of the subject be investigated by the present Congress."

Do you know, or have you reason to believe, or have you information that would tend to induce you to believe—putting it in the broadest possible sense—that any one ever applied to me, offering me money, or giving me money, or suggesting that I could get money or other thing of value, or stocks could be carried for me, or anything else in any shape or form?—A. You can make it just as broad as you like. I would not suppose that any man would dare to do it. Of course I do not.

Q. Did you ever hear of any information that anybody had on that subject, or did you ever know of anybody suggesting anything about it?—A. I never heard of anything of this kind until the newspaper article appeared.

Q. So far as you know, I believe you have been the only man with whom I have done business in New York since you have been there?—

A. I have always supposed so. You were a friend of ours, and whenever you came to New York and had anything in our line of business to do, or whenever you had anything to communicate through the mails, you always did it with us, I judge.

Q. Did you ever hear of my doing business anywhere else in that city?—A. I never did.

Q. Your books are referred to in that article. Was there ever anything on your books, either in the shape of money, stocks, calls on stocks—state it in any form you please—in which I was connected, either directly or indirectly?—A. Never, sir.

Q. Did I ever deal in any stocks to your knowledge?—A. Never.

Q. Did you ever hear of my doing so?—A. This whole matter is so absurd that I hardly deem it worth denying. I will, however, answer your questions as you go along. You never had any transactions in stocks, either directly or indirectly, with Harney & Searl or myself, or anybody else, that I ever heard of. I can say that with all frankness and truthfulness.

Q. You are the only correspondent, so far as you know, whom I have in New York?—A. That is so, as far as I know.

Q. In reference to the last portion of that article in the Republican, I wish to make my question to you as to the carrying of stocks or interest in stocks, or anything that your books show, very broad. Was there anything carried on your books in the name of any human being in which I had any interest, either directly or indirectly?—A. No, sir; none at all.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. I think it would be as well for the witness, now that he is here, to answer as to other members of Congress. Did you ever carry any stock, or in any way render any service for any member of Congress for his vote or influence upon the question of the Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you in any way have any relation with Mr. Irwin in this transaction?—A. Never; I do not know the gentleman; have never seen him.

Q. Did you have any knowledge, or did you have any information which led you to believe that any member of either House was interested at the time in the stock operations of this company?—A. No, sir; I never did.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Were you here at the time of the passage of the subsidy?—A. No, sir; I was in New York.

Q. Had you anything to do, directly or indirectly, with the passage of the bill?—A. Nothing whatever.

GEORGE W. WILEY sworn and examined.

By Mr. BECK:

Question. State your name, residence, and business.—Answer. My name is George W. Wiley; residence, Astoria, Long Island. I am a broker, in connection with the house of Oppenheim & Brothers, of New York.

Q. You have heard the testimony of Mr. Harney, and his statement of your connection with him, have you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State, in your own way, all the connection you ever had with me relative to this Pacific Mail subsidy—how you came to see me, and all that took place. I desire to have the broadest statement of the facts.—

A. I went to Mr. Harney, and asked him if he would give me a letter of introduction to you; not an ordinary letter, but one that would recommend me to you as a gentleman of truth beyond question; that I had an important matter connected with my own interest to carry through, and if I could get a letter of that kind to Mr. Beck, I could then make further arrangements for myself. Mr. Harney then said, "Well, what is it? I want to know." I said that it was the Pacific Mail matter. I said, "I can get some puts and calls on Pacific Mail if I can carry Mr. Beck's vote." "Well," he said, "I think I will. I am in favor of the subsidy and interested in the stock myself." He gave me a letter to Mr. Beck. I came on and saw Mr. Beck with that letter, and found that he was opposed to the bill. He said that he was opposed to subsidies; that his (the democratic) party were opposed to subsidies in every particular. He said, "I don't think I can vote for this. I am sorry, on Harney's account. I would do anything for Mr. Harney, and probably would strain a point if it was right; but I cannot vote for the bill." I got Mr. Stockwell afterward introduced to Mr. Beck, may be by some other gentleman. I am not certain about that.

Q. Was not that introduction made by Mr. Potter, of New York?—

A. I think it was some gentleman whom I did not know at the time, and who knew Mr. Stockwell. Mr. Stockwell talked to Mr. Beck and to this other gentleman, whoever he was, at the same time upon the subject of the Pacific Mail subsidy. When Mr. Stockwell came out I asked him what he thought about it. He said, "Well, I don't know; Mr. Beck seems to be opposed to the bill, but I think it is more than likely that he can be brought around; he is mistaken about the great commercial importance of this bill." I saw Mr. Beck once or twice, and probably two or three times afterward. Each time he gave me no assurance that he would vote for or make a speech in favor of the bill; whereupon I wrote a letter to Mr. Harney, saying, "Mr. Beck is decidedly opposed to the bill; won't you write him another letter, and a stronger one, to carry his interest?" Mr. Harney replied to me to the effect that he had stated all he could conscientiously say on the subject, and that anything further would be a reflection on him and on Mr. Beck, or probably an insult to Mr. Beck. I cannot remember the words of the letter, but it was about that character of language.

Q. Do you remember bringing Mr. Irwin to see me?—A. When I received that last letter from Mr. Harney, I then cast around for other men of station by which I might reach Mr. Beck. I, in the mean time, had made the acquaintance of Mr. Irwin, who understood Pacific Mail thoroughly. I said to him, "If you will go with me and see Mr. Beck, I will secure an interview, as I think it is possible that you may be able to combat every objection that he has." He said, "I will do it gladly, and want just such an opportunity." In the course of a week or ten days, or probably not so long, Mr. Beck agreed to give me this interview with Mr. Irwin. I accordingly took Mr. Irwin to Mr. Beck, and they argued the point about an hour, or probably an hour and a half, and I supposed that Mr. Irwin was meeting every objection that Mr. Beck brought up. Mr. Beck would bring one objection and Mr. Irwin would argue it, and Mr. Beck would bring another, and so on, until the interview terminated.

Q. Was that in relation to the commercial advantages or disadvantages?—A. It was in relation to the commercial advantages and everything connected with Pacific Mail. Mr. Irwin had the matter so thoroughly settled in his own mind, and could argue it so well, that I supposed after that interview Mr. Beck's views would be changed; but they were not.

Q. Do you remember of my speaking and voting against the bill?—A. I do.

Q. Did you in any manner, directly or indirectly, at any time, ever suggest to me that there was money being used or paid in any form?—

A. In no manner, shape, or form.

Q. Was any money, stocks, or calls on stocks, or anything else, either paid to me, or for me, or carried for me, or had I any connection with it so far as you knew or were advised?—A. I can say just this: that I did all I could to keep from you the fact that I had an interest in this matter.

Q. And you did?—A. And I did most positively. That is, if you did know it you knew it otherwise than through me.

Q. You never advised me anything about it?—A. I did not want you to know it for the reason that it might reflect somewhat upon Mr. Harney, as it was through Mr. Harney that I got the letter of introduction to you.

Q. And I did not know it as far as you know?—A. You did not.

Q. Did I in any shape or form, to your knowledge, or from any means which you gathered, have any hint that there was money being used, receive any money, have any stocks carried for me, or have anything to do with stocks, or trade in them in any form?—A. In no way.

Q. So that you now state to this committee in substance that while you came with a letter from Mr. Harney to me, saw me, and used every legitimate argument, you not only did not tell me your own connection with it, but no suggestion was made to me in relation to it from other than public reasons, to combat my views?—A. No other in the world. When I had the conversation with you on the subject of Pacific Mail, I felt my own want of knowledge of that matter so much that I at once sought for other means, and that means was Mr. Irwin. I knew him and his acquaintance with it, and knew that he was thoroughly posted upon the subject and could argue it thoroughly with any one.

Q. You never carried any stock in it in which I was interested either directly or indirectly?—A. No, sir; not a dollar.

Q. About the 21st of December last I received what purported to be a dispatch signed by you, saying to me in substance, "Don't go too far; parties excited." I wrote the substance of that dispatch to Mr. Harney in a letter which has been shown to you, saying that I did not know your address, and did not know what it referred to, unless to Pacific Mail, for that was the only thing you had spoken to me about. Do you know the substance of that letter?—A. I think I do. I remember the substance of it only, and cannot give the exact words. The substance was that you had received a dispatch of that kind signed by Mr. Wiley, of New York, and that the dispatch had stated, "Don't go with the adverse party." You said, "Now what this means I don't know, and I hate mysteries. See Wiley and find out what it means."

Q. [Handing letter to witness.] Did you send me that letter in reply? If so, read it.—A. I did. It is as follows:

"NEW YORK, December 23, 1874.

"MY DEAR SIR: Mr. Harney has just handed me your letter to him of the 21st instant, in which you ask him for an explanation of a 'mysterious telegram' received by you and signed 'Mr. Wiley.'

"Mr. Harney has no explanation to give, for the reason that I sent no such telegram, and am myself as much in the dark as yourself.

"Nor have I any key to the mystery, other than the fact that pending the passage of the Pacific Mail subsidy I introduced you to Mr. Irwin, and subsequently brought him to your house for the purpose of endeavoring to combat your objections to the bill. Now, it may be possible some one, mistaking the intimacy supposed to exist between you and myself, and having an interest in the matter, has done me this wrong and you this annoyance. I can see no other solution. Should you, however, be again annoyed and be able to trace the guilty party, I would be under favor to you to at once advise me.

"I very much regret this annoyance to you, for the reason I came to you indorsed by Mr. Harney as worthy of your friendly greeting. You so received and treated me, and for which you have my kindest remembrance. It would be a shabby return for Mr. Harney's friendship and your courtesy to presume upon that acquaintance to send you any telegram, much less one clouded by mystery.

"Permit me to add, in conclusion, that I have no interest in Pacific Mail in any manner, shape, or form.

"I am, very truly, your obedient servant,

"GEO. W. WILEY.

"Hon. JAMES B. BECK,

"House of Representatives, Washington City."

Q. Mr. Fant made some statements here the other day about sending you to me. Do you remember anything about that?—A. Perfectly. I saw the statement in the paper, and wrote to Mr. Fant on the subject. Mr. Fant did not send me to you, nor had he any interest in my coming to you in any manner, shape, or form, other than the interest I had with Mr. Fant in New York. Mr. Fant made a mistake; he recognizes that mistake, and is sorry for it.

Q. Have you had correspondence with him since?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What I want to get at is any communication you had with Mr. Fant, and whether there was any suggestion made that I was to be approached with money or money's worth in any form?—A. Most assuredly not. I have a communication in my pocket now from Mr. Fant, in which he states that so far as Mr. Beck was concerned, he did not know him; that he knows nothing in any way, shape, or form that would reflect upon him in the transaction. When I saw in the paper the statement of Mr. Fant that he had sent Mr. Wiley to see Mr. Beck, I at once wrote him saying that he had done me a wrong, and connected my name in this matter in an unwarrantable manner, and I wanted to know why he did it, and asked him if there was anything behind this. Mr. Fant wrote me a letter of apology for doing as he had done. It was satisfactory. I have seen Mr. Fant this morning. He is sick in bed.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. You sent no dispatch of any kind, mentioning the Pacific Mail subsidy, last December to Mr. Beck?—A. No, sir; nothing of the kind.

Q. Neither mysterious nor open?—A. Neither mysterious nor otherwise.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. I believe I have not seen you before for a year or so, have I?—A. I have seen you but once since the passage of the bill, and that was in Mr. Harney's office, until I met you here this morning.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. I think there was one point upon which Mr. Beck asked you, and the question being rather long, you answered a part and may have answered the other part, although I do not remember it. That was, that in no way, shape, or form, did you carry or get anybody to carry any stock or make any stock contracts in which Mr. Beck had any interest, or of which he had any knowledge?—A. You cannot make that too broad; there was nothing in any manner, shape, or form.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Neither in my own name or in that of anybody else?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. You have made your answers with reference to Mr. Beck very broad. I desire to know now whether you had any communication with any other members of Congress with reference to this subsidy.—A. I had not.

Q. Did you for any other member of Congress, directly or indirectly, carry any stock, or propose to carry any stock?—A. I did not either directly or indirectly carry or propose to carry for any member of Congress any stock or money, nor had I any connection with such a matter in any way. I saw no member of Congress except Mr. Beck.

Q. Did you have any relations with Mr. Irwin in the distribution of the funds which he held?—A. No, sir; none at all. I saw Mr. Irwin while I was here three or four times, and each time was to report to him the state of Mr. Beck's feelings as to how he would vote, and to get him to agree upon the time he would meet Mr. Beck, if I could get Mr. Beck to meet him.

Q. Did you make any report to Mr. Irwin as to any other member of Congress?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the name of any other member of Congress mentioned by you to Mr. Irwin in connection with this subsidy?—A. No, sir; not that I remember.

Q. Did you know at the time of the employment of Mr. Irwin of any attempt to influence the vote of any member of either House?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. You have answered in reference to members of Congress. Will you now state whether you know of any contract by which stock was to be given to or carried for the benefit of any officer or employé of the last Congress?—A. I do not.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Q. I have asked you as to whether you made any report to Irwin as to any member of Congress. I will ask now further whether Irwin gave you any information as to any member of either House who could be influenced in any way by either money, stock, or any valuable consideration, to vote or refrain from voting?—A. No, sir; my acquaintance with Mr. Irwin was predicated upon a mere introduction by Mr. Stockwell for an express purpose, and that was that I could influence the vote of Mr. Beck in the way I have stated.

Q. I would like a direct answer to the question. You imply it; but I prefer a direct answer whether or not Mr. Irwin suggested to you any member of either House who could be influenced by any valuable consideration?—A. No, sir; he did not.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. Do you know of the payment of money or of the giving of any consideration to any member of Congress or any officer or employé of the House?—A. I do not.

By Mr. NIBLACK :

Q. Do you not think that Mr. Fant claimed the credit of having sent you to Mr. Beck as a sort of desperate effort to show that he had rendered some specific service for the money he received? What other explanation can you give for this unwarranted use of your name in that connection by him?—A. I hardly know. When I first read the testimony, we canvassed among ourselves in the office as to why Mr. Fant had said this; one suggested one reason and one another. I could see no good reason why he would do it, unless it was that the connection of his name with Mr. Beck's or mine might in some manner give him some character with the committee.

Q. If you remember reading the testimony, you will recollect the committee pressed him to know the specific service he had rendered; to whom he had talked; upon whom he had tried to exercise influence in consequence of this amount of money which he had received. In other words, they asked him for an illustration of the service he had performed. He thereupon gave this as an illustration, saying he had sent you to Mr. Beck. I am disposed, after what you have said, to regard that as a mere desperate effort upon his part to try and show that he had done something. Can you explain it in any other way?—A. I think that is about the best explanation that can be given of the matter.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 20, 1875.

CORNELIUS K. GARRISON sworn and examined.

To Mr. BECK :

I have been once before examined before this committee, and have read my testimony.

Question. You were also summoned to appear before the subcommittee in New York, were you not?—Answer. I volunteered to appear there. I was summoned to appear here, and wrote that I could give no different testimony from what I had heretofore given, begging to be excused. I presented myself to the subcommittee.

Q. And upon the very positive assurance by you that you knew nothing more than you had stated in your prior testimony, I believe the committee for that time excused you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were quite positive and emphatic that you had told all then that you knew?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Continuous rumors have reached the committee in all sorts of forms that you had been saying in the city of New York and elsewhere that you did know some of the names that were upon that list, and you have thus been summoned here on account of those rumors. I want now an emphatic statement as to that matter.—A. In the first place, if I had sworn that I did not know it, common sense should teach the committee that I would not perjure myself. In the next place, I wish to state here, distinctly and emphatically, that any rumors to that effect are as false as hell, if it is necessary to use that expression. I will say, going further, that, were I confident I could expose any one of these men, I would do it unhesitatingly; but I had only been here for a few days when this thing transpired, and I could not this morning, if I was put upon my oath, give the names of twenty members of Congress who were in Congress at that time.

Q. Then you again tell us that you cannot give the names of any of those persons to whom Mr. Sypher called your attention?—A. I not only state that, but I state, further, that any one who has stated that I said at any time, before or since I gave my evidence here, that I would give the names of any one of the parties, has stated an unqualified falsehood. I do not know now, and if I did know I should give the names unhesitatingly.

Q. I am not sure that you were pressed particularly upon this point. Can you give us any information of any member of Congress who received money or anything of value, or had stocks carried for him, because of his vote on this Pacific Mail subsidy?—A. I cannot. I perhaps have my own theory about this thing, as you all have; but of my own knowledge I know nothing, and I am not disposed to give my opinion where it is going to affect gentlemen, perhaps very unjustly.

Q. I asked for any information you had or facts that you knew?—A. I have none, that I would call positive information, to fix upon any member of Congress, or any person connected with Congress, the receiving of money, the carrying of stocks, or a consideration of any nature or kind.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you sufficient knowledge about that list to be able to say to the committee whether it was confined to any particular section of the country?—A. It was.

Q. What section?—A. The South.

Q. You did not understand that it included anybody but some gentlemen in the South?—A. I can state, I think, positively that it was a list of southern members.

Q. Have you sufficient recollection of it to say whether my name was mentioned in it or not?—A. I can go further, and say, that, so far as my memory serves me, there was not on it the name of a gentleman whom I recognize on this committee.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. You state that you had no positive information on that subject?—A. What I meant by that was this: There were rumors of all sorts, natures, and kinds; I might have, perhaps, come to some conclusion myself, but I had no evidence that I would be willing to state concerning or reflecting upon any gentleman in Washington connected with this matter.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Nothing that amounts to a fact?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Do you know any fact that bears upon that question that connects any person with this matter?—A. I do not. As I said before, I have the best reason, if I did know, to expose it.

Q. You are able to say that this list was a list of southern members?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you, by locality or connection with any committee, indicate any person whose name was upon that list?—A. No, sir; for the reason that I was here but a very few days, and I don't recollect a single individual. I cannot place a single individual, either by name or by saying to what committees he belonged. I was a novice in the course of congressional proceedings, and I have not tried to inform myself very much upon that subject since.

Q. You say these were members from the South. Can you go further with your process of exclusion, and say from what States they were?—A. No, sir; I cannot. My evidence given two years ago was when my memory was fresh, and I gave then all I had.

Q. That particular question was not asked you, was it?—A. I cannot remember.

Q. In addition to the rumors which have been referred to, this rumor has come to us: that you have stated in Washington and New York that you were threatened with personal violence, or even to the extent of assassination, if you gave the names upon that list. How is that?—A. A statement of this kind came to me from a gentleman in Boston, that Mr. Sypher had said that if I reiterated the statement, or if he caught me in Washington, he would blow the top of my head off. I placed no confidence in such an assertion, because I do not think that those who know me would believe that the threat of an assassin, even if it were true, would keep me from Washington, or anywhere else I chose to go. Mr. Nathaniel McKay, of Boston, was the gentleman who informed me that Mr. Sypher had used that language. I cannot believe it, however.

Q. Was this before you gave your testimony before the committee?—A. No, sir; since, I believe. However that may be, I am not a frequent visitor of Washington, but that has not kept me away.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. And the top of your head is still on?—A. Yes, sir; and I expect it will remain there some little time.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. In your first examination you said that when Mr. McKay introduced you, "he said there were a number of these members voting together, and I had understood from outside talk that money was being used in regard to the other matter." From whom did you understand that money was being used in regard to the matter?—A. From everybody to whom I spoke on the subject in Washington.

Q. Will you not tell us the names of some of those parties?—A. It was public rumor. The general statement to me about the hotel—and Mr. Irwin told me so himself—was that the Pacific Mail Company were using a very large sum of money. He advised me not to attempt to get my bill through; that it was costing the Pacific Mail Company a very large sum of money, and every time Mr. Stockwell came down here it cost them an additional $100,000.

Q. Can you give us the name of any person whom we can summon here as a witness?—A. I cannot; I have given you all the information I have.

By Mr. SHELDON:

Q. This conversation with Mr. Sypher had reference to the Brazilian line, had it not?—A. Yes, sir; not the Pacific Mail; it had nothing to do with that.

Q. I understood you to say in your previous testimony that you did not wish it inferred that he intimated that he wanted money?—A. He did not.

Q. Did you not understand this, that he expected, if that bill was supported, that there would be support given to one or two lines from New Orleans?—A. I think he stated that he had a bill up for New Orleans.

Q. It has been suggested to me twice by friends that because Mr. Sypher was a colleague of mine my name was put upon that list. What do you know about that?—A. On the contrary, I had met you before, and had had an introduction through a mutual friend, and asked you to support the bill; and you told me you would, and I believe you voted for it.

Q. Would not the record show that?—A. I believe it would.

Q. So that if my name had been on any list it would have attracted your attention?—A. Yes, sir. I was requested to call to see you by a party that had some of my stock in the Brazillian line. I did so; called and saw you, and you told me that you would vote for my bill if you consistently could.

Mr. WOOD. I desire the following telegram, from A. Oakey Hall to me, made a part of the record:

“NEW YORK, January 19, 1875.

“I never said to any one that any member of your committee was implicated. I never heard any one say so. The subject is a perfect surprise to me. I am threatened with pneumonia. For me to travel is hazardous. I am only about because of the urgency of professional business. If, after Shanks is examined, you deem it necessary to have me, then I will come. Please excuse me until then, as I think after his examination you cannot possibly want me.

“A. OAKEY HALL.”

GEORGE E. MILES sworn and examined.

To the CHAIRMAN:

I reside in Brooklyn and am engaged on the New York Tribune, of New York City, as law and stenographic reporter.

Question. Have you at any time communicated to the principal editor, Whitelaw Reid, any rumors of any kind whatever in respect to myself in connection with the Pacific Mail?—Answer. No, sir; of no kind whatever.

Q. I will put the same question in regard to Mr. Wood?—A. There was nothing of the kind.

Q. And as to the other members of the committee?—A. There was nothing.

Q. Have you communicated to any member of the Tribune corps any such rumor?—A. No, sir; not to my recollection.

Q. Have you ever heard any such rumor yourself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you heard any such rumor about any member of Congress?—A. No, sir; except what I have seen in the newspapers.

Q. Have you any other knowledge in reference to it than what has been seen in the public prints?—A. No, sir.

Adjourned to January 21, at 10.30.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1875.

J. HALE SYPHER, Representative from the State of Louisiana, sworn and examined.

The WITNESS. I requested to have my testimony taken this morning by the committee for the purpose of clearing up a single point of difference between Mr. Garrison and myself. It is in relation to a list supposed to have been furnished to Mr. Garrison at the time that he and I had an interview. There was no such list furnished. No member's name was mentioned. What was done, as nearly as I recollect, was this: Our meeting was accidental; as I was on my way to the room of the Pacific Railroad Committee, he stepped into the committee-room with me, and spoke of his Brazilian steamship bill which was then before the House. I inquired of him what strength he supposed his bill had in the House; he spoke confidently of its passage. I asked him where he expected to get his vote from; he spoke of a large vote from the East, and he supposed that New York would help him. Then he inquired of me what chance our bill had, the bill to subsidize a line between New Orleans and the ports of Mexico. I told him that the Louisiana delegation was a unit for it, and that I expected that the members from the States in the Mississippi Valley would vote for it pretty generally. I had a pencil in my hand at the time and was sitting at the end of the table in the committee-room just as I am sitting at this table, and I made some figures. I put down the delegation from Louisiana, which at that time numbered five, and some other figures of delegations from other States—gentlemen whom I had spoken to and whom I was expecting to vote for the New Orleans bill. Out of that grew this supposed list. But that I showed Mr. Garrison or any other person the name of a single member of Congress that would vote for any measure is utterly and absolutely false. That is my statement.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Then neither by yourself nor by any other member, to your knowledge, was there a list of names given of members who were said to be under your control, or who were likely to vote with you for one measure or the other?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was simply figures indicating the number of votes which you thought you could rely upon.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. About what number was that?—A. I think they footed up from twenty to thirty.

Q. And verbally you did not give the names to Mr. Garrison.—A. No, sir.

Q. Neither verbally nor in writing?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you indicate to him in any way that there was a question of compensation, or that money would be required, or anything more than mutual assistance?—A. No, sir; there was no reference made to money whatever, as appears indeed from Mr. Garrison's statement, which I desire to read and to put in my own statement: He says: "So far as Mr. Sypher is concerned, I do not want the inference to be made from my evidence that he came to me after money. He never asked me for a dollar, and never intimated that he wanted a dollar for himself or anybody else."

Q. And you affirm the truth of that statement?—A. I do.

Q. Owing to some rumors about threats which were alleged to have come from you, about blowing off the top of Mr. Garrison's head, you may desire to make a statement upon it, as to whether there is any truth in it.—A. I never believe in rumors, but I will relate the circumstance as it occurred, to show you how easily a great story will grow out of a joke. Mr. McKay and I are personal friends; he has been here for the last four or five years, and I have seen him very frequently. After Mr. Garrison had testified, Mr. McKay joked me very frequently about his testimony, and one morning he remarked to me that Mr. Garrison was coming down here again to testify. I think I then said to Mr. McKay jokingly, "If Mr. Garrison comes down here and swears to any lie about me, I will blow his old head off." I said that in a joking way; and Mr. McKay, the next time that he saw Mr. Garrison, repeated it to him jokingly; and out of that has come the whole story.

Q. You have made no attempt yet to blow Mr. Garrison's head off.—

A. I think not; Mr. Garrison and I are friendly, so far as I know. I have no reason to have any other than friendly relations with him.

Q. State whether you have any knowledge whatever of the use of money by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, or its agents, with any members or officers of the House, in procuring this subsidy.—A. I have no such information. I stated that very fully in my testimony, when I was formerly before this committee.

WASHINGTON, January 21, 1875.

RICHARD B. IRWIN recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. We left off at this interrogatory: "Will you give to the committee the names of the persons whom you employed to assist you here in Washington in procuring the Pacific Mail Steamship subsidy?"

The WITNESS. I will; but I must ask the committee to make my examination this morning as brief as possible, as I have had a fever all night and have been suffering from nausea all the morning. I would like to answer the next two or three questions, giving you the names and amounts paid, and then be released from further attendance this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will excuse you the moment you desire to leave.

The WITNESS. I understand that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company has passed resolutions releasing all their officers and agents from any relation of confidence to the company.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. I would like to say, if the committee will allow me, that there appears to be a general impression already circulated by people who do not know me, that I am going to answer now because I have been so long in jail that I could not stand it any longer. I only wish to say, without the slightest disrespect to the committee or to the House, that I went to jail because I considered it my duty to do so, and that I came out because I did not consider it my duty to stay there any longer; and that if the circumstances should arise again, I should be obliged to do the same thing again, with the same respect to the House and with the same respect for myself, simply because I should consider it my duty, and that consideration would support me under any infliction.

The CHAIRMAN. Will you now give the names of the persons employed by you to assist you in getting this subsidy.—A. The names are Charles Abert, O. J. Averill, James G. Berret, E. H. Carmick, Amos B. Corwine, L. E. Chittenden, B. H. Cheaver, Hamilton G. Fant, John W. Forney, Samuel A. Hatch, S. R. Ingham, William Moran, Alexander W. Randall, John H. Rice, William B. Shaw, Charles H. Sherrill, John G. Schumaker, A. H. Whiting. That is all. There may be some others whom I have forgotten.

Q. Were there any other persons employed here for that purpose, to your knowledge?

The WITNESS. By me?

The CHAIRMAN. By any one.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you give the names of those persons employed otherwise than by you?—A. The names of the only two persons that I recollect at this moment, and whom I understood to be so employed, are William S. King and Richard C. Parsons.

Q. Were they employed by you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know by whom?—A. My impression is they were employed by Alden B. Stockwell.

Q. With the addition of those two names, do you know of any other persons who were employed here for that purpose?—A. I cannot think of any at this moment; as I said just now, there may be some others whom I have forgotten, but I do not think there can be many, or that they are of any magnitude. I will state to the committee that I have here given the names of those who were employed directly to aid me in getting the subsidy. There was another gentleman with me at the time who was in my personal service, as I had a great deal of business in my charge belonging to the company other than that connected with the subsidy, and I have not given his name simply because I do not like to drag him into this matter, as he had nothing to do with it. He is not in this country at present, and had nothing to do with the subsidy business, except in generally consulting with me in reference to all of my business.

Q. Was he paid out of this money?—A. He was paid by me out of the general funds in my hands.

Q. Out of the $750,000?—A. Out of some of the money given to me. I cannot identify it in different piles. If the committee desire his name, I can give it at any time.

Q. Now give us the amounts placed in the hands of each of those gentlemen for the purpose of aiding you in procuring the subsidy.—A. I will have to state first that all these transactions, being nearly three years old, have very largely gone out of my mind. I have picked up the amounts paid to each, partly from the examination of my various bank-accounts, partly from the testimony elicited by the committee itself in New York and Washington, and partly from my general recollection, refreshed by various circumstances. There may be inaccuracies in what I state, but I am trying to be as nearly accurate as possible.

I paid to Charles Abert $7,000; O. J. Averill, $10,000; James G. Berret, $10,000; E. H. Carmick, I do not recollect the amount, but I think it was either $2,500 or $5,000; Amos B. Corwine, $3,600; L. E. Chittenden, $5,000; B. H. Cheever, $5,000; Hamilton G. Fant, $12,000; John W. Forney, $25,000; Samuel A. Hatch, I do not recollect the amount, but I think it was about $20,000; I gave him one check for $4,000, and another for $16,000, I think on the 25th or 29th of May; S. R. Ingham, $10,000; William Moran, I forgot the amount; Alexander W. Randall, $10,000. Mr. Randall had received $4,500 in cash before he received the final payment of $5,500. He was regularly employed, and his compensation, although it was largely paid after the subsidy was passed, was not contingent on the passage of the subsidy. He had been in my employment in that way for nearly three years. John H. Rice, $2,500. Mr. Rice appears to have received one of the King checks, but I do not understand that that was a part of this thing at all. I understood that there were some private transactions between

Mr. Rice and Mr. King relating to some other matters. I paid Mr. Rice afterwards, and he then reported to me that he had not been paid anything at all, and I was satisfied that he had not. William B. Shaw, $15,000; John G. Schumaker, $300,000; A. H. Whiting, $100,000.

Q. Did you pay Mr. Parsons and Mr. King?—A. I paid Mr. King $125,000. I paid Mr. Parsons $1,500 on account of Mr. Stockwell, and he, as I understood, reported that to Mr. Stockwell, and it was charged against him. He was Mr. Stockwell's attorney. I had entirely forgotten the payment to Mr. Parsons until he told me of it himself, and I had stated to several persons that he never had got any money from me at all.

Q. How much of the payments made through Mr. Abert are included in this list?—A. I think I have included all of them in it.

Q. Have you included Mr. Boyd and Mr. Hersey?—A. Mr. Boyd and Mr. Hersey were not employed by me. They were at work for us at different times, but without any employment whatever, and the payment to them was regarded by us as gratuitous. I wish to say here that in making answer to the House and to the committee I had entirely overlooked Mr. Boyd and Mr. Hersey. I do not know that it would have made any difference if I had not overlooked them, except that, perhaps, I would not have made the remark about the jurisdiction of the House quite so strong. But I had entirely overlooked them, as the payments to them were comparatively small, and as I had not seen them or seen their names for a long time. And then, again, I would not have regarded them as officers of the House, but still I would not have made that equivocation if I had recollected their names.

Q. Is there any person to whom Mr. Abert paid money on your account who is not included here?—A. I think not; if there is, it is because I have overlooked it.

Q. You say that you paid Mr. King $125,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell how?—A. I paid him at various times $10,000 in Washington.

Q. How many times?—A. I cannot tell how many times; my impression is something like this, that I gave him once $5,000 and twice $2,500 each, which, with the $115,000 paid to him in New York, made in all $125,000.

Q. You say that you paid Mr. Schumaker $300,000; can you tell how you paid him that?—A. I paid him $275,000 in New York, and $25,000 I sent to him after I got back to San Francisco. The way that arises is this: At the time that these payments were made, I was quite ill, and was therefore obliged to leave Washington. I had a dreadful headache. According to my recollection, I drew a check for $275,000, and had it ready for Mr. Schumaker. He said that it should be $300,000; I thought over the matter and recollected that that was correct, and I said to him that if he did not want to use the money in a hurry, I would send it to him in California, as I was on the point of going there then. I would like to stop here now, if the committee thinks that I am justified in doing so, for I am suffering very much indeed.

The CHAIRMAN. I was about going into an examination which might take some time, and perhaps we had better stop here.

Mr. BECK. In the mean time, there is one item to which I wish the witness's attention directed. His bank-account sent to us from California shows that out of this $750,000, $100,000 which was delivered to himself was deposited in the Bank of California.

The WITNESS. I will explain that now substantially. In keeping a number of bank-accounts and turning over funds that belong to other people as well as yourself, you do not necessarily keep the money in separate bills.

Q. The question is in reference to the payment of the $750,000; whether you spent so much money.—A. I took that $100,000 to California, it is true, but between $30,000 and $40,000 of it was my own money, and had nothing to do with this or with anything else that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was interested in. I afterwards remitted, for instance, $25,000 to Mr. Schumaker. I paid Mr. Ingham $5,000, and I paid Mr. Rice $25,000, and so on.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you your California bank-account?

The WITNESS. Yes; covering a longer period than that.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it would be well for us, as far as you are able, to refresh your memory by examining it.

The WITNESS. I will do so.

The further examination of the witness was postponed until to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1875.

JOHN G. SCHUMAKER recalled.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. Do you desire to modify or explain any of the testimony which you have already given?—Answer. I do; I know the position in which my testimony stands here; my signatures to these certificates of deposit have embarrassed me and troubled me very much; I had not then and have not now the slightest recollection of these certificates of deposit, or I would not have sworn that I had no knowledge of these two fifty thousand dollar checks, knowing that these certificates were or might be in existence; it was a perfect blank in my memory; I knew nothing about it. I know how very unfortunate it is for me to have these signatures facing me, but I have forgotten and I cannot recollect anything about these certificates of deposit or about the manner in which they were procured; they were procured, but how I do not know. I have hastily drawn up a statement, which I will read to the committee. First. I indorsed the two fifty thousand dollar checks of the Brooklyn Trust Company, which were paid by Jay Cooke & Co., and I directed them to be sent to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That was done. I never saw those checks again, unless they were shown to me in Washington by the person who brought them here; but of that I have no present recollection whatever. Secondly. The indorsement of my name on the certificates of deposit must have been made at the request of the holders of those checks, but I have no recollection of the fact; I do not recollect who held the checks or who presented the certificates to me for my signature; I presume (although I do not know) that there was some satisfactory explanation made to me at the time to induce me to indorse the certificates, but I did not receive nor expect to receive one dollar of the money. I have no recollection of ever having any business with Jay Cooke & Co., and I am sure that I never had, and that I never received any money from them, or any evidences of money, on my own account. My explanation of the transaction is that the person who held the checks must have come to me with the certificates of deposit for my indorsement, and that, having secured a standing in the bank by the initials H. D. C. on the original checks, he was enabled to continue the business in my name, which suited him perhaps better than any other course. Having no interest in the matter I took no note of any of these circumstances, and cannot now remember anything about them one way or the other. I did not know that I had indorsed the certificates of deposit, or that they had ever been issued, until they were produced before the committee. The transaction is of several years' standing, and has passed entirely out of my mind. In regard to the California draft of $25,000, I have not the slightest recollection of that transaction; if it was sent to me by Mr. Irwin it was sent with directions what was to be done with it, and I passed it away in the same manner; I had no recollection or knowledge of anything about it until I saw a reference to it in the Tribune. Mr. Irwin, I suppose, sent me the draft, but I have no recollection of it; he did so with directions, I suppose, and I passed it away according to those directions; that I kept a dollar of it, or had the benefit of a dollar of it, I have not the slightest recollection; I know that I did not have any personal interest in it, professionally or otherwise. This is very embarrassing, gentlemen; I know very well the remarks that are made in regard to my signature to those certificates; but I am telling you God's truth, according to my recollection.

I was here in Washington at the time. They said to me in the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, "We have rumors on the street that this man or that man in the Senate or House is to get up and move to rescind or abolish that portion of the Post-Office appropriation bill which relates to the subsidy, and we want you to go on and stay there. We have confidence in you, and the moment such a move is made, we want you to telegraph us immediately." I came here and stayed at Wormley's. While here I was met every day on the street by men whom I had never seen before, swinging their arms, cursing, and swearing that they had not been paid; that the agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had gone to California; and that they had been employed by Mr. Stockwell. Some of them even showed me letters from the directors of the company. They were persons whom I had never seen before nor since. They would come and sit in my room all day long, and follow me up to the Capitol, and harass me morning and night, just because I was the representative, and the only representative, here of the company. I am sorry for the position I am in, owing to my signature to these certificates of deposit; but that is all I can say to you, gentlemen. I am in your hands.

By Mr. BURCHARD :

Q. Look at this certificate of deposit for $90,000 on Jay Cooke & Co.—

A. That is my signature; that is all I can recollect about it. I have looked carefully at my signature on both of these certificates, and I am satisfied that it is in my handwriting, but I had no idea, or dream, or thought, in my own mind, that I ever had any such business transaction.

Q. One of these indorsements on the $60,000 certificate appears to be a receipt.—A. I remember no such receipt.

Q. The receipt is in these words :

"Received $15,000 on the within, June 6, 1872.

"JOHN G. SCHUMAKER.

"Balance, $45,000, paid June 7, 1872.

"JOHN G. SCHUMAKER."

A. That writing is not mine; nothing but the signature. The signatures, of course, are mine. I have examined them, and I see that they are my signatures. Nothing could have more surprised me than those signatures.

Q. Do you not recollect signing either of them?—A. No, sir; I have not the slightest recollection of it.

Q. Do you not recollect seeing either of those $50,000 checks in Washington?—A. No, sir; I have not the slightest recollection of seeing either of those checks in Washington.

Q. Or either of these certificates of deposit?—A. No, sir; I have thought of it night and day; I can scarcely say what I have not done to try and recollect it.

Q. In reference to the $25,000 draft which was sent to you from California, did you write for it?—A. No, sir; I had no recollection of it at all until I saw it mentioned in the Tribune. If it was sent to me it was sent under directions, and I disposed of it according to directions, whatever they were, and the thing passed out of my mind.

Q. Can you tell us what you did with the money received from that $25,000 draft?—A. No, sir; I have not the slightest recollection of the draft being sent to me.

Q. Do you keep files of your correspondence?—A. No, sir; I never did in my life.

Q. Do you never preserve the business letters that are sent to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor copies of business letters that you send?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. You have stated that you have no recollection of signing these certificates of deposit. Can you not remember who asked you to go to the bank, and who exhibited the certificate when he asked for your indorsement?—A. That thing has puzzled me for the last ten days. At your suggestion, I have endeavored to find any clue that I could to it, but I am entirely in the dark; I know nothing of these certificates of deposit any more than I know of an unknown tongue.

Mr. KASSON. I do not question your good faith, but I want to see whether by questions I cannot aid you in bringing something to your memory.

The WITNESS. There is a young gentleman here whom I brought up from his childhood, and whom I have educated in my office, and I have said to him, "Mr. Lovell, was there anything that came into my office that you can recollect in reference to this draft?" and he said that he had examined carefully and thoroughly, and could not find anything in the office referring to it.

Q. Do you recollect speaking to Mr. Henry D. Cooke on the subject of these certificates of deposit?—A. I spoke to my old friends about that, and I wanted to go to see Mr. Cooke. I consulted with General Crooke and with Mr. Corwine, and told them that I wanted to go and see Mr. Cooke, and they advised me against it, and said to me, "You are in a great excitement about this matter. Human minds are queer, and if you should go to Mr. Cooke, probably Mr. Cooke might think that you were the man whom he identified by his initials, even while you were not. In criminal matters such things often occur." I sent Mr. Corwine to Mr. Cooke, and he said that, although he thought he had seen me, he had no recollection of me.

Q. Do you recollect yourself having spoken to Mr. Henry D. Cooke in connection with these certificates of deposit?—A. No, sir; Mr. Pitt Cooke, a brother of his, who lives in Brooklyn, gave me a letter of introduction to Mr. Henry D. Cooke when I first came here in the Forty-first Congress. I went either to his private house or banking-house, I forget which, but he was not in and I never delivered that letter. I saw him afterwards, but I do not recollect that I was ever introduced to him or met him in any way.

Q. After the checks, into which you broke up the $275,000 check which you have formerly testified to, were returned to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, can you say whether you sent them by letter or by messenger?—A. I directed the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company to send those checks to the office of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. In what way they did it I do not know.

Q. Must you not have told them some direction that they were to send them to?—A. I think I may have told them to take Mr. Stockwell's direction.

Q. The general direction of them to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's office would not amount to anything?—A. No, sir; I think I told the officers of the Brooklyn Trust Company to take the directions of Mr. Stockwell. That is my impression.

Q. And you renew, after refreshing your recollection, your statement that of the $275,000 the only portion with which you had anything to do in Washington was the $50,000 of which you testified?—A. Yes, sir; I cannot bring the slightest clew to any other business or money transaction that I ever had here.

Q. And have you been able since you were on the stand before to recall anything more definite about the payment of that $50,000 to Mr. Elmore and to Mr. Smith?—A. No, sir; I have not. I have recollected it and have only recollected it just as I narrated it here.

By Mr. BECK :

Q. I suppose you have examined the books of Jay Cooke & Co.?—A. I have not.

Q. The statement of the paying-teller of that bank shows that when that first certificate of deposit for $90,000 was given, the inference is that $10,000 was paid in cash, and must have been paid to you?—A. He could not swear to that. I do not think it is possible for any man to swear to that.

Q. Was that $10,000 paid to you? A. No, not one cent of it.

Q. Then again this further fact appears from the books, that two days afterwards that certificate of deposit was returned and a new certificate of deposit, for $60,000, was issued, which was again indorsed by you, and $30,000 paid in money? A. I have no recollection of any such occurrence.

Q. Did you get any money from Jay Cooke & Co.?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you positive on that subject?—A. Yes.

Q. Then if any money was paid, it was paid to somebody else?—A. It must have been paid to somebody else, and, I suppose, the fact kept from me. I have no recollection of it, and I have tried in every way to think how it could happen.

Q. Do you recollect whether you signed your name to a receipt for $15,000 on the back of one of these certificates while the writing was above it?—A. I have no recollection of the signature, and have no recollection of seeing any such thing. I have no recollection of signing a receipt for $15,000 any more than I have of a thing that never occurred; I have no recollection of signing any receipt whatever.

Q. You heard Mr. Irwin testify this morning that when he handed you the check for $275,000, you told him that the agreement was that $300,000 was to be paid to you, and that that was the reason he sent you the draft for $25,000? A.—I have no recollection of it. I have not any idea in reference to any instructions whatever from Mr. Irwin, or that he ever instructed me in regard to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, except as I have sworn. I heard Mr. Irwin swear that this morning.

Q. He says that you said to him, when he gave you the $275,000 check, that the agreement was that $300,000 was to be put in your hands? A.—I think he is mistaken.

Q. And that he sent you $25,000 more? A.—He seems to have sent me $25,000 more, and I certainly did with it as he directed, but I have no recollection of the fact, and I have no recollection of Mr. Irwin saying anything to me about any more money.

Q. Do you recollect saying anything to him about $25,000 more being due to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You heard his statement this morning?—A. I did, and it surprised me very much.

Mr. BECK. It is altogether a remarkable transaction.

WITNESS. It is indeed. No one feels the transaction more deeply than I do.

Q. At the time you surrendered all the paid checks for the $125,000 which was to your credit in the Brooklyn Trust Company, did Mr. Stockwell tell you anything as to why he wanted them destroyed?—A. I do not know that Mr. Stockwell had much to say. It was a sort of general conversation in the office, in his presence. A number of persons were there. I do not think that Mr. Stockwell had a great deal to say about it, except to give general directions in the matter.

Q. Could you not, by thinking over about these checks that came from your own bank account in Brooklyn, determine some of the indorsements on those checks?—A. I told you before that some of them had the stamps of banks on them. That is all the recollection I can get of them.

Q. Do you recollect even the stamp of any particular bank?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor any names of indorsers?—A. No, sir. I passed them over as the vouchers of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I do not think that I ever examined them particularly from the time they were issued.

Q. I think you said, in substance, that Mr. Stockwell, or some one, wanted you to get back the three $50,000 bills?—A. They wanted to know where they were, and I said that they were the vouchers of the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Mr. BECK. I thought that perhaps, by recalling to your attention that conversation, you might recollect whom you said they belonged to.

WITNESS. No, sir. I am under the impression that I knew they were in possession of the Brooklyn Trust Company; but whether I said so in form or not, I do not recollect.

Mr. BECK. The various indorsements on these certificates of deposit would indicate frequent transactions at the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co. Do you recollect being there at all?

WITNESS. I do not. I have not the slightest recollection of being ever in the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co.

Mr. BECK. The money must have been paid at the counter; and that is a fact which you would be bound to remember.

WITNESS. My theory is as I have stated—that some explanation was made to me with which I was perfectly satisfied at the time, but which has since passed out of my memory. As to ever signing any receipt for that money, or being in the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co., my mind is a perfect blank; and if all the clerks there should come up and swear that I received the money I would still have to asseverate that I have no recollection of the fact.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. I understood you to say that you were in Washington in the early part of June, 1872, at the time these certificates of deposit were drawn?

—A. Yes.

Q. The persons who were demanding money of you every day, how did you get rid of them? Did you refer them to anybody else?—A. I would say to them, "I do not know you, gentlemen. I have nothing to do with Mr. Stockwell's promises to you; go to New York and see Mr. Stockwell."

Q. Did you make any payment to any of that class of people?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anybody else here at that time transacting business for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. NIBLACK. The tellers of Jay Cooke & Co. say that the inference (considering that there is no indorsement but yours, first on the two $50,000 checks, and then on the certificates of deposit) is that the transaction was conducted by yourself personally.

WITNESS. It does not follow that the last indorser of a check is the person who receives the money. That signature is often written for identification. I do not recollect being in Jay Cooke & Co.'s bank at all. I have tried to recollect, thinking that I must have been there in order to sign these certificates, but I cannot recollect it. I cannot bring anything to my mind in relation to it.

Mr. WOOD. What is your explanation of this fact, that your name appears on the books of that bank as having received a portion of these sums? For instance, you have explained that you have no recollection as to when or how you came to sign your name; but subsequently to that, some person must have gone to Jay Cooke's and drawn a portion of that sum—in one instance $15,000—and then your name appears as receipting for that amount on account of the whole sum due by the certificate of deposit.

The WITNESS. Some person who wanted the currency may have brought me the certificate and requested my signature. I could carry through, in the city of New York, a transaction in that way with any bank where I was a customer.

Mr. NIBLACK. Yes, but you were not a customer of Jay Cooke & Co. that is the point.

The WITNESS. But any customer of Jay Cooke & Co., in good standing with them, could have carried this transaction through in my name.

Mr. NIBLACK. It has struck me that if you did not do this in person, some person did it who was in collusion with the bank.

The WITNESS. I do not say that; but I say that any man in good standing with the bank could do just such a thing as that.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. At what time were you first retained as counsel and attorney for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. In the fall of 1872, during the pendency of actions in the supreme court of Brooklyn, restraining the company from lending money on its own stock, or on any security but Government and State bonds.

Q. By what officer of the company were you retained?—A. By Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Do you know whether there is any written authority on the minutes of the company appointing you as counsel?—A. I do not. I had various interviews with Mr. Stockwell and with the various directors. Mr. Richard Schell was the cause of my being retained in those suits.

Q. Did you represent the company in any litigation?—A. Yes; in the suits brought by Luther R. Challis, Jocelyn, and Henry N. Smith, not as attorney but as counsel. That was running through 1871 and 1872.

Q. I suppose that the records of the court will show that fact?—A. The records of the court only show who the attorneys were; but I frequently consulted with Mr. Homer A. Nelson, as our offices were together. We were in frequent consultation daily in regard to these suits, and also with the directors and officers of the company, and we were attending to those matters before the judges and referees.

Q. Did I understand you to say that you have no recollection of ever having said to Mr. Irwin that the amount to be paid to you should be $300,000 instead of $275,000?—A. I have no recollection of ever having had such a conversation with Mr. Irwin.

Q. Have you any recollection of your having received any sum additional to the $275,000?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. You have heard Mr. Irwin's statement that you were employed by him in connection with this subsidy?—A. I have.

Q. Be kind enough to state how and when you were employed by him in connection with the subsidy.—A. At the time that these suits were before Judge Lawrence, the testimony of Alden B. Stockwell, and of various other persons who were examined before the referee, was being circulated around the House of Representatives, and there were various unfair conjectures and rumors about the company. Mr. Irwin, I think, came on to New York, and came to my office and asked me to come on to Washington and represent to some gentlemen, on the Committee on Commerce, or on some other committee, the circumstances in regard to this suit brought by Luther R. Challis against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. He then retained me.

Q. He retained you in connection with this subsidy?—A. Yes; he retained me also in connection with the suit.

Q. What was the understanding?—A. The understanding was that I should keep him posted in reference to all the litigation in the city of New York, and that whenever it was necessary I should come on to Washington and inform him in detail of the peculiar position of the different suits.

Q. What was the employment in connection with the subsidy?—A. That was it. The subsidy was being embarrassed by the lawsuits that were brought in New York. Those suits were in my opinion intended to embarrass the subsidy, and Mr. Irwin wanted some person who was acquainted with some members of the Committee on Commerce, I think, to inform those gentlemen of the nature of these suits.

Q. Was there any other service that you were employed to render in connection with the subsidy?—A. No, sir; there was no other particularly specified.

Q. Was there any that was understood?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why was the amount of money that passed into your hands $275,000, rather than any other sum, more or less?—A. My impression of that transaction is that Mr. Irwin gave me that $275,000 check as he was about to start for California, and that I was to receive the instructions to which I have already sworn. I think he came into the office and threw the check down upon the table.

Q. My question is, why was the amount $275,000 rather than some other sum?—A. I have no recollection of any reason being given as to the amount. I suppose that the answer to that question is the instructions which I received from the company.

Q. Did you have any previous understanding that you were to have any sum?—A. No, sir; I did not have any understanding with Mr. Irwin that I was to have any particular sum.

Q. You say that you did not have with Mr. Irwin; did you with any other person?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you say that a check or draft for $25,000 came to you from California from Mr. Irwin?—A. I have no recollection of the fact. If it did, I received it as his attorney and counsel, and it was passed away according to his directions.

Q. Now, I want to call your attention again to these certificates of deposit. I first call your attention to the fact that there were two $50,000 checks bearing your indorsement, which indorsement you recollect.—A. Yes.

Q. The next step in the transaction is the issue of a certificate of deposit to your order for $90,000, and the payment at the same time of $10,000. I call your attention to the next step, which is the issue of a certificate of deposit for $60,000 the difference ($30,000) being paid in cash, and the $90,000 certificate being surrendered. Not only that, but on this certificate of deposit for $60,000, there is a receipt signed by you for $15,000, and a general indorsement on the surrender of the certificate. Now, I ask you whether all those steps were taken, and you still say to the committee that you have no recollection of the person with whom that transaction occurred?—A. I do. I state that I have no recollection of the transaction, or of ever seeing these certificates of deposit. I had an idea that I had receipted for $15,000.

Mr. ROBERTS. That appears here.

The WITNESS. I had an idea in my mind on the second day of my examination that I had receipted somewhere for $15,000, but when I came to examine my recollection more closely, I found that it was not in the city of Washington or in the city of New York.

Mr. ROBERTS. You say that it is possible for a person to indorse a check for identification?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. ROBERTS. That is a single transaction and might readily pass out of the mind of any person, but here are many steps in this transaction after the original indorsement of the two $50,000 checks. You remark the number of steps connected with these certificates of deposit.

The WITNESS. Yes; but I have not any idea of the transaction. I tried to think how many steps there were, but I can conceive but two.

Mr. ROBERTS. There must have been more than that. There was the issue of the first certificate of deposit for $90,000, which was indorsed by you. That is one step. That certificate is surrendered and a new certificate for $60,000 was issued to your order. There is on that certificate a receipt for $15,000 paid the next day after the issue of the certificate, which must have been a separate transaction; and then there is the indorsement on the certificate which was made on its general surrender.

The WITNESS. That certificate may not have received my general signature, except on the last day.

Mr. ROBERTS. Possibly; I agree to that.

The WITNESS. Or at the time the $15,000 was receipted for.

Mr. ROBERTS. But this was a separate and additional step. Now I call your attention to these several steps to show you that this is not a single transaction like the mere identification of a check for an individual.

The WITNESS. I have tried to bring to my mind the transaction, but the only clew to it that I could get was that I had received somewhere $15,000, and had receipted for it—money that was not mine.

Q. Then I ask you this question: Are you in the habit of having transactions of this magnitude — $100,000?—A. Frequently, in New York.

Q. Here in Washington? This was a transaction that took place in Washington. Are you in the habit of having transactions of that character in Washington?—A. No, sir.

Q. I ask you whether, in the course of your business in Washington, you have had any other transaction of that magnitude?—A. I do not recollect that I ever had.

Mr. ROBERTS. I desire to fix your attention on the exceptional character of this transaction by reason of its magnitude.

The WITNESS. I know. I have had my mind drawn to it during the last week in the most wonderful manner, and I certainly cannot bring anything of the transaction to my recollection. I cannot answer in regard to it any more fully than I have done.

Q. The question was asked whether you recollected the payment of any money to you at the bank of Jay Cooke & Co., either in certificates of deposit or in checks?—A. I do not recollect.

Q. Now I ask you whether you can swear positively that you did not receive the money there?—A. I would not like to swear positively about anything of the kind, from the fact of that signature coming up in my face, but I have no recollection of any such thing, and therefore I feel safe in answering no.

Mr. ROBERTS. I call your attention to the fact that if these certificates of deposit come up in your face, they also come up in the face of the committee, and therefore I ask you again whether you can swear positively that you did not receive any money on this check?

The WITNESS. I can swear that I have no recollection of the transaction.

Mr. ROBERTS. I call your attention again to the magnitude of the transaction.

The WITNESS. I understand it fully.

Mr. ROBERTS. With great respect, it seems to me that by reason of the magnitude of the transaction, you should be able to answer yes or no.

The WITNESS. I have had various transactions of that nature in my lifetime. My mind has been active, and the transaction has left no trace on my recollection. I cannot recollect anything in regard to it.

Mr. ROBERTS. Then, leaving that point, I desire to call your attention again to your interview at the office of Lyman Elmore. When you were before this committee before, you were not able to state certainly who the other person was.

The WITNESS. I was not. I do not know him.

Q. Now I ask you, after further consideration and reflection, if you are able to state to the committee anything additional in regard to that person?—A. I am not.

Q. You were not able to state at that time who the person was, but the suggestion was then made that it was General Morgan L. Smith.—A. I do not know about that; I was introduced to him as General Smith.

Q. I ask you whether you have seen the same person during this session of Congress?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you any reason to believe that that person is now in Washington?—A. I have no reason to believe so; I have no idea where he is.

By Mr. KELLEY :

Q. Do you recollect who paid that $50,000 to that unknown man in Elmore's office, you or Mr. Elmore?—A. I did, I suppose; I put it down on the table and counted it.

Q. I have understood you to say that Mr. Elmore did that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, in regard to this question of indorsement, you have said that the last indorsement on a check means nothing?—A. I do not say that; I say that with an indorsement on a check with a person who has a good standing in a banking institution, he can get the money on it without his own indorsement.

Q. But you say that the last indorsement on a check, even when being the sole indorsement on it, is not conclusive that it is to that party that the money is paid?—A. No; I do not think that it is conclusive by any means. It is subject to explanation in various ways.

Q. You are a lawyer of some experience, and I ask you whether you have ever known a case in law or equity in which a party to whose order a check or certificate of deposit like that is drawn, having indorsed it, can relieve himself in any way from responsibility for it?—A. He can do so by proving that it was any other person who collected it and received the money.

Q. Can you not prove that now?—A. I have already answered as fully as I could on that subject.

Q. In the absence of such proof, does not law and equity, as well as common public opinion, hold the party indorsing the check responsible for the receipt of the money?—A. That is a legal proposition which is open to the courts.

Q. I ask you whether, as a lawyer, you can indicate any single case in which that has failed so to be held?—A. I do not wish to commit myself to any position in which I might admit a liability in regard to that matter.

Q. Did you not, when you indorsed this certificate of deposit payable to your own order, commit yourself to a liability to the whole amount?—A. I think not.

Q. I wish you to give us the reason by which you would exclude such a conclusion?—A. Because I would swear that it was done under some satisfactory explanation by somebody else whom I cannot recollect, and that he then received the money.

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. It takes about six days, does it not, for a letter to reach New York from San Francisco?—A. I believe so—seven or eight days.

Q. Then a remittance made on the 12th of the month would reach there about the 18th or 19th, would it not?—A. I suppose so. I have come from California myself in seven days.

Q. I have Mr. Irwin's bank-account in California, in which he is charged on the 12th of June with $22,000, and on the 13th of June with $33,000. Then I look at your bank-account and see that on the 19th of June you are credited with a deposit of $27,000?—A. My impression of that is that it was a call loan.

Q. When you were last before the committee you could not tell about that?—A. I could not tell, but my impression is that it was money derived from the sale of some securities. I have no idea from what it was, unless it was that. I cannot account for it in any other way.

Q. Is it among the possibilities if Mr. Irwin did remit to you $25,000 on the 12th or 13th of June, and if you deposited $27,000 in six or seven days after that, and if you are unable to tell what else you did with the $25,000, from Mr. Irwin, or where else you got the $27,000, that that is an explanation of it—that you got it from Mr. Irwin and deposited it to your own credit?—A. I should not like to say so, but I have no recollection of it.

Q. You cannot account for the disposition of the $25,000 in any other way?—A. I do not recollect having received it or having disposed of it.

Q. You cannot account for the disposition in any other way?—A. I do not account for the disposition of it. I disposed of it as he directed.

Q. You cannot account for the disposition of this $25,000 in any other way? Can you account in any other way for the source from which you got the $27,000?—A. I have already answered in regard to that matter as fully as it is possible for me to do.

The CHAIRMAN. You came on to Washington on the 30th of May, 1872?

The WITNESS. About that time.

The CHAIRMAN. You had the $50,000 check cashed at Riggs's on the 31st of May?

The WITNESS. About that time.

Q. You stated to us that the bill became a law on the 1st of June?

A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And that you stayed about here two or three days in order to see if there was any other competitor for the subsidy?

The WITNESS. I think I stayed here, off and on, for a number of days after that.

The CHAIRMAN. On the 5th of June somebody turned up in Jay Cooke & Co.'s bank with two $50,000 checks indorsed by you. That was pretty close on to your being here?

The WITNESS. I have no doubt that I was here at that time; I think I was.

The CHAIRMAN. It was then just as easy for you to transact this business in Jay Cooke's bank as for any other man to do so, so far as your presence in Washington was necessary?

The WITNESS. I was here in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The next day, the 6th of June, you sent a receipt for $15,000 of the money. What sort of difficulty was there in the way of your having done that in person rather than by proxy?

The WITNESS. If I knew anything of it, either by person or by proxy, I certainly should tell you, but I have no recollection of anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not intimate that I suppose you are not willing to tell; I am only trying to find out if I can help you to remember. Do you know of anything on the 6th of June, when you say you were here, in the way of your attending to that in person, as it appears to have been done by you?

The WITNESS. I do not recollect having done it in person at all.

The CHAIRMAN. There was nothing in your whereabouts which would render it impossible for you to have transacted this business in Jay Cooke's bank?

The WITNESS. Nothing that I can recollect.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you recollect anything that you were doing at that time that would have prevented you?

The WITNESS. I do not, positively.

The CHAIRMAN. State whether you have on your professional books any charge of any kind against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

The WITNESS. I have not.

The CHAIRMAN. For consultations with Judge Nelson or any other counsel, you have made no charge on your books?

The WITNESS. I have not.

Q. You have kept professional books?—A. I never had a day-book or ledger in which I made any charges for consultations, or anything of the kind. When I have transacted my business, I make my charges. I kept a register of the law-cases that I had.

Q. Have you consulted that to see whether you could find any entry against the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I have consulted the book to see whether I was the attorney of the company in any of their cases. I was not their attorney, but merely their counsel. The book I refer to is a register of the law-cases in which I am engaged. I never have kept an account-book in my life.

Q. The book to which you refer, is it a blank-book made for the use of lawyers to enter their cases in?—A. Yes; cases in which they are attorneys. I never had a ledger or a day-book to note the daily receipt of fees.

Q. And yet you have done heretofore a large professional business?—A. Yes; but I have never kept any books. I have been engaged in a large law-business in New York, but the gentlemen with whom I have been connected have been just as careless as myself, and we never kept day-book or ledger. One of these gentlemen is General Crooke, and I know that we never kept a day-book or ledger in which we charged any particular item. When the case was through we would consult how much we ought to charge, and if our client paid it, well and good; if not, we lost it.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Do you know Mr. Boyd Winchester, a member of the last House of Representatives?—A. I do, well.

Q. There has been some suggestion made that he had got some money out of what is known as the Schumaker corruption fund; did you, directly or indirectly, approach him in any way?—A. Never, in any way, shape, or manner. He was understood to be opposed to the bill from beginning to end. He was a consistent opponent of all subsidies and all land-grants.

Q. In the National Republican of Tuesday appears this paragraph: "On Saturday night Boyd Winchester, ex-democratic member from Kentucky, was engaged in making a speech at Louisville denouncing the administration of General Sheridan. On Sunday night following, the charge was put in type in two-thirds of the newspaper offices of the country that he received $1,000 of Schumaker's Pacific Mail corruption fund."

Is there any truth in it?—A. Not a word of truth in it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Without any inference against Mr. Winchester, I would ask you how you can be so positive in regard to it, if you do not know where a dollar of the money went?—A. I simply mean to say that I never paid him any money, or know of a dollar being paid to him. I never talked to Mr. Winchester about the Pacific Mail subsidy, but I heard him, on frequent occasions, in conversation with other members, express himself opposed to the subsidy.

Q. Did you indorse any check that went to any member of Congress?—
A. No, sir.

Q. Or certificates of deposit of any kind?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. You say that you do not recollect for whom you indorsed those certificates of deposit. How, then, can you answer whether it was not for a member of Congress?—A. I am asked for my personal knowledge; I do not talk about where the money might have gone.

Q. You say positively, as I understand it, that you did not indorse any check for any member of Congress?—A. I do.

Q. And yet I understand you to say, in regard to these certificates of deposit, that you do not recollect for whom you indorsed them?—A. I have not the slightest recollection.

Q. Then, I ask you how you can swear positively that you did not indorse them for any member of Congress?—A. I think I would have recollected the fact if I had done so for any member of Congress. I do not suppose that I would have done so for any member of Congress.

Mr. Clarke Bell, attorney for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, presented and read to the committee the following certificate:

I, Thomas T. Gamble, secretary of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, hereby certify that I have carefully examined the minutes of all meetings held by the board of directors, and all meetings of executive or other committees of said company, from the 1st day of January, 1871, to the 31st day of May, 1873, and that the names of John G. Schumaker or Richard C. Parsons do not appear on any of said minutes in any way; and that there is no record of either of them having been employed by this company as counsel, attorney, or in any capacity whatever.

In witness whereof I hereunto subscribe my signature and affix the corporate seal of the company this 11th day of January, 1875.

[SEAL.]

THOS. T. GAMBLE,
Secretary.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1875.

RICHARD B. IRWIN recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. I was about to ask you some questions yesterday afternoon after you had stated that you gave Mr. Schumaker a check for $275,000, and when he said that it ought to be $300,000, and you told him that you would remit to him the balance from California. I would like to ask you now what he said to you about the understanding with you being that the amount should be $300,000 rather than $275,000. You and he seem to have differed, or at least you had got the impression that the amount was $275,000 and he that it was $300,000.

The WITNESS. All that took place, as I recollect it at this distance of time, was simply this: I handed him the check for $275,000, and he said something like this: "Is that right?" I said, "That is according to my recollection." He said, "I thought it was to be $300,000." I then, without anything more being said, thought the matter back, and remembered that he was right; and, being quite unwell at the time, and being at the point of going away, I merely said, "Are you in a hurry for the money, or will you wait till I get to California and remit it?" That is all that took place.

Q. When you came to think it over, that it was $300,000 as he supposed, will you tell us what the arrangement was? State to us the precise understanding between you and Mr. Schumaker, whereby he became entitled to this $300,000.—A. The precise understanding, as I recollect it, was that in consideration for his services here, in procuring the passage of the bill, he should receive, on its final passage, $300,000. The understanding with Mr. Schumaker was a little different from most of the others, and his compensation was large, in my view, for this reason. He received nothing in advance, while almost all of the others wanted something to go on with. His compensation being entirely contingent, and his services being the principal services rendered in the case, he received, necessarily, the largest compensation. I am stating my view of the case. There was so little said that Mr. Schumaker may have had a different view.

Q. The whole fee of $300,000, then, was contingent on the passage of the bill?—A. Yes, as I understood it.

Q. As you understood it, was it all for his own use?—A. I so understood it. There was nothing said between us to indicate that it was or that it was not all for his own use. I simply retained him and asked him what he would want. He stated that sum, and I considered that a fair sum for his services, as he was a man of position and ability and commanded the confidence of those with whom he talked.

Q. Whatever arrangement was made with Mr. Schumaker in the matter, so far as you know, was made with him by yourself?—A. So far as I know; although since Mr. Schumaker's testimony has been given, and thinking over the various points suggested by it, I remember one circumstance which would seem to indicate that he might also have been retained by Mr. Stockwell, but yet I was a little surprised when I first read that in his testimony. That circumstance was this: I had never reported to Mr. Stockwell at any time the fact that I had retained Mr. Schumaker, but Mr. Stockwell, at one time when I was in New York, spoke to me on the subject, and wanted to know what Mr. Schumaker was doing, and how he was getting on. I said to him, "How did you know that I had retained Mr. Schumaker?" He merely nodded, in his off-hand way, and said that it was sufficient for me to know that he knew it. When I learned afterward that Mr. Nelson, whom I took to be Mr. Schumaker's partner, had been retained by the company in the Luther R. Challis suit, I made the connection in that way, and presumed that Mr. Stockwell was fully aware of it, and so nothing further was said about it.

Q. Do you know of any arrangement made with Mr. Schumaker other than that which you yourself made with him?—A. I have no knowledge of any arrangement between Mr. Schumaker and Mr. Stockwell.

Q. When you delivered the $275,000 check to him where were you?—A. I have been trying to think, but I cannot be positive. My impression is that it was in Mr. Schumaker's office; but I cannot quite make the dates agree.

Q. For what purpose did you deliver that check to him?—A. I delivered it to him in execution of what I understood to be the contract.

Q. In compensation for his services?—A. Yes.

Q. Was there any expectation on your part that any part of it was to be returned to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir; nor was there anything to base that expectation upon. I did not suppose that anybody who got money from me would give it back to the company again.

Q. Nothing passed between you and him to justify any such expectation?—A. Nothing to justify any such impression on my mind.

Q. Did you say to him, "Take out of that your fee, and then you will receive instructions what to do with the balance?"—A. I am very certain that I could not have said that, because that would have reversed entirely the understanding which I had. I cannot recollect, at this distance of time, what I did say, but my recollection negatives that statement.

Q. Did you deliver to Mr. King the $115,000 check at the same time that you delivered the $275,000 check to Mr. Schumaker?—A. No, sir; at a different time.

Q. Where were you when you delivered that?—A. I have a very distinct recollection of that circumstance. I was in the Continental Hotel in Philadelphia, standing at the desk near the telegraph office, on the right-hand side as you go out of the front door on Chestnut street. I wrote the check then and there. The reason that I recollect it so distinctly is that I had filled up the first check for $15,000. Mr. King went away, and soon after came back with it, and said, "There is some slight mistake about this." I looked at it and said, "Yes, I should think there was; the check should be for $115,000." I filled up another check and gave it to him. I had a very bad headache at the time, from which I suffered for the next three months. This was the beginning of that condition. Mr. King came back again in a few minutes and said, "This is worse than the other." I looked at it and saw that the check was filled up for $115, so I filled up the third check and said, "Now look at that, and be certain that that is all right."

Q. And the third check was for how much?—A. For $115,000.

Q. Now, let us leave Mr. King for a moment, and come back to Mr. Schumaker. Did you have any understanding with Mr. Schumaker that he was to take any part of that money to Washington, and to pay it to any known or unknown man here in Washington?—A. I had no understanding with Mr. Schumaker that he was to pay that money to anybody. So far as any understanding with him was concerned, Mr. Schumaker might have done anything he pleased with the money, for it belonged to him absolutely.

Q. Have you seen Mr. Schumaker's testimony with respect to his coming on to Washington and delivering $50,000 to a man who was supposed to be General Smith, in the rooms of Mr. Lyman Elmore?—A. I have.

Q. Have you any knowledge of that transaction?—A. I have no knowledge whatever of it; I was west of the Missouri River at that time.

Q. You had no knowledge of any such arrangement before it happened?—A. No, sir; I had no knowledge whatever of such an arrangement.

Q. Had you ever any knowledge of it since until it was disclosed by him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you now any knowledge of it, except from Mr. Schumaker's testimony?—A. My entire information on the subject comes from Mr. Schumaker's and Mr. Elmore's testimony.

Q. Have you any facts within your knowledge that bear upon that transaction?—A. No, sir; neither affirmative nor negative.

Q. Have you any knowledge of the employment on behalf of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at that time of any General Smith?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or of any Mr. Smith?—A. Among the noble army of martyrs there may have been the name of Smith, but I did not see it.

Q. And you have no knowledge of the employment of any gentleman of the name of Smith in that connection?—A. I do not recollect the name in that connection.

Q. Do you recall the name of any gentleman employed by you who was entitled to receive $50,000, except the gentlemen whose names you have given?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any gentleman who was entitled to receive any portion of the money except those whose names you have given?—A. I do not recall any such at present. I want to add some names to those that I gave yesterday. I was answering yesterday with special reference to the payment of money for services. My attention was called, after I got home and got to thinking about it, to the fact that I had answered that there were no other names on Mr. Abert's list. I remember now that Mr. J. M. Morris was on Mr. Abert's list. He was the late editor of the Chronicle, and was also employed at the time in the office of the Secretary of the Senate. The payment to Mr. Morris was not for services in connection with the subsidy, and for that reason it escaped my attention at the time. The Chronicle not only did a large amount of job printing for us, for which we paid them, but also published a number of editorials and statistical paragraphs. After we got all the way through, I came to the conclusion that Mr. Morris was entitled to be paid for this; he said he would take whatever I thought was right, and I paid him $1,500 as being about a fair compensation for that work, without attempting to count so much a line or so much a page. He got $1,500 from Mr. Abert. Then, for similar advertising by other Washington newspapers, including the Patriot and the Herald, we paid about $1,500 more; and through Mr. Moran, for correspondence all over the country, not specially advocating subsidies, but simply keeping the public mind fresh and sweet upon the subject, we paid about $1,000 more. That was so much a week for a certain length of time.

Then, in regard to services, I said yesterday that Governor Randall had received $10,000. I dislike very much to bring the name of a dead man into this case, but it is necessary to do so. This matter is now three years old, and people cannot be immortal, even to suit the purposes of an investigation. Mr. Randall received from me a special payment of $35,000 entirely independent of what was paid to him for his own services. He received that payment from me for a specific purpose, and not to be accounted for. I will explain the specific purpose to the committee. When the bill was first before the House, and was defeated, (I think about the 20th of March, 1872,) one of the causes that contributed most powerfully to its defeat was a stock combination in New York, consisting of Henry N. Smith and others, including the venerable Daniel Drew, as reported to me. His name is always used wherever there are any short operations in stock, whether he is interested in them or not. I went to New York, saw Mr. Stockwell, and confirmed from his statement my own opinion as to what was going on. The object was not only to have persons here to keep the public constantly and accurately misinformed, but also to send all kinds of circulars here from New York, on authority, as to what the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had been doing, was doing, and was going to do; such as that it was going to run this semi-monthly line to China, whether it got the subsidy or not. Then they brought a suit in New York against Mr. Stockwell, in the name of one of those professional stockholders whom they have there for the express purpose of bringing such suits—Mr. Challis and somebody else. It was supposed that Mr. Henry N. Smith and others were behind that suit. They carried it on every day while this proceeding was pending before the House. The suit had gone to a referee; and whether there was much or whether there was little done, every day it was published in the newspapers, and all came down here. I remember one day, the 19th of March, that the proceeding took this form: The subsidy was about to pass, as everybody supposed except myself, (I did not think it,) and there was a good deal of speculation, long and short, on the subject. Mr. Challis's lawyer asked Mr. Stockwell, whom he had got on the stand as probably the best witness for that purpose, whether the company had not an agent in Washington. That question was objected to by Mr. Nelson, Mr. Stockwell's counsel; but Mr. Stockwell insisted on answering the question, and Mr. Nelson, of course, had to stand back. Mr. Stockwell said, "Yes; we have an agent in Washington; Mr. Irwin is our agent there. He is our agent at San Francisco and represents us in Washington." The question was then put to him, "Are you spending any money to get this bill passed? How can Mr. Irwin represent the company in Washington?" Mr. Stockwell replied, "The manner in which he represents the company in Washington is best known to ourselves." That statement came down here right hot over the wires, and, of course, it was one of the causes that contributed to frighten everybody. Mr. Stockwell then acted on advice which I had given him before and settled that suit. I understood from him afterward that he had paid that combination, which had got up that suit against him, $100,000 to withdraw the suit. I do not know how true that may be, but that is what he told me afterward.

Now we come along to the time when the bill was before the Senate in the early part of May. Then there was a second stock combination got up with the same and other persons reported to be in it. I went over to New York and spoke to Mr. Stockwell again about it. He told me, "Those damned fellows have got me again." I told him what my information was, and it was substantiated by what he said, that Mr. Daniel Drew had sent over a telegram to one of the Senators to come on to New York, and that this Senator had told him that he could control six votes; that what we used to call in those days "the Methodist party" was going to do the job of fighting the bill in the Senate. The Senator referred to was Mr. Harlan. Governor Randall came to me and reported (and this is why I bring in his name) that Mr. Harlan had received that dispatch, and had gone on to New York, and was coming back again and was going to have his six Senators vote and work against the bill. Some of them did, and some of them did not, but Mr. Harlan was a furious and implacable enemy of the bill all the way through; he fought it with every kind of misstatement. I do not mean that he said things which he knew to be false, but he fought the measure with every kind of misstatement furnished to him for the purpose.

Mr. KASSON here interrupted the witness and objected to his discussing the course and action of Senators.

The WITNESS. I did not intend to do that, and I am much obliged to you for stopping me there, because I was getting off the track. I only wanted to connect this matter with Governor Randall. Mr. Stockwell said, "I suppose I can settle this thing in New York for another $100,000." I said, "I can do it cheaper in Washington." He said, "How?" I said, "We will go right into the market and buy their men there instead of your buying the principals here." He said, "Go ahead and do it, and tell me how much money you want for it." I sent him word back that I should want $35,000. He sent it to me, and I put it into the hands of ex-Postmaster-General Randall, in whom I had the most implicit confidence, and I have not the slightest doubt but that he spent every cent of it for that purpose.

Q. Will you explain what you mean by buying their men?—A. I mean buying the agents whom they had sent here for that purpose; I do not mean their friends in Congress, but the men whom they had sent down here.

Q. And you paid this $35,000 to Mr. Randall for that purpose?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For no other purpose?—A. Not for any other purpose.

Q. And you put it into his hands not to be accounted for?—A. Yes, sir; and he never did account for it.

Q. Do you know what, in fact, he did with it?—A. I do not, except that he told me he had silenced the opposition; and he had done so; I mean that he had silenced the outside opposition.

Q. How did you make that payment to Mr. Randall?—A. Partly in check, and partly in money.

Q. About what time?—A. Some time in the early part of May, as nearly as I can recollect.

Q. Did you pay him in checks that you received from the company, or in your own checks?—A. In my own checks; I paid out none of the company's checks.

Q. Your own checks on what fund?—A. I think they were my own checks on the American Exchange National Bank of New York. The funds were there. I kept my own money and the company's money there together in my own name. I want to say that in speaking of Mr. Harlan I did not intend to convey the slightest idea that he was interested in any of those operations, but he was probably made use of by his friends on whom he relied, to circulate information, which he believed, but which I knew to be false. I think we paid Mr. William Moran either $10,000 or $15,000, I cannot recollect which, and I think that Mr. Samuel Hatch received a larger amount than I mentioned yesterday. I think that he got another check, which I had forgotten about.

Q. What was the nature of the duties to be performed by Mr. Samuel Hatch?—A. I cannot give you a very accurate idea of them. I employed him because Mr. Stockwell told me to do so.

Q. Did you make any arrangement with Mr. Hatch for the performance of services by him?—A. They were made by me under Mr. Stockwell's order.

Q. Tell us what was the character of that arrangement?—A. The general character of the arrangement was that he was to use his influence to assist in the passage of the bill, although these words were not used.

Q. Tell us, as nearly as you can, what passed between you and Mr. Hatch.—A. Mr. Hatch came to me in Washington. I was directed by Mr. Stockwell to employ him. I knew that he knew that I was so directed, and there was nothing more to be said, except that I told him to go ahead and do what he could. I do not think that anything more was said.

Q. Did you pay him any portion of that money?—A. I did. All that was paid to him was paid by me, so far as I know.

Q. For what purpose did you pay him?—A. For the services which he had rendered, in accordance with Mr. Stockwell's order.

Q. You say that you made a mistake yesterday in the amount paid to him?—A. I think there was another check paid to him, making the aggregate amount about $30,000, but I would not like to be positive about that.

Q. Can you not give us anything about the character of his services?
—A. So far as came to my knowledge, I do not think he did anything but go around and talk to the members whom he knew.

Q. Was any portion of that money given to him with the understanding that it was to be paid to influence any member's vote?—A. Not on my part.

Q. Was there any knowledge, on your part, of any sort, that that was the understanding?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was any of it to be used in any district for political purposes?—A. No, sir. Not under my understanding. He might have used it just as others might for any purpose which he chose.

Q. I will make the question broad enough to cover all of these expenditures. Was any dollar paid with the understanding that it was to be used in any way in any member's district for political purposes?—

A. There was no such understanding that ever came to my knowledge.

Q. So far as you know, has any of this money been so expended in any man's district for political purposes?—A. So far as I have knowledge it has not been.

Q. Has it been expended anywhere for election purposes in the broadest sense?—A. I have no knowledge that any of that money was used for election purposes.

Q. Was there any understanding, expressed or implied, that has come to your knowledge, that any of it was to be expended in that way?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did any list of members pass between you and Mr. Hatch?—A. Every man connected with the thing who purported to be using his influence, showed me, at different times, lists of the members to whom he had spoken on the subject, and who he thought would vote for the bill, and of those whom he had spoken to, and who he thought would vote against it, and of those who were doubtful, and who would have to be spoken to by somebody else.

Q. You mean that they canvassed the list of members in regard to the subsidy?—A. Not the whole of the list. Mr. Hatch came to me once or twice, and showed me a list, and said something like this: "I have spoken to these men marked in red, and they are for it. And I have spoken to these men marked in blue, and they are against it. And I have spoken to these men with a dot opposite to their names, and they are doubtful, and have not made up their minds.

Q. About how many members had Hatch allotted to him for that purpose?—A. He did not have any allotted to him. He received no directions from me whatever. He went off, on his own account, and did what he could, to earn his money.

Q. How many members did he represent to you, from time to time, that he had labored with either pro or con?—A. I should think about twenty.

Q. Were they from any particular section of the country?—A. No, sir; most of them were southern and western men.

Q. He was a southern man himself?—A. I do not know whether he was or not. He had been in New Orleans.

Q. Did he represent to you that he had any special facilities in regard to members from any particular section?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who commended him to you to the extent of $30,000?—A. A. B. Stockwell.

Q. Had you any knowledge yourself of any specialty to which Samuel Hatch directed himself?—A. No, sir, except that he was a large, handsome, affluent man.

Q. Can you tell us in what terms Mr. Stockwell commended him to you to that extent?—A. This is going a long way back. I think Mr. Stockwell told me (I do not want to drag in anybody's name unnecessarily) that Rufus Hatch, who was working with Mr. Stockwell at that time, had recommended Sam's employment, and had stated that he was a good man to be employed.

Q. Is he a relative of Rufus Hatch?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you have the impression at the time that he was a relative?—A. I did not. I had the impression that he was a relative.

Q. Where did you first become acquainted with A. H. Whiting?—A. I forget whether I met Mr. Whiting first at San Francisco or New York. I met him before this thing came up.

Q. Was he known to you for a long time before this thing came up?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Had he any business connections or relations, of any kind, with the Pacific coast?—A. Yes. He was, or had been, a member of the firm of Hooper, Whiting & Co., of Arizona. I forget whether I first made his acquaintance in San Francisco, or whether I was introduced by Mr. Hooper, or not; but I knew him in that connection.

Q. Had he any family connection on the Pacific coast?—A. That I cannot say, but my impression was that Mr. Whiting was a connection of some sort, either cousin or brother of Mr. Whiting, whose sister married ex-Senator Cole, but I have not enough knowledge on the subject to speak about it.

Q. Where was Mr. Whiting's residence at the time you met him in San Francisco?—A. He was engaged in the Arizona trade, and I hardly know whether to say that he had his residence in San Francisco, Arizona, or New York. They had business in all three places.

Q. Did you meet him here in the spring and summer of 1872?—A. I did.

Q. Was it an accidental meeting?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. Tell us by what arrangement it was brought about.—A. It was brought about by an arrangement which I made at his office in New York.

Q. State what it was.—A. As nearly as I can recollect the arrangement now, he was to come here to Washington and use his influence in behalf of the measure. He was to do whatever he could and whatever I told him. That was the understanding. He wanted a very large sum of money for his services, and I hesitated for some time about giving it, but I came to the conclusion that they were worth it, and I made the arrangement with him.

Q. What reason did he assume for putting so high an estimate on his services?—A. He did not give any reason. He just said that he wanted it. I am, perhaps, putting the case rather wrongly because the impression on my mind was that he did not want to have anything to do with the matter, as it interfered with his business in New York and Arizona.

Q. You came to the conclusion afterwards that he was worth it; what led you to that conclusion?—A. I found that he had a good deal of influence with different people whom I did not have any influence with, and particularly with Senator Cole. I found that Senator Cole was very indignant with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, not with me personally, for having interfered, as he supposed, in his election, or rather his non-election as candidate for Senator; and although I endeavored to assure him that we had not anything to do with it, I found it very difficult to do so, because he believed that we had, and I rather believed so myself at one time, although I had had nothing to do with it. He said that some of our men had been up at Sacramento working against him.

Mr. KASSON. He said so to you?

The WITNESS. Yes. He knew also that I was a very warm personal friend of Senator Sargent, and that I would probably and naturally have desired Senator Sargent to be elected, although I had not, as a matter of fact, interfered with that election in any way whatever; still it was a fact that some of our subordinates had taken part in the campaign for Mr. Sargent and against Mr. Cole without my knowing anything about it at the time. We never interfered with what they did one way or the other as citizens. Some of them went one way and some the other, and some of them were tolerably active. I discovered that afterwards, although I had particularly cautioned those men whom I found the most active not to take any part whatever in the senatorial canvass.

The CHAIRMAN. It is hardly worth while to cumber up our record with details of the fact. You found Senator Cole unfriendly to the measure, and you thought that his unfriendliness was partly due to an idea on his part that the company and its agents had been politically adverse to him.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; but that covers a little too much ground. I did not find Senator Cole unfriendly to the measure at all. He was in favor of the measure, and always had been. But he saw just as I did, that he would have to take the laboring oar in the Senate, because it was regarded as a Pacific Coast measure. He could not just sit down and vote for it and make speeches for it; he would have to work for it, and he was not going to do that for people whom he regarded as politically opposed to him. I take it that every politician understands that.

Q. Finding him in that mood, and finding that Mr. Whiting reported himself as having a good deal of influence with Mr. Cole, was it that which led you to employ him?—A. Mr. Whiting did not so represent himself.

Q. Give us the reason for your statement that afterward you thought Mr. Whiting's services were worth what he asked.—A. I originally went to Mr. Whiting because I believed that his personal relations to Senator Cole were such that if Mr. Whiting was personally interested in the matter, Mr. Cole would take hold of it and work for it, and I knew he would not do so unless some of his friends were interested in it, because he believed us to be his enemies.

Q. Now, about the conclusion that you came to, that Mr. Whiting's services were worth what he asked; what led you to that conclusion?—A. I thought they were worth what I paid Mr. Whiting.

Q. In order to exert his influence in the quarter you have indicated?—A. And in other quarters, but principally in that quarter.

Q. What other quarters did you expect him to exert his influence in?—A. I do not think that he had much influence anywhere else. He reported that he had influence with other people, but I never attempted to follow it out.

Q. You think that he overestimated himself in that regard?—A. He may or may not have done so; I never followed it out.

Q. But did he overestimate himself in the quarter which you have indicated?—A. The only answer I can give to that is the fact that Senator Cole took a warm interest in the measure after Mr. Whiting had become personally interested in it, and after Mr. Whiting had satisfied him, as he did very soon after he became interested in it, that my position in that senatorial election had been entirely misrepresented.

Q. He became an aggressive advocate of it after that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I mean forcing it on the Senate?—A. Yes; I understand what aggressive means by this time.

Q. Now tell us what Mr. Whiting did ask for his services?—A. My impression is now it was $100,000.

Q. What did he agree to do for the $100,000?—A. He was not to do anything except to use his influence in Washington in the Senate. He did agree to that.

Q. He was to use his influence in the Senate for the $100,000?—A. Yes; contingent on the passage of the bill. I do not want to make any point of order, but I wish to know whether I am protected in answering these questions in regard to affairs that transpired in the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. We will take care of you.

The WITNESS. All right.

Q. How was he to exert his influence in the Senate? Otherwise than as you have already stated?—A. No, sir; the first thing I told him to do was to go and satisfy Senator Cole's mind on two subjects on which I had already tried to satisfy him. One was on the question of our interference in the senatorial election at Sacramento, (which Mr. Whiting did,) and the other was to satisfy him as to my personal relations with two friends in California, Mr. Sargent and Mr. Gorham, who were Mr. Cole's enemies. I simply wanted him to satisfy Senator Cole that my relations with those gentlemen were entirely personal, and that they were my personal friends.

Q. Mr. Whiting's special duty was to labor with Mr. Cole?—A. That was the most important duty he was to render, and I have no knowledge of his doing anything else.

Q. This agreement you made with him in New York, before he came here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you agreed to give him $100,000 contingent on the passage of the bill?—A. I think I paid him $5,000 in cash before I came here, and that he afterwards returned me that $5,000 out of the check.

Q. Did you see him frequently while he was here in the discharge of his duty?—A. I saw him every now and then.

Q. Did he report progress to you?—A. I suppose he would say that he did, although my information was always a little bit ahead of his, so that it made no impression on my mind.

Q. You said a little while ago that you thought afterwards he was worth the money.—A. When I said "afterward" I meant that I took a day to think of it in that connection; "afterward" means the next day.

Q. Subsequently to your final conclusion of the contract, had you any occasion to change your opinion as to the value of his services?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you see Mr. Whiting last?—A. I have seen him since then; I am not sure whether in New York or in San Francisco.

Q. Have you seen him since your return from Europe?—A. No, sir; I have not seen him for two years.

Q. Have you heard from him since your return from Europe?—A. I have not heard from Mr. Whiting in any way since.

Q. Do you know where he is now?—A. I have not the slightest idea.

Q. Do you know any business connection or locality of his in the East?—A. He had once an office on Broadway, and that is where I went to see him.

Q. Where was he the last time you heard from him?—A. The last time that I can say I heard from him was when I saw him in New York and paid him this money. I think I have seen him since, but not to have any business transaction with him.

Q. Did you take any written evidence of the payment of this money to him?—A. Nothing but his signature on the back of the check.

Q. State the conversation which you yourself had with Mr. Cole.—A. I had no conversation with him as to Mr. Whiting's employment.

Q. Did you, at any time, have any conversation with him about Mr. Whiting?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him in regard to the subsidy?—A. Yes; I had a great many conversations with him, but none bearing on Mr. Whiting in any way.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. You paid to William S. King a sum of money; state to the committee what that payment was for.—A. My impression in regard to that (which is all that I can state to the committee, for it is all that I know) is that that money was paid to Mr. King for his services in aid of the passage of this bill, but the arrangement (if there was any arrangement) having been made by Mr. Stockwell himself, before I came here, I do not know what Mr. King's understanding of it was, and I do not know what Mr. Stockwell's understanding of it was.

Q. You paid the money to him for services; can you state what services he in fact rendered?—A. I think that prior to the time when I took complete charge of the measure, (which was not really until after it had failed the first time in the House,) Mr. King spoke to various members on the floor in relation to it, and it was because I found that he was doing more harm than good that I took the responsibility of going to him and telling him to keep off the floor and let members of the House alone. I found that he spoke to friends and to enemies indiscriminately; and it was always my principle not to speak to enemies of the measure and to post them as to our points. I told him that if he could do any good at all he should go over on the Senate side and work there, and not to talk to anybody unless he was certain that they were friends of his, because there were many persons whom he regarded as his friends who were not very friendly to him.

Q. In fact you found that Mr. King was speaking to members of the House in behalf of the subsidy?—A. I was told so; I was not there myself to see him, but it was reported to me by several gentlemen that he was doing so. I did not investigate it at all, but I merely told him that, and I think that all the services that he rendered were rendered on the other side of the Capitol.

Q. You yourself employed Mr. John G. Schumaker?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the understanding in the employment of Mr. Schumaker as to the services which he was to render?—A. My understanding of the case at the time was (without there being any special words used to convey it) that Mr. Schumaker was to use his influence in the House of Representatives in aid of the measure, and that on the passage of the bill he was to be paid so much for his services.

Q. So much for his individual services, or so much for his disbursements and services?—A. If he made any disbursements it was to be covered by that. There was no understanding in regard to disbursements whatever, so far as I was concerned.

Q. Was there any authority that he should make any disbursements, provided it was included in the sum paid to him?—A. No other authority than that which was included in the payment of the $300,000 to him, and leaving him at liberty to do what he pleased with it.

Q. He was at liberty to do what he pleased with all that money?—

A. Yes; just as any man is with his own money.

Q. But the payment of the money was to be contingent on the passage of the bill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was it expected that he would use his influence on members of the House?—A. In the same manner as influence is always used on every bill, by conversing with members, by sending others to converse with them, by pointing out the friends of the bill on the one hand, the enemies on the other, and the doubtful by themselves, because it is as good a point to avoid talking to the enemies of a bill and posting them as to its points, as it is to talk to its friends.

Q. I ask as to the expectation which you had of the influence that he would exert.—A. My expectation was that he would do whatever was necessary, so far as the use of influence was concerned, and whatever was usual, so far as influence is concerned, in aid of legislation.

Q. Was he authorized to employ any person to assist him, or was it expected that he would employ any person to assist him?—A. He was not directly authorized, and I had no expectation on the subject, except that I considered him virtually in charge of the measure in the House to the extent of paying him this large sum for his services.

Q. You considered that he was virtually in charge of the measure in the House?—A. Yes; I did not go to the House myself at all.

Q. Did he report to you that in fact he had employed any one to assist him?—A. I think not.

Q. Did he make any report to you during the progress of the matter in the House?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the nature of the report?—A. He reported from time to time what the appearance of things was, what the opponents of the bill were doing, and who he thought were friends and who enemies.

Q. Did he give you a list of those whom he regarded as friends of the bill?—A. I think that at different times we went over the list of members who were either for or against, or doubtful, and we corrected the list from time to time.

Q. Was any understanding reached between you two as to the means to be adopted for securing the support of those who were marked doubtful?—A. No, sir.

The witness was here, at his own request, excused from giving further testimony until Monday next.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 22, 1875.

W. F. G. SHANKS sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your residence and occupation.—Answer. I reside in Brooklyn; I am the city editor of the New York Tribune.

Q. The editor of the Tribune, Mr. Reid, in testifying here in regard to certain rumors that got circulation in the Tribune, said he was unable to tell exactly how they reached his ear, but he supposed they had done so through some of his subeditors and reporters, and among the number he gave your name as a possible communicant of those rumors to him; will you state to the committee all the knowledge you have in reference to the ground for the rumors and statements which found their way into the Tribune, or which you communicated to Mr. Reid?—A. In citing me as authority for the statement that Mr. Oakey Hall had connected Mr. Wood with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, Mr. Reid was perfectly correct.

Q. State what foundation you had for that statement.—A. Mr. Hall so stated to me in Delmonico's about the date that Mr. Reid mentioned.

Q. Repeat what Mr. Hall said to you?—A. The conversation came up in this way: The reports of the investigation committee in New York on that day had some allusion to the mysterious man with the remarkable mustache, and it was said, I think, in one of the reports that Mr. Beck had referred in connection with it to Mr. Wood's mustache, and that Mr. Wood had said, "No more on that head, if you please." I had remarked to gentlemen who were dining with me at the time that the manner in which it was reported would seem to point at Mr. Wood as that mysterious man. This was a mere conversation at dinner. Mr. Hall had come up to where we were sitting, and turning to one of the gentlemen present, Mr. Jarvis, formerly deputy sheriff there, he said, "Jarvis, if they would subpoena us, what could we not tell them about Mr. Wood and the Pacific Mail Company?" Some few words passed, and Mr. Hall went off to another table where he was dining.

Q. You allude to the testimony about the man with the remarkable mustache; is he the man who was at the American Exchange Bank with the large check?—A. Yes, in company with Mr. King. I simply remarked that the manner in which the reference to Mr. Wood was reported would lead some people to suppose that Mr. Wood was the man.

Q. Was that a serious or a jocular remark on your part?—A. I did not mean to indicate by that that Mr. Wood was the man; I simply said that the manner in which it was reported would lead persons to think that Mr. Wood was the person referred to. Mr. Hall made that remark to Mr. Jarvis, and shortly after turned away. It was such a remarkable statement that, on my going to my office, I made a memorandum of it and sent it to Mr. Reid.

Q. Was that the extent of what you heard from Mr. Hall?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other rumor that you communicated to Mr. Reid in reference to any other member of the committee?—A. No, sir.

Q. My own name has been brought in; have you any rumor in regard to my name in connection with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. No, sir.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Hall was subpoenaed with yourself after Mr. Reid had given his testimony, and he sent a telegraphic dispatch on the 18th of January stating that he knew nothing, directly or indirectly, about anything within the inquiry of the committee, and that his incessant professional engagements forbade his coming. A subsequent telegram from him states most positively that he never made any such communication, and that he will come on, if necessary, after you have been examined. What have you to say as to that?

The WITNESS. Mr. Hall showed me the dispatch which you have just read, on last Tuesday or Wednesday; he told me he had sent that dispatch in answer to the subpoena; he did not know what had been testified to here, but did not recall the circumstance of our meeting, (which was nearly a month ago.) I reminded him of the circumstance, and he remembers it pretty much as I do. His explanation of the use of your name there was, that he did not intend to use your name, but that he meant Mr. Stockwell. He says he was attorney for some bank which was suing Mr. Stockwell, and that Mr. Jarvis, who was the order-of-arrest clerk in New York, had an order of arrest for Mr. Stockwell.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Hall stated that he did not intend to use my name?—

A. He says that he intended to use Mr. Stockwell's name, and that he does not remember having used your name, but I was so impressed with it at the time that I wrote out the memorandum after I went to the office, and sent it to Mr. Reid.

Q. And that is the only foundation which you had for your memorandum to Mr. Reid?—A. That is all—Mr. Hall's very positive remark to Mr. Jarvis, that if he and Mr. Jarvis were subpoenaed by the committee they could tell a great deal about the Pacific Mail. He says now that he intended to use Mr. Stockwell's name, but that, as we had been talking about you, he doubtless dropped into the mistake.

WILLIAM P. SULLIVAN sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. State your occupation.—A. I am a Wall-street attaché of the New York Tribune, in the city department, and have general charge of the local, financial, commercial, and railroad news.

Q. Did you hear the interrogatory put to Mr. Shanks?—A. I did.

Q. State to the committee all the information you have on the same subject on which you communicated to Mr. Reid.—A. I communicated no information to Mr. Reid on that subject; I suppose that Mr. Reid's connection of my name with the case arose from the fact that I am the Wall-street reporter of the Tribune, and that I reported to him from time to time a good many matters connected with financial subjects, and more especially with the Pacific Mail, so that naturally he ascribed to me the reported rumor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 23, 1875.

WILLIAM R. BUNKER, secretary of the Brooklyn Trust Company, recalled.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Question. I ask you whether this statement of the account of John G. Schumaker with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, which you have handed to the committee, was made out by you?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it a true abstract of the account of Mr. Schumaker with the Brooklyn Trust Company from the 2d of February, 1872, to the 19th of June, 1872?—A. Yes, sir; it is.

Q. Were there paid, on or about the 5th of June, two checks, amounting in the aggregate to $37,000?—A. The account so states.

Q. Can you indicate how those checks were paid?—A. Only that they were paid through the Nassau National Bank at Brooklyn, which cleared for us through the Clearing-House.

Q. That bank paid your checks and transacted your business with the Clearing-House?—A. Yes, through the Metropolitan Bank of New York.

Q. Can you indicate at all, from your books or from any memorandum that you may have, to whom those checks were given?—A. No, sir; I cannot.

Q. There seem to have been paid, on the 8th of June, two checks, one for $3,000 and one for $13,200; were they paid in the same way?—A. Yes, sir; they were.

Q. Can you tell to whom they were paid?—A. I cannot.

Q. Is it the same as to the check for $18,450, of the same date?—A. Yes; the same answer applies.

Q. On the 11th, there were two checks paid, one for $1,000 and one for $3,000. Do you know anything about them?—A. No, sir; the same answer applies to them.

Q. I call your attention to a check for $25,450, which seems to have been charged against Mr. Schumaker's account on the 13th of June.—A. That sum was paid by a check which I now produce.

Q. Describe that check.—A. [The check reads as follows:]

$25,450.]

BROOKLYN TRUST COMPANY, [6698.

Brooklyn, N. Y., June 13th, 1872.

Nassau National Bank of Brooklyn, pay to the order of Henry C. Du Val, twenty-five thousand four hundred and fifty dollars.

ETHELBERT S. MILLS, Prest.

W. T. RODMAN, Secy.

(Indorsed:) Harry C. Du Val.

Q. How do you connect that with the account of John G. Schumaker, as his name does not appear upon the check?—A. The stub of the check-book from which this was drawn has this memorandum: "Henry C. Duval, $25,450, for check J. G. Schumaker," showing that that payment is in exchange of Mr. Schumaker's check on the Brooklyn Trust Company.

Q. That check is charged in this account?—A. Yes. Mr. Schumaker's check is charged in this account.

Q. State how this check was paid.—A. This check was paid through the exchanges to the Atlantic National Bank of the city of New York.

Q. Indicate whether there is any mark on the back of the check.—A. The blue pencil number 52, on the back of the check indicates that it was deposited through the Clearing-House by the Atlantic National Bank.

Q. Is that bank now doing business in New York?—A. No, sir; the bank has failed, and is either in the hands of a receiver or an assignee in bankruptcy.

Q. In the account which you have submitted there is a deposit on the 19th of June of $27,775; can you indicate what are the items which constitute that deposit?—A. Yes, sir; I produce the deposit-ticket of John G. Schumaker in the Brooklyn Trust Company, dated 19th of July, 1872.

[The following is a copy:]

Deposited by J. G. Schumaker with the Brooklyn Trust Company of Brooklyn, New York:

BROOKLYN, June 19th, 1872.

Bills	$1,300
Check	1,475
Bill of ex.....	25,000
	27,775

Q. This memorandum, "Bill of exchange," is in the writing of the depositor, Mr. Schumaker?—A. Yes.

Q. Indicate in whose handwriting the deposit-ticket is?—A. In my judgment, the deposit-ticket is made out by Mr. Schumaker himself; it appears to be in his handwriting.

Q. Will you indicate what sort of paper the phrase "bill of exchange" would include?—A. In the ordinary acceptance of that term, it would mean a draft either in pounds sterling, or in francs, or in German currency, but I do not apprehend that this means anything of that sort.

Q. What would be the interpretation of the phrase there?—A. My interpretation of it, as it appears here, is that it was not a check drawn by an individual on a New York or a Brooklyn bank.

Q. Might it be a check from California on an eastern bank?—A. It might.

Q. The phrase would accord with that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. The amount being even thousands would indicate that it was not a draft for pounds sterling or francs?—A. It would. It would indicate a domestic draft, not a foreign draft.

Q. Can you, from books or otherwise, give us any further indications of what that bill of exchange was, by whom it was drawn, or to whom it was drawn?—A. I cannot. The books do not indicate whose check it was or to whom it was drawn.

Q. Do your books show by whom it was paid?—A. No, sir; our books only show that it was deposited by the Brooklyn Trust Company in the Nassau Bank, its ordinary bank of deposit.

Q. Does your account with that bank include any names of drawers or indorsers?—A. No, sir; not in the record of deposits.

Q. Have you any other entry in your books which would give us any information about this piece of paper?—A. I do not know of any.

By Mr. WALDRON:

Q. About what time would a draft, mailed at San Francisco on the 12th of the month, reach New York, in the ordinary course of business?—A. I think in about six days.

Q. If mailed at San Francisco on the 12th, it ought to reach New York about the 18th?—A. My impression is it takes about six or seven days for the mail between San Francisco and New York. It is more than likely that a draft sent from San Francisco on the 12th would reach Brooklyn on the 19th.

Q. Take in connection with the fact already elicited, that a draft for that amount was mailed to Mr. Schumaker on the 12th of January, at San Francisco, you would suppose that this was the sum?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. If this had been a check of any individual upon any Brooklyn or New York bank, would it have been styled a bill of exchange?—A. No, sir; it would not.

Q. That phrase indicates clearly to you that this was not a paper drawn by any individual on any bank at the East, or by any such bank upon another?—A. Yes, sir; it indicates to me that the drawer was at a considerable distance from the bank which paid it.

Q. Would that phrase be applied to any paper drawn, say, at Chicago?—A. It might.

Q. Would it be likely to be?—A. I think not; for the reason that drafts drawn at San Francisco on New York, or vice versa, are generally given with more form, in duplicates or triplicates, to avoid delay or loss. Bills of exchange are generally drawn in either duplicate or triplicate, but most often triplicates. That is the point on which they differ from ordinary checks.

Q. Would that phrase be applied to any draft from New Orleans on Brooklyn or New York?—A. It might.

Q. Would it be likely to be applied to any paper drawn from any city other than New Orleans or San Francisco?—A. I hardly think it would. The words there, "bill of exchange," indicate that there is more than one draft drawn for the same thing. The old usage was that in remitting from abroad, there were first, second, or third bills of exchange. The first would go by one mail, and the second by a subsequent mail, and the third would be retained in case the other two were both lost. It was to insure the delivering of the bill to the proper party as speedily as possible, and to guard against loss by transmission.

Q. Are drafts from San Francisco on New York made in that way, in duplicate or triplicate?—A. My impression is that they are, but I cannot state positively.

Q. They are not made in that way from Saint Louis or Chicago?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then is it the practice to draw from any city other than San Francisco on New York in the forms of bills of exchange?—A. I do not think it is at this present day. It may have been in vogue twenty years ago, but I do not think that at present it is the habit of any banking-house, except in San Francisco, to draw on New York with more than a single draft for one amount.

Q. But the practice does prevail in San Francisco?—A. That is my impression. I never was in a banking-house which did business with San Francisco; I have handled paper drawn from San Francisco, but not recently.

Q. Do you know Henry C. Du Val?—A. No, sir; I know a gentleman in Brooklyn named Du Val; but I do not know what his first name is.

Q. Have you before you the books of the Brooklyn Trust Company subsequent to June 17, 1872?—A. Yes, I have the ledger and cash-book of the company.

Q. Turn to the account of John G. Schumaker, and state what are the largest payments to his order for the month or two succeeding that date.—A. I find on the 22d of June an item of $1,523.35.

Q. Can you state to whom that was paid?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it paid directly over the counter?—A. No, sir; it was paid through the Clearing-House Exchange.

Q. What other large item is there?—A. The next large item is one of $8,333, on 17th July.

Q. How was that paid?—A. Through the exchanges, in the same way.

Q. You cannot indicate to whom it was paid?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there another item of the same amount?—A. There is another item of the same amount on the following day, 18th July.

Q. How was that paid?—A. That check was certified. I cannot tell you, from the books which I have here, when it was paid.

Q. Is there anything which indicates to whose order the check was drawn?—A. No, sir. I can tell that it was not paid by the individual check of the Brooklyn Trust Company, nor in way by which I would be able to trace it further.

Q. What other large items do you find in his account?—A. There is an item of $2,850 on August 14.

Q. Can you tell to whom that was paid, or how?—A. That item consists of three checks, one for $2,750 and two for $50 each; they were all paid through the exchanges.

Q. Is there any other large item there?—A. On August 16 there is an item of $3,280.14; that amount was in one check.

Q. How was it paid?—A. Through the exchanges, in the same way.

Q. Any other large item?—A. On August 26 there is an item of $2,000.

Q. To whom and how was that paid?—A. That was certified on the 26th of August.

Q. Can you tell to whom?—A. I cannot.

Q. Is there any other large item immediately succeeding that date?—

A. The next item over $1,000 is $1,500, on the 21st of October; then there appears, on the 22d of November, an item of $10,000. I cannot trace those checks here, as the period is beyond that to which the books go; but I will examine and give the committee further information about them, if I can ascertain any.

Mr. ROBERTS. Will you also give the committee a further abstract of Mr. Schumaker's account up to the close of the year?

The WITNESS. I will give it up to the last of November, where this book carries it.

[The following are the transcripts of John G. Schumaker's account with the Brooklyn Trust Company, as produced by the witness:]

WASHINGTON, January 23, 1875.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 25, 1875.

RICHARD B. IRWIN recalled.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Question. I was asking you on Friday, when the committee adjourned, what understanding you had with Mr. Fant as a consideration for the money which you paid him.—Answer. The understanding with Mr. Fant was the same general understanding as with the others. He was to use his influence and render the best assistance that he could in favor of the passage of the bill.

Q. Was there any detailed understanding?—A. Nothing more than that.

Q. Would you make the same answer as to the other persons severally?—A. I will take them substantially in gross first. Mr. Sherrill, Mr. Moran, and Mr. Ingham belong to the same class of cases. The service rendered by each of them was substantially this: At the time when the bill was pending in the House, after it had passed the Senate, it became an exceedingly important point for me to know, as nearly as practicable, how large a majority there was likely to be for us or against us. That was one of the most important points that I was called upon to decide. If we had a majority that we could reasonably count upon in favor of the bill, it was a matter of policy to attempt to pass the amendment through the House on a direct vote in favor of concurrence. If, on the other hand, we were doubtful as to that majority, or were certain that the majority was going to be against us, it was quite an important point in strategy to allow the Senate amendment to be non-concurred in without any more fight than was necessary to deprive it of the appearance of a trick, and to let the matter go to a committee of conference. That was, perhaps, the most important question that I was called upon to decide in the course of the whole fight. All of the newspapers and all of the outside people were representing us as intending to have the Senate amendment non-concurred in as a trick, and to let it go to a committee of conference, where, as they said, it would be a put-up job, and that the committee of conference would carry the thing through in the manner in which it is supposed committees of conference usually do, because nobody gets in to see what their proceedings are. Everybody who had been employed before had gone over the lists of members and checked off names as certain for, or doubtful, or certain against, until at last the consolidated list, with blue and red marks, gradually came to have the appearance of a case of small-pox and of mercurial poison combined. I employed Mr. Ingham, Mr. Sherrill, and Mr. Moran to go around and ascertain the probable state of opinion of some of those members who were differently reported before we went on with the bill, and they performed that work. Mr. Ingham's work was very slight, and there was only a small payment made for it.

Mr. Carmick bored me to death, and I paid him for keeping out of my way. I played the part of the wedding-guest to his ancient mariner. Mr. Stockwell insisted in keeping up correspondence with Mr. Carmick and sending his letters to me to be answered; and finally I told Mr. Stockwell that if Mr. Carmick continued to correspond with him I would have to pay him to keep out of the way, and Mr. Stockwell told me to go ahead and do it.

Governor Randall's services were, as I said before, of a general character. He kept me informed of everything that was going on, and he advised with me in regard to everything, and he used his influence among his personal and political friends; but beyond that, and the special matter to which I referred on Friday last, he had nothing to do with the case. He was not supposed to be actually working for it on the floor or in the lobby.

John W. Forney is absent and unable to speak for himself, and I do not know what he did, but I want to say this: I was instructed by Mr. Stockwell to employ Mr. Forney. I did not want to employ him, because I did not think it necessary. But I had been long ago trained to obey orders, and I did so in that instance. I went to Mr. Forney and found him exceedingly reluctant to go into the case at all. He reported to me that it was not necessary to employ him, because we could get along without him; but my instructions were so peremptory to employ him that I did so; and I paid him the price that he asked, which of course was not only the price for his services, but also for his reluctance to go into the case. What he did I do not know.

Q. This price he asked at the outset?—A. Yes; he asked that price and I paid him, because I was peremptorily instructed to employ him, and I had no time to think of it at all.

By Mr. FOSTER:

Q. Was he to render any particular service?—A. He was not to render any particular service. Before I retained him, he asked me to show him the condition of the case in the House, as I understood it. I showed it to him, and he handed it back to me, and said, "You have got the bill as the matter stands now, and I do not know that I can do anything for it." I said, "Mr. Stockwell insists upon my employing you." Mr. Stockwell's idea in employing him was doubtless that there was an active and large Pennsylvania interest which he supposed was with us, but which was not aggressively with us up to that point. Mr. Stockwell thought that Mr. Forney would be able to do what made me laugh at the time, and what made Mr. Forney laugh when I told him—he said that Forney could keep Sam. Randall quiet. I did not think that anybody could do that, as Mr. Randall was a consistent and active enemy from the beginning, and was always going to be.

Mr. ROBERTS. Please to be as concise as you can in your answers.

The WITNESS. Mr. Shaw was employed by Mr. Stockwell's orders on the recommendation of the most innocent and ignorant member of the most innocent and ignorant board of directors that ever assembled in the city of New York—I mean Henry Clews.

Mr. KASSON. Comments upon character really do not belong to this testimony.

The WITNESS. Mr. Clews has stated in his testimony that he did not know anything at all about this matter; that he did not know I was here, or that the company had an agent here. I thought that that perhaps was an essential fact. Mr. Shaw's services have been correctly stated by himself. Mr. Corwine was also employed by Mr. Stockwell's orders. What service he rendered I do not know. I do not think he rendered any special service whatever. I never expected that he would. I employed him because I was ordered to do so. He had a long correspondence with the vice-president, the president, and the secretary of the company in regard to my business down here, which he understood a great deal better than I did, and the result of it was that I got an order to employ him, and did so; but I never called upon him for anything whatever. Mr. Berret and Mr. Ward were also employed by Mr. Stockwell's orders, and I think their services have been concisely and accurately stated by themselves. Mr. Averill was employed by Mr. Stockwell's orders, on the recommendation, as I understood it at the time, of Mr. Rufus Hatch. Mr. Abert, I think, has stated concisely the character of his own services.

Mr. Chittenden came down here while the bill was pending before the Senate and performed the same service there as I have represented Mr. Ingham performing in the House. That is, he verified for me the canvass made by others; he also went among his personal friends and used his influence in general. He was here a few days. He is a man of character and position in New York. He rendered no services whatever that would not be strictly honorable and proper in any one.

The two door-keepers received a large sum of money for the service which they themselves have described, but their service was, probably, of more value to us than they themselves have intimated, owing to the fact that the fate of a bill very often depends, and it largely depended in this instance, upon having the friends of the measure present.

On the 19th or 20th of March the bill was defeated by the fact of one gentleman, a member of the House, going out on the portico of the Capitol and bringing in two Representatives to vote against it and make a tie-vote against it, whereupon five other members immediately voted against it, and we were beaten by five votes, but we were really beaten by those two votes that made the tie. It is that character of the service that gave its value to the door-keepers' service. I suppose that all the members know how door-keepers are sent to bring in the friends and also the enemies of a bill. How these sums came to be fixed, I do not recollect, but they were fixed on the recommendation, I think, of one of my subordinates, who was familiar with the details of the House and with the value of the services; I am not sure by which of my subordinates the sums were fixed; one of the two I think of being dead, and the other out of the country.

The sum paid to Mr. Morris was paid, as I have stated, for printing. I made a mistake in the testimony on Friday in regard to Mr. Whiting, and that mistake I made by following the original error which I had made in his case, and by taking the testimony of the bank officers as correct. Mr. Whiting first asked $100,000 for his services, but at my second interview with him we compromised on $65,000, and he, when I gave him the check for the $100,000, paid me back not only the $5,000 which I had previously paid, but also $30,000 additional, to correct the error which I had made in drawing the check. I had drawn it according to my recollection of the original understanding, but before I went to him I recollected the mistake, which he at once acknowledged, and he gave me back the money, and that money was part of what went to my credit in the Bank of California. That $101,000 in the Bank of California is gold and not currency, so that it does not tally at all with the $100,000 that Mr. Abert speaks of. I make that correction more cheerfully because Mr. Whiting is absent.

Q. What was the exact amount paid to Mr. Whiting?—A. Sixty-five thousand dollars.

Q. That is the only correction you now desire to make?—A. Since I was here on Friday I have seen the editor of the Sunday Herald, and the president of the ex-Patriot Association, and I want to correct an error in regard to them. I sent to the Sunday Herald $200, but, according to Mr. Burritt's statement, which I believe to be correct, it did not connect. I paid the Patriot, not at all for editorials in behalf of the measure, for the Patriot was opposed to it all the way through, but I paid it for advertising, so much a line, at the regular rates, for publishing one or two communications that were published, correcting misstatements made in editorials. They sent us a regular bill, and we paid it. I think it did not exceed altogether $200. The Patriot was consistently opposed to the subsidy all the way through. The total amount of $1,500, mentioned by me, is made up by job-printing, which was executed at different offices in Washington, partly at the Chronicle office, and partly through stationers. I did not pretend to say that we paid the Patriot and Herald that sum of money, but that we paid that amount for printing, including those papers.

Q. You have just said that the information sought by you was important, because you were called upon to decide what should be the character of the proceeding in the House?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you understand that you were able to control that proceeding to this extent?—A. I suppose that if I had gone to those whom I regarded as my especial friends in the matter, and represented to them that we were no longer desirous of having a long fight in the House over it, they would have probably yielded to the wishes of the friends of the measure, and not have made that fight. There would have been no object in their making the fight if we did not wish them to make it.

Q. You spoke of your special friends; were they in any way connected with any of the influences which you have mentioned?—A. No, sir; I refer to gentlemen with whom I was in personal communication, the public advocates of the measure, and the men who, by their position, would naturally have occupied a commanding position in such a matter.

Q. You have stated that you paid Mr. Abert $7,000 for services which he has stated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Which services seem to have occupied him a number of months. Mr. Abert, as I understand, is a gentleman of influence and character about Washington. Now will you explain why you regarded $7,000 as a sufficient sum for him, and yet felt called upon to pay Mr. Schumaker $300,000 for like services, and for his influence, and to pay Mr. William S. King $125,000?—A. Mr. Abert's services were almost entirely of a clerical character; he was not required or expected to use his influence in Congress, because he had very little. He belonged to a party which at the time was in a very small minority in Congress, (I speak of the democratic party,) and he was not a very influential or active member of that party, and had very little influence in it. The services rendered by Mr. Abert were almost entirely rendered in my house, as it were. He wrote letters for me; he carried messages between Mr. Stockwell and myself; he made payments from my private bank-account for house expenses and everything of that sort; so that I consider the $7,000 an ample payment for these services. In the next place, he would probably have received a very large portion of that amount; whether the bill passed or not. In reference to Mr. Schumaker, I paid him what I supposed was the agreement between us, and the price which he fixed himself, and which I did not consider as an exorbitant price.

Q. Was that agreement between you and Mr. Schumaker directly?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he demand the sum of $300,000?—A. As nearly as I recollect I asked him how much he would expect to receive for his services, and he told me $300,000. It never occurred to me that that was a very large sum in proportion to sums which I have known to be paid for similar services, and in proportion to the amount involved in that case.

Q. Did you ever know of so large a fee in any other case before Congress?—A. I never knew personally of any fees before Congress.

Q. You say that you regarded this as a small fee in comparison with other fees for like services?—A. I did not say a small fee, but I said I did not consider it a large fee.

Q. Did you ever know so large a fee to be given before?—A. I have been three times offered sums exceeding $100,000 for my own services, and I have declined them because I did not consider it my duty to undertake the task, and did not wish to go into that line of business. If my services were worth $100,000, I should have considered Mr. Schumaker's worth $300,000.

Q. You received nothing like this sum for your services?—A. When the whole thing comes to be ciphered down you will find that I really did not get anything for my services.

Q. Give us your reasons for paying this large fee to Mr. Schumaker?—

A. I considered him a man of intelligence and position; able, both intellectually and by his policy, to carry the measure through the House.

Q. You stated that Mr. Abert belonged to a particular political party. Did not Mr. Schumaker belong to the same party?—A. Yes; but I said that Mr. Abert had no influence. Mr. Schumaker having been a member of the House, had a very large personal influence entirely irrespective of his party, both in his party and out of his party, while Mr. Abert was living in the country, in Maryland, and belonging to the minority, and being an influential member of that minority, and having no associations with Congress. This is what I intended.

Q. You have explained the reasons why you thought Mr. Whiting worth the large fee that you paid him, $65,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You paid $125,000 to Mr. King, on Mr. Stockwell's order substantially?—A. Substantially so. I said the other day that if Mr. King was employed at all he was employed by Mr. Stockwell. All that I know about the matter is this, that Mr. Stockwell told me that I would find Mr. King in Washington, and that I was to consult with him and co-operate with him, and that he, Mr. King, had Mr. Stockwell's entire confidence.

Q. Was the sum paid to Mr. King fixed by Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir; it was fixed in this way: I went to Mr. King about the time that the bill first failed in the House, and which was about the time when I really took entire charge of the case. I asked him how much he expected to get, and my recollection is that he said $125,000. I forget at this moment whether I told Mr. Stockwell that or not, but my impression is that I did. Mr. King was aware that Mr. Stockwell was engaged in large stock-operations. He talked to him very often about those stock-operations, and I understand that he said that whatever money he received in this matter he received from a stock-pool. That is not my understanding, but I can see that it may have been his.

Q. We come back again to the reasons why you fixed Mr. Schumaker's fee at so large a sum as $300,000.—A. Taking his position and character, his experience, and his general ability into account, I consider him as being one of the most valuable men I had ever seen in Washington. We had no man to replace him on the floor of the House. We had just a month between the time when my arrangement with Mr. Stockwell was made and the day when this bill came up and was defeated to make our canvass in the House. It had to be hurried and it had to be done well.

Q. You say that you regard Mr. Schumaker as a very valuable man. State the respects in which his special value consisted.—A. I think I have stated that in my answer.

Q. Can you throw any further light upon it than you have done?—A. I cannot.

Q. Did you know of any disbursements that he was to make?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not suggest any disbursements to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any understanding between you in any way that there should be any disbursements made by him?—A. Neither that there should be nor that there should not be. We had no understanding about it at all.

Q. Can you now tell whether he actually made any disbursements?—A. I have no idea whatever of it.

Q. Can you tell now what was done with the $300,000 that went into his hands?—A. The only information I have on the subject is in the testimony before the committee, and if the committee can make any head or tail out of that it surpasses me, for I cannot.

Q. Did you have any information prior to that time as to the disposition of the checks, or either of them?—A. I did not.

Q. Did any portion of that money ever come back to you in any form for your own use?—A. Not a dollar; nor for any other purpose.

Q. Have you any idea that any portion of that money ever went to Mr. Stockwell for any purpose?—A. It may have all gone to him for all I know; I have no idea on the subject.

Q. I ask you if you do know that any of it went to him?—A. I do not.

Q. Mr. Stockwell asked you how Schumaker was doing here?—A. He asked me what he was doing here.

Q. What was your answer to that question?—A. My answer was what I have stated—"How did you know that Schumaker was employed?" He nodded his head, as much as to say "I know." I did not think at the time, but I thought afterward that the way in which he came to know it was very simple—his own personal attorney, Mr. Parsons, probably communicated it to him.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Stockwell as to your understanding with Mr. Schumaker; was he cognizant of the amount that was to be paid to Mr. Schumaker?—A. He was not cognizant of the amount, but he knew that it was a large amount. Mr. Stockwell on one occasion told me that he understood that Mr. Schumaker was to get $400,000, and I said, "No." That is all I said. I did not communicate the details to him. He got that information from some one else. And he said that he thought that that amount was too large. I did not say anything more about it.

Q. At one time, during the process of these operations, you sent in your resignation?—A. Yes.

Q. At that time there was a large amount of money in your hands?—A. There was some money in my hands, I do not recollect how much without striking a balance, and there were checks for a large amount in my hands.

Q. Had these checks been used, or were they simply held by you?—A. A portion of them had been used. I think that will appear in my previous testimony.

Q. At the time you tendered your resignation, it covered this subsidy arrangement as well as your San Francisco business?—A. It did not specially refer to this, but my understanding, and Mr. Stockwell's, was, that I was to retire from this as well as from that.

Q. You say in your testimony before the committee that you stated to Mr. Stockwell that your understanding was that you were to have $500,000 instead of $250,000, as he had indicated?—A. Yes; that was on the 13th of February.

Q. And that you should at the proper time call upon him for his check for the additional amount?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Make it a little more clear to the committee when you obtained the understanding that the sum was to be $500,000?—A. In a personal interview with him before the 13th of February. It was not only in a personal interview, but also in a verbal message that I sent to him by Mr. Abert, who was the bearer of this letter from Mr. Stockwell to me. Mr. Abert took him the message and took back his letter to me.

Q. Can you make more clear to the committee what was the nature of the understanding between you and Mr. Stockwell with reference to this subsidy?—A. I think I have made that as clear in my testimony as I can make it. It would only confuse it by trying to make it more clear.

Q. Did that include an understanding that there should be any stock operations in which you should be interested, or in which the persons who were to assist you in the subsidy should be interested?—A. No, sir. Mr. Stockwell offered me at one time, just before we made this arrangement, a call of 10,000 shares of stock, and offered to guarantee that I should not make less than $10 a share on it. I told him that I did not want his calls, that I had neither time nor inclination to watch the market. That is the only communication that ever took place between us in relation to stocks.

Q. Either with reference to yourself or to any person who should assist you here?—A. With reference to the subject.

Q. Covering the whole ground?—A. Yes.

Q. Then you say to us distinctly that you are not cognizant of any stock operations that were to affect the passage of the subsidy?—A. I was not cognizant of them; I have heard of them, but it was mere hearsay.

Q. You have stated to us that you disbursed $750,000. Is that the total amount of the money which you disbursed here for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. It is not.

Q. Be kind enough to state what the total is.—A. I cannot state the total amount until I have seen the original canceled checks from the company's office accounting for the $140,000 which it is alleged I had before that. But, assuming that $140,000 to be correct, it is the sum which Mr. Stockwell stated to me in July, 1872, when he came to San Francisco, I had received before the subsidy passed. I disputed that statement then, but I proceeded to account to him for the money. Expecting that he would ask for an account, which I had made up my mind then to give him, although I had before refused to do so, I made up the statement of the amount, and I accounted for the whole of it, including that $140,000, with the exception of $85,000, which then (that was about the 1st of July) remained in my hands unaccounted for, and which I was willing that he should assume that I had kept for myself, as he had offered me himself $100,000.

Q. $750,000 and $140,000 make how much?—A. Make $890,000; and I was ready to account for $805,000 of it. I could afterward have accounted for more, but that is the way that the account stood in the first week of July. He never called upon me for that account at all.

Q. But the gross amount, then, would be $890,000?—A. Assuming that $140,000 to be correct, it would be $890,000.

Q. Is that the entire amount?—A. It is the entire amount as it passed through my hands.

Q. Have you any knowledge of any other moneys paid in connection with the subsidy that did not pass through your hands?—A. I have heard that there was more, but I have no knowledge of it. I know, for instance, from Mr. Parsons' testimony, that he received $13,500, which was paid to him by Mr. Stockwell. He had received part of it from me, but that was afterwards paid back by Mr. Stockwell.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to the payment of any other money in addition to the $890,000?—A. Only by hearsay; I know nothing personally about it.

Q. I asked you whether any portion of the moneys that Mr. Schumaker had was returned to the company or to Mr. Stockwell. I should like now to ask you the same question with reference to the other money that passed through your hands, whether you know or have any reason to believe that any of it was returned to the company or to Mr. Stockwell, or came back to yourself?—A. No portion of the money came back to myself, and I not only have no information that would lead me to believe that any of it came back to Mr. Stockwell or to the company, but I am pretty confident that none ever did. I am now speaking of all except Mr. Schumaker's, for I know nothing as to the correctness of his testimony. He has testified that he gave the money back to Mr. Stockwell. I do not know whether that is so or not, and therefore I do not want to testify in regard to that, but I am pretty confident that none of the others gave back their money.

Q. Are you any more confident in regard to them than you are in regard to Mr. Schumaker?—A. Yes; because I think that if any of them had given back their money to Mr. Stockwell they would have made haste to say so.

Q. Do you know anything of the settlement between the Pacific Mail Steamship Company and Mr. Stockwell?—A. I do.

Q. In that settlement were there included any payments on account of this subsidy?—A. All of them were included.

Q. How much in amount?—A. That I cannot say; I will only answer in this way: On the 1st of May, 1873, a statement was drawn up by Mr. Stockwell (which was prepared by Captain Phelps) of the assets and liabilities of the company on that day. On the 26th of May a new administration came in, of which Capt. George H. Bradbury was president. On the 31st of May that new administration published a new statement of assets and liabilities, and the difference between these two statements represented the sum total of all the difference in the accounts of the company up to that date. Mr. Stockwell received in the fall of 1873, in consideration of the payment by him to the company of 10,000 shares of Pacific Mail stock, a full release of all claims and demands whatsoever, and a discharge of all his actions and conversions, as I understood it. That included everything known prior to that date, and, as I understand, everything was known on the 26th of May, 1873.

Q. Do you know whether in that settlement any moneys appeared as returned?—A. I think there was nothing returned in that settlement, except these 10,000 shares of stock.

Q. I mean whether, as the basis of settlement, any money returned from any of those persons to Mr. Stockwell or any one else was specified or appeared in any way as a basis of the settlement?—A. No, sir; I think that that was a general whitewashing of everything, whether specified or not specified.

Q. Were those statements printed?—A. They were. The company can produce them, or I can if it cannot.

Q. Were you a party to that settlement in any way?—A. I was not.

Q. Were you present at it?—A. I was not.

Q. Do you testify of your own knowledge?—A. I testify on statements made to me by the two presidents of the company, A. B. Stockwell and George H. Bradbury, and also from confirmatory information received at the time from other sources.

Q. Then it is secondary evidence?—A. It is secondary evidence; Mr. Bradbury was party to the one statement and Mr. Stockwell to the other, and both statements agreed in every particular.

Q. Have you given to the committee the names of all the persons to whom, or through whom, you made payments?—A. I think I have; I have endeavored to do so.

Q. Did I understand you to speak of one person who was dead, and another person who was absent, as persons whose names you did not give?—A. No, sir; that was in reference to the sums paid to Mr. Hersey and Mr. Boyd. I said that I would not like to state who had indicated those sums to me as proper payments to those persons, because my mind ran upon the name of one man who is dead and another who is absent, and I was not positive which one of them it was, or whether it was either of them.

Q. So that you desire the committee to understand now that you have given the names of all the persons to whom or through whom you paid money?—A. Of every man whom I remember, and I should be surprised to hear of anybody else.

Q. You signified the other day that you would take time to consider?—A. I have taken time.

Q. There appeared before the committee on Saturday a check which was paid to the order of Henry C. DuVal, seeming to be indorsed by Harry C. DuVal, that seems to be connected with a part of the money which passed into the hands of Mr. Schumaker; do you know of such a person?—A. I never heard of him before.

Mr. NIBLACK. One thing that has impressed the committee more than any other perhaps, (at all events it has impressed me,) has been the extraordinary large sums of money which you have paid to comparatively unimportant persons, particularly the $11,000 that you paid to Mr. Hersey, one of the assistant doorkeepers. Have you any further explanation to make more than you have made in regard to him?

The WITNESS. None, except that I considered his services valuable from my personal knowledge, which was less than that of some of my subordinates, and that that sum was recommended to be paid by one of my subordinates, whose name I have forgotten.

Mr. NIBLACK. It has been intimated to me that Mr. Hersey claimed to be able to control the votes of three members of Congress, and that $9,000 of the money was given to him really in consideration for his having controlled those votes, and $2,000 for his own services; do you know anything about that?

The WITNESS. I never heard that before, and I should consider it extremely doubtful, because I think that if he had promised these three members of Congress $3,000 apiece they would have gone after him and got it.

Mr. NIBLACK. We often hear men claim that they are able to control votes of members of Congress, while they have no foundation for the claim, but merely do so in order to enhance their services and their importance.

The WITNESS. No doubt about that. I have had an opportunity of buying up the whole Congress in a lump if I could have believed that they would have delivered the article.

Mr. NIBLACK. I understand that all of us are bought and sold occasionally, without our knowing it, by men claiming to be able to control the votes of members of Congress, while they have no reason whatever for asserting such a claim as regards any member.

The WITNESS. No doubt of it.

By Mr. FOSTER :

Q. What did Mr. Schumaker represent that he could do ?—A. Mr. Schumaker did not make any representation at all. I had known Mr. Schumaker for several years. I had known him here while he was a member of Congress, and I myself selected Mr. Schumaker. I went to him and asked him to go into the case. He was reluctant to do so. When Mr. Schumaker came down here before the first subsidy had failed, and when the Challis suit was pending, he came into my room one day, threw his hat down on the table, and said that he wanted to get out of this thing, that he wanted nothing more to do with it. I asked him to stay, because I had no way of replacing him. There are three ways of looking at a bill of that kind. As far as the Government is concerned, it is an appropriation for the revival of commerce and for the encouragement of ship-building, while the company itself might look upon it as a subvention to enable it to perform the service ; but the outside public would look upon it as a donation of $5,000,000 to the treasurer of the corporation, and they would see no more reason why they should go to work and carry that $5,000,000 from the Treasury into 59 Wall street, than they should to carry the Consolidated Virginia Bonanza there.

Q. Then Mr. Schumaker made no representation as to what he should do ?—A. No, sir. I had already made up my mind on that subject. I had known him for several years.

Q. What did you expect he could do ?—A. I thought that he could represent the matter to different members of Congress in such a light that they would be disposed to listen favorably to the arguments presented, and that the prejudice which existed in Congress against the measure would be probably overcome. Then I thought that he would be able to make a canvass of the whole House, and to let us know within a very short time exactly how we stood, because there was no use of our going ahead and fighting the thing if we were sure to be beaten.

Q. Did you not expect him to use some of this money ?—A. I supposed that necessarily he would employ somebody to assist him. I did not suppose that he would go around all alone, on the floor of the House, like a single ewe-lamb.

Q. How was his memory then ?—A. I never had occasion to tax it. It was his prophetic power that I was relying on then, and not his recollection.

By Mr. WOOD :

Q. Had you ever had any experience in this kind of business before that subsidy ?—A. I never had ; I had had the experience of being twice very badly beaten in it before.

Q. But before this particular measure, had you had any experience of that kind ?—A. We had had several measures of legislation pending in connection with the subsidy, in which I had some experience ; but, disconnected with the subsidy, I never had anything to do with Congress before.

Q. Did you ever have any experience with reference to the legislature of California in lobbying ?—A. I never was in Sacramento during a session of the legislature.

Q. At what particular date in 1872 did you come into this case ?—A.

Almost from the moment of my arrival in New York I think it was about the 13th January. I did not take charge of the case then.

Q. I refer to the time when you did take charge of it?—A. I considered myself virtually in charge of the measure about the 1st of February.

Q. Was that before or after the first failure of the bill in the House?—A. It was before it. The bill failed on the 21st March.

Q. I understood you to say on Friday that you did not come into the case until after the failure of the bill?—A. I did not take entire and exclusive charge of the case until after that. I did not attempt before that to interfere with any arrangements which Mr. Stockwell had made. I came here and found Mr. King occupying himself on the floor of the House, and after the failure of the bill I took the responsibility of telling Mr. King to keep off the floor of the House. That was the first time he had attempted to recognize my authority in any way whatever. I gave it to him merely as a piece of advice.

Q. Let us understand distinctly what your position was before the failure of the bill in connection with Mr. Stockwell and the disbursement of the money, and what it became after the failure of the bill in the House?—A. It was substantially the same before as it was after, except that after the failure of the bill I took charge myself of Mr. Stockwell's agents.

Q. Then what did you mean by telling us on Friday that you came into the case after the first failure of the bill in the House?—A. I do not think I said so.

Mr. WOOD. I think that these were your words.

The WITNESS. If these were my words, they were inconsistent with my own testimony. I had entire charge of it, except that I did not consider myself responsible for the persons whom Mr. Stockwell had employed, or consider myself entitled to control their movements, but I afterward did so.

Q. You afterward went into the case and employed persons?—A. I did so before. I employed Mr. Schumaker before I took exclusive charge. If anybody had employed Mr. King, Mr. Stockwell must have employed him; and if anybody had employed Mr. Parsons, it must have been Mr. Stockwell. After the bill had failed I took charge of their movements, whereas before that I let them do precisely as they pleased.

Q. Mr. Stockwell returned to New York and you remained here in charge to carry out his arrangements and your own?—A. Mr. Stockwell was only here one or two days at a time at any period.

Q. Are we to understand that you paid to Mr. Whiting for his own individual services and individually the large sum which you did pay him, with the understanding that it was for him individually, and not to be divided with anybody else?—A. Yes; I did so understand; I did not understand that it was to be divided, and therefore I understood that it was not to be divided.

Q. What was your opinion, at the time that you agreed to give him so large a sum, as to what he was to do with it?—A. My opinion was that he was, in all probability, to keep it.

Q. Who was he that he should be entitled to so large a sum?—A. I think I have stated virtually who he was. He was a man who, I believed, was a strong friend of Senator Cole, of California.

Q. Then you gave it to him because he was a strong friend of Senator Cole, of California?—A. Yes.

Q. And when you gave it to him, you gave it to him because you supposed that, being a friend of Senator Cole, he would be able, through the instrumentality of this large sum of money, to get Mr. Cole's support for the measure?—A. I cannot answer that categorically, without making a mistake.

Mr. WOOD. It is susceptible of being answered by yes or no.

The WITNESS. If I answered yes, my answer might mislead you.

Mr. WOOD. We are quite familiar with the case and cannot be misled by any correct answer that you give.

The WITNESS. I think I am entitled to answer that question in my own words.

The CHAIRMAN. You are entitled to answer every question in your own words if you answer it responsively.

The WITNESS. I knew that Mr. Cole would take an active and leading part in the measure if his friends were interested in it, and he would not if the persons whom he supposed to be his enemies were only interested in it. He regarded the Pacific Mail Steamship Company as politically opposed to him, and I knew that he regarded Mr. Whiting as a friend.

Q. And hence you agreed to pay Mr. Whiting this sum of money?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the effect on Mr. Cole of that agreement with Mr. Whiting?—A. After I had made the arrangement with Mr. Whiting I found that Mr. Cole, when the bill came up in the Senate, took an active, energetic, and leading part in favor of the measure.

Q. And you were then satisfied that you had made a profitable arrangement with Mr. Whiting?—A. I was.

Q. Do you swear positively that you paid the sum of $300,000 to Mr. Schumaker, and that you gave him no instructions as to how any part of it was to go?—A. I do most positively.

Q. Do you swear positively that he did not say to you, as an inducement to give him that large sum of money, that he could influence such and such votes?—A. I do positively.

Q. Do you know the names of any gentlemen who changed their votes between the defeat of the measure in the first instance in the House and the time when it came back again?—A. I do not know even that there was any change of votes. My impression is that the House was a different House on the two occasions. On the first occasion the vote was taken by tellers, and not by yeas and nays, and the vote on that occasion was small. I think that the negative vote the last time was about the same in number as it was the first time. The yeas and nays were called the last time and were not called the first time.

Mr. BURCHARD. The first vote was on the amendment offered in Committee of the Whole, when the vote could not be taken by yeas and nays.

The WITNESS. Yes, it was taken by tellers, and the vote was very much smaller then than when the last vote was taken.

Q. Notwithstanding there was no vote by yeas and nays on the first occasion, you are probably aware that some gentlemen did change their votes?—A. I am not; I have heard so as a matter of rumor, but I never heard the name of a single member who changed his vote.

Q. Do you know of any individual who changed his vote?—A. I do not.

Q. Did not some of your agents communicate to you the names of members who had changed their votes?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you swear positively as to that?—A. I do.

Q. And you had not in your mind any indication of a member who would be induced to change his vote?—A. No, sir; and I would not have listened to any such representation, because there was no means of telling whether the member changed his vote or not, or how he voted in the first instance.

Q. But you have stated that you did employ Mr. Whiting for the purpose of effecting an influence on a very important leading man in the Senate; why did you not carry out the same principle in regard to the House of Representatives?—A. Mr. Cole was a Senator from California; he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I think he was second on the Post-Office Committee. It was, therefore, necessary, this being a Pacific coast measure, and being pending before both of those committees, that he should take the laboring oar. If there had been any gentleman in the same position on the floor of the House, and if I had found that he regarded me as his political enemy, and that, by getting one of his political or personal friends to work in the matter, I could induce him to take the laboring oar through my employment of this man, and not by any other means, I should have taken the same means as I did with Mr. Cole.

Mr. WOOD. But there were gentlemen in the House in the same position, so far as affecting the measure was concerned, men who could probably have been appealed to in the same method and by the same means.

The WITNESS. I think there was no one in the House who occupied any such commanding position who was not for us on the merits of the case, or against us on the merits of the case.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Cole was for you on the merits of the case?

The WITNESS. Yes; but these gentlemen in the House were actively for us on the merits of the case; besides that, they had no real or fancied injuries to revenge.

Q. Then it was to subdue these fancied injuries that Mr. Whiting was paid?—A. It was to convert a gentleman from a lukewarm friend into an active friend of the measure. There is not a politician in the United States who does not understand that a man does not break his neck for people who are opposed to him.

Q. You now say that you paid Mr. Schumaker $300,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you say, in your statement before the committee and the House, that you had paid him $275,000?—A. I was asked before the House an entirely different question. I was asked the largest sum I had paid to any one person, and I said $275,000, that being the picture on my mind of the largest sum I had paid.

Q. And you now say positively that it was $300,000 that you paid him?—A. It was.

Q. From what memoranda have you refreshed your memory since you were here on Friday in reference to the corrections which you have made this morning?—A. I have made only one correction and that was in Mr. Whiting's case. I have not refreshed my memory by looking over any memoranda, but by going away from the memoranda, that is, from the bank-account and from the testimony of the bank-officers, and by looking over the case as it was, and it came to my mind about Mr. Whiting giving me back the $35,000.

Q. You have no private memoranda as to your disbursement outside of what you have told us?—A. I have not.

Q. With reference to this $25,000 sent to Mr. Schumaker from California, how was it sent?—A. It was sent by draft of the Bank of California on Lee & Waller, of New York.

Q. Are you quite sure of that?—A. Positive.

Q. Payable to whose order?—A. I am not positive, but I think it was payable to my own order, and indorsed by me to J. G. Schumaker. My impression arises simply from the fact that I would not have cared to have let the officers and clerks of the Bank of California know his name in the matter.

Q. You are quite sure of the remittance?—A. Yes. It was a draft. Drafts are issued by the Bank of California in two parts, original and duplicate. It was a sight draft on New York.

Q. To whom did you remit that draft?—A. I remitted it to J. G. Schumaker, 17 William street, New York.

Q. Did you keep a copy of the letter to him?—A. I doubt if there was any letter except, perhaps, merely a memorandum. There is no copy of such a letter in my letter-book, for I have looked to see.

Q. But you are certain you sent it to him by mail?—A. I am certain that I sent it in an envelope with a memorandum; but whether it was a letter or a pencil note, I do not recollect. There was no copy of the letter.

Q. With reference to Mr. King, his arrangement, I understand you, was made with Mr. Stockwell?—A. Whatever arrangement there was made with him was made by Mr. Stockwell.

Q. When you came to pay Mr. King this $115,000, did you have any conversation with him?—A. None, except what I stated in my testimony on Friday.

Q. Did you ask him what he had done for that sum of money?—A. I did not.

Q. Did he tell you what he had done?—A. He did not say anything about it.

Q. What did you think you were paying it to him for?—A. I thought I was paying it to him for his services.

Q. What were these services?—A. Using his influence in behalf of the bill, canvassing the House, to see who was for it, and who was against it, and who doubtful, and canvassing the Senate in the same way. All his services which were rendered in the House were rendered prior to the time when I took charge of the measure.

Q. How many persons had you canvassing the two Houses?—A. I had some persons for verifying the canvass made by others.

Q. Then you employed one man to watch another?—A. No; but as the different persons employed reported to me differently, one man's name would be checked on different lists in two or three different ways; and then I employed another man, not for the purpose of watching any of them, but in order to give me exact information how these persons stood.

Mr. WOOD. I hope you will endeavor to make more clear than you have done, and more satisfactory to myself at least, the real and true reason why you gave these enormous sums of money to these men. You cannot make anybody believe that you gave $115,000 to one man, $65,000 to another, and $300,000 to another, merely for the influence which either of these gentlemen might have used in a general, legal, and proper way.

The WITNESS. Is it only the size of the amounts that makes you doubt it?

Mr. WOOD. That is in itself sufficient to shake the confidence of any man in your statement.

The WITNESS. The amount did not strike me as very large.

Mr. WOOD. Do you not think $300,000 a very large sum?

The WITNESS. That depends on what it is for. If I was asked to get a subsidy of $750,000 here now, I should charge $5,000,000 for getting it. I have known $250,000 in gold coin to be paid to one man for three weeks' services—for traveling in the cars two weeks and for seeing people another week.

Q. In what country was that?—A. In the United States of America, in a matter involving far less money than this did, and in which there was no scandal and no possibility of scandal.

Mr. BECK. There is a mistake, I think, in the testimony of either yourself or Mr. Eugene Kelly, a banker of New York, as to who Mr. Whiting was. Mr. Kelly speaks with some confidence of his being a brother-in-law of Senator Cole, and I understood you the other day to say that you thought not.

The WITNESS. I think not, for the reason that I know a Mr. B. C. Whiting, who is a brother-in-law of Mr. Cole, and I know Mrs. Cole and Mrs. B. C. Whiting, and I never heard that the two Whitings married sisters. But Mr. Kelly may be right, and I may be wrong. I only do not know that A. H. Whiting is Mr. Cole's brother-in-law, and I never heard so. I do not even know that A. H. Whiting is any relation of B. C. Whiting, though I have heard that they were either brothers or cousins.

Q. Do you know where A. H. Whiting resides?—A. I do not. I did not even know where he resided in 1872. He had three places of business, as I understand—Arizona, San Francisco, and New York—and he might have considered his residence at either place. He is very probably in Arizona where he has mining interests as well as transportation business.

Mr. BECK. Be kind enough to try and make out a condensed statement of all your expenditures, in connection with this subsidy, so that they will all appear together instead of being scattered over seven days' examination.

The WITNESS. I will do so, and will send it in to-morrow. I will have to take for granted the correctness of that $140,000.

Mr. BECK. In the first statement, as to the expenditure of the $750,000, you have made some correction. It appears that Schumaker got $300,000 of that money; King, $125,000; Abert, $125,000, and Mr. Whiting and yourself, between you, $200,000. I mean that that is the way in which the $750,000 was drawn out of the bank.

The WITNESS. You are right, I believe.

Mr. BECK. Then you had previously paid Governor Randall $35,000?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Mr. BECK. And you had paid other sums either as retainers or as certain fees?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; or as expenses. The total amount remaining in my hands unaccounted for in July, which I was willing to have Mr. Stockwell believe I had kept for myself, was $85,000; and that would have made the whole $895,000.

Mr. BECK. I understood you to say that Mr. Shaw was to keep all his money himself?

The WITNESS. Yes, so far as I know. In Mr. Shaw's case, as he was employed by Mr. Stockwell's order, I reported to Mr. Stockwell (which I did not do in any other case, or in very few cases) the amount which he was to be paid, and it did not make any impression whatever. I thought I would let everybody "skin their own skunks." I did not interfere at all.

Mr. BECK. Some gentlemen supposed that there might be an arrangement with Mr. Shaw for a division of the money with others.

The WITNESS. There was no arrangement between Mr. Shaw and myself at all. I found that he had his information from Mr. Clews that he was to be employed, and I had my orders to employ him from Mr. Stockwell.

Mr. FOSTER. I heard it stated that you exhibited a list of persons to whom portions of Mr. Forney's $25,000 went.

The WITNESS. As I never understood that Mr. Forney was to pay any money to anybody, and as I never saw him after the money was paid, I think that if you chase up that list you will find it disappear where some of those other rumors have disappeared.

Mr. FOSTER. How is it in point of fact?

The WITNESS. I do not think that such a list ever existed.

Q. You never made any such statement?—A. I never did.

Q. And you say the same as to Mr. Shaw?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as to Sam Hatch?—A. The same answer applies to him.

By Mr. SHELDON:

Q. Have you fixed the date when Mr. Schumaker was employed?—A. I cannot do so positively, except by saying that it was shortly before the 13th of February. I can only fix that by remembering that he was employed before Mr. Stockwell's letter was received by me.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Were most of those large sums to be contingent on the success of the measure?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And therefore it was that this large amount was taken out so late as the 29th of May, after the contingency had passed?—A. Yes.

Q. The actual payments were not to be uncommonly large unless the contingency happened?—A. No, sir.

Q. And it was after it was all over that this $750,000 was drawn out for the purpose of meeting the contingent liabilities?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Did either of those gentlemen, Mr. Hatch, Mr. Schumaker, Mr. King, or Mr. Whiting, furnish you a slip of paper with any names of members of either House whom they could influence?—A. Mr. Hatch was the only one who showed me a list of any kind of the members whom he could influence. He showed me that list simply, as I understood it, for the purpose of showing me who his acquaintances were; he did not propose to be able to control these men; he simply said that he did not know anybody outside of these men, and that he would not undertake to speak to any one else.

Q. He did show you a list?—A. I think he did. I will not be positive even about that, but I am positive that the others did not. Mr. Hatch's list was either a manuscript list or a roll-call of the House; I think it was a roll call of the House.

Q. How many names were on that list?—A. I should think about twenty names.

Q. Who were they?—A. That I cannot tell; it did not make any impression upon me at all then or since.

Q. Can you not recollect two or three of them?—A. I do not think I can recollect two or three of them; he marked a number of gentlemen, I think, of the Missouri delegation, and a number of gentlemen of the Louisiana delegation as persons whom he knew personally, but it did not make any special impression upon me.

Q. Did you not give him this money for the purpose of influencing these particular people?—A. I did not. I gave him the money because I was instructed by Mr. Stockwell to employ him.

Q. And you do not recollect any of the names that he showed you?—A. It would be an injustice to attempt to recollect the names.

Q. Was he the only person who furnished a list of that kind?—A. I think he was.

Q. Are you certain?—A. I am not certain, because I do not really recollect it.

Q. You would recollect it if it had occurred?—A. If it had been an important transaction, and had made an impression upon my mind at the time, I should have recollected it.

Q. Did you not consider this an important transaction?—A. I did not.

Q. Involving the expenditure of nearly a million dollars?—A. I am speaking of the particular transaction. If a man had come in and showed me a list and said that he could control these twenty men, and I had dealt with him for those twenty men on that basis, I think I should have recollected it, because I should have regarded that as an exceedingly important circumstance; but if he merely came in and said, when I was instructed by another man to employ him, "Here are gentlemen whom I know," that would not make any impression upon my mind at all.

Mr. WOOD. We assume that you must have had some reason for giving these sums of money predicated upon the persons whom this man could influence, and we want to find out your reasons.—A. Take Mr. Hatch's case for example. That assumption would be based upon the supposition that I employed Mr. Hatch. Now, as I did not employ him, but was simply obeying orders in the matter, I did not pretend to have any knowledge of the subject.

Q. Still, as the agent of Mr. Stockwell and of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, you would not have paid money to men if they had not earned it?—A. I would if I had been ordered to.

Q. Without taking cognizance of the fact whether a man was entitled to anything or not?—A. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. I wish you to state the amount which you received in checks and money prior to your receiving the $750,000. We understand it to be about $140,000.

The WITNESS. That is what appears from the company's books. My recollection is that it was less. My recollection also is that I received a large part of that amount from Mr. Stockwell himself individually, and only a small portion of it from the company; but I will assume that it is $140,000, which assumption I made in the account which I was going to give Mr. Stockwell in July.

Mr. KASSON. And on that basis the entire amount coming into your hands would have been $890,000?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. KASSON. And beyond that aggregate sum of $890,000 there was no money disbursed by you, or by any person to your knowledge, in connection with the obtaining of the subsidy?—A. No, sir; none whatever, except as is sworn to in the testimony.

Q. Aside from the testimony here, you do not know of any other sum being paid?—A. The only sum proved here, as I understand it, is the payment to Mr. Parsons.

Q. Whatever was paid to Mr. Parsons, not through you, would be in excess of the $890,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you at any time say to Mr. Whitelaw Reid that you had received more than $900,000?—A. I did not; I read in Mr. Reid's testimony his account of what I stated to him, and I think that Mr. Reid misunderstood me, although I have no doubt that his misunderstanding was caused by a confusion in my statement. I said to Mr. Reid that I had understood (as mere hearsay) that $300,000 had been spent in addition to the $900,000 which I had expended, and that it had been paid to persons whom Mr. Stockwell himself employed. He then said "Whom did Mr. Stockwell employ?" I said, "Well, Parsons, among others," and I referred him to Mr. Parsons' Cleveland speech for the fact. Mr. Parsons had himself stated, in a speech at Cleveland during the campaign, that he was employed and paid by Mr. Stockwell as attorney, and therefore I felt no delicacy in alluding to his name. But I did not say that Mr. Parsons had received $300,000, and I had no reason to believe so. Mr. Reid, I believe, has corrected this statement of his, and when he was doing so he got my message wrong, as he made it appear that I had said that Mr. Stockwell paid back the $300,000, which I did not say.

Q. You say that Mr. Rufus Hatch suggested the employment of Mr. Averill?—A. Yes.

Q. State what knowledge you have of that fact.—A. No knowledge, except that I understood from Mr. Stockwell that that was the fact.

Q. And at the same time did you understand what Mr. Averill was to do?—A. I did not. He was referred to me unconditionally, and I put him on the work which he has stated himself in his testimony, which was the only thing I wanted him for, and the only thing I thought he could do.

Q. About what time was Mr. Samuel Hatch employed?—A. He was employed in March.

Q. And from that time until when?—A. Until the bill finally passed.

Q. Did you pay Mr. Sam Hatch any money with the understanding that he was to pay it or any part of it over to any member of Congress or any officers of either House?—A. I did not.

Q. Did Mr. Hatch, or either of the agents employed in connection with the subsidy, make a statement to you, at that time or afterwards that he had paid certain sums to any member or officer of either House of Congress?—A. No, sir; I will except Mr. Hersey and Mr. Boyd, of course.

Q. But no others?—A. No, sir.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me to say, before putting another question, that an idea seems to exist in some directions, which the committee does not at all feel, that there may be some hesitation in our inquiries lest a result would be developed affecting some members or officers of either House. I said that in order to ask you to search your memory now, and if there is any possible link in the chain of evidence which you have not stated, and which is within your knowledge, that will lead us to any trace of a member or officer of either House of Congress who was interested in any way in this money, I ask you to state it, after carefully remembering and considering the question.

The WITNESS. I know of none.

Mr. KASSON. Every fact that will put us upon any line of inquiry that you know, in any direction, has been stated by you?

The WITNESS. I have endeavored to state it. If I should think of anything afterward, I shall let the committee know; but I think I have pumped my memory pretty dry.

Mr. KASSON. We want from you, as from every other witness, the last scintilla of evidence that will lead us to the ultimate resting-place of all this money, and you say now that you know nothing else that will lead us further on to the ultimate resting-place of this money, unless we have already found it.

The WITNESS. I know of nothing else.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Have you a copy of your account with the American Exchange Bank?—A. Not with me, but I have it in the city.

Q. Here is a copy of the account which has been furnished to the committee.—A. [After looking at it.] I have no doubt it is correct; I recognize the handwriting.

Q. The account of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company shows that on the 29th of January there was charged to expenses in Washington, Richard B. Irwin, $25,000; state whether you received that sum, and whether it is entered on your bank-account.—A. I received it, and it is entered on my bank-account.

Q. On the 14th of February, there is a charge of $40,000; did you receive it?—A. That is a false entry. It was not made on the 14th of February. I received from A. B. Stockwell, individually, the proceeds of a check for $40,000 on the Merchants and Manufacturers' Bank, and how could that possibly have been paid to me by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company two weeks beforehand?

Q. Mr. Stockwell's letter of the 13th of February states that he inclosed checks to your order for $250,000—$100,000, $110,000, and $40,000.—A. These were his own checks.

Q. Are either of them entered in your account?—A. Mr. Stockwell's check for $40,000 on the Merchants and Manufacturers' Bank, dated the 13th of February, was sent by me for collection about the latter part of February through the American Exchange Bank, and is here credited on the 26th of February; but I never received that money at all from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. I call your attention to entries in the books of the company. I find a check, No. 1647; dated February 13, 1872, by A. B. Stockwell, president, for $40,000 in favor of A. Masterton; is that the check which you received?—A. No, sir; that was a check which was paid to Mr. Masterton, who was also one of those innocent and ignorant men.

Q. Did you receive that same sum of $40,000 from Mr. Stockwell or from the company in connection with the subsidy?—A. I received it from Mr. Stockwell individually.

Q. But it was to be used by you in this matter?—A. Yes.

Q. On the 19th of April, did you receive $35,000?—A. You are now coming to the point where I cannot help you any further without seeing my checks.

Q. Can you not tell from what source you received it?—A. I cannot.

Q. It was money received by you for the purpose of being used in obtaining the subsidy?—A. Yes; but you are getting to a point where the bank-account is mixed with my own funds.

Q. Do you desire further time to examine the account?—A. I want to see those checks from New York first.

Q. You mentioned a Mr. Cheever, but I did not understand for what he was employed.—A. He was employed by Mr. Stockwell on Mr. Clews's recommendation. He began writing a number of letters backward and forward between this city and New York, reporting everything that was going on.

Q. Was he here during the subsidy?—A. He was.

Q. And remained here all the time?—A. I do not know; I do not think he accomplished anything. These letters came to me; they were written on headed note-paper, with the motto, "Virtue, not force," and bothered the life out of me, so that I asked Mr. Stockwell to ask Mr. Cheever either to stop writing these letters, or to let me pay him and get him out of the way. Mr. Stockwell told me to do as I chose. I called Mr. Cheever into Mr. Stockwell's room, took out a check, filled it, and gave it to him in Mr. Stockwell's presence, and said, "Now you go and wait until I send for you." My impression is that I never sent for him after that, and he appeared no more. He simply came down here and conversed. He is a man with powerful conversational talent, but I really do not think he ever did anything at all.

Q. How much did he get?—A. Five thousand dollars.

Q. What had Mr. Roach to do with the subsidy?—A. He was down here working for it.

Q. Was he employed?—A. No, sir; there was an agreement with Mr. Stockwell that if he got the subsidy, Mr. Roach should build the ships.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The checks which you received from Mr. Stockwell personally amounted to $275,000?—A. Yes, sir; with the exception of $25,000 received from the company.

Q. And you wrote back to Mr. Stockwell saying that it was your understanding that you were to have $500,000 instead of $250,000, and you received other checks?—A. The checks inclosed in his second letter were the company's checks.

Q. You have stated all of the arrangements which you made with each of the individuals whom you employed?—A. I think I have tried to do so.

Q. Have you stated it fully?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any part of those arrangements which in your opinion is other than an honorable arrangement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any part of it, therefore, which there was any occasion for keeping concealed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State what part there was that should have been kept concealed.—A. Although I do not see any wrong in people coming here and performing services in behalf of a measure before Congress, there is a feeling in the minds of the public that there is something wrong about it, and that the payment of any money, large or small, especially large amounts, necessarily involved, a different disposition of the funds from what it would be if the same amount was paid in private life, and I think people employed here are very sensitive in regard to having their names published.

Q. Was it a part of the arrangement that you should keep it concealed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did they expect from anything that passed between you and them that you would keep it concealed?—A. Not from anything that passed between me and them.

Q. Was it a part of the plan that these men should perform this service without its being known that they were performing it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then it was neither a part of the arrangement, nor an understanding between you and them, that it should be kept a secret?—A. It was not.

Q. If it was not a part of the plan that it should be unknown that they were so employed, what occasion was there for you to refuse to answer the questions who they were?—A. I regarded the employment in my own mind (whatever they might have regarded it in theirs) as a confidential employment, for the reason that I have just stated to the committee. I was also of the opinion that the committee would ascertain from other sources all the information which I did not consider myself at liberty to give, and I thought that if the committee had waited a fortnight it would have had that information in its possession.

Q. Did I understand you to say before that you could not honorably disclose the names of those gentlemen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If it was in no way a dishonorable employment, what was the reason for that answer?—A. I could not honorably disclose the name of any person who would be subjected, from my disclosing his name, to the scandal, and I may say the torture, to which some of these men have been exposed by the fact that their names were brought out.

Q. If they were employed in an entirely legitimate and honorable purpose, and if there was not the slightest understanding that their employment should be concealed, what was there dishonorable in disclosing their names?—A. It is always dishonorable to violate confidence, no matter what the consequences are.

Q. But if the confidence does not exist?—A. It existed in my own mind.

Q. Then it existed solely in your own mind, according to the testimony?—A. Every man's conscience exists solely in his own mind.

Q. I understand you that you communicated this idea of a confidential relation to none of them?—A. I did not.

Q. They did not understand that their employment was dishonorable?—A. I do not know what they understood.

Q. They did not understand it from you?—A. Not from me.

Q. Or from anybody that you know?—A. It was inherent in the nature of the arrangement; if I made an agreement with a man which (the agreement being made public) is going to subject him to the rigors of a cross-examination, and to the scandal of publicity, and to having his motives suspected, and all his private actions and his private affairs inquired into, as has been done in some cases, (I am not stating this as a criticism, but as a fact that enters into my own mind,) it seems to me that I would be violating confidence if I gave that man's name to anybody who would use it for that purpose.

Q. Did you make this arrangement in view of a rigorous cross-examination?—A. I did not.

Q. Then that was not a part of it. Did you make it with a view of avoiding scandal?—A. I did not.

Q. Then that was not a part of it. What particular thing entered into your mind at the time of that arrangement which now seems to you to have been of a confidential character?—A. I refused to answer, not at the time I made the arrangement, but at a time last December, when I thought I could not honorably give up the names.

Q. What had transpired to change the relations made between you and these individuals between the time when the arrangement was made and last December, when you refused to give up their names?—A. Nothing whatever. If I had been asked at any time to give up their names, I should have declined to do so.

Q. Then there was something (and that is what I am after) lurking somewhere which bred in your mind the idea that this was a confidential relation; pray tell us what that was.—A. I think it is inherent in the nature of the agreement. If I employ a lawyer for any purpose, that is a confidential relation.

Q. Is it so confidential that you would not tell the name of your lawyer? Did you ever employ a lawyer when you felt any hesitancy in telling people that you employed him?—A. If I found that this man was going to be subject to anything that he did not want to be subjected to, I would not give his name.

Q. Did your arrangement with these men require any employment on their part which you thought they could not do as well if it was known that they were employed by you?—A. I did not think so. I think, as a matter of fact, that at the time these gentlemen were employed almost everybody must have known that they were in the employment of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Then you did not intend that it should be otherwise than absolutely known that Mr. King was employed to take care of the Senate and Mr. Schumaker to take care of the House, and Mr. Whiting to take care of Mr. Cole?—A. When you come to inquiring into details, it seems to me that that was a matter which was not anybody's business, so far as the public was concerned.

Q. Do you say positively that Mr. Stockwell told you that Mr. Rufus Hatch recommended any of these men—Mr. Averill, for example?—A. I do positively.

Q. And Mr. Samuel Hatch?—A. Yes. I do not say that it was so, but merely that Mr. Stockwell told me so.

Q. In Europe or here?—A. In New York, in his office.

The examination of the witness was here, at his own request, suspended until Wednesday next.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 27, 1875.

RICHARD B. IRWIN recalled.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Question. I was asking you when you were last before the committee about the deposits to your account in the American Exchange National Bank, in New York. I have also here a statement to show the committee the fact that all these sums were included in the compromise made by the company with Mr. Stockwell. It is a comparison and analysis of the reports which I spoke of, and I would like to have it put in evidence as part of my testimony. It is simply a demonstration that these subsidy funds were included in the compromise with Mr. Stockwell. Of course the committee can use its own pleasure in letting it in or shutting it out, but I regard it as an important fact.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to us that this does not throw any light upon the issue which we are examining except as showing how far the company was compromised in this expenditure of money. If the company knew of the use that had been made of this money, and ratified it afterward by any transaction between it and the president of the company, it may have a bearing on the subject before the committee.

The WITNESS. That is what I wish to demonstrate. Every director and every person connected with the company has denied all knowledge of the use of money here, and it seems to me that a short refutation of that denial may be also put in evidence.

The CHAIRMAN. I can see a phase of this case in which this analysis would have a bearing upon the issue before the committee, as showing how far the company itself was involved in the transaction.

Mr. ROBERTS. I asked the witness whether or not any portion of the money which was returned had ever reached the company, and the witness testified that, as far as he had any knowledge, no part of it had ever gone back to the company. If this statement of his connects itself with that point at all, it would be in order.

Mr. KASSON. We have endeavored to steer clear of the local fight in New York, and of the bulling and bearing of the stock; and it seems to me that the compromise made between Mr. Stockwell and the Pacific Mail Steamship Company can hardly connect itself with the question as to whether this fund corrupted members of Congress. It is to keep clear of an outside issue that I desire to raise the point upon the reception of this statement by the witness.

Mr. BECK. I agree with Mr. Kasson that we had better not go too far into the private quarrels of the company.

The CHAIRMAN, [to witness.] Is this paper intelligible to us without your explanation?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I have drawn it up so as to make it intelligible to anybody. I also submit two or three other papers. One is an abstract from the proceedings in the Challis case by which the public was advised of these proceedings in Washington, and consequently the directors of the company must have been. The other is a letter from Mr. Henry Clews, showing that an exhaustive statement was called for. Another paper is an abstract from Mr. Roach's testimony last winter, in which he testifies that there were discrepancies of $1,600,000 on the books of the company, agreeing with my statement.

[The witness handed the papers to the committee, and they were reserved for further consideration.]

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. From whom and how did you receive the $25,000 that is credited to your account on the books of the American Exchange Bank in New York on the 27th of July, 1872?—A. I have an impression that I received it from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company; I am not certain of it, but that is my impression.

Q. And how did you receive it?—A. In the form of checks on the National Bank of Commerce, in New York, if I received it at all.

Q. From whom and how did you receive the $40,000 credited on the 26th of February?—A. I received a check from A. B. Stockwell, dated the 13th February, for $40,000, which was remitted by me to the American Exchange National Bank, and placed to my credit on the 26th of February. It was paid by the Manufacturers and Merchants' Bank through the clearing-house.

Q. How did you receive the next credit, $35,000?—A. I do not know anything about that until I see the checks.

Q. You do not know from whom, or how, or where that money was received?—A. I do not. It must have been received either from the company or from Mr. Stockwell. It was from one or the other.

Q. Is it one of the sums which you included in your statement?—A. It is one of the sums which I included in the $140,000. I will give the same answer as to the $20,000 to my credit on May 11, and as to the $20,000 on May 15. I received those checks either from the company, or from Mr. Stockwell, and I cannot tell which until I see the checks.

Q. From whom did you receive the $10,000 credited to you on the 23d of May?—A. That I cannot tell. I had some personal funds and funds belonging to the trust which I spoke of. My impression is that that $10,000 was deposited in currency.

Q. You admit receiving $750,000 in the checks of the company; how does it come that that amount is credited in two separate items, $735,000 and $15,000?—A. That deposit was a mere matter of convenience at the time. I suppose I reserved this $15,000, expecting to use it instead of drawing new checks of my own. I have no recollection now to explain anything about it; or I may have intended to send the checks for that $15,000 to Washington to be deposited here.

Q. On June 5 you deposited $18,500?—A. That was money that was paid back by Mr. Charles Abert.

Q. On the other side you appear to have drawn on the bank for $2,500 on the 6th of February.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State to whom you paid that money.—A. That is more than I can say at this distance of time. I may have drawn it out in greenbacks, or I may have paid it away, or I may have made any other disposition of it. I cannot go into the details.

Q. You also drew $2,000 on the same day; can you give any explanation of that?—A. I will have to make the same answer in regard to all these items; I cannot attempt to recollect them.

Q. There is an entry of $2,500 on the 8th of February, which appears to have been a certified check.—A. I cannot tell as to that. The various sums that I drew from the National Metropolitan Bank in this city I can identify, because I have the other side of the accounts.

Q. There was $5,000 drawn on the 15th of February, $15,000 on the 28th of February, $5,000 on the 19th of March, $5,000 on the 26th of April, $5,000 on the 9th of May, and $5,000 on the 21st of May. These amounts were all drawn by you from the American Exchange National Bank, and deposited in the National Metropolitan Bank of Washington?—A. Yes, sir; all excepting this $1,000 in currency.

Q. On the 23d of March you appear to have drawn $4,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you tell to whom that was paid?—A. I can, but I would not have been able to state that except for the testimony of Mr. Capron before this committee. By it I was able to connect that with a payment to Samuel A. Hatch. I recollect paying him that money at that time, and Mr. Capron's testimony enables me to identify that; but I am not so positive about it as to be able to swear that it was paid to him rather than to any other person, only that that is my impression.

Q. Go back to this payment on the 6th of February. That was the first sum that you paid out in Washington connected with the subsidy?—A. I think it was.

Q. Can you not recollect to whom and on what account that was paid?—A. I cannot, because I may have taken the money myself and used it for my expenses.

Q. You seem to have drawn out two sums on the same day—$2,500 and $2,000?—A. I may have given one of those checks to somebody else, but it is impossible for me to tell.

Q. Did you know all the members of Congress and employes of Congress at that time?—A. I did not.

Q. Can you swear, then, that you did not pay that money to any member of Congress or any employe of Congress?—A. I can.

Q. On the 8th of February there was a certified check of $2,500. Did you use that money yourself?—A. I suppose not, as the check was certified.

Q. It must have been remitted to New York?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you any recollection of it?—A. None whatever.

Q. Do you recollect anything about the $2,000 on the 15th of April?—A. I do not.

Q. Or of the $1,500 on the 22d of April?—A. That I identify, on Mr. Abert's testimony, as having been paid to Mr. Parsons.

Q. Can you tell anything about the $2,500 on the 29th of April?—A. I cannot.

Q. Or of the certified check for $22,500 on the 29th of April?—A. I do not know anything about it.

Q. Or of the $15,000 on the 11th of May?—A. I cannot tell about that, either.

Q. The $4,000 on the 21st of May?—A. I cannot tell you about it.

Q. The $10,000 on the 25th of May?—A. My impression is that that $10,000 I drew myself.

Q. The $8,000 on the 27th of May?—A. I do not recollect that, either.

Q. The $11,500 on the 27th of May?—A. My impression is that that check was drawn to the order of Mr. Moran, but I am only speaking from my impression.

Q. The $19,000 on the same day?—A. That I cannot recollect at all.

Q. The $16,000 on the 29th of May?—A. I think that was to Samuel A. Hatch.

Q. Have the entries subsequent to that date any connection with the payments made on account of the subsidy?—A. They may have to a trifling extent, but only to a very trifling extent, and I do not identify any of them. I only know that I paid out some money in small sums after that date.

Q. Here is an item of $1,000 on the 29th of June, and one of $13,000.—A. That $13,000 was a transfer to Musgrave & Co.

Q. And $4,000 on the 2d of August.—A. That I do not recollect at all. I will identify some of these large items in my account with the American Exchange National Bank. This item of $125,000 on May 27 was to Mr. Abert. The $100,000 on the same day was to Mr. Abert, and the other $100,000 on the same day was to Mr. Whiting. The $275,000 on May 29 was to Mr. Schumaker, and the $115,000 on May 30 was to Mr. King. That is about as far as I can go.

Q. How was this $125,000 paid to you, and where?—A. I will explain that transaction. There were two checks, one for $125,000 and one for $100,000, both to the order of Charles Abert. After I had given him written instructions, and the list, which he showed you, for the disposition of the $125,000, I was about to give him instructions as to the disposition of the $100,000, that is, that he was to go and buy a draft on San Francisco with it; but I found that his mind was already sufficiently burdened with the $125,000, and that he was bothered about it, and I said to him, "You give me $100,000 out of the proceeds of that $125,000 check," (which was all that the bank had notes to pay at that time.) They asked him to wait until their exchanges came in in the morning and they would give him the $100,000 in large bills in the afternoon. So I took the $100,000 out of the first $125,000 and added it to the $40,000 from Mr. Whiting. Mr. Abert took the $25,000 that was left and the other $100,000—the amount of the other check—and that made the $125,000 which was accounted for in his testimony.

Q. How much money did you take with you to California?—A. One hundred and forty thousand dollars.

Q. In bills?—A. No, in the form of a draft.

Q. Where did you obtain the draft?—A. That draft was obtained at the New York agency of the Bank of California, Lees & Waller. The money for the draft was paid in currency, but the draft itself was for gold.

Q. What was the premium on gold at that time?—A. My recollection is that it was about 15. The $101,000 in gold deposited to my credit in the Bank of California represents the difference between the amount of that draft and the sum which I sent to Mr. Schumaker.

Q. Did you deposit that draft in the Bank of California?—A. I deposited the difference between the face of the draft and the cost of the draft in favor of Mr. Schumaker, as nearly as I recollect.

Q. Where did you give Mr. Schumaker the $275,000 check?—A. That is a thing I cannot recollect, but my impression is the same as his, that I gave it to him in his office at 17 William street, but I cannot make the dates connect. I cannot make my memory come to any other point than to 17 William street, and I cannot do anything else than prove an alibi in my own mind as to being in New York at that time. It is possible that I may have dated that check ahead, or that he may have received it before and retained it.

Q. You know that you were not in New York at the time of the date of the check?—A. I do not know that, because I do not know the date of the check. I was not in New York on the 29th of May when the check was paid. I left Philadelphia on the 28th of May, in the 11.40 p. m. train, and consequently on the 29th of May I must have been about Chicago.

Q. When you gave Mr. Schumaker that check, did you give him any instructions as to what he was to do with the money?—A. I did not. That is already covered in my testimony.

Q. You gave him no instructions?—A. None.

Q. As to these charges in your bank-account, to which I have called your attention this morning, do you swear positively that you paid none of that money to any member of Congress, or any officer or employé of either House?—A. I do.

Q. In your account with the National Metropolitan Bank of Washington there are several payments here in sums of $1,000, $2,500, &c., in some of which the bank-books identify the names of the parties to whom the checks were made payable. There are some here payable to yourself or your order; I would like to ask you in reference to that.—A. Let me answer generally. The checks payable to myself or to my own order were either paid to myself or to Mr. Abert, or to somebody else to whom I gave the order. The whole of that money is accounted for in my statement which I presented this morning.

Q. I want to get at the individuals to whom you gave these checks.—A. I cannot tell you any more nearly than I have done. I have not the slightest idea whether I drew any one of these checks, or whether Mr. Abert did, or whether a third party to whom I gave them did.

Q. You have examined this account with the National Metropolitan Bank?—A. I have examined it carefully.

Q. There are some eight or ten checks there payable to your own order?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And do I understand you to say that you are unable to state to whom any one of those checks was paid?—A. I have not the slightest idea.

Q. Did you pay any money or give any check to any other person than those that you have already named in connection with the subsidy?—A. I do not know that there was any other individual. I cannot name any other at present.

Q. You swear positively that you have no recollection of any other individual to whom you paid money, on account of his service in connection with the passage of the subsidy?—A. I do. I have gone up to the frozen ocean with my recollection, and I cannot get any further.

Q. Mr. Abert testified to having given you $50,000 in money, on the 15th of May; where does that appear on your bank-account, or does it appear?—A. I do not know. I do not think that Mr. Abert distinguishes, in his own mind, between checks and money. That $50,000 which he speaks of is the $50,000 which I account for as having received from Mr. Stockwell. If the committee will recall my first testimony it will be found that I sent back to Mr. Stockwell, about that date, his check for $110,000, and received from him a new check for $60,000, which was to be kept, and which I did keep until the final settlement of the whole thing. I also received from him in some shape $50,000, but in what shape it was I do not recollect. If I had been called upon to make a statement without looking at this bank-account, I should have said that Mr. Abert gave me $30,000 in notes, and deposited $30,000 to my credit in New York, but I cannot be positive on that point now.

Q. Mr. Abert says, "The amount to which you refer, of the 15th of May, (which was $50,000 or $60,000,) I handed entirely to Mr. Irwin." He also says that he received that amount from Mr. Stockwell or Mr. Bellows.—A. It was both $50,000 and $60,000 that he received. I gave him a check for $110,000 on the Manufacturers' and Merchants' Bank, drawn by Mr. Stockwell, individually, to take back to Mr. Stockwell and to get it broken up so that I could use $50,000 in money. He brought me back another check of Mr. Stockwell's of the same tenor, except that it was for $60,000 instead of $110,000. In what shape he gave me the $50,000 I do not know, but my impression is that it was $30,000 in greenbacks and $20,000 deposited to my credit in bank.

Q. This account with the American Exchange National Bank shows, in addition to the $750,000, $140,000 and $10,000; do you know where you received that $10,000?—A. I think that that was money which was in my hands, belonging to these people.

Q. The $30,000 in greenbacks which you say Mr. Abert gave you did not go into your bank-account?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, in addition to that $890,000, you admit $30,000 more?—A. I do not.

Q. What did you do with that $30,000 which Mr. Abert paid you in greenbacks?—A. I have just said that if I had been called to testify before seeing my bank-account I should have stated that that money was received, $30,000 in greenbacks, and $20,000 deposited to my credit. I know that there was no money outside of that $890,000; not a cent. But when I am called upon to identify the details, I cannot do so. It is just like the old case of the pair of boots. There was only $890,000 in it.

Mr. BURCHARD. That is what we do not know.

The WITNESS. That is what I state most positively.

Mr. BURCHARD. You only know it from aggregating the details.

The WITNESS. That is all. I make it out from aggregating the details of all the testimony, because if I had received $50,000 somebody would have trotted out that fact. I have not seen any disposition to keep back any of the amounts charged against me.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Abert states that this $60,000 was a check of the company.

The WITNESS. No, sir; it was a check of Mr. Stockwell's. Mr. Abert had forgotten every single particular of that transaction and every single particular of the $100,000 which he gave me until I told him of it myself.

Q. I asked you a question on Monday in reference to Mr. Roach's connection with this subsidy, and I understood you to say that he was working for it. I am informed that he was not here at that time. Did you meet him at the time that this subsidy was pending?—A. The person who has been always known to me as John Roach was here a very large part of the time during the pendency of the subsidy. If there are two John Roach's, of course I may have met the wrong man.

Q. Where did you meet John Roach?—A. I met him at his office in New York, at the Morgan Iron-Works.

Q. Did you meet him here?—A. Yes; I met him here in the room of the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, and in the room of the Post-Office Committee in the Senate, and in various other places. I was button-holed by him in various places.

Q. Was he working with you in connection with the subsidy?—A. He was working with me, but not under my orders.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Mr. Abert in his testimony testifies, among other things, that he paid $5,000 to Donn Piatt on your account?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you had any interview with Mr. Piatt since the testimony of Mr. Abert, on that point?—A. I have.

Q. Have you and Mr. Piatt talked over the matter of that $5,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell us all about that $5,000.—A. I will tell you all that I recollect about that $5,000. Just before I left Washington, and I think on the morning when I left Washington, which was on the 22d of May, after the bill had passed the House, but while the matter was still pending before a committee of conference, Mr. Piatt came to me and asked me if I would let him have some money. I said, "Yes." He said that he was in a good deal of trouble and would like to have $5,000, and that he would pay it back to me as soon as he could. He offered me a note for the amount, but I said, "That is not necessary." I did not say any more about it, and I should never have thought anything more about it, except for this committee.

Q. State everything that transpired.—A. That is all that transpired. I said to Mr. Piatt, "I will send you the money from New York."

Q. Did he give you the note at that time?—A. I think he did. I have no recollection of his giving me the note, or of his not giving me the note, except that he showed it to me in this city canceled, with my signature on the back of it, and therefore I infer that he did give it to me, and that I did return it to him.

Q. When did he show it to you?—A. When I first came to Washington. Before Mr. Abert testified, Mr. Piatt came up to me and said, "Is Mr. Abert going to tell the names of the parties to whom he paid the money?" I said, "I expect he is." He said, "Then I am very sorry that my name is on that list." I said, "It is not on the list." He said, "Yes, it is." I said, "No, you are mistaken. It is not on the list." But he was very positive about it, and said that he recollected Mr. Abert's paying him the money. I was quite as positive that the name was not on Mr. Abert's list. He then told me about his having paid the money back again, and everything of that kind, and I recollected it. He brought me the note to look at, and when I saw the note I said, "That makes your case all straight." "Yes," said he, "except that it is one of those cases which it is hard to explain." I said, "Yes, your difficulty is, that it would be better for you to have a plausible lie than to have the truth, which nobody will want to believe."

Q. Tell us what else transpired?—A. That is all.

Q. When did you next hear about the matter after the 22d of May, 1872?—A. I have no recollection of hearing anything more about it.

Q. Until you came to Washington?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, of course, you did not get any pay for your note?—A. O, I beg your pardon.

Q. Then you got paid without hearing about it?—A. I understood your question to relate to a different point.

Q. I had the idea of your telling all about this thing; when did you next hear about this thing? The last you testified was that he got the money and gave you the note, and that you never heard of it again.—

A. The emphasis in my mind was on the word "heard;" if you had asked me when I next knew anything about it, I would have said when the note was paid.

Q. Tell all about it.—A. I cannot tell you anything more than that.

Q. You have not told us when the note was paid.—A. It was paid on the 22d of July.

Q. How?—A. I have not the slightest idea; I was in the country the whole of that summer, and I do not recollect anything that took place.

Q. Did anybody come to you to pay the note?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you mean to say that you do not know how the note was paid?—A. I do not know how it was paid.

Q. Do you know how it was paid except from what appears on the back of the note?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know who paid it?—A. Only from Mr. Piatt's statement.

Q. From his statement before the committee or to you?—A. From his statement before the committee, and from his statement to me also. They were precisely the same.

Q. Then you have no knowledge about how it was paid?—A. I have no knowledge.

Q. You must remember the person who paid it to you?—A. I would have done so if anybody had delivered the money to me in person, but my impression is that the money was deposited to my credit in New York; the nearest suggestion that I can make is that it was a portion of the $5,800 deposited to my credit with Musgrave & Co.

Q. Have you anything to indicate that?—A. Nothing but the identity of dates. The credit for that $5,800 in the Musgrave account is some time in July.

Q. I suppose you took the note with you when you went to California?—A. I did.

Q. Then I suppose that the money was deposited to your credit in New York, and that you signed the note afterward?—A. I suppose so.

Q. Have you any recollection of that fact?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you any correspondence that advises you of the fact?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you any recollection of any correspondence that advises you of the fact?—A. No, sir; I do not think I would have, because the letter would have been written by somebody else, and the note returned by somebody else, and therefore I would not have recollected it.

Q. Why would the letter have been written by somebody else?—A. Because almost all my private business letters were written by somebody else.

Q. In your name?—A. Yes; and therefore I would have no recollection, if such a letter had been written.

Q. Your letters are signed by you?—A. Sometimes they are and sometimes they are not. If I was in the city, it would be signed by me, and if I was in the country it would be signed by somebody else.

Q. If it had been signed by somebody else, do you not think there would have been some record, so that you should know what was being done in your name?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever been advised by anybody that in your name he has had any dealings with either Mr. Piatt or anybody for him in regard to the liquidation of that note?—A. I never inquired into it.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been a matter of inquiry here.

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been a matter about which Mr. Piatt has been put to his best recollection.

The WITNESS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. You had a conference with him after that; could not Mr. Piatt and you together refresh your memories so as to give us the slightest idea about this thing?

The WITNESS. Do you not think you have got to the bottom of this case now?

The CHAIRMAN. I wish I knew whether I had or not. I can tell better when I get your answers to my questions. You and Mr. Piatt have had a conference since you came here. He tried to tell us how the money was paid but he could not, and now I ask you to try to tell us, and you say that you are not able. The next question I ask you is whether Mr. Piatt and you in that conference were not able to call to each other's mind any circumstance connected with the payment of that note.

The WITNESS. I think we have told several circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. I mean any other circumstance.

The WITNESS. Mr. Piatt says that Mr. Neeley Thompson paid the note for him.

Q. Did he recall your mind to anything in connection with the payment?—A. There was nothing for my mind to be recalled to in connection with it.

Q. Your mind was entirely blank in the matter?—A. My mind was entirely blank.

The CHAIRMAN. Repeat every circumstance that you have already stated to the committee in reference to the payment of that note.

The WITNESS. I do not think that this is very fair treatment of me. I do not think that this thing has anything to do with the subject-matter of the inquiry. I think it has been pursued entirely beyond the subject-matter of the inquiry, and solely for the purpose of annoying me.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee, of course, will control the questions which I put.

The WITNESS. I do not recollect anything about it, except what I have said.

Q. After having had a conference with Mr. Piatt over the manner in which that note was paid, can you not state to us any point on which you now have the slightest recollection in reference to the manner in which it was paid?—A. I have no recollection of the manner in which that note was paid, and no indication that it ever was paid except the sight of the note itself, and I have no suggestion to make in regard to it except I find that I was credited by Musgrave & Co. with $5,800 about that time.

Q. Have you any knowledge in reference to the source of that credit by Musgrave & Co.?—A. I have no other knowledge except that it is there.

Q. Are there any data in that bank which would aid you in determining the source of that credit?—A. I do not think there are.

Q. Have you any such data in your possession?—A. I have not. That money may have come from anybody, so far as I know. I know that it did not come from me; that is all I do know about it.

Q. Have you any acquaintance with Mr. Neeley Thompson?—A. I know him very well, indeed.

Q. Did you have any dealings with him about July, 1872?—A. I have had small dealings with him at different times; I do not recollect exactly when, and nothing in connection with anything in Washington.

Q. It was in reference to your private affairs outside?—A. Yes.

Q. Then you say to us that you are unable to throw any light yourself on the manner in which that note was paid, if it was paid?—A. Unless it was paid in that Musgrave & Co.'s account. Somebody may have sent me the money in greenbacks by express or mail, or any other way, for all that I know. I was in the country the whole of that summer, and my business was being attended to by my clerks, who never bothered me with anything unnecessarily.

Q. You were not at San Francisco?—A. I was not at San Francisco; I was down on a milk-ranch. I was trying to get well, and therefore my clerks did not bother me with anything that was not of importance. One or two gentlemen in San Francisco attended to my private business almost exclusively, and if they had received that money for me in any shape whatever they would have gone to my papers, taken out that note and sent it to Mr. Piatt without consulting me about it at all. They may have let me know about it afterward, or they may have forgotten to do so.

Q. Had Mr. Piatt said anything to you about the loan of $5,000 before the passage of the subsidy in the House?—A. I think not.

Q. Is that the first loan to him?—A. No, I loaned him, I think, $800 once before; I had forgotten all about it.

Q. How long before this?—A. It was some time about March or April of the same year.

Q. How was that loan paid back to you?—A. It was paid to me by Mr. Piatt's check on the National Metropolitan Bank. I only identify it by seeing the check.

Q. If the payment of this $5,000 note was attended to by your clerks in San Francisco, would it be entered on your account in San Francisco and in New York on the same day?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you find any entry on your account in San Francisco that corresponds with the payment of that note?—A. I have never looked.

Q. Has the conference between you and Mr. Piatt, in reference to the mode of payment, excited no curiosity in you to trace it?—A. It has not, because I thought that the thing was settled.

By Mr. KELLEY:

Q. The money which you put into Mr. Abert's hands was the money of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, was it not?—A. It had been.

Q. When did it cease to be?—A. When the company paid it to me.

Q. It was then yours?—A. Yes.

Q. Applicable to the purposes of the company?—A. Applicable to any purpose to which I chose to put it.

Q. You mean the whole of the $750,000?—A. Yes.

Q. It became your money absolutely?—A. Those are questions of law, and not of fact.

Q. You had ceased to be the agent of the company?—A. So far as that money was concerned, I had. I never was the agent so far as any money in Washington was concerned.

Q. Whose agent were you?—A. Not anybody's agent.

Q. Why, then, did you have to account to anybody?—A. I did not have to account to anybody.

Q. Why did you have to obey the instructions of Mr. Stockwell?—A. Because I had agreed to do so.

Q. To what extent had you agreed to obey his instructions as to this money?—A. I said in my testimony that I was to employ any one whom he directed me to employ.

Q. Even though it had absorbed the whole fund?—A. The whole amount of funds was not fixed until after all the persons had been employed.

Q. Then this was your money, subject to the orders of another party as to how it should be appropriated?—A. The orders of the other party were given to me before the amount was fixed.

Q. Was it to be used for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. It was to be used certainly for a matter in which the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was interested.

Q. Would the refunding of part of that money to you personally be a refunding, or a payment back, to the company?—A. It would not.

By Mr. ROBERTS :

Q. Did you indorse the note which Mr. Piatt gave to you?—A. I did.

Q. At what time?—A. I do not recollect; I take it for granted that it was at the date named, because I am not in the habit of putting down false dates.

Q. It is indorsed, "Paid July 22, 1872." Is that line above the signature in your handwriting?—A. Yes, it is, and the signature also, and the figures in the corner.

Q. The figures in the corner are the calculation of the interest for two months?—A. Yes.

Q. That would indicate that the calculation was made at the time that the payment was made?—A. Yes.

Q. At what time did you write the line "Paid July 22, 1872"?—A. I take it for granted I wrote it on the day of its date.

Q. That would indicate that you were personally cognizant of the payment?—A. It would indicate that I knew it, either from having received the money myself, or from having been told by some one that it was paid.

Q. You say that it was written at that time?—A. Yes.

Q. Does it not recall to your mind in any way the payment of the note, as it would indicate that the payment was made to you personally?—

A. The committee knows exactly as much about it as I do. It indicates to me that that is my signature, and I have not the slightest idea that I would have put it on the note if the note had not been paid; but it does not recall the manner of the payment in the least.

Q. I ask you also to bear in mind that this calculation of two months' interest is in your figures.—A. Yes.

Q. Then that connects the transaction with you at that time?—A. Yes.

Q. Showing that the actual payment was made to you?—A. I beg your pardon; that is an inference which I cannot draw. These figures are scratched out, and that shows that I did not know whether the interest was paid or was not paid. Now, if Mr. Smithberger, or any other clerk of mine, had come to tell me that this note was paid, and had asked me to sign it, I would have signed it without knowing anything about it. You must recollect that this is one of, perhaps, two hundred signatures that I may have been called upon to make on that day, and I might as well be asked to identify the circumstances of every one of those signatures for twelve months in the year, and asked to explain all about them.

Q. This is your handwriting, and was made by you on the date that is here stated; do you say so?—A. I think I have said that about seven times.

Q. Then, at this date of July 22, 1872, this note was in your possession?—A. I really do not know whether it was or not.

Q. You say (as you have just said for the seventh time) that on that day you made this calculation of interest?—A. I have no doubt I did.

Q. Then the note must have been in your possession at that time?—A. It must have been under my hand at the moment I wrote that, but whether it was so a moment before or a moment afterward I cannot say. As it is a very important point, I would like to give you the names of my clerks.

Mr. ROBERTS. We have now the gentleman who at that particular instant had the note in his hands, and I would like to ask him what knowledge he has further about this note.

The WITNESS. I do not know anything more about it; I am sorry I ever saw it.

Q. Was this note in your possession in the country or in San Francisco?—A. I came up from San Francisco about once a week, and staid in the city half a day, and transacted all the business that was to be transacted at that time. That business was the accumulation of a week, and this may have been a part of it. Very likely it was. They could not have sent such a note to me in the country.

Q. I ask you whether or not you can give us any more information now than this record shows, that the note was actually paid at that date if it was paid?—A. I did not keep my own accounts; they were kept for me by my clerks. You had better let me give you their names. It will not cost over $10,000 to hunt up this case.

The CHAIRMAN. It is no part of your examination as a witness to inform us anything about the expenses of the examination.

The WITNESS. I have stated everything that I know about this note.

The CHAIRMAN. You will please to keep within the line of your duties as a witness.

Mr. ROBERTS. It is only by producing this note and by calling your attention to the manuscript that I bring to your attention that you personally made the record on the note at the date of this payment. Now, I ask you, with that note before you, and with the fact that you were cognizant, at the time, of its payment, to give us any other information that you may have on the subject.—A. I doubt very much if I ever had any personal knowledge of the payment of the note, and I certainly cannot recollect anything more about it than I have stated.

Q. This record was made by yourself, showing that the note was paid on July 22, 1872. Can you state on what information you made that record on the back of the note?—A. I cannot.

Q. You cannot state whether the payment was made in San Francisco or in New York?—A. I cannot.

Q. The deposit, to which you refer, with Musgrave & Co., was on the 22d of July, 1872?—A. I believe so.

Q. This entry on the note was made, you state, by you on the same day in San Francisco?—A. I beg your pardon; I do not recollect whether it was or not. It was made by me on some day, and it was probably made by me to correspond with the date of the payment, whenever that was.

Mr. ROBERTS. My question referred to the date of your making the entry.

The WITNESS. I know; but my answer referred to the date of the payment, not to the date when I wrote the entry.

Q. Then you cannot state to us whether this entry was made on the date that it states?—A. It was made on the date of the payment; if the payment was made in San Francisco the entry was made on that date, but if the payment was made in New York, the entry was made to correspond with that date. I have not the slightest idea which it was.

Q. If the payment was made in New York, this record could not have been made on this date in San Francisco?—A. No, sir; it could not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. I want to get at just the facts in the case, so that we can understand it. You say that you did not pay Mr. Donn Piatt any money to aid in carrying the subsidy, but that you loaned him $5,000 at his request?—A. Yes.

Q. And he gave you this note?—A. Yes.

Q. And you indorsed on the back of it the payment of the note to correspond with the date of the payment?—A. Yes.

Q. And that is your genuine signature?—A. Yes.

Q. The note was not fixed up to hide anything with Mr. Piatt?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was not fixed up for any subsequent purpose?—A. No, sir; it was not fixed up for any purpose whatever, except to be an evidence of the payment of the note.

Q. Which was originally a loan to that amount?—A. Yes; and I should not have cared if he had never paid it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you meet Mr. Piatt in Europe?—A. I did not. I never met him at any place but in Washington and in New York and in the Army.

Q. In giving the amount which you retained for your own purposes, did you include this $5,000?—A. I did.

Q. In making out your account here, is this sum of $5,000 charged against it?—A. It is not charged against it.

Q. Have you rendered any account of this $5,000 to the company?—A. I never rendered any account to the company of any of the funds embraced in this expenditure, and the company never asked it.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. On page 2 of the memorandum of accounts which you have submitted this morning, you speak of something in the nature of an account against the $890,000, consisting of two items. One is, Stockwell returned to the company (see Roundey's testimony) $90,000, and Lockwood check of $200,000, making $290,000.—A. Yes.

Q. Were you aware that this Lockwood check was simply in return for a check of $200,000 which Stockwell had drawn on the company independent of the $750,000?—A. I was not.

Mr. KASSON. It is before us in testimony that this was an exchange of checks all the way through.

The WITNESS. I understand that; but in that exchange of checks $200,000 of the amount given us was wiped off. I did not want to show anything but the manner in which that had been done.

Mr. KASSON. You spoke of it simply as a matter of book-keeping?

The WITNESS. Yes; except that I see that $90,000 was actually returned by Mr. Stockwell, as appears by Mr. Roundey's testimony.

Mr. KASSON. I thought you undertook to say that that was a return of Mr. Stockwell's private account.

The WITNESS. It is only an explanation of these entries.

Mr. KASSON. So that, in point of fact, the $200,000 is not included in the $890,000 drawn by the company and disbursed by you?

The WITNESS. I am only showing the way in which the entries are made, that is all.

Mr. KASSON. Now, as Mr. Roach is not here, and as we are informed by telegraph that his recollection and yours are widely different, I desire to ask a few questions in order to get a little further information from you. Can you state how many times Mr. Roach was here during the pendency of the subsidy in Congress?—A. I met him three or four times, I am certain; but I am not positive how long he staid here, or how long he was here.

Q. Do you know how long he staid in the city?—A. I do not know.

Q. Can you name any Senator or Member with whom he talked touching the subsidy?—A. I can.

Q. Be good enough to name them.—A. Mr. Samuel Shellabarger was one member with whom he talked very frequently in connection with the general question of commerce, which Mr. Roach was more especially looking after. His statement on that point is quite correct.

Q. Do you think of any other Member or Senator that he talked to?—A. I can recollect the names of citizens with whom he talked personally. That is only important as identifying the fact of his being here. I am under the impression that I saw him speaking with Senator Ramsey, but I would not like to say so positively; he was certainly in the Post-Office Committee-room at one time, and was also certainly in the room of the Committee on Commerce. We had frequent conferences while he was here in regard to these matters.

Q. Was he advocating the subsidy before this committee?—A. I would not like to state positively that he was advocating this particular subsidy.

Q. Did Mr. Stockwell tell you that he had any agreement with Mr. Roach?—A. He told me that Mr. Roach would do everything he could to get the subsidy through. I asked him if he had an understanding with Mr. Roach, and he said that Mr. Roach was to build the ships if we got the subsidy.

Q. That information came to you from Mr. Stockwell?—A. Yes; and he referred me to Mr. Roach for any assistance that I might want.

Q. Have you had any trouble or dissension with Mr. Roach?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. You have not indicated any hostility to him, by threats or otherwise, to your recollection?—A. I do not believe that I ever uttered a threat against anybody. I certainly did not against Mr. Roach. I think it was very remarkable and not very pleasant that he said what he did say last winter about me, but I understand the way in which he came to say it, and I have no hostility against him whatever.

Q. Did you ever ask Mr. Roach to do anything in reference to this subsidy measure?—A. No, sir; I thought he was doing everything he could.

Q. Did Mr. Stockwell ever report to you what Mr. Roach had done to get the subsidy passed?—A. The only thing which Mr. Stockwell mentioned to me was Mr. Roach's numerous statements to Mr. Shellabarger and others.

Q. When the bill was first introduced, did it not leave the point open so as to allow the building of the engines or of the hulls of the steamers on the Clyde, for example?—A. No, sir, it provided for American-built ships. There was nothing said especially about it in the first bill, except that the bill referred to the act of the 17th of February, 1865, which did require that the ships should be American-built.

Q. Then there was nothing in that first bill except by reference?—A. Nothing in totidem verbis, but it was a re-enactment of the law of the 17th of February, 1865. That act was specially re-enacted.

Q. By reference but not by detailed expression?—A. Yes.

Q. At that time was Mr. Stockwell having engines built on the Clyde?—A. He was.

Q. For three vessels that were being built in this country?—A. Yes.

Q. You were in favor of building the engines on the Clyde, if it could be done cheaper?—A. The question of building engines on the Clyde, as separate from building the hulls on the Clyde, never came squarely before my mind.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. I will ask in that connection whether Mr. Stockwell claimed that Mr. Roach influenced Mr. Shellabarger's vote?—A. My impression is that Mr. Shellabarger was ultimately opposed to the subsidy.

Q. He voted against it?—A. I think he did, and he spoke against it.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Turn to page 97 of the evidence which you gave in December. You there put in evidence three letters from Mr. Stockwell, the first dated February 1, 1872, in which he refers to a letter of yours of a previous date to him. Have you a copy of that letter of yours?—A. I have not.

Q. Do you recollect its contents?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you recollect the nature of it?—I do not recollect anything about it.

Q. His letter is in reply to yours; will not his letter revive your recollection as to the tenor of yours?—A. The only revival of recollection that I can get from it is that I must have told him that I was sick.

Q. He says, "Yours of the 31st to hand," and then he goes on to refer to this question of the subsidy. You have no recollection at all as to the general nature and character of your letter to him?—A. I have not.

Q. What, in your judgment, was his meaning in the concluding sentence of this letter, in which he says, "The most important thing with me is success, and I want nothing left undone to secure it?"—A. I thought he meant just exactly that.

Q. Tell us what was your idea that that did mean.—A. It meant that he did not want anything left undone.

Mr. WOOD. That is no answer. You know very well that he meant something more, and I want to know what he did mean.

The WITNESS. I thought that that covered everything.

Q. Tell us in what "everything" is comprised.—A. The answer to that will be co-extensive with the universe.

Q. Then that included the corruption of members of Congress?—A. That is rather a hard answer against a man in Europe.

Mr. WOOD. I only want to know what construction you put upon that, and you have just told me that you put everything on it. Would it include the corrupting of members of Congress?—A. It certainly would. The language covers that or anything else.

Q. I wanted you to say just what you thought it meant.—A. I beg pardon; you asked me what it covered, and I said it covered everything, and now you say again that that is what I thought it meant. I did not think it meant that. What I thought it meant was that I should do everything that was proper.

Mr. WOOD. He italicizes these words in his letter, "I want nothing left undone." You had been employed for the purpose of obtaining the passage of the subsidy through Congress. These were the instructions of the president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company to its agent here. He declares to you that he wants nothing left undone, and he italicizes that sentence so as to give it emphasis and importance. Now I want to know what you thought he did mean?

The WITNESS. I thought he meant that I was not to leave anything undone; that I was to spend just as much money as was necessary to get that bill through.

Q. And you proceeded on that supposition?—A. I did.

Q. Was there anything which you did leave undone to accomplish it?—A. O, yes.

Q. What was it?—A. It would be very tiresome to go on and answer as to everything that I left undone. I left undone the corruption of Congress, so far as I know anything about it.

Q. Could it have been done without your knowledge?—A. Certainly it could.

Q. Was not everybody who was employed by you to act under your direction?—A. Only to a certain extent.

Q. To what extent?—A. To the extent of doing what I told them to do.

Q. Did you expressly give your orders not to attempt to influence any member of Congress?—A. I did not.

Q. Nor to attempt to corrupt any member of Congress?—A. I did not. I did not think it necessary.

Q. Why did you not think it necessary?—A. The answer is suggested by the question.

Mr. WOOD. I want your answer.

The WITNESS. It was not a part of my programme to corrupt members of Congress.

Mr. WOOD. You wanted to spend that million of dollars legitimately and morally?

The WITNESS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. WOOD. You did spend a million of dollars here?

The WITNESS. I spent $890,000.

Q. And that was to be spent legitimately and properly for the purpose of obtaining the passage of this subsidy?—A. I think it was.

Q. And you think it was so spent?—A. I have no impression on the subject, except what I get from the evidence. I do not see any evidence that any of it was spent otherwise, and I never heard that it was.

Q. What is your belief as to that?—A. Am I to go through the Nicene creed? I have no belief on the subject at all. The committee is quite as capable, and, indeed, more capable than I am of forming a belief on the question from the evidence.

Mr. WOOD. My question is this: what is your belief as to whether any portion of this money was or was not corruptly expended?—A. I have no belief on the subject. I have no evidence to form a belief on.

Mr. WOOD. I only want to get your opinion as to whether or not this sum of money or any portion of it was used by anybody for the purpose of influencing improperly a member or officer of either House?

The WITNESS. I have no sufficient basis of facts to form an opinion on. If you asked me whether I had such an opinion on the 25th of May, 1872, I should say that I had not that opinion; but if you ask me now, I say that I have no sufficient basis of fact to form an opinion upon. The committee has brought out a mass of testimony which was never in my possession, and has followed it, to a certain extent, and has not gone any farther. Here, for example, is this $50,000, which appears to have been identified by Mr. Riggs's testimony. That fact was not within my knowledge, nor the fact that it was paid in Mr. Elmore's office to Mr. Smith. These were things that I knew nothing about. The committee has seen all the testimony and I have not, and if any suspicion arises in this matter at all, it arises from the testimony and not from anything within my knowledge.

Mr. WOOD. I do not ask you as to the testimony of other people, or as to your judgment arising from any testimony. I ask you have you any knowledge with reference to the distribution of the money which you yourself paid out?

The WITNESS. Within my own knowledge I know of nothing that would justify me in stating that any portion of the money was paid to any member of Congress, or that I had a suspicion to that effect.

Q. Then you say positively that through you, and with your knowledge or consent, not a dollar of this money was improperly expended?—A. I do.

Q. We are to understand that to be your answer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In a subsequent letter written to you by Mr. Stockwell, dated February 13, 1872, he says that he inclosed to your order checks for $250,000—$100,000, $110,000, and $40,000—which are placed in your hands to be used in payment for your services in case of the passage of the subsidy, &c. Then he says at the conclusion of this letter, "none of these checks to be used by you, but all to be returned to me in the event of failure, excepting only the last-named, ($40,000,) all or any portion of which you may apply if actually required for your necessary expenses, and for counsel's fees." You were restricted to $40,000 for those legitimate and proper purposes, but the $210,000 was for some other purpose.—A. It was for the purpose expressed here, in payment of my services.

Q. Given to you individually?—A. Yes; to do what I pleased with it, just the same as any other money that is ever paid to anybody. It belonged to me absolutely on the passage of that bill.

Q. He reserves the $40,000 for your own actual use, but the rest of the money was to be retained by you?—A. Yes; I was not to have the rest of it if the bill did not pass.

Q. The $40,000 you were to have anyhow?—A. Yes.

Q. And you received the whole of that for yourself?—A. For myself and for my expenses, &c.

Q. And you did use all of that money, without returning any of it to Mr. Stockwell?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you never return to him the $250,000?—A. I never returned a cent.

Q. In a subsequent letter he asks you to return it?—A. He asks me to send back his checks.

Q. Did you do so?—A. I did not.

Q. You kept all the money?—A. I did.

Q. And you accounted for it just as you have stated?—A. I did not account for it except to this committee; I never was asked to account for it to Mr. Stockwell or to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Now we are to understand that this large sum was given to you to dispose of as you pleased?—A. Yes.

Q. And $40,000 for your own expenses?—A. Yes.

Q. You had a right to do what you pleased with it?—A. Exactly.

Q. You could have thrown it into the river?—A. Yes; if I had wanted to.

Q. You could have put it in your own pocket?—A. Certainly.

Q. You were never asked anything as to its disbursement or its disposition by Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir.

Q. You never told him or any director or officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company that you had expended this money, or what you had done with it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were never called upon to render any account of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. No accounting was ever required of you?—A. No, sir.

Q. The company never made any application to you for the money?—A. Never; not up to this time.

Q. You were never questioned or called upon to state what you did with it?—A. Never.

Q. You consider that account closed altogether?—A. I do. The company brought a suit against me last September for an accounting, but it did so without asking me to pay the money back or to present an account of it, and in the face of my previous offer to explain the matter and account for the money.

Q. Then the company has required of you to make an accounting?—A. Yes. I put that in as an answer to your former question.

Q. When you said that the company had not done so, you had forgotten?—A. I had not forgotten. The company never demanded the money from me, and never demanded an account from me except by bringing this suit, and two days before the suit was brought the company had declined my offer to account for the money.

Q. My point was to ascertain from you what your relations with the company were in reference to this large sum, whether the company had ever called upon you for an accounting, and whether you had rendered any detailed statement as to your disbursements of it, and whether you considered yourself as accountable for it to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in any way?—A. I did not, and there never was the slightest hint that I was accountable to the company for it for about two years.

Q. And your transactions were solely with Mr. Stockwell, personally, when he gave you this money?—A. Either personally or officially. That would be a matter of inference and of law.

Q. I am asking you what you understood to be his position?—A. I understood that he was the president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and that he paid this money to me as the president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. That a portion of this money he paid to me himself out of his own pocket, I have no doubt; and that he intended to do so, I have no doubt. That was the portion which was paid in advance, and which would have been lost to him if the bill had not been passed.

Q. Was not Mr. Stockwell interested outside of the company in very large stock speculations?—A. I can only testify to that as a matter of notoriety. I know nothing about it.

Q. What do you believe?—A. My belief is that he was.

Q. Was he not largely interested in bulling the stock?—A. At that time my impression is that he was short of the stock.

Q. Then you think he wanted to get this subsidy through so as to enhance the market-value of the stock, and so as to decrease it?—A. It is a difficult matter to testify to a state of facts that exists in the mind of another.

Q. What is your belief?—A. My belief is that at one moment Mr. Stockwell wanted the subsidy for the purpose of putting the stock up, and that having got it up he wanted it to come down; and my impression was that the stock would come down on the passage of the subsidy, and consequently I advised a great many people not to buy it.

Q. Had you any communication at that time with any other officers of the company with reference to the subsidy?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you advised that any officer of the company outside of Mr. Stockwell was personally cognizant of the payment of these large sums of money?—A. Two of them were; Mr. F. W. G. Bellows, the vice-president, and Mr. Theodore T. Johnson, the secretary. I do not think that Mr. Johnson knew of the first $140,000, but Mr. Bellows did, because all the checks were drawn by him in his own handwriting, even Mr. Stockwell's personal checks.

Mr. WOOD. These two gentlemen held subsidiary positions to Mr. Stockwell, and dependent on his favor for those positions; but I mean by my question men who were directors in the company.

The WITNESS. It was a matter of notoriety in New York that the subsidy application was pending, and that money was being spent for that purpose.

Q. You mean rumor?—A. No; it was in Mr. Stockwell's testimony in the Challis suit. He was asked, on the 19th of March, as to whether he was spending money in Washington, and as to what Mr. Irwin was doing here, and he said, "That is best known to ourselves." The question was asked, I think, by Mr. Fullerton, counsel for Mr. Challis, and was objected to by Mr. Nelson, Mr. Stockwell's counsel; but Mr. Stockwell insisted upon answering the question and answered it in that way.

Q. That was one of the suits that were got up in antagonism to the company?—A. Yes; that is the suit which, Mr. Lockwood has testified, called his attention to the fact that money was being spent here. There is no doubt whatever that the attention of every director of the company was sufficiently called to the matter to enable him to know all about it, if it was not his intention to sit up nights and to go into the country on Sunday to avoid knowing it.

Q. I want to ascertain from you the fact whether any directors of the company, outside of Mr. Stockwell and Mr. Bellows, were cognizant of these large sums of money being expended here at that time?—A. It is impossible that the accounts of the company could be audited as they were audited, otherwise. The auditing committee consists of three members of the board, and the accounts are audited four times a year. When they came and audited the accounts in the following August, it was impossible for them not to know of those expenses, because they had the accounts before them, and counted cash and securities.

Mr. WOOD. That is inference. I want to know what you have reason to believe by facts, not by inference?

The WITNESS. I know that Mr. Henry Clews recommended Mr. Cheever and Mr. Shaw for employment here, and I take it for granted that he knew what he was recommending them to be employed for. I know also that Mr. Masterton received himself a check from Mr. Stockwell for $40,000, and applied that check to the liquidation of this $40,000 check of mine, which passed through the Manufacturers and Merchants' National Bank, and I know also that Mr. Masterton was Mr. Stockwell's adviser and friend all the way through that matter.

Q. But you had no personal conference with these gentlemen in regard to the matter?—A. No; they would have gone ten miles into the country to get away from me.

Q. Why?—A. So as to be able to say that they knew nothing about it.

Q. How do you know that?—A. By the manner in which they acted then and since. They carefully avoided all knowledge of the subject.

Q. How do you know that they did?—A. I know that they did, because they could not have failed to know it unless they had done so.

Mr. WOOD. That is an inference; I want the fact.

The WITNESS. I am stating the inference as a fact. I have stated the names of two directors, and now I want to state the name of a third, Mr. James D. Smith; he was chairman of the executive committee at that time and I spoke to him on the subject.

Q. I understood you to say that you yourself had no communication with these gentlemen?—A. I did have communication with one of them, but I had forgotten it at the time.

Q. With whom, when, and where?—A. With Mr. James D. Smith, who was a member of the board of directors and chairman of the executive committee at that time. I had an interview with him in the office of Jamieson, Smith & Cotton, in the back office in Broad street, on the 25th or 27th of May, 1872. I do not recollect which.

Q. After the subsidy was passed?—A. Yes; and just before the money was paid. The bill had gone through the House, but it had not got the signature of the President at the time; it was before the company had acceded to it by sending in proposals. I told Mr. Smith then of a very disagreeable interview which I had had with Mr. Stockwell about the 23d of May, and I stated to him then sufficient facts to have enabled him to have gone and found out everything about the money, if he wanted to do so, either as member of the board of directors or as chairman of the executive committee.

Q. Please relate what facts you stated.—A. Yes. When I first went to New York I went to Mr. Stockwell's office; he told me that he did not intend to pay any of this money until he had an account of every cent of it, so as to know to whom it was going. I thereupon told him that I would not take the money on that condition; that I held to my contract, which was that the money was to be paid to me for my services, and not to be accounted for. Mr. Stockwell said that he would take time to consider. And I said, "I will give you exactly five minutes." I took out my watch, and gave him five minutes, and at the end of that time he said, "We will pay the money." Then I said, "Having decided to do that, I will give you two days more, and I recommend you not to pay the money," and then I went over the reasons for his not paying the money—because I thought the subsidy was not worth it. I did that for his own sake, and also for the sake of the company, and also for my own sake, because I wanted to get out of the thing. It was that interview which I related to Mr. Smith. I also related it to Mr. Bellows, the vice-president, about half an hour after it occurred. I told Mr. Smith all about it. He had called me into his office to ask me in reference to some private interests of his own in California.

Q. When you pulled out your watch and said that you would give Mr. Stockwell five minutes to decide, did you do so threateningly?—A. I did not; I did so because I was tired of the subject.

Q. You had promised to pay those sums here?—A. I had.

Q. Did you not want to keep your promises?—A. I did.

Q. Why did you recommend Mr. Stockwell not to pay the money?

A. Because I did not want it paid under any such circumstances as those.

Q. Under what circumstances?—A. That it was to be accounted for. I did not want to hand him in a list of all these names.

Q. Why did you object to that?—A. My objection to it was precisely the same objection as I had to giving the names to this committee.

Q. Why, if it was a legitimate transaction?—A. Simply because it was not our agreement.

Q. Was that the only reason?—A. It was not the only cause. No such money ever has been accounted for.

Q. What do you mean by that?—A. I mean that no money expended by any corporation or individual for the purpose of legislation has ever been accounted for before.

Q. Why should it not be?—A. I do not know, but it never has been, and it was the agreement in this case that it should not be accounted for. I held Mr. Stockwell to that agreement, and gave him five minutes to decide; but afterward I left him this other two days, and then two days after that, to consider the case, and I was very much in hopes that he would decide to adhere to his first position. If he had adhered to it, I should have adhered to mine, and I should not have been before this committee.

Q. And these men here never would have got their money?—A. Never.

Q. What would have been the result of that?—A. The result of that would have been that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company never would have got the subsidy.

Q. Was it dependent on the disbursement of this money after the bill had passed Congress?—A. I thought it was.

Q. Did that disbursement have any influence at the White House?—A. I think not.

Q. How then could it affect the subsidy?—A. One of these men could have had a resolution offered in the Senate or the House the next day of inquiry into the manner by which the subsidy was procured.

Q. How would that have affected the President's signature to the bill?—A. I do not think it would have affected the President's signature, but I think it would have affected the awarding of the contract by the Postmaster-General.

Q. Why do you think so?—A. He would have to be a very brave man to award the contract with the evidence before him that is now before this committee.

Q. That evidence was not in existence?—A. But it would have been in existence; and not only that, but it would have been still fresher, if the investigation had been made then; nobody would have forgotten anything about it. The men who did not get their money would certainly not forget it.

Q. Then you are obliged to assume that the subsidy was corruptly obtained?—A. If the evidence was before the Postmaster-General of the large payments of money which you yourself take for granted were corruptly expended, I think he would assume that they were corruptly expended.

Mr. WOOD. I take it for granted, because you will not explain them.

The WITNESS. I cannot explain them. How can I explain what Mr. Schumaker and Mr. King did with their money?

The CHAIRMAN. I want to call your attention to a single answer that you gave this morning. You said that you got the money on those checks which Mr. Stockwell had furnished you and which you referred to in the letter to which Mr. Wood called your attention. Did you mean to say that you got the money on those checks?

The WITNESS. As to the checks for $250,000—$110,000, $100,000 and $40,000—I have already testified that I got the $40,000, and that I got $50,000 afterwards as part payment of the check for $110,000, and got a new check for $60,000, and that all the balance of those checks and the checks referred to in Mr. Stockwell's letters of the 4th of May were returned by me to Mr. Bellows on the 23d of May.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not so understand you this morning.

The WITNESS. I intended so to state.

The CHAIRMAN. I understood you to say that you had realized on those checks.

The WITNESS. No, sir; I want to say very distinctly that not one of those checks was ever cashed by me, except the $40,000 check and the $50,000 (if it was cashed) which was given in part payment of the $110,000 check.

By Mr. FOSTER :

Q. Did you have an understanding, either in writing, verbally, or by signs, with your employes, or with the parties working for you in the procurement of the subsidy, that you were not to know anything which might be improperly done to influence the action of members of Congress?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you avoid all information of that kind?—A. I neither avoided it nor sought it; I thought that it was none of my business, after I paid them for their services, what they did with the money.

Q. Did you allow them to talk to you?—A. Yes; they said anything to me that they wanted to.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1875.

D. W. VOORHEES sworn and examined.

By Mr. NIBLACK :

Question. State your name and residence.—Answer. My name is D. W. Voorhees. I live at Terre Haute, Ind. I was a member of the Forty-second Congress.

Q. You are at liberty now to make any statement you desire in connection with this Pacific Mail subsidy.—A. I will simply say to the committee that on Monday evening I saw in the special dispatches of the Cincinnati Gazette, and, perhaps, one or two other papers, an intimation of the connection of my name with the passage of the Pacific Mail subsidy. I immediately telegraphed Mr. Beck and Mr. Niblack a telegram which has been read, I believe, in the committee and to the House, containing a request to be summoned here. I come, therefore, at my own solicitation, and I desire to say to the committee that there is not a circumstance nor a shadow of a circumstance out of which such an accusation could arise as against me, to my own knowledge. The Globe shows that I was mistaken by one day, when I telegraphed, in the date of my leave of absence. I telegraphed that I had a leave of absence on the 21st, but the record shows that I had a leave of absence on the 20th, one day earlier. I received that leave for the reason I was called home to defend Mrs. Clem in a very noted murder case, which occupied a great deal of public attention in the West, and which was set for the 29th of May. I went home to have a week's preparation. No human being, directly or indirectly, orally or in writing, ever made an improper suggestion to me in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy. It was one of those things that I knew perhaps as little about as almost any measure pending in Congress while I was here. I never read the bill, and have not to this day. I did not know its place on the calendar when I took a leave of absence. I did not know it was likely to come up, or anything about it; and as to my having a $1,000 bill, I had nothing of the kind. I do not, to my recollection, remember of having a $1,000 bill in a single bill of my own or of anybody else in my possession in the last five years. My attention was called confidentially to a rumor that certain members of Congress had had $1,000 bills here by my colleague at that time, who was Mr. Kerr. Mr. Beck also participated somewhat in the conversation. I said to them that the only $1,000 that I knew anything about during that session of Congress outside of my salary was the $1,000 fee that I went home and worked one solid month for in the defense of Mrs. Clem, $500 of which was paid to me when I got to Indianapolis, at Mr. English's bank, which was the First National Bank, and $500 which was paid after the trial was over. I don't think I had $50 when I left here; I made no deposit with the Sergeant-at-Arms, and his books show that I made none. I got no change for any $1,000 bill; nobody ever approached me improperly in regard to the Pacific Mail subsidy, and I can scarcely remember whether anybody ever spoke to me on the subject, although possibly they did. An intimation or an accusation more utterly groundless was never made against anybody in the world, and if there is anybody who pretends to believe, or thinks, that they have ever paid me any money, on this subject or any other, improperly, connected with my services in Congress, I beg them to come forward and tell it.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 21, 1875.

BOYD WINCHESTER sworn and examined.

To Mr. BECK:

I live in Louisville, Ky., and was a member of the last Congress.

Question. You have heard the article from the National Republican, which I caused to be read while Mr. Schumaker was upon the stand? State, first, upon that subject, if there is any truth, or shadow of proof, in any intimation of that sort.—Answer. I will state to the committee that this intimation, as well as any other connected with this subsidy, so far as I am concerned, is utterly wanton, and utterly baseless. I received a dispatch from Mr. Beck yesterday morning in reference to this matter, which I answered, saying that I had supposed the Congressional Globe, showing my vote upon this bill, and also a previous statement, which I had made to the committee in the Forty-second Congress, would be sufficient; but I subsequently received a subpoena from the Sergeant-at-Arms, and came on. As I say, I appeared before this committee in the Forty-second Congress in consequence of a list furnished by the book-keeper in the room of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and made a statement which the committee assured me was perfectly satisfactory, and I understood then that the whole matter would be expunged. I admitted then that I had a deposit there. I am informed by Mr. Ordway, however, that I made no deposit in May or June. I did, in leaving, take a draft which rather exceeded my pay as member of Congress, and I made a confession which probably, to some gentlemen, was as bad as a confession of the offense charged. But rather than have any gentleman on this committee (a great many of whom are strangers to me) have any doubt as to where that money came from, I preferred to make an acknowledgment, which I did make, and do it again by saying that I had been sporting a little during that Congress, and that I had deposited money with the Sergeant-at-Arms from time to time, keeping no particular record of the amount. If there was any reason at all for Mr. Dillon to predicate this matter upon me, it must have been in consequence of that.

Q. You mean that you had been playing cards?—A. Yes, sir. The Congressional Globe will show not only that I voted against this bill, but against every other subsidy, money or land, during my whole four years' service in Congress.

Q. Do you remember anything about any particular $1,000 bill?—A. O, no; I think that is all untrue. I do not think I ever deposited a $1,000 bill. As I said to the committee before, I would not swear that I did not. I remember depositing $500 bills. I do not think, however, that I was so fortunate as to get a $1,000 bill at one time, but still I would not say that I did not. I was willing to give Mr. Dillon the benefit of the doubt. Probably the account will show whether any amount was as large as that. I do not remember, and I have not examined it.

Q. I want you to make your statement full and emphatic in regard to your alleged connection with that bill, whether you were in favor of it or opposed it. I observe by the yeas and nays that you voted against it.—A. I voted against it in every shape and form that it came before the House. I remember distinctly the day the bill was voted upon, and this is one thing that impresses it on my mind: I had a classmate, whom I had not seen for several years, who was visiting here, and insisted upon my going to dinner with him that day, which I refused to do on account of my unwillingness to be absent.

Q. Sometimes insinuations are made about men, that they play cards with people, and that they are allowed to win money to influence them. Was there anything of that sort in your case?—A. Not that I know of. They were members of Congress, all of them, with whom I played.

Q. So that there was nothing by any sort of inference of that kind?—A. No, sir; I don't care about giving gentlemen's names, of course, in that connection, with whom I played, nor care about having my own given; for I want it understood that I have reformed now. I think it a great outrage that any man's name should be connected with a matter of this sort, when the proof is at hand to establish conclusively that any intimation of that sort was unfounded. A lie travels very rapidly.

Q. Do I understand that no one even approached you on the subject?—A. I never was approached in any shape or form. I do not know of anybody being approached or receiving any consideration. I do not know that I ever had the matter even mentioned to me, because I was so outspoken in my opposition to anything of the kind. I voted against bills unhesitatingly where my own friends were interested in matters of that kind; in which Kentucky people were interested, and in which Mr. Beck will remember that the citizens of my town were largely interested. I voted against the Bayfield bill, and I think I will be found on the record as having voted against everything of that kind solidly and without any exception.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1875.

JAMES D. SMITH recalled.

The CHAIRMAN. If you heard Mr. Irwin's testimony before the committee last Wednesday, I wish you to state whether that part of it referring to yourself is correct?

The WITNESS. I was introduced to Mr. Irwin, at the Pacific Mail Steamship Company's office, in the year 1872. I asked him when he was passing my office some time to come in, as I wished to ask him about some matters of interest to me in California which he might know about. He came in within a few days; he did not state to me that he had had a disagreeable interview with Mr. Stockwell, and he did not state to me any facts regarding money. Neither of those subjects was alluded to. I never saw or spoke to him, except on these occasions, and never exchanged a word with him upon the subject of his business at Washington, or as to any expenditure of money. I never knew that any money was spent in Washington or elsewhere by his agency until months after, when it came out as a street rumor, and it was then an entire surprise to me. I never knew or heard from any source, until he gave his evidence before this committee, that he had any difficulty or disagreement with Mr. Stockwell.

By Mr. WOOD:

Question. Were you an officer of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company in 1872? Were you one of the board of directors?—Answer. I was.

Q. Were you a member of the executive committee?—A. I was.

Q. Then you were in a position to be informed of every matter of great interest to the company?—A. Yes.

Q. You would be likely to be informed of anything of importance that occurred?—A. Yes; of anything that was reported to the board of directors.

Q. Can you state whether there was any action of the board of directors or of the executive committee during the year 1872, that refers to the disbursement of any money by Mr. Stockwell, representing the company in Washington, for the purpose of procuring this subsidy during the year 1872?—A. There was a resolution passed by the executive committee authorizing Mr. Stockwell to spend money for legitimate and necessary expenses in regard to the mail contract that was pending before Congress. That was in the month of February, 1872.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Irwin on that subject?—A. No, sir; never a syllable.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation, outside of the proceeding that was referred to in the board, with Mr. Stockwell?—A. I ought to state in the first place that when this resolution was offered, I said to Mr. Stockwell, "You cannot spend outside of $5,000 without being authorized." He said that this thing might amount to $5,000 or $6,000, or perhaps $10,000, but that was the outside. Mr. Stockwell stated that to me at the time the resolution passed, and he repeated it a week or two later.

Q. As late as the month of March?—A. No, sir; in the same month of February.

Q. Were you not aware that he had drawn $750,000 belonging to the company?—A. I was never aware of it.

Q. And yet you were a member of the executive committee?—A. Yes, sir. I did not know it, nor was it ever reported to the executive committee, or to the board of directors, to my knowledge.

Q. How long did you remain a director?—A. I was elected in November, 1871, and I have been a director ever since, and am still a director.

Q. Then I understand from you that this large disbursement was made without the knowledge or consent of the executive committee or of the board of directors?—A. Entirely.

Q. And that the statement of Mr. Stockwell originally was that the amount was not to exceed $10,000?—A. It was not to exceed $10,000. He said that it might be $5,000 or $6,000, or perhaps $10,000.

Q. And that was for the ordinary expenses of presenting the case to Congress?—A. Yes; for preparing bills, making out statements, and for such hotel-expenses as an agent would be at here.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Did Mr. Irwin have an interview with you such as he referred to in his evidence the other day? Do you recollect any such interview?—

A. I recollect an interview. I have stated that I had an interview with him.

Q. At the time that he indicates?—A. It was about that time.

Q. Did he indicate to you in that conversation where you might find any information bearing on the appropriation or use of money?—

A. He did not; and all that he said in his testimony which I have read regarding the watch and regarding any allusions or facts relating to money is an entire fabrication. There is not one word of truth in it.

Q. The particular point which I wish to direct your attention to is this, whether or not he indicated to you where information could be had on that question?—A. He did not.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. I want to understand, if I can, what the duties of that executive committee are?—A. To look after the general interests of the company in the absence of the board of directors.

Q. Are not the statements of the expenditures of the company laid before that committee periodically?—A. The auditing committee is obliged to examine all the accounts, moneys, &c., once in three months, and to report to the board of directors a general statement as to the business of the company, the movements of steamers, the times they leave, the amount of freight, &c. This is always reported to the executive committee, but not a general statement of general matters. That is brought before the board of directors.

Q. Would it not be your duty, as a member of the executive committee, to know everything that appeared on the books of the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Whose duty was it to ascertain what the books of the company showed in relation to its financial affairs?—A. The president and treasurer have the entire control of all the moneys, &c., according to the by-laws of the company.

Q. But they make an exhibit of what they are doing to certain parties, do they not?—A. Yes; to the auditing committee.

Q. And does that auditing committee examine once in three months?—A. Yes.

Q. Does that auditing committee report to the executive committee?—A. Not to the executive committee, but to the board of directors.

Q. You were a member of the board of directors as well?—A. Yes.

Q. Then you would know as a member of the board of directors?—A. Yes.

Q. You have seen the books of the company since then?—A. No; I have never had anything to do with the books of the company.

Q. Have you never seen them since this investigation began?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had you never curiosity enough to look at them in order to ascertain the truth of the charges?—A. I have not. I have depended on what has been reported by the people who have charge of the books.

Q. Do you know of anybody connected with the board of directors, either a member of the executive committee, or of the auditing committee, or generally, who has had curiosity enough to keep posted about the books of the company?—A. I do not. I think that that was left to the executive officers of the company.

Q. And that has been the custom?—A. Yes.

Q. Therefore, when you passed that resolution in February you did not even take the precaution to limit the amount?—A. We did not limit it in the resolution, but we did by action before the board.

Q. By talk?—A. By talk.

Q. You say that you did not look at the books, and that you are not able to tell us what the books showed?—A. I am not.

Q. You left it under absolute control of the president?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He might have spent just as much as he pleased, so far as written authority was concerned?—A. Up to the amount stated.

Q. There was no amount stated?—A. He was authorized to spend what was legitimate and necessary, according to that resolution, and it was stated not to be over that amount.

Q. It was not so stated in the resolution?—A. No, sir; but the resolution was supposed to be very carefully guarded.

Q. In what way?—A. By limiting the expenditure to what was legitimate and absolutely necessary.

Q. Is that the language of the resolution, "absolutely necessary?"—A. I do not know whether the word "absolutely" is in it.

Q. The company having such an immense amount of business, you have absolutely left all of it under the control of one man?—A. Corporations are generally managed by the president; the board only meets once a month, according to the by-laws of the company.

Q. The only way in which the board, under the constitution and by-laws, could bind itself was by written resolution; is not that the fact?—A. I do not know.

Q. Do you think that any outside talk putting limitation on the amount of expenditures, and which was not in writing, would affect persons dealing with the company?—A. I think it ought to affect the president certainly.

Q. Here is the resolution, on page 68 of the testimony: "Resolved, That the president, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to employ counsel and incur such other necessary expense as may be necessary in connection with the measures for additional subsidy now pending before Congress." There is no such word as "absolutely" there. I suppose that that resolution, if it was shown to any person doing business with the president, would have authorized him to think that whatever he, in his discretion, thought it necessary to do might be done.—A. I do not think that anybody could construe that resolution as meaning that the president of the company was authorized to spend any money, except such as was necessary in the legitimate prosecution of this business before Congress. It is guarded by saying "such other necessary expense as may be necessary." I am sure that the president of the company never did so consider it.

Q. Was there no other resolution in writing which anybody else could see except that, so far as you know?—A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. And whatever limitation as to amount was on it was mere verbal talk?—A. It was talk.

Q. Which nobody knew anything about except yourselves?—A. Yes, sir; every member of the executive committee who was present knew it, and the secretary of the company knew it.

Q. But outside men and outside agents had no information about it?—A. None that I know.

Q. It stood, therefore, in the discretion of Mr. Stockwell?—A. Yes; to spend what amount was necessary for legitimate expenses in procuring this contract.

Q. Would you not be very much astonished if you were to ascertain from the books of the company that, during all the months from February until May, they contained entries showing that very large sums of money had been transferred to Mr. Irwin, as agent of the company here?—A. I heard of it since, and I was very much astonished when I did hear of it. I read Mr. Roundy's testimony on that subject, in which he said that he was rather instructed to conceal it.

Q. Any auditing committee that had done its duty and looked at the books would have seen and known whatever appears on the books?—A. We did not look on the books.

Q. Why?—A. Because the statement of the president and of the treasurer was put before us, showing the status of the concern. We did not have the books brought in, but took the statements submitted by the executive officers of the company.

Mr. BECK. That is just what seems to me to be so palpable a failure on the part of the auditing committee to do its duty.

The WITNESS. That is the usual custom.

Q. Is not the auditing committee appointed for the very purpose of being a check upon those executive officers?—A. I should think it should be.

Q. And instead of taking their own statements, ought not the auditing committee to have looked into the facts as they appeared on the books, and verified the statements of the officers by the books, and is not that the very object for the existence of such a committee?—A. There was a large amount of money spent at that time chargeable to various accounts. There was being a good deal of money spent on ships and on coal, and for other purposes, and it might be in any of these accounts that were presented. Eldridge and Irwin were the California agents of the company at that time. Mr. Irwin was never appointed an agent here by the board of directors, to my knowledge.

Mr. BECK. But he was appointed by Mr. Stockwell under the general authority given to Mr. Stockwell by this resolution?

The WITNESS. That may have been; but Mr. Irwin was never regarded by the board of directors as having any business for the company except as its agent in San Francisco.

Mr. BECK. Still you gave Mr. Stockwell authority to employ whom he pleased?

The WITNESS. Not according to the resolution. The resolution speaks for itself. I do not think that we gave him authority to employ anybody. He might employ counsel, and that would naturally mean a lawyer.

Mr. BECK, [reading.] "That the president, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to employ counsel and incur such other necessary expense as may be necessary in connection with the measures for additional subsidy now pending before Congress." All the New York testimony indicates that in the management of the company everything was trusted to executive officers, and that neither the auditing committee nor the executive committee nor the board of directors ever seemed to have knowledge of the true condition of their own books.

The WITNESS. You had that auditing committee before you in New York.

Mr. BECK. Yes, and they were as ignorant and oblivious a set of men as I ever saw.

The WITNESS, [to Mr. Beck.] Do you think, according to the construction of that resolution, that if you had been Mr. Stockwell you would have been authorized to spend $750,000 of the funds of the company and never reported to the board?

Mr. BECK. I do not think that that resolution would have authorized anybody to do any such thing.

The WITNESS. That is just what I think.

Mr. BECK. But still you gave him that sort of unlimited authority, and when he did exercise it nobody seemed to have any check over him.

The WITNESS. Mr. Stockwell was a very large owner of the stock. He went into the concern owning 115,000 shares of stock, and he felt that he rather owned the concern.

Mr. BECK. It never entered my brain that any such sum could be spent.

The WITNESS. Neither did it enter my brain, or that of any other director that I have spoken to about it. If I had known that any such amount was being spent, I should either have gone into the subject or resigned at once.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. I understand you to say that under this resolution which has been read to you, and so far as you know, the other members of the executive committee had no idea that more money was to be spent than $8,000 or $10,000 at the outside?—A. That was my idea. I never dreamed of anything more than that.

Q. And, so far as you know, that was the understanding of all the executive committee, and of the board of directors, outside of the president and vice-president?—A. That was the understanding. I talked with Mr. Kingsland yesterday, who was a member of the auditing committee, and he said that it was so considered at the time, and that he was never more surprised in his life than at finding the amount of money that had been spent.

Q. And you regarded this discretion—referred to in the resolution—as merely giving the president the opportunity to employ counsel or not to employ counsel, and to incur necessary expense or not to incur necessary expense, just as he pleased?—A. Yes, sir; I think that would be a fair construction of it.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. The ordinary practice of your company, I suppose, in regard to matters of disbursement, is the same as that of other large corporations in New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For instance, the president and cashier of a bank will distribute large sums of money at times, and detailed statements will only be made to the board of directors monthly or semi-monthly?—A. That is the general custom among all large corporations.

Q. The ordinary disbursements of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, at that time, were made under the direction of the president, vice-president, and treasurer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without the knowledge of the executive committee?—A. Entirely.

Q. And the duties of the executive committee were what?—A. They were to look after the general interests of the company, and to hear reports from the president at times, and to give him such advice as they thought necessary.

Q. The auditing committee was not composed of any members of the executive committee?—A. No, sir; none of the auditing committee were members of the executive committee.

Q. And the duties of the auditing committee were to do what?—A. They were to examine the moneys and securities of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and to report to the board once in three months.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. The auditing committee also audited the items of the accounts, to a certain extent, did they not? That is to say, they approved or disapproved the items of disbursements?—A. Yes, sir; any accounts that were presented to their notice.

Q. Was it the duty of the auditing committee to examine in detail the entries on the books?—A. It was not, to my knowledge. If they had done that, it would have shown a want of confidence in the officers of the company.

Q. And, so far as you know, any false entries on the books were not known to that auditing committee or to the board of directors at that time?—A. So far as I know, they were not.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1875.

N. G. ORDWAY, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, sworn and examined.

The CHAIRMAN. Something has been said about the accounts of members of Congress, covering the time when this subsidy was pending in Congress. I do not desire to ask you to divulge the accounts with the members of Congress; the committee does not desire to pry into them; but if there is anything in the accounts kept with you which will throw any light on this investigation, you will please give the committee the benefit of it.

The WITNESS. I would like to make a brief statement about that, and in my statement I will give the deposits which were made during the months of May and June of that year. I will give the deposits without giving the names. The newspaper statements on this subject have induced me to make a statement in reference to the manner in which the accounts are kept.

Continued misrepresentations in regard to what the books of the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms would show having been made—perhaps, innocently—by various correspondents, and sent out over the country, it is due to the office that I should state to the committee that there was formerly but one set of books kept by the Sergeant-at-Arms. Those books were known as the Government pay and mileage books, in which the law requires the Sergeant-at-Arms to enter the pay-certificates signed by the Speaker and drawn against the account of each member of the House. These books are required by law to be filed at the Treasury Department, and are made a part of its records at the close of each Congress.

When I came into office, owing to the disturbed condition of society in Washington, incident to the war, members preferred to leave a portion of their pay in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, to be called for as they needed it, rather than carry large sums of money about them.

In order to accommodate members, a set of books was prepared, known as the deposit-books, in which were entered any sums of money which had been drawn from the Treasury upon the Speaker's certificates, and receipted for by members, and any other private funds which members desired to deposit.

The amounts thus credited to the members on the deposit-books were checked out in small sums from time to time by the members to pay board-bills and other expenses.

All transactions of this kind were entered in the deposit-ledger, and these two sets of books are the only books that have ever been kept in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

These deposit-books are precisely such books as are kept in every bank, and are just as much open to the inspection of proper persons, and always have been, as the deposit-books of any bank in Washington.

No national bank or banker would allow unauthorized persons to come into his banking-room and overhaul and examine promiscuously the accounts of his depositors. They would, however, produce the account of any depositor before any competent tribunal when properly subpoenaed to do so.

The books of the Sergeant-at-Arms, especially the deposit-book, have always been produced before every committee of Congress, and an examination made of any account therein contained, when the committee had first obtained evidence to warrant them in making the examination of such account; and there has been no attempt to conceal from the public or prevent the examination of any credit to members which appears on these books.

The only point I have ever made with this or any other committee of Congress, has been that this deposit-ledger should be treated precisely as a deposit-ledger of any bank or banker, as I considered it private property, and that before they took the books to overhaul them they should designate the accounts to which the evidence developed seemed to point.

This position the Credit Mobilier committee conceded to be correct, and while I presented to that committee the account of every member, and the check or voucher accompanying the account, to which the evidence had in any way pointed, the committee were very decided in sustaining me in the position that it would be indelicate to take a deposit-ledger of this kind into a committee-room and expose every account in it to gratify the curiosity of the crowd usually in attendance on such investigations. I would further state, as it was thought by some that Mr. Whitelaw Reid in his testimony intimated that I might have more than one set of books in which sums due members were entered, that the deposit-ledgers referred to contain every financial transaction in my office during the past ten years, and no other private account is kept in the office. I will further state that I have made, in connection with my present book-keeper, a careful examination of every credit to members of Congress during the months of May and June, 1872, and I find that but thirteen members made deposits of any sums during those two months amounting to $100; and that of those thirteen depositors but two were more than $500, and that neither of these two members voted for the subsidy bill. I do not find a single entry of $1,000 to the credit of any member during those two months, and of the eleven other depositors the amounts ranged from $100 to $600, and were mostly drafts deposited in the regular course of business for collection.

I, therefore, state in the most positive manner that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, the books of the Sergeant-at-Arms will not disclose anything which will aid in the investigation now before the Ways and Means Committee. The committee, however, are at perfect liberty at any time to examine any account they may choose, as I have brought the books with me.

I have spoken of the months of May and June, of 1872, because I suppose it will not be alleged, as these payments were not made until after the 20th of May, that deposits could have been made which had any connection with this subsidy during any other months of that year. I wish to state further, in the most positive manner, for the benefit of whom it may concern, that there never has been, to my knowledge, one dollar of money deposited in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms during the eleven years which I have been in office that was used, or intended to be used, to bribe members of Congress.

In order to convince the committee, and all others interested, I desire to have my present book-keeper, Mr. Edward L. Whitford, state whether he has ever known, since he has occupied his present position, any money deposited or paid out in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, except what was entered in the open manner I have described upon the deposit-ledger.

In order to cover the time previous to his occupying his position, I refer to the testimony of Moses Dillon, my former book-keeper, given before the Credit Mobilier committee. It corroborates my testimony, and proves conclusively that there has never been but one set of deposit-books, and that there has never been any money received or paid out in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms since I have held the office, except in this open manner, and duly entered on the deposit-ledger.

Q. State whether, to your knowledge, there has ever been money received and disbursed in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and not entered on these books.—A. There has not been, to my knowledge.

Q. Have you any other books of any kind that contain any minutes of accounts, official or private, with any member?—A. I have no books of any kind or description in my office except these, and never had.

Q. Have you any memoranda other than books that indicate any transaction, official or private, with any members of Congress except what you have testified to?—A. None whatever of any kind or description. It was suggested by Mr. Reid, of the Tribune, that I might have private books. I want to say that I never have had a knowledge of anything that would throw the slightest light on this subject or on any other transaction of the same character during the eleven years that I have been in the office.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Do the books which you submit contain entries of all the moneys that were received and paid out through your office during the period to which you have reference?—A. They do so, every dollar. They are a duplicate of the books filed at the Treasury Department, and they show every dollar received or paid out through my office in any way.

Q. The books which you submit here to the committee—do they contain entries of all the moneys that were received and paid out through your office, or by your clerks for you, during the period to which you have referred—the months of May and June, 1872?—A. They do for that entire Congress. There are no other books or memoranda of any kind or description, and there never have been.

Q. Suppose drafts were obtained on the Treasury for the accommodation of a member on money which he presented or deposited at the office, would such a transaction be shown by your books?—A. If a member brought in the money, and asked to have a draft procured, and left the money in an envelope, as occasionally a member does, it would not appear; but if he deposited the money in any form, the books would show it. If a man came in in the morning with a sum of money, and asked me to procure a draft for it, and left the money, there would be no entry whatever of the transaction. The only way to reach it would be by referring to our draft-list at the Treasury.

Q. These books which you have left and that draft-list would show all such transactions?—A. They would show everything.

Q. Are those usual transactions?—A. They are not usual. We make a practice of entering everything that is left on deposit, or that is to remain even a day or two on deposit, even though we know that it is to be used in procuring a draft.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1875.

RICHARD B. IRWIN, recalled:

The testimony of Mr. James D. Smith taken before the committee this morning having been read to the witness, the witness made the following statement:

The WITNESS. According to my recollection, every word that I stated is true in my testimony the other day, is strictly true. I have no doubt that Mr. Smith has forgotten the transaction; I do not mean, of course, to say that I told Mr. Smith every detail of my interview with Mr. Stockwell, but only that I told him enough of the interview with Mr. Stockwell to have enabled him to follow the subject up if he wished to do so. I want to add further, as it has been charged that both Mr. Stockwell and myself concealed from the public and the company all knowledge of these subsidy transactions, that I made no such concealment whatever. I told three persons whom I can name, and who were interested with me in business, all about it. That is to say, I told them the amount involved, and it was a subject of after-dinner conversation to my knowledge with Mr. Stockwell for months afterward. I am informed that Mr. Stockwell did not conceal it as a matter of fact.

By Mr. BELL, counsel for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company:

Q. I call your attention first to a letter of Mr. Alden B. Stockwell to you of February 1, page 97, and I ask you to state what you wrote to Mr. Stockwell to draw that letter out.—A. I cannot tell you.

Q. Can you not state something of the character of your letter to him?—A. The only suggestion that occurs to me is caused by the first line of his letter, in which he alludes to my indisposition. Further than that I do not recollect anything that I said in my letter.

Q. Was your letter on the subject of this subsidy business?—A. It probably related to it.

Q. Did you state the terms and the amount of your contract?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you ask him to make you any proposition of the kind?—A. I did not.

Q. If you are able to state what you did not say in your letter, can you not on reflection state what you did say?—A. I cannot, because the letter does not suggest anything. I can state that I did not say this because I know that I did not do it in any letter. I have stated in my testimony the manner in which it was done, and that excludes the idea of its having been done in any other way.

Q. Did you in that communication to Mr. Stockwell give to him any information in reference to the condition of affairs at Washington?—A. That I cannot tell; I think it very likely.

Q. Did you tell him anything as to what you thought of the chances of success?—A. I am pretty sure that I did not.

Q. You have stated that the subject of the contract had not been discussed up to that date, the 1st of February, 1872?—A. Yes.

Q. Between the 1st of February and the 14th of February, 1872, the date of your receipt of Mr. Stockwell's next letter, did you write him any letter?—A. Very likely I did.

Q. Is it your best recollection that you did?—A. I cannot state. I generally wrote to him every other day, and sometimes I wrote to him every day.

Q. Then you think that you did probably write him several letters between the 1st and 14th of February, 1872?—A. I think it very likely.

Q. Did these letters refer to your contract?—A. They did not.

Q. They had no relation to the contract?—A. No, sir.

Q. Before the 14th of February you must have had conversation with him on the subject indicated in this letter?—A. It is very likely that I did.

Q. Do you recall the fact?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you swear that you did have any conversation on the subject of the contract before the letter of February 13?—A. I cannot say positively that I did or that I did not.

Q. Do you not recollect that you stated that your understanding was that you were to have $500,000 instead of $250,000?—A. My testimony is incorrectly reported in that respect. I said first that I had had a personal interview with him, and then I corrected that statement immediately, and said that it was not in the personal interview, but that it was in the message carried to him by Mr. Abert. In my testimony on that point I am reported as saying that I had had it in not only in a personal interview, but also in a message by Mr. Abert.

Q. And now you say that between the 1st and 14th of February you did not have any personal interview with Mr. Stockwell on this subject?—A. No, sir.

Q. And that you had no conversation with him whatever in relation to his letter of the 13th of February?—A. I had no conversation with him in regard to fixing the terms of the contract.

Q. But you did send a message to him by Mr. Abert?—A. I did.

Q. What was that message?—A. I told him that I should want $500,000 on the passage of the bill, and that I should want $40,000 whether the bill passed or not; what we call $40,000 cash, and the balance contingent. Mr. Abert took that message by my directions and returned with the letter of February 13 and with the checks.

Q. How could you then say that it was your understanding that you were to have $500,000?—A. Because I told Mr. Abert to say so.

Q. You made that offer, but it was not accepted.—A. It was accepted by the letter of the 13th of February.

Q. That was the only acceptance of it that was made?—A. That was all.

Q. You did not call that an acceptance of your proposal of $500,000?—A. I said that that was my understanding.

Q. Then you now state that you did not mean to say that there had been, previously to the 13th of February, 1872, a contract for $500,000, but merely that you had made an offer of that sort?—A. Yes; and that it was accepted by that letter to the extent of $250,000.

Q. Then up to February 13 there was no contract?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Stockwell had not accepted the proposition which you had made?—A. No, sir.

Q. This letter of the 13th of February is the individual letter of Mr. Stockwell to you?—A. That is a matter of law.

Q. Is it not so in point of fact?—A. I would not like to testify as to that, because it has been the custom of the presidents of that company to write their letters in that way.

Q. You say: "I stated to Mr. Stockwell that my understanding was $500,000, instead of $250,000," but you have not stated when you did so state to him.—A. I stated it to him in reply to that letter of the 13th of February.

Q. How?—A. By letter.

Q. You wrote to him then?—A. I did. I wrote to him on the day I received that letter.

Q. On the 14th of February?—A. If it was the 14th of February that I received it, and I take it for granted, from the date of the letter, that it was.

Q. On that same day you wrote him what?—A. Simply that my understanding was that it was to be $500,000.

Q. Did you receive any reply to that?—A. I did.

Q. Have you got that reply?—A. I have not.

Q. Did it assent to your proposition?—A. Yes.

Q. That you were to have $500,000?—A. Yes.

Q. Where is that letter which you received from Mr. Stockwell?—A. I have not got it.

Q. Have you got a copy of it?—A. I have not.

Q. Why did you not mention that fact to the committee before?—A. I did not think it necessary.

Q. What was the date of his reply?—A. It was the next day after I wrote the letter.

Q. Do you speak from recollection?—A. Yes; the thing took place immediately.

Q. He assented to your proposition in writing?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he send you the $500,000?—A. I told him in my first letter that I would afterward call upon him for that additional amount, and I did so.

Q. I come now to Mr. Stockwell's letter of the 4th of May, which is the next letter which you produce, in which he sends you $400,000, and asks you to return his checks for $250,000, previously sent to you. Why, if he had assented to the $500,000, did he not inclose to you $500,000 instead of $400,000?—A. He sent me more than that. He had already sent me $250,000.

Q. But he asked you to return his checks for that $250,000?—A. Yes, but that was a misunderstanding on his part; I wrote him a letter telling him to send me the amount of these checks. That was in addition to what I already had, but he understood it not to be in addition, and so he asked me to return the checks for $250,000, and I did not do so. I first asked for $500,000 and I got $250,000; I wrote back the next day to say that I would call upon him for the additional amount, and I not only called upon him on the 3d of May for that additional amount, but for an amount in addition to that.

Q. You say that he sent you the $400,000 and requested you to return the $250,000, but that you did not do it?—A. I did not.

Q. On the 23d of April you sent in your resignation?—A. I did.

Q. That was before the letter of the 4th of May was written?—A. Yes.

Q. And before you had received the $400,000?—A. Yes.

Q. What was the object in your resigning at that particular juncture?—A. One of the objects is stated in the letter of resignation itself.

Q. Had you any besides that one?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it that difference between you and Mr. Stockwell as to the sum that you were to be paid?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had it any connection with the amount which he had agreed to pay you?—A. None whatever; it was simply because I wanted to get out of the business.

Q. How much money of his did you have in your hands at the time you wrote that letter of resignation of the 23d of April?—A. I can only answer that inferentially. It must have been about $200,000 or something like that. I had the balance of these checks and any money which I had received and which had not been expended.

Q. Is it not true that Mr. Stockwell had refused to accede to your demands before you sent in your letter of resignation?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you wish to resign, not only from this business in Washington but from the company's service?—A. My reason was that I was sick of the whole business.

Q. On the 23d of April?—A. Yes; at almost any period, in fact, during the whole year.

Q. Have you destroyed the letter which Mr. Stockwell wrote to you in reply to yours of the 14th of February?—A. I cannot say whether I have or not; I do not recollect having destroyed it, and I think I have not destroyed it.

Q. How comes it that you have retained the others and not retained that?—A. It is simply accidental. I selected his other letters and put them away in the drawer of the safe in my office in San Francisco; consequently when I sent to my partner for those letters, he produced those of which he knew the location, and he would not have known where to find the others. I may find them when I go back.

Q. Did you go to New York in the month of April, 1872?—A. I think I was there frequently in April. I was in New York almost every week during the pendency of the measure.

Q. Were you in New York on the 23d of April, when this letter of resignation was written?—A. I was.

Q. And when his letter of reply, which is dated on the same day, was written?—A. Yes; I delivered my letter to him in person, and his answer was delivered to me in person.

Q. And you wrote to him on the 27th of April, withdrawing your resignation?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that also before the letter of the 4th of May?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not a fact that this thing occurred before he assented to your $500,000 demand?—A. It is not.

Q. He had really assented to it before that?—A. Yes.

Q. Had you any other letters from Mr. Stockwell during that period in connection with this contract?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then these three which you have produced and the one which you cannot produce are all the letters?—A. They are all in reference to the contract. Excuse me one moment—a thought occurs to me. I remember now the way in which that letter of the 13th of February came to be written. I wrote or had Mr. Abert write a draught of my letter in Washington, and he took that draught to New York. The letter read just as it does here, $250,000, $100,000, $110,000, and $40,000, making $500,000; Mr.

Stockwell read it as $250,000, in amounts of $100,000, $110,000, and $40,000, and he only sent checks for $250,000.

Q. Did you send him an amended letter for him to sign?—A. I did not; I simply wrote to him that he was mistaken in the amount, and that I would call upon him for the additional amount.

Q. You stated that the four checks of $100,000 each were sent in the letter of the 4th of May; were they checks of the company?—A. Yes.

Q. I would like you to be positive about that, and to state positively whether they were checks of the company or not.—A. They were.

Q. By whom were they signed?—A. By Mr. F. W. G. Bellows, the vice-president.

Q. Payable to whose order?—A. To the order of Mr. Alden B. Stockwell, indorsed by him to the order of Richard B. Irwin, and the indorsement was written by Mr. Bellows.

Q. Are you stating this from memory?—A. I am stating it from memory, and my memory is as clear as a bell about it.

Q. And you state positively that these were the checks of the company?—A. I do.

Q. And were not the checks of third persons the property of Mr. Stockwell?—A. They were not.

Q. You state that positively?—A. I state that positively.

Q. What became of those checks?—A. I gave them back to Mr. Bellows when he delivered me the checks which I finally drew.

Q. Have you read Mr. Bellows's evidence?—A. I have.

Q. You recollect that he states that the checks, which were destroyed, were destroyed some four or six weeks before that?—A. If he said that he is mistaken.

Q. I wish to know whether those checks were destroyed four or six weeks before that?—A. They were not. They were destroyed within four or six minutes afterward.

Q. He differs with you also as to the amount of the checks. As I follow the evidence, he says that the amount of the checks which were destroyed there was $400,000 or $500,000, and he thinks $400,000.—A. The amount was $560,000.

Q. Made up how?—A. One check of $60,000 by A. B. Stockwell on the Manufacturers and Merchants' Bank—his individual check; one check for $100,000, the same; and $400,000 in checks of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, as stated in Mr. Stockwell's letter of the 4th of May.

Q. You had previously used the other $110,000?—A. I had previously used $40,000 and $50,000 of it, as nearly as I recollect.

Q. Is this a matter which you swear to positively, or is it your best recollection? May you be mistaken, or is Mr. Bellows mistaken in regard to the time and place of the destruction of the checks?—A. I state so most positively.

Q. Who destroyed the checks, you or he?—A. They were destroyed by Mr. Bellows, in my presence, in Mr. Stockwell's room, just after he had handed me the other checks.

Q. And not until after you had got the other checks?—A. Not until after I had got the other checks.

Q. You stated that after the receipt of these checks you went back to see what entry was made in the books of the company about that transaction?—A. I did.

Q. And to see that the money was not charged to you?—A. Yes.

Q. When were you first aware of the irregular entries made on the books?

The WITNESS. What do you mean by "irregular entries?"

Mr. BELL. For instance, charging it to Harriot & Noyes.

A. I never was aware of it until I read the testimony in this investigation.

Q. Did you know that any part of it was charged to Eldridge & Irwin?—A. I knew that.

Q. When did you first know that?—A. In the latter part of April, 1874.

Q. You did not know, at the time you went back and made that inquiry, of the irregular entries?

The WITNESS. Do you mean before I looked at the stubs or afterward?

Mr. BELL. Either before or after that visit.

A. The stubs had only A. B. S. written on them when I looked at them at that time. I had only looked at them once before I appeared before this committee, and I stated to the committee before I saw the stubs again exactly the way the entry was.

Q. Did Mr. A. B. Stockwell agree with you to pay out of his own pocket his expenses in Washington?—A. He did not.

Q. Did he never make you understand and believe that he himself was going to pay these expenses in connection with stock-operations?—A. He did not.

Q. Did you never so understand it?—A. I never did so understand it. My understanding of that was that Mr. Stockwell was going to assume and pay this money himself, between the time when the bill should pass and the time of the awarding of the contract.

Q. From whom did you understand that?—A. From him. Not in so many words, but that was the impression that I finally got.

Q. Do you mean that he was to pay it out of his own pocket?—A. Out of his own pocket. He did not say so in so many words, but you asked me for my understanding of it. It only amounted to an impression.

Q. That impression was derived from Mr. Stockwell?—A. From the general tenor of his conversation.

Q. You had his checks in your hands?—A. For a portion of the amount.

Q. Did you not know, as a matter of fact, that Mr. Stockwell had exercised the right of taking the company's checks (which he might have had the intention to replace afterwards) in his private operations, in anything outside of this?—A. I never heard of it until long afterwards.

Q. Until this investigation?—A. I will not say that, but until the investigation by the company itself. I think it all came out in February, 1873.

Q. In your connection with the company, do you say that you never knew Mr. Stockwell to take the company's checks for his own use, with the view, probably, of immediately replacing them?—A. I never heard of such a thing, except in this transaction, until after Mr. Stockwell left the company.

Q. Did you not state to Mr. Scott, the vice-president of the company, in Paris, as the basis of your position, that this Washington affair was Mr. Stockwell's affair, and that he had agreed to pay the expenses out of his own pocket, and that the company was not to pay a dollar?—A. I do not think I stated that last clause. I did state to Mr. Scott that Mr. Stockwell intended to pay this thing individually, just as I have now stated it to you.

Q. Be kind enough to state it again just as you understand it?—A.

What I said to Mr. Scott was that Mr. Stockwell had intended to pay this money out of his own pocket, and that is all.

Q. Did you not state to him that it was not to be any expense to the company?—A. Never. I was alluding then to the particular point of this contract of February 13th, and to the manner in which the contract was made.

Q. You did in fact say to Mr. Scott in Paris that it was Mr. Stockwell's understanding that he was to pay out of his own pocket this money that you expended?—A. I did.

Q. And you made use of that as a reason to Mr. Scott why the company should not be pursuing you in the case?—A. I beg your pardon, sir, I think not.

Q. Did you not claim that the company ought to pursue Mr. Stockwell and not you?—A. That if it pursued anybody, it ought to pursue Mr. Stockwell, but not for that reason. I stated the reason to Mr. Scott distinctly.

Q. You left the impression on Mr. Scott's mind that the understanding was that Mr. Stockwell should pay individually, out of his own pocket, these expenses incurred in Washington?—A. Yes; but I was alluding especially to the time when the expenditure was made, because I knew that it was Mr. Stockwell's intention to get that money from the company when the company got the contract.

Q. You did not tell that to Mr. Scott?—A. We did not go into that.

Q. Did you not state to various gentlemen employed by you in Washington, in connection with this legislation, that it was Mr. Stockwell's affair, and that he was paying the expenses?—A. I would not like to say that I did or did not, because I have no recollection of the circumstance. I would not be very likely to say anything about it to anybody.

Q. Take, for example, Mr. Samuel A. Hatch; you say that you did not employ Mr. Samuel A. Hatch yourself, on your own motion?—A. I did not.

Q. And that his employment was by Mr. Stockwell?—A. It was by me, under Mr. Stockwell's orders.

Q. Did you not state to Mr. Hatch that this was Mr. Stockwell's private affair?—A. I may have done so, but I do not think I did.

Q. You paid Mr. Hatch out of Mr. Stockwell's money?—A. I paid him out of money that I had received.

Q. At that time you did not have a dollar of the company's money in your hands—prior to the 24th of May?—A. I paid Mr. Hatch a portion of the money before the 24th of May, and a large portion of it afterward.

Q. You say that you paid him a $4,000 check to start with?—A. I paid him to start with, I think, $1,000.

Q. How was that paid?—A. Either in currency or by check, I forget which.

Q. You stated that you paid him a $4,000 check?—A. Yes, sir; but I did not state that that was the first of the payments to him.

Q. It was the second?—A. I think so.

Q. You seemed in doubt as to whether you paid him a $16,000 check?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you now clear about it?—A. I am not.

Q. Do you swear positively that you paid him $30,000?—A. I do not.

Q. You are in doubt about it?—A. I am.

Q. Will you swear that you paid him $19,000?—A. I will not.

Q. Is not $19,000 the amount which you actually paid him?—A. I do not think it is.

Q. Do you really think that you paid him any more than that?—A. I do; my impression is that I can identify $21,000 in that transaction with Mr. Hatch, and I think I paid him more than that.

Q. Please to identify the $21,000.—A. I think I paid him first $1,000, then $4,000, and then I paid him $16,000 in New York on the 25th or 27th of May, by a check on the American Exchange Bank. One of the checks, which are in the account running between the 24th of May and the 30th of May, was certainly given to Samuel A. Hatch. One of these checks is $19,000, and that may have been the one which he received, but I do not know. If that was the one, he must have received $24,000, but I think it was the $16,000 check which he received.

Q. Did you hand it to him yourself?—A. I did.

Q. Where?—A. At the Hoffman House, in New York.

Q. Was the check payable to his order?—A. I think so.

Q. Now come to the matters about which you are in doubt; where did you pay him any money after that?—A. I am in doubt whether I paid the money after that or before that. I do not know whether the transaction which I forget was before the transaction which I remember or not.

Q. Speak about the transaction which you forget.—A. I do not know anything about it; but I am positive that I paid Mr. Hatch as much as $21,000, and I believe I paid him more.

Q. How?—A. By checks, if at all. I think I paid him more, because when Mr. Hatch came to me to receive his money, there was some difference of opinion in regard to the amount, and I finally satisfied him, and paid him what he asked. Whether I paid him two checks or one check, I do not recollect.

Q. Where was this conversation?—A. In New York, at the Hoffman House.

Q. Was it before or after the 24th of May?—A. I think it was about the 24th of May, but whether it was before or after I cannot say.

Q. Had the bill passed when you had this conversation with Mr. Stockwell on the 23d of May?—A. It had passed both Houses. The final vote had been taken in both Houses, but the post-office appropriation bill, which contained the Pacific Mail subsidy, was still pending in a committee of conference. The bill had passed the House of Representatives on the 21st of May, and the disagreeing votes between the two Houses were on matters not relating to the Pacific Mail subsidy, except a single verbal amendment as to which there was no difference of opinion, so that in the absence of any new developments the passage of the bill was absolutely certain.

Q. The bill did finally pass on the 27th or 28th of May?—A. The disagreeing votes between the two Houses were reconciled about that date, and the bill passed.

Q. Do you recollect what day the bill was approved by the President?—A. I think on the first of June—either the first or second.

Q. Are you clear that at the time of your interview with Mr. Stockwell, on the 23d of May, the bill had not finally passed the House, and had not been approved by the President?—A. The Post-Office appropriation bill had not finally passed the House, but this Pacific Mail item in the bill had passed both Houses, so that the Pacific Mail appropriation was a finality.

Q. Why did you demand the money from Mr. Stockwell on the 23d of May, before the bill was approved by the President?—A. Because I wanted it. I wanted to go back to California just as soon as possible.

Q. Was it in your contract that you were to have the money before or after the approval of the bill by the President?—A. After the approval; but Mr. Stockwell waived that point.

Q. He refused to pay you on the 23d of May, when you called, did he not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he not refuse to pay the money?—A. Not absolutely. At first he said that he would not pay the money unless I told him to whom it was going.

Q. At that time had the amount been finally settled between you?—A. It had been.

Q. Previous to that, had the amount been settled?—A. I suppose it was on the 23d of May when that took place.

Q. At the time of the interview with Mr. Stockwell, which you understand to be the 23d of May, the actual amount which you were to receive had been previously agreed upon?—A. It was agreed upon then.

Q. It had not previously been agreed upon?—A. No, sir.

Q. I understood you to say that he had come to your terms about the $500,000 before the 23d of May, and had not agreed to anything beyond that?—A. He had given me, before that, $400,000 and $250,000, making $650,000.

Q. There is no evidence that he assented to your use of the $250,000, because he requested you to return it?—A. I have stated that I did not return the $250,000.

Q. He asked you to do so?—A. But, yet, after I told him I would not, he did not ask again.

Q. Did you notify him that you would not return the $250,000?—A. I did notify him instantly that I would not return it.

Q. Had he, between the 4th and the 23d of May, agreed to pay a still larger sum than the $500,000, which you first demanded?—A. The question did not arise between those periods specially.

Q. Then, in point of fact, he had not agreed to any specific sum up to that interview?—A. He had not.

Q. Except the $500,000?—A. And the other money.

Q. I understood you to say that he did assent to your $500,000 demand on the 13th of February?—A. Yes.

Q. That you had him fast for?—A. Yes.

Q. The rest was an open question?—A. He sent me the $400,000.

Q. Did he not demand that you should send back the $250,000?—A. Yes; but I told him I would not, and he assented to that by not insisting on it.

Q. But he did not assent to it in writing, nor in any verbal statement?—A. No, but still he let me keep the checks for the $250,000.

Q. Did he consent to your keeping them?—A. He asked me, by his letter of the 4th of May, to return them, and I told him, in answer to that letter, that I was not going to do so, and he never asked me afterward.

Q. On the 23d of May, was there any difference between you and Mr. Stockwell as to the amount of the contract?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

Q. Did you then advise him of what amount you wanted?—A. I did.

Q. Was that the first time you stated to him this amount?—A. Yes.

Q. What was that gross amount which you then stated to him that the contract should be?—A. I stated to him then that I should want $750,000 in addition to what I had before—not in addition to the checks which I had already had, but in addition to the money which I had already had.

Q. Both from him and the company?—A. That was never touched upon. I stated that to him by giving him a memorandum of the amounts and manner in which the checks were to be drawn.

Q. Was it then stated what amount you had expended up to that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the contract-price of all, the cost there stated between you and Mr. Stockwell?—A. Only by a remark. He said, "This makes about $900,000." I said, "Is it as much as that?" He said, "Yes." And that is all there was of it.

Q. But the amount which you asked for then was $750,000?—A. Yes.

Q. And the amount which you proposed to return was the amount which you then stated?—A. Yes, sir; that is it exactly.

Q. You alluded to a scene of a watch and five minutes; be kind enough to state just what you said to him on that occasion.—A. I will. I said to him, "I will give you five minutes to decide that question."

Q. You had better state the previous conversation, so as to make the connection.—A. The previous conversation was simply this: Mr. Stockwell stated that he did not intend to pay that large sum of money in addition to the large amount which I had previously had, making in all, as he said, about $900,000, until he had an exact account of the name of every man who was going to receive any part of the money, and of the amount which each man was going to get. I stated, "That will be never." Then he began to discuss the question. As he and I have both red hair, I did not care to get into a quarrel with him, so I stopped short and said, "We will not talk about it; I will give you five minutes to decide that question."

Q. And you then took out your watch?—A. Yes; and I said, "I hope you will decide not to pay it."

Q. What else did you say in regard to his not paying it during that five minutes?—A. I do not think that he waited five minutes.

Q. What did you say during the time that you had your watch out?—A. Neither of us said a single, solitary word.

Q. Previous to that period of silence, what did you say, if anything, more than you have stated, by way of urging him not to pay this money?—A. I do not think I said anything.

Q. Did you not tell him you hoped he would decide not to pay it?—A. Yes, I told him so at the time I took my watch out. I do not think that I said anything besides that.

Q. Have you not already stated something else that you did say?—A. Yes; but it was not before that instant; it was after he had decided to pay the money.

Q. Did you use any threats of any kind to him?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you mean that as a threat?—A. I did not. I said it because I was sick of the whole thing, and sick physically, and I wanted to get away.

Q. There was nothing about the transaction which had any reason to make you sick? It was likely to be a profitable one to you.—A. I was disgusted with the whole thing.

Q. But you hoped that it would be a profitable transaction to you, did you not?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you wish really to get out of it at that time?—A. I did.

Q. And you would have been glad if Mr. Stockwell had decided not to pay the money?—A. I should have been perfectly delighted.

Q. Was the act of showing him the watch half intended to induce him not to pay it?—A. It was not intended to have any effect upon his decision, one way or the other, except that I wanted to cut the discussion short, and I wanted an answer then and there that would be a final answer.

Q. What was his answer when he finally broke that silence?—A. He said, "Of course there is nothing else left for us to do."

Q. Did he say anything else?—A. No; that is all that he said.

Q. Do you give his words, or only your best recollection of them?—A. I give my best recollection of them.

Q. You do not undertake to state his exact language?—A. O, no; not three years afterward. My reply to that was, "I do not want you to decide on that ground;" and I then proceeded to give him the reasons why he should not pay the money.

Q. You understood by his answer that he felt compelled to pay it by force of circumstances?—A. Yes; and I begged him not to decide on that ground.

Q. Did you understand, further, that he felt any threat on your part on account of the position he took? Did his answers sound in that way to you?—A. I think not. My idea was just what he stated; that he thought he had nothing else left for him to do.

Q. Why?—A. Because he saw, as well as I did, that he would not get his subsidy unless he paid the money.

Q. Not after the bill had passed?—A. No, sir.

Q. You think that he saw something of that sort?—A. I think he did. He is too intelligent a man not to have seen that.

Q. You had $615,000 in your pocket at that time?—A. I had $560,000, and whatever money I happened to have left over.

Q. Was that fact alluded to?—A. There was not a word said about it.

Q. The real controversy between you was only as to the difference between the checks that you had and the checks that you wanted?—A. No; because I was to return the checks that I had.

Q. Only in the event of his paying the money?—A. No; I would have returned them to him instantly whether he did or not.

Q. You were not bound to do so in case of a breach of contract on his part?—A. No; but I would have done so.

Q. You would have waived that contract?—A. I would.

Q. Did you tell him so?—A. I did not.

Q. Did he expect that you would waive it?—A. I think he did.

Q. Do you think after the appropriation bill had passed both Houses that the question was any longer in doubt?—A. The Postmaster-General was to advertise for proposals, and then he was not instructed to award the contract; he was only authorized to award it; and I think he would have to be a bolder man than I have seen in politics for a good many years to have awarded that contract in the face of the investigation which would inevitably have followed the failure to pay that money.

Q. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company was not named in that general appropriation bill, was it?—A. It was named, but not as the contractors.

Q. In what connection was it named?—A. The money was only to be paid so long as the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, (specified by name,) or its successors in interest, should maintain the service now performed by it between San Francisco and New York via Panama.

Q. Did not the legislation direct the Postmaster-General to let the contract to the best bidder?—A. It authorized him to do so.

Q. And to advertise for proposals?—A. Yes.

Q. And was not the letting an open letting to the whole world?—A. Yes, on the surface of it.

Q. In point of fact?—A. No, sir.

Q. The Pacific Mail Steamship Company might have decided not to have bid for the service?—A. Certainly.

Q. The company was not bound to bid for the service, even after the bill passed?—A. No, sir.

Q. And yet you believe that that bill could have been repealed?—A. I have not expressed an opinion on that point; but I have said that the Postmaster-General never would have dared to award the contract to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company if the scandal which has now come out had come out then.

Q. Did you think so at the time?—A. I did.

Q. Did that pass through your mind there while you were holding your watch in your hand?—A. I do not know what passed through my mind while I was holding my watch, but it may have been in my mind as much as any other idea.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you mean to say that there was anything so disgraceful in that proceeding at the time, that if it was known it would have broken up the whole arrangement for the subsidy?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you mean to say that there was anything so improper in the manner in which that subsidy was obtained through you that, if it was known, the Postmaster-General would have been a very bold man if he had given the contract?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you not explain what you do mean?—A. I went over that ground the last time I was before the committee, and I will go over it again if you wish.

Q. What did you mean by saying that if the scandal which has now come out had come out then, the Postmaster-General would have been a very bold man to award the contract to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I meant to express the opinion that if that contract was now to be awarded, or if the state of facts which now exists had existed then, the Postmaster-General would have to be a bold man to have awarded the contract to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

Q. Do you allude to the state of facts which existed at the time that the act passed Congress?—A. I allude to the state of facts which would have existed whenever the investigation had arrived at the point which it has now reached.

The CHAIRMAN. Investigations do not create facts, they only disclose them.

The WITNESS. But generally the trouble is that they do not disclose them.

Q. Answer me directly what you meant by saying that Mr. Stockwell was a man too intelligent not to know that if the knowledge which you held had been made public, the Postmaster-General would have been a bold man if he had awarded the contract to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.—A. My opinion is that no Postmaster-General would have awarded the contract to any contractor, if he knew that that contractor had expended $890,000, or $89,000 to procure legislation.

Q. If the money had been expended properly?—A. Not if it had been expended properly, and if it was demonstrated to him that it was expended properly. If these expenditures had come out, and were not explained, that precise state of affairs would have arisen.

Q. Do you know anything of the expenditure of any of this large sum improperly?—A. I do not.

Q. Then if everything which you did know about the expenditure of that money was proper, why do you remark that the Postmaster-General would have been a bold man to have awarded the contract?—A.

Because I think the Postmaster-General would have required proof that it was properly expended.

Q. Is not this committee just at that point?—A. Yes.

Q. Who knows more than yourself about the manner in which it was expended? It was all expended through you?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, if you understand how it was all expended, be kind enough to make it clear to us that it was properly expended.—A. I cannot do so.

By Mr. BELL:

Q. If Mr. Stockwell had refused to pay this money, it would not have been improperly expended?—A. Certainly not.

Q. If he had not paid the money to you to pay these gentlemen, what would there have been to be investigated?—A. The promises to pay.

Q. Do you pretend to say that the promises to pay this troop of lobbyists would have interfered with legislation?—A. I think that if Mr. Schumaker had come forward and stated that he was to receive $300,000 on the passage of the bill, the Postmaster-General would have wanted to know what he was going to do with the money.

Q. Do you suppose that Mr. Schumaker could ever have been induced to make such a statement?—A. I think that somebody else would have made that statement.

Q. That is what is in your mind?—A. I think that Mr. Schumaker would not have made it; but there were all the lobbyists who knew that he was employed.

Q. Do you think that the Postmaster-General would have paid any attention to the claims of lobbyists?—A. I think very probably that they would have resulted in an investigation.

Q. On what ground?—A. On the same ground that this investigation was brought about.

Q. When the money had not been paid?—A. It is as bad to promise to pay money as to pay it.

Q. Did you threaten Mr. Stockwell that you would not give him up the checks for $250,000 which you had?—A. I never did.

Q. Did you say to him, "I have got your checks, and I have a right to hold them, and I shall insist on holding them?"—A. I did not.

Q. Did you make any allusion to the strength of your position in having the checks in your possession?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you mean the committee to understand that, so far as you had any influence on Mr. Stockwell, you wished him not to pay the money?—A. I do.

Q. Did you wish to bring about an investigation?—A. I did not.

Q. You swore that an investigation would have followed?—A. I did.

Q. Did you wish then to bring about such an investigation?—A. I did not wish to do it. That was not one of the wishes which controlled my action in the matter.

Q. Would you have been glad to see it take that course?—A. I would not. I should have been glad to have got out of it, whatever the consequences were, if the president of the company had been willing to take that position. That was a matter for him to decide, not me.

Q. State what you said to Mr. Stockwell in conversation after the five minutes had expired.—A. I went on to give him the reasons why, in my judgment, the subsidy was not worth $750,000.

Q. What were your reasons?—A. The reasons were these: I was of opinion that it would be more for the interest of the company to have its ships built in Europe, saving the difference between the price of building there and of building here at that time, and that the difference in the cost thus saved, added to the difference in the cost of running the vessels, would be fully equal to the amount of the subsidy, even if the company did not pay anything to get the subsidy. I also pointed out to Mr. Stockwell that in case of an investigation arising at any time, such as almost always arises in these cases, there would be a great deal of trouble in convincing the public and convincing Congress that the money had not been improperly used. I pointed out that the men to whom the money would be paid would probably fail to account for it, or would refuse to account for it, and that the contract would be probably taken away. I pointed out to him the clause in the old contract, which I knew would be in the new one, that Congress might repeal it at any time, with or without a reason. I think that these were the principal reasons that I stated.

Q. Did you offer to refund to him all the money which had been expended up to that time?—A. I think I did make such an offer.

Q. I think you have, on two occasions, made a similar statement in your evidence.—A. I think I have testified to that.

Q. Is there any doubt in your mind whether you said that to him?—A. I think I did say that to him.

Q. How did you expect, occupying a position as clerk or agent of the company, on a salary of $10,000, to be able to refund to him all the money then expended?—A. That was said in the heat of the moment. What I intended to do was to give Mr. Stockwell all the money I had.

Q. You say that, although you made that statement, you really did not intend to pay him back the money which you had spent?—A. I intended to pay him what money I had, but I could not pay him what I did not have.

Q. Your evidence was that you offered to pay him all the money previously expended?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you intend to do that if he accepted the offer?—A. To the extent of my ability.

Q. Were you, in point of fact, able financially to have paid him back that $190,000 which had been spent?—A. I was not.

Q. Did he probably know that fact?—A. I cannot really say that he did; my impression is that he thought I was not able.

Q. Have you hitherto stated that, beyond the $750,000 which you received on the 24th of May, you ever received a dollar of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the purpose of this subsidy?—A. Yes, I have.

Q. What sums did you receive from the company beyond the $750,000?—A. I identify $25,000 received on the 25th of January as having been received from the company.

The committee here took a recess for an hour.

After the recess the cross-examination of Richard B. Irwin by Mr. Bell was resumed, as follows:

Question. Before I resume the subject of your accounts I will ask you a single question about the interview with Mr. Stockwell: At that time you knew Mr. Stockwell was a very large owner of the stock of the company, did you not?—Answer. I supposed him to be.

Q. Did you not know that he was then the owner of upward of 15,000 shares of the stock?—A. I did not.

Q. You understood and believed that he was the owner of more than half of the capital stock at that time, did you not?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you not believe it?—A. I did not.

Q. Do you know what the price of the stock was that day ?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the 23d of May ?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

A. I do not.

Q. What is your best impression ?—A. I should say about 85, or from 80 to 85 $\frac{3}{4}$.

Q. Would it not have been to Mr. Stockwell, individually, financial ruin and bankruptcy if anything had occurred in regard to Pacific Mail which would in the market have reduced the price of that stock notably ?

—A. My impression at that time was that he was short of the stock. I knew nothing about his operations.

Q. But I understood you to swear a moment ago that you thought he was a large owner of the stock at that time ?—A. No, sir ; I am speaking of the general period, and not of that time.

Q. You did not believe that he was a large owner then, about that time—about the 23d of May ?—A. Not at that time.

Q. What you have stated in regard to your belief of his being a large owner was at some previous time ?—A. It applies to a previous and subsequent date.

Q. If he had been an owner of one hundred and fifty thousand shares at that time, any notable decline would have been bankruptcy and ruin to him, would it not ?—A. If he had owned one hundred and fifty thousand shares absolutely, in his own right, and had paid for it, and was going to keep it, I do not know that it would have made any difference to him ; but if he was going to sell, it would have caused him a great loss. If he was carrying it on a margin, the effect would have been disastrous, of course.

Q. At what time was it that you advised your friends to sell short ?—A. I beg your pardon ; I never advised any of my friends to sell short.

Q. I understood you to say so in your evidence the other day ?—A. No, sir ; I said not to buy.

Q. Your advice was, simply, not to buy ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did not advise any one to sell short ?—A. No, sir ; because I was afraid of a short operation in a stock which could be so easily controlled.

Q. I will now resume the matter of your accounts. I had asked you what sum you conceded that you had received from the company besides the $750,000, and your first answer was $25,000, at some date which you gave ?—A. Yes, sir ; the 25th of January.

Q. What other sum do you now remember that you received from the company ?—A. I do not remember receiving any other sum from the company until I received the $750,000.

Q. Exclusive of that ?—A. I do not remember any other.

Q. Except this $25,000 ?—A. That is all.

Q. Do you swear positively that that is all the money you did receive from the company ?—A. I do not.

Q. May you have received another $100,000 from the company, which you are not now able to remember ?—A. I may have received another $100,000, but I do not think I did.

Q. Will you state that you now think that you received as high a sum as $50,000 from the company, or smaller sums amounting to $50,000, besides those you have named ?—A. The company has those checks in its possession, and can produce them at any moment.

Q. Very true, but I now require your answer to my question.—A. I do not know anything about it until I see those checks.

Q. Have you no recollection ?—A. None whatever.

Q. But you are unwilling to swear positively that you did not receive as high as $100,000?—A. I am.

Q. Will you swear positively that you did not receive $200,000 more?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you swear positively that you did not receive $150,000 more?—A. My impression is very decided that I did not, but I would not swear positively to it unless I saw the checks.

Q. Had you forgotten the $25,000 that you now concede when you made the statement which you furnished to the committee, in which it is not included?—A. It is included in that $50,000.

Q. You say, "Not admitted as alleged."—A. I did not say, "Not admitted;" I say, "as alleged."

Q. But you now admit it?—A. I admit it.

Q. You say you did render a statement to Mr. A. B. Stockwell, in the month of July, 1872?—A. No, sir; I did not say so.

Q. Did you not swear that you had?—A. No, sir. I stated that I had not.

Q. Did you not swear that you made some statement in writing to Mr. Stockwell?—A. No, sir. I swore that I had never rendered a statement.

Q. You said that as to the company. I am speaking of Stockwell individually.—A. I swore that I had prepared a statement to present to Mr. Stockwell, in case he should ask for it, and that that statement was prepared about the first week in July.

Q. Do you now swear that you did not deliver a statement of any kind to Mr. Stockwell, in San Francisco, about the first of July, 1872?—A. I do—say about the first week in July.

Q. Did you ever make a statement of any kind in this connection to Mr. A. B. Stockwell?

The WITNESS. Do you mean in the shape of an account?

Q. Any statement of what you had done with this money.—A. I think not.

Q. How, then, do you explain this entry in your account: "Furnished to the company sundry payments, accounted for per statement July 1, 1872, but now forgotten, $45,000?"—A. The statement which was made out on the 1st of July, 1872, accounted for the sum which I have set down there—the total sum—leaving $85,000 unaccounted for. It was made on the basis of Mr. Stockwell's claim to me, that he had given me $890,000, and of that I accounted on that statement for all but $85,000; but I did not show him the statement. He did not ask me for it.

Q. You did not give it to him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, when you alluded to that statement, you alluded simply to a statement which you had prepared but which you did not present to anybody?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you intended it for Mr. Stockwell, if he asked you for it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How is it possible for you to say that the statement contained $45,000, now forgotten? If it was forgotten, how can you say anything about the amount of it?—A. I know that the difference was $85,000.

Q. I only allude to this one case.—A. I understand; but I know that the total amount claimed was $890,000. I also know that the sum which I claimed to have retained was $85,000, and that the amount which I claimed for my Washington expenses was $40,000. I have identified that matter from the testimony before the committee, and from my recollection of various payments, until I get down to $45,000 which is unaccounted for.

Q. You do not mean to say that that statement of July referred only to the $45,000?—A. That accounted in detail for all the payments except the $85,000 and the $40,000.

Q. Have you that statement in your possession?—A. I have not.

Q. Where is it?—A. I do not know where it is.

Q. Have you a copy of it?—A. I have not.

Q. Where did you last see it?—A. In San Francisco.

Q. Did you leave it there?—A. I did.

Q. Is it probably in your office there now?—A. It should be either in my office or in my house if it is still in existence.

Q. Do you say that you now could produce a copy of it if you wished to do so?—A. I won't say that, because I don't know whether it is in existence or not.

Q. Is it in a book, or on a separate piece of paper?—A. It was on a separate piece of paper.

Q. That, you say, Mr. Stockwell never saw?—A. He never saw it.

Q. State what items of expenditure were included in that statement which are not now included in your present statement.—A. There were no other. The $45,000 was included and accounted for.

Q. But in detail?—A. Yes, sir, in detail; and the $40,000—

Q. That was in detail?—A. Yes, sir; the $45,000 was accounted for in detail, excepting a small portion of it. Of course it would be impossible to recollect exactly in making such large expenditures every particular item.

Q. Then you only state by mathematical calculation the amount forgotten?—A. That is all.

Q. You don't pretend to swear now that there is just $45,000 that you have forgotten?—A. Not except by the calculation. I remember distinctly the $85,000, and I remember distinctly the $890,000, and I remember distinctly the $40,000; and by the rule of three, or by the rule of four, you get down to the result.

Q. You say, "Stockwell returned to company $90,000; see Roundy's testimony." I have carefully read the testimony, and can find nothing of the kind in it. Be good enough to explain what you mean.—A. The statement is in answer to a question on page 201. "There was afterwards a credit, and the actual round amount charged out for which there is no account, and for which the company never have had any account, is just $800,000."

Q. Then you mean, as a mathematical calculation, the difference between the credit of $800,000 and your computation of $890,000, do you?—A. Certainly.

Q. Rather than a statement that Mr. Roundy made that Mr. Stockwell had returned any money to the company?—A. I referred to that statement as the only statement that I have on the subject.

Q. From this statement you inferred that?—A. I understood that statement to mean that.

Q. That is your explanation of this entry?—A. Yes, sir; and that statement also agrees with the statement made to me by Mr. Stockwell himself.

Q. That he had returned money?—A. That he had returned $300,000 to the company, and that that was the way that the account was reduced to about $300,000.

Q. How did Mr. Stockwell state that he had returned it?—A. I did not ask him.

Q. When did he state that he had returned it?—A. He stated so to me in Europe last fall.

Q. In Europe last fall did he state when he returned it?—A. He did not.

Q. Do you remember from that interview what time he claimed to have returned it?—A. He did not tell me anything about it. It was not my affair.

Q. You say in the same connection, "And Lockwood check $200,000." Did you not know that the Lockwood check of $200,000 was a simple exchange of checks?—A. I know it was an exchange of checks.

Q. And that the company lost $200,000 by the operation instead of getting anything back?—A. I do not believe that the company lost anything by that. My understanding of that transaction from the testimony—and I know nothing else about it—is that the company gave John Roach a check for $200,000, upon the delivery of which check two entries were made on the company's books of $100,000 each, against new iron steamers, numbers 5 and 6, and that John Roach gave to Stockwell or Bellows, and it makes no difference which, a check drawn by John Roach & Son to the order of John Roach for $200,000, and indorsed by John Roach, and that Stockwell gave that check to Lockwood & Company.

Q. For his private account?—A. He gave it to them. And that Lockwood & Company thereupon drew this check to the order of either Stockwell or the Pacific Mail Company, and I have forgotten which. I have seen the check which came back to the company. It is a check for $200,000, which was deposited by the company in the National Bank of Commerce in New York, and there credited to the company on the books of the National Bank of Commerce. Further than that I know nothing.

Q. You believe that the evidence shows that?—A. I do not believe that the evidence shows that, because it has not been put in evidence; but I saw that check. The check was delivered to Mr. Kasson by Mr. Chapman, the counsel for Mr. Lockwood; also my counsel; and he showed it to me before he delivered it. It has the mark of the Bank of Commerce on it; it is in the possession of the committee. It is drawn to the order of Pacific Mail Steamship Company, and indorsed, "For deposit. Henry Smith, treasurer."

Q. There is no evidence before this committee showing that the company received that $200,000, is there?—A. Simply because it has not been printed with the evidence. It was given to a member of the committee at the request of Mr. Lockwood, upon Mr. Lockwood's statement that he would produce it.

Q. You claim that you have information tending to show that $200,000 actually was paid back to the company?—A. Yes, sir; I have seen the check itself.

Mr. BELL. There is no such evidence yet before the committee, that I am aware of.

The WITNESS. It was handed to the committee.

Q. To what person did you pay any other money in Washington whose name is not included in the statement which you have furnished?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Do you remember stating to the committee one day that you did pay some money here to a gentleman whose name you preferred not to give?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you pay any money to Captain Bradbury?—A. I would prefer not to answer that question, although I would as soon reply to it as not if the committee desire me so to do. Captain Bradbury was not paid for his services in connection with this subsidy.

Q. My question is, did you pay any money in Washington to Captain Bradbury?

The WITNESS. Does the committee require me to answer that question?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum present, but it seems to me that it is pertinent to your original statement.

The WITNESS. I did pay $10,000 to Captain Bradbury.

Q. Did you not pay him $50,000?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you swear positively that you did not pay him $50,000?—A. I swear positively that I did not pay him one cent over $10,000.

Q. When did you pay that money to him?—A. The first $2,000 I do not recollect.

Q. State as nearly as you can.—A. I paid it to him at two periods, I think, and may be three, before the passage of the bill. I paid him the last $8,000 about the 25th of May.

Q. What was his relation to the company at that time; was he a director?—A. He was not.

Q. Not in any way connected with the company officially?—A. Not otherwise than by my employment of him.

Q. Did you employ him?—A. I did.

Q. What was the character of the service which you agreed with him he should render?—A. He was to render me any assistance I called upon him for.

Q. What did he do?—A. He was down here during the passage of the subsidy, when I required him to be here; he was in New York when I required him there. He consulted with me, and advised with me, in reference to all of my business with the company, more in reference to other business than in reference to this subsidy matter especially, for I had still charge of the affairs of the San Francisco agency, and was still consulting with Mr. Stockwell constantly, and giving orders in reference to them. He did, generally, anything that I required him to do.

Q. You speak of very intimate relations between you and him, in one portion of your testimony?—A. I do.

Q. Please define that. What do you mean by that?

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I would rather not go into that. I think it is away beyond the subject-matter of the inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the impression of the committee that it is not competent.

Q. Did you pay any money, while you were in Washington, to any other person whose name you have not given to the committee?—A. That $45,000, sir, and the expenses I paid.

Q. I do not allude to hotel bills or incidental expenses.—A. I paid that $45,000—possibly a portion of it to some of the persons who have been mentioned, whom I have forgotten, and possibly a portion of it to other persons. There were one or two other persons whose names I have forgotten, but they were of precisely the same character as all the others.

Q. You cannot now remember their names?—A. I cannot.

Q. Did you pay any to Allan or Robert McLane?

The WITNESS. During that time, do you mean?

Q. During that year?—A. I never paid any money to Allan McLane, and I did not pay any money to Robert McLane during that year.

Q. Was any part of this money ever paid to either of them?—A. No, sir.

Q. As to the item, $40,000 for expenses in Washington, did you really expend $40,000 in Washington for hotel-bills and incidental expenses?—A. And in New York, and in traveling, and in telegrams, and in printing, and in stationery; yes, sir.

Q. Your contract, as you stated to-day, commenced February 1, and your labor ended on the 23d of May, substantially?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is a period of four months, is it not? Did you expend $10,000 a month?—A. No, sir; but my expenses began before my contract began. My expenses began the moment I left San Francisco on this business, which I think was the 29th of December, 1871.

Q. You simply mean, I suppose, your ticket, &c., over here?—A. I mean my general expenses. And, then, I was engaged in connection with this service from almost the moment of my arrival in New York, although I had no contract. That $25,000 was paid to me, you will observe, the 25th of January. That was paid on account of these expenses, and was immediately charged to profit and loss by the company. Although my duties here ended the 23d of May, my personal expenses did not end until I returned to San Francisco, which was on the 4th of June; and my house expenses in Washington did not end until about the 1st of June, or, perhaps, a little afterward, when Mr. Abert gave up the house, so that it really covers about five months.

Q. You stated to-day in your evidence that you told Mr. Stockwell, as a reason why he had better not pay that money, the difference in economy in using English ships and machinery?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you claimed to him that two English steamers could perform the work of three American steamers, or something of that sort?—A. That is approximately correct.

Q. Do you pretend that an English steamer can be run cheaper than an American steamer?

The CHAIRMAN. I think, on the whole, that subject had better not be entered into.

Mr. BELL. He says he made use of that argument.

The CHAIRMAN. What if he used a false argument.

The WITNESS. That is just what I was going to suggest.

Q. Is it a fact that you are in the employ of a rival line of steamships to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I am not.

Q. What connection have you had with the rival line of steamers of which Captain Bradbury is president?—A. None whatever.

Q. Are you not in its interest?—A. I am not.

Q. Are you not understood by them to be acting in its interest?—A. I cannot testify as to the state of thought existing in a man's mind.

Q. Have you received any money from them?—A. Not one cent.

Q. Not any promise of payment?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are they not, in fact, paying your expenses here in Washington?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor any person in their interest?—A. I am paying my own expenses in Washington, and I am not in their interest.

Q. Have you had any interviews with the agents or representatives of that company in this connection, either here or in New York?—A. That is going away beyond the inquiry, but I simply desire to say that there is no opposition line.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is proper to show any connection of the witness with a rival line.

The WITNESS. I cannot have had any connection, because I do not understand that there is any opposition line.

Q. Do you swear that you have not had interviews with the agents or representatives of the opposition company, either here or in New York?

—A. If you will indicate the names of any gentlemen, I will reply to your question.

Q. I will name Mr. Jay Gould.—A. I have had interviews with Mr. Jay Gould.

Q. Where?—A. In New York.

Q. How many interviews did you have with Mr. Jay Gould?—A. I do not remember.

Q. Did you have several?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where?—A. Some at his house, some at the Hoffman House.

Q. Is Mr. Jay Gould a director of one of the transcontinental lines of railway, the Union Pacific Railway?—A. I have an impression that he is.

Q. Did he not so state to you?—A. He did not.

Q. Did he converse with you in regard to a proposition to run a line of steamers from San Francisco to Japan, or anywhere in the Pacific Ocean?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he say in that connection?—A. I cannot remember all he did say.

Q. Did he say he was interested in such a proposition?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he ask you what you could swear before an investigating committee?—A. I do not think he did.

Q. Did you state to him in general the character of the evidence you could furnish?—A. I did.

Q. At which interview did you state that?—A. I don't remember.

Q. At several interviews?—A. I doubt if I stated it more than once. I would not be likely to.

Q. Did he not tell you the names of certain steamers which they had already arranged to put in that service?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he name certain steamers that he could lease on certain terms and conditions?—A. No, sir, he did not; because I knew them all.

Q. Do you not remember that he called your attention to the fact?—A. He might have done so, but he did not inform me; I knew it already.

Q. Did you state to him that fact?—A. What fact?

Q. The fact that these steamers could be employed by this rival line?—A. I told him that he had the whole English mercantile navy at his disposal.

Q. Did the conversations also relate, in addition to the steamships on the Pacific Ocean, to stock operations in the city of New York?—A. They did not.

Q. In connection with this investigation?—A. No, sir; nor with anything else.

Q. Was the subject of the effect of this investigation in Congress upon the company, and its effect upon the stock-market, the subject of your conversation?—A. It was not.

Q. In no way, shape, or manner?—A. It was not.

Q. Not in any of the conversations?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you make any promise to Mr. Jay Gould as to what you would state if called upon as a witness?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you make a statement of what you would state?—A. I did.

Q. How far did that statement to him go?—A. It went exactly as far as my statement to Mr. Scott went. I want that to go in if the other is to go in.

The CHAIRMAN. State what you did state to Mr. Jay Gould.—A. I told him that, so far as I was concerned, I would state to the committee everything that I knew, but when it came to giving up the names of other gentlemen, I should not give them a single name. I said precisely the same thing to Mr. George S. Scott, vice-president of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company.

The CHAIRMAN. We do not inquire who else you stated it to.

The WITNESS. But your inquiry is in reference to my bias, and I say I said the same thing to the company.

Q. Did you state to Mr. Jay Gould that you had also stated the same thing to Mr. Scott?—A. I did not.

Q. We are inquiring what you stated to Mr. Jay Gould.

The WITNESS. For the purpose of showing a bias, as I understand.

Q. Have you stated all that you stated to Jay Gould in that connection?—A. I have.

Q. Did you not furnish to Jay Gould a list of twenty-three names of persons to whom you paid money?—A. No, sir; nor any other names.

Q. Did you tell him that there were twenty-three persons, the names of whom you refused to give him or declined to give him?—A. I did not.

Q. You stated on page 92 of your testimony that Mr. Whitelaw Reid, of the Tribune, and Mr. L. J. Jennings, of the Times, were personally aware of your address during the whole of your stay in New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you furnish those gentlemen with your address?—A. I did.

Q. When?—A. Soon after my arrival in New York.

Q. How; did you call upon them?—A. I called upon Mr. Reid.

Q. Where?—A. At his house, No. 23 Park avenue.

Q. Did you leave your address there?—A. I think I did; I usually do so.

Q. How often did you call upon Mr. Reid?—A. Once.

Q. Did you see him at the Hoffman House?—A. I did not.

Q. Did he call upon you?—A. I never received his card if he did.

Q. You have no knowledge of his calling?—A. I have no knowledge of his having called on me.

Q. Who was present at the interview between you and Mr. Whitelaw Reid?—A. At a portion of that interview, and a very small portion of it, there was another man present, whom I never saw before, who had been, I think, a stenographer of Mr. Reid's. During the main portion of the interview nobody was present.

Q. When did you first meet Mr. Jennings, of the Times?—A. I never met him at all to my knowledge.

Q. How can you swear that he knew your address?—A. I sent him my card.

Q. In a letter?—A. In an envelope.

Q. Did you know him personally?—A. I did not.

Q. You never met him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Never had any conversation with him?—A. I never did to my knowledge.

Q. Did you send him messages through your confidential clerk or assistants?—A. Well, yes, I suppose I did.

Q. Have you contributed the correspondence of the New York Times which appears in that paper, signed "Side-view," "Cut-off," and "Accountant"?—A. I have not, sir; I did not contribute any of them.

Q. Did you know of their being prepared?—A. I am not going further with that answer unless directed to do so by the committee.

Q. Were they prepared at your instigation?—A. I will not go further with that line of inquiry unless the committee directs it.

Q. I will inquire if they were upon the subject of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?

The WITNESS. And not in relation to Washington?

Mr. BELL. I think they did relate to Washington.

The WITNESS. They did not.

Q. You have read them?—A. I have.

The chairman here directed counsel to specify the particular articles if he desired to interrogate the witness further upon the point at issue.

Q. Have you been instrumental in publishing any articles in the New York Times in relation to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company since this investigation commenced?—A. I have not, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a little too broad. It should be "in reference to this inquiry."

A. I have not, sir.

Q. Which would affect this inquiry? You claimed that the articles which I have named do not affect this inquiry?—A. I have had personal communication with the reporters of all the New York papers, and with anybody else who came to see me during the pendency of this inquiry, and therefore if the answer applies to that it will mislead everybody.

Q. Were the articles published in the New York Times hostile to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company inspired in any way directly or indirectly by yourself?—A. Which articles do you now speak of?

Q. The articles signed "Side-view," "Cut-off," and "Accountant."—A. None of these communications relate to the subject-matter of this inquiry. I would as lief answer that question, but the committee are going away beyond the subject of the inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee desire merely to permit Mr. Bell to ask you the proper question of whether you entertain a hostile bias to this company.

The WITNESS. I entertain toward this company precisely the feeling that anybody would who had been sued by them for $750,000 which he did not owe them.

The CHAIRMAN. We do not ask whether the feeling is a just one, but whether it exists.

The WITNESS. Why don't they ask me if it exists? I will say that it does, and that will end the question.

Q. Do you entertain hostile feeling toward the Pacific Mail Steamship Company at present?

The WITNESS. As a corporation, do you mean?

Mr. BELL. As a corporation?—A. I do not.

Q. Have you not just stated, in the hearing of the committee, that if I put the question to you, you would say that you did entertain hostile feelings?—A. You put the question in a different form from what I expected. If you put it that I entertain hostile feelings against certain members, I will reply to you.

Q. Do you entertain hostile feelings toward the present management of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. As a management I do not.

Q. What did you mean by saying, a few moments ago, that you did feel hostile because you had been sued for $750,000?—A. I regard it as the act of three men.

Q. I ask you what you meant when you made that answer?—A. I meant precisely that.

Q. Do you limit your hostility to three men?—A. I do.

Q. Who are they?—A. Mr. Rufus Hatch, Mr. Trenor W. Park, and Mr. Russell Sage. Mr. Park and Mr. Sage have recently retired from the management.

Q. Do you think Mr. Rufus Hatch had anything to do with the bringing of that suit?

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is as far as we can go.

The WITNESS. I would like to answer that question.

By Mr. BELL:

Q. Would that hostility to the individuals whom you have named justify you in taking steps which injured a corporation of the magnitude and importance of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?

(Question overruled.)

Q. On page 499 of your testimony, you seem to negative the idea that King was actually employed by any one. Is it a fact that you did not employ William S. King yourself, in any way or manner, directly or indirectly?—A. It is.

Q. Is it true, of your own knowledge, that you cannot say that he was employed?—A. I do not know of my own knowledge; I only know it from inference from Mr. Stockwell's statement to me.

Q. You have no personal knowledge of your own, and no information, except inference, that he was employed. You drew the inference that he might have been employed by Stockwell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. But you cannot swear positively that he was?—A. I cannot.

Q. That is your position upon that subject?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know whether King was employed by Stockwell?—A. I do not, except from what Mr. Stockwell told me.

Q. I will repeat the question. I wish this to be explicit. Was Mr. William S. King ever employed in this connection by Mr. Stockwell?—A. I think he was.

Q. But you do not know?—A. I do not know positively of my own knowledge.

Q. You say that Mr. King was aware that Mr. Stockwell was engaged in large stock operations?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How large stock operations was Mr. Stockwell engaged in?—A. I have not the slightest idea.

Q. How do you know that King was aware of that?—A. Because he spoke to me about it.

Q. You stated also that you were aware that Mr. Stockwell was engaged in large stock operations?—A. From notoriety.

Q. Also from Mr. Stockwell, did you not?—A. I had the general impression from what he stated that he was engaged in large stock operations. He never told me so in so many words.

Q. You talked to him very often about these stock operations, and understood him to say that whatever money he received in the matter he received from a stock-pool; is that true?—A. I did not say that I understood him to say that. I have been informed that he said so.

Q. Did he say so to you?—A. He did not.

Q. Do you know from any reliable sources that his interest in that affair was received from a stock-pool?—A. I know nothing about it. I have stated my own impression, that the money was paid to him by me for his services; that was my understanding. I have also stated that Mr. King, who is absent, I understood, said that he received the money from a stock-pool, but that that was not my impression.

Q. Was King interested in Stockwell's stock operations within your knowledge?—A. Not within my knowledge.

Q. From any information derived from Stockwell?—A. Nor from any body else.

Q. Was King operating in the stock of the Pacific Mail on his own account within your knowledge?—A. I know nothing at all about it.

Q. Did Stockwell direct you to pay any sum of money to King, naming the sum?—A. He did not.

Q. Did he ever direct you to pay any money to King without naming the sum?

The WITNESS. Do you mean in so many words?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you consider that you paid the $125,000 to King by Stockwell's direction?—A. I did.

Q. Would you have paid it to him unless you understood that it had been directed by Stockwell?—A. I would not.

Q. Did King's services and employment in any way relate to his duties or office as postmaster of the House?—A. They did not.

Q. In no way?—A. In no way.

Q. Was he called upon to do anything, directly or indirectly, in relation to his duties in such office of postmaster?—A. No, sir.

Q. And particularly not in violation of his duty?—A. That is my understanding of it, sir.

Q. Is that true of the doorkeepers?—A. That is my understanding of their case, also.

Q. Were they ever required to do anything in violation of their duty as doorkeepers of the House?—A. Not as I understand their duty.

Q. So far as you know?—A. So far as I know and so far as I understand their duties.

Q. Did you tell King that his services in Washington were for the individual account of A. B. Stockwell and in the interest of his stock operations?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he give you to understand in any conversation that his operations here related to private understandings between Stockwell and himself?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you tell King that Stockwell furnished the money out of his own pocket, and that it was not costing the company?—A. I think not.

Q. You did not tell King that?—A. I think not. I do not think I ever said anything to Mr. King about it.

Q. Did you have really, then, as you state, any authority whatever over King's movements or actions if you made no contract with him?—A. I think I did.

Q. You made no contract with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. He never agreed with you to do anything?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you have any authority over his movements or actions?—A. Are you speaking of rightful or actual authority?

Q. Rightful authority by virtue of a contract?—A. Are you speaking of actual authority?

Q. We will take rightful authority first?—A. That is almost a question of ethics. As a matter of fact I exercised control over Mr. King's movements after the failure of the bill in the House the first time.

Q. The question is, having stated that you had no contract whatever with Mr. King, did you claim to exercise any authority over Mr. King's movements or actions in the matter?—A. I have said that I did exercise it. If you desire a further answer to the question, I will say that I did not exercise it by virtue of any contract.

Q. You claimed to exercise it?—A. I did exercise it.

Q. Did you have a right by virtue of any agreement between you and him to exercise it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. King ever return to you any part of the $125,000?—A. Not a cent.

Q. Neither directly nor indirectly?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor to anybody for your account?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did King ever recognize, so far as you know, your authority to direct and control his movements and actions?—A. I think he did. After the bill failed the first time in the House he recognized my authority, I think, in everything.

Q. Was it a distinct recognition of your authority to control his movements, or a deference to your superior judgment as to what was the best policy?—A. Well, that is a fine point. I cannot tell.

Q. In your judgment, which was it?—A. In my judgment he recognized me as having entire charge of the measure.

Q. You say that you believed that Mr. King's efforts in the House were doing more harm than good?—A. I think I did say so. I referred to his speaking to members on the floor, and to the natural enemies of the bill.

Q. Did you so advise him?—A. I do not know whether I said it to him in so many words. I think I did. I would have been very likely to have done so.

Q. You requested him not to take any further interest in the measure in the House?—A. I think I did. I do not recollect any particular occasion on which I said so. I would have been very apt to have told him just what I thought about it, as I would to you or to anybody.

Q. That was your opinion?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you think you expressed it to him?—A. I think so only from what my general custom is. I generally express my opinion, if I have one.

Q. Do you know whether he did cease to take any interest in it in the House end?—A. My impression is that he did.

Q. You say that you did not go yourself to the House end?—A. I am speaking of habit or custom. I may have been here several times, but I mean I did not come here to look after the measure personally.

Q. You did not attend constantly?—A. No, sir; I was here on several occasions.

Q. It was not your habit to come to the House?—A. I mean my business was not transacted here. I was here when the bill was pending, for example; when it was under discussion.

Q. You were, however, occasionally in the House end of the Capitol?—A. Very, very seldom.

Q. When you did tell Mr. King that he should go over to the Senate side to work, was he bound to go by any contract or agreement of which you have any personal knowledge?—A. He was not.

Q. Do you know whether in point of fact he did go over there?—A. I really don't know anything about it.

Q. Have you any knowledge derived from Mr. King of what use he made of any part of that money?—A. Not the slightest.

Q. He never gave you any information as to the disbursement?—A. He did not. I never saw him afterward—yes, I did; I saw him in San Francisco. He never gave me any information whatever.

Q. Did Mr. King furnish you, at any time, a list of the members of either House of Congress whom he thought he could influence or control?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he at any time indicate to you that he could exercise an influence upon any particular member of Congress, indicating the member?—A. Not except by handing the general tally-list, which I have spoken of in my testimony, which all the men in my employ did.

Q. That would be a statement of how men stood?—A. Yes, sir; that is all; not otherwise than that.

Q. I am not inquiring as to that.—A. Well, then, he did not. I did not want to mislead you by my answer.

Q. Did he never indicate to you that he gave any of this large sum of money so paid to him to influence the vote of any particular person?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did you think he could be of more influence in the Senate than in the House?—A. Because I did not think he could be of any influence in the House. As I stated, I thought his services there did more harm than good. I further thought that if he was going to be useful anywhere, it must be in the Senate.

Q. Your criticism upon Mr. King was that he spoke to the enemies of the bill?—A. Yes, sir; as well as to the friends.

Q. If that was Mr. King's weakness, would he not develop it the same in the Senate as in the House?—A. I should think he might.

Q. Did you think so when you directed him to go to the Senate?—A. I never thought anything about it. Of course, if I had thought anything about it, it would have been that.

Q. What alterations did you make in your testimony before the committee in regard to the intentions with which you came to this country?—A. I did not make any.

Q. Did you not swear before the committee that you came to this country to ruin the Pacific Mail?—A. I did not. When you say alterations I do not refer to corrections.

Q. I mean corrections.—A. I did correct my testimony, because the stenographer had left out some words which I used, and had altered other words which I used.

Q. Did you not state in the beginning that you came to this country to ruin the Pacific Mail?—A. I did not. I never said such a thing in my life.

Q. You were incorrectly reported as so saying?—A. A comparison between the first and second reports will show every discrepancy.

Q. Did you state to a passenger on the steamer when you were coming to this country that you were coming to the funeral of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company?—A. I do not think I did; but I might have said so. I might have said so as a matter of jest.

Q. Did you say so to Mr. Palmer?—A. I do not think I did.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Palmer?—A. I do.

Q. Did you not say that to him directly, and not in jest?—A. I think not. I never said it to anybody excepting in jest.

Q. Did you ever say it to him in jest?—A. I may have done so. I have said it to several persons in jest.

Q. What persons have you said it to in jest?—A. I think very likely Mr. Palmer was one of them. He asked what I was coming back for, and I said I was coming to a funeral.

Q. Did you state to what funeral?—A. I do not remember whether I did or not. I would have done so if he had asked me.

Q. What other persons have you said that to?—A. I cannot remember it at all.

Q. You say you have stated it to several persons?—A. I think I made that remark to a gentleman named Turner.

Q. What Turner?—A. Mr. Herbert Turner.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. At Englewood.

Q. Did you make the same remark?—A. I think I did. I think I told Mr. John Wyman the same thing.

Q. Where does he reside?—A. In New York.

Q. Did you not make the same statement to Mr. Johnson, the secretary of the company?—A. I believe I did.

Q. Did you not tell him that you came here "to wreck and ruin the Pacific Mail"?—A. No, sir; I never said that.

Q. Did you not tell him that you came here for the purpose of wrecking the Pacific Mail?—A. I never said that to him or anybody else.

Q. Did you not say that you came here to wreck the Pacific Mail?—A. I never said that to him or anybody else.

Q. Did you not tell him that you would have it in the hands of a receiver in ninety days?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or that the company would be in the hands of a receiver in ninety days?—A. I think not.

Q. Did you state that to any one else?—A. I think that I have said that that was altogether likely.

Q. Was that also said in a jest?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were serious about that?—A. I think I was. I was stating it as a probability, not as my intention. I had no intention in reference to it.

Q. Why did you state it?—A. Because I thought that that was very likely to be the case.

Q. Did you say that out of friendly feeling to the company?—A. I did not say it out of friendly or hostile feeling, but upon my judgment of the statements which they had made and had not made.

Q. What statements do you refer to?—A. I refer to the statement of their assets and liabilities published prior to the beginning of December, and the statement which they were going to publish and never did publish.

Q. You could not refer to a statement that was not published?—A. I referred to the fact of a statement which they published which was going to expose the correctness of their reports against former statements, and which never was issued. What I meant by speaking of a receiver was, that I had heard it spoken of in New York, and in fact it was alluded to in the newspapers, that the stockholders were going to begin proceedings to put the company in the hands of a receiver; and it was spoken of in one paper, for example the New York Times, that the legislature would do so. The Attorney-General was spoken of as a party who would bring proceedings against them.

Q. How do you know this?—A. I saw it in the paper.

Q. What paper?—A. The New York Times, among others.

Q. At what date; before that statement was made?

The WITNESS. Do you mean before I said that?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

A. O, yes, and since.

Q. Have you acted, either directly or indirectly, with a view of endeavoring to put the company in the hands of a receiver?—A. I have not; how could I do anything of that kind?

Q. I am only inquiring as to what you have done.—A. I have been in jail, if that is any way of doing things.

Q. Do you claim that in the receipt of that $750,000, on the 24th of May, you were acting as the agent of the company?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you claim that you were acting as the agent of the company in the disbursement of any portion of that money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you swear positively that you were not acting as the agent of the company?—A. That is a matter of law.

Q. Do you so state that you were not the agent of the company in this disbursement?—A. I do, in my judgment.

Q. You swear that you were not the agent of the company in its receipt?—A. In my judgment, subject to the opinion of the supreme court of the State of New York.

Q. Your relation as agent of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was as the agent at San Francisco?—A. Yes, sir; as one of the agents.

Q. On a salary?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was any portion of this $750,000 expended in the line of your duty as the San Francisco agent?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. None of it?—A. None of it.

Q. And your claim for the expenditure of this money, as I understand you, is, that you were an independent contractor, having a contract by which you were to receive a certain sum of money for doing a certain thing?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not an agent?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you draw your salary during the time of this expenditure?—A. I did.

Q. And you acted in this position also as agent at that time?—A. I did.

Q. That relation continued until when?—A. It continued until the 31st December, 1872.

Q. Has your account as agent at San Francisco yet been closed with the company; has it been formally closed?—A. The whole balance was transferred to the account of my successor.

Q. That had to be done immediately upon the change of agents, had it not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Had there been a formal statement made otherwise than that?—A. I think not.

Q. You made a formal transfer of the agency by making a statement of what was in your hands?—A. Yes, sir; and took the receipt for the amount which I handed to him. The whole balance was transferred to his credit, and thereby the account was closed.

Q. That bound your successor only for the amount for which he signed the receipt?—A. Certainly.

Q. And left you to settle with the company for all transactions up to the date of that transfer. If there had been any irregularity in your accounts prior to that date, the succeeding agent would not have been in any way connected with them?

The WITNESS. Do you mean personally?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

A. He would not.

Q. Have you stated when you were first aware that any portion of this money was transferred to the account of Eldridge & Irwin?—A. Did I say it was about April, 1874? I think that was the time. I never heard of it until then. It was about two years afterward. I do not remember the exact date.

Q. I now come to the employment of R. C. Parsons. In point of fact, you never employed R. C. Parsons in any capacity whatever?—A. I never did.

Q. Is it not true that the company never employed him at all, your knowledge?—A. I do not know anything about that.

Q. Do you know that he was Mr. A. B. Stockwell's private counsel?—A. I do.

Q. So far as you know, were not his relations here those of A. B. Stockwell's counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you not know, in point of fact, that the payment to R. C. Parsons, even if paid by the company, was charged to Mr. Stockwell's private account?—A. I do not know; I do not know anything about it.

Q. Do you know whether he did receive any money from the company?

The CHAIRMAN. Do you mean any of those payments which entered into the $750,000?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. I understand you to mean the other payment made, the $12,000, or whatever it was.

Mr. BELL, [to the witness.] Take the $1,500 which was paid him by Mr. Abert; was not that, in point of fact, paid from Mr. Stockwell's private account?—A. Yes, sir; it was paid for his private account, or that is my understanding of it.

Q. It was your understanding of it at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no doubt that that is a fact, have you?—A. No, sir, none whatever, after reading the testimony.

Q. On page 513, on the 14th of February, there is a charge of $40,000; you say that is a false entry?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. What do you mean by saying that is a false entry?—A. It is an entry which does not correctly express the time, place, and circumstances.

Q. Can you swear positively that you did not receive that amount from the company on that day?

The WITNESS. Do you mean on the 14th February?

Mr. BELL. Yes, sir; or any other day near that.

A. I can state positively, because I did not receive it from anybody until the 26th of February. That is shown by my bank-account.

Q. You might have received it and not deposited it immediately?—

A. That was Mr. Stockwell's check which I deposited. I recollect the circumstance positively.

Q. You have so stated, but is it not possible that you received $40,000 from the company on or about the 14th of February?—A. Do you mean in addition to that? O, yes, it is possible, but I do not believe that I did.

Q. You have no recollection of it?—A. None, whatever; and my recollection is such as to exclude it.

Q. If a check for that sum was shown to have been received by you, would that change your view of it?

The WITNESS. Do you mean if it was dated on the 14th of February?

Mr. BELL. Yes, or about that date.

A. O, yes.

Q. So that you are not positive. You may have received it?—A. By the extreme limits of possibility I may.

Q. You received from Mr. Stockwell individually a check on the 26th of February for $40,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How was that sent to you?—A. It was sent to me in the letter of the 13th of February. I did not receive it on the 26th of February.

Q. I understood you to say so.—A. I did, but my mind was directed to the point of payment, and not to the receipt of the paper. I received the check about the 14th of February in that letter of Mr. Stockwell's.

Q. Is that the $40,000 check that you received from Mr. Stockwell in that letter of the 13th?—A. Yes, sir; that is the one.

Q. Then the item of $40,000 charged to you by the company on that day of course could not be that check?—A. No, sir; because that was

Mr. Stockwell's individual check on the Manufacturers and Merchants' Bank.

Q. And the explanation which you give wholly relates to Mr. Stockwell's check of $40,000 which was in that letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not to any other check?—A. And not to any other check.

The further examination of the witness was here postponed to Wednesday morning at 10.30.

WILLIAM H. McALLISTER sworn and examined.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Question. What is your name and residence?—Answer. My name is William H. McAllister, and I reside in New York City.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a journalist.

Q. How long have you been engaged in that business?—A. Since 1869.

Q. Are you engaged in any other business at present?—A. No, sir.

Q. Are you acquainted with Mr. Schumaker, a member of the House?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first become acquainted with him?—A. About the fall of 1873.

Q. Had you any business connections with him at that time?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been engaged in any business relations with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you seen him since you came here yesterday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first see him?—A. Last evening.

Q. What led you to Mr. Schumaker if you had never had any business with him?—A. He has been an intimate friend of mine, and was so while I was here as correspondent here last year for the Eagle. He was a representative from the same city and was pushing a bill through then for a building which we were anxious to have pushed.

Q. That led to your interview last evening?—A. No, sir; that did not lead to it. I called to see him because he was a friend, and I have explained in what way the friendship existed.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him about the matter of the Pacific Mail inquiry here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with him in reference to your testimony here?—A. No, sir, except to express my surprise that I was summoned, and wanted to know if he knew why I had been summoned.

Q. Do you say you first knew him in the fall of 1873?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you performed any services for him in any capacity?—A. He would be better able to judge whether it was a service or not.

Q. I ask you.—A. I can explain how the service was rendered, if it was a service.

Q. I am not asking you to explain; I asked you if you had performed any service for him?—A. I do not know whether he would call it a service.

Q. I ask you the question.—A. I suppose it might be. I do not know.

Q. What was it?—A. Nothing more than to represent that his efforts here for the interests of Brooklyn were the best, and were just what they should be—pleasant notices, whenever I had occasion to make them.

Q. Nothing except notices in the newspapers?—A. That is all.

Q. You never acted in the capacity of clerk for him?—A. Not for him. I might have acted in the capacity of clerk for myself in copying documents which he had, but they were for transmission through the mail to my paper.

Q. Do you know Mr. Lyman Ellmore?—A. No, sir; I do not know that I ever saw him.

Q. Were you here in 1872?—A. No, sir.

Q. When did you first come here?—A. In November or December, 1873. I came then as correspondent for the paper. Theretofore I had not known Mr. Schumaker.

Q. Before you came to this city, in the fall of 1873, did you know anything in reference to the Pacific Mail?—A. Nothing but what any one might have learned from general observation or reading.

Q. Did you have any connection with the representatives of the Pacific Mail in any capacity; I mean with directors or others?—A. I had in a friendly way; not in a business or an official way.

Q. With whom had you such friendly relations, if you have no objections to stating?—A. I have met Mr. Roach at my home as a friend of the family. He has been such for years.

Q. I mean previous to the fall of 1873?—A. I say I may have met Mr. John Roach in 1870.

Q. I meant officers or directors of the company.—A. Mr. Roach is a contractor. I thought you meant business representatives, and I did not understand but that he might have been one. I may, in a newspaper capacity, have met those gentlemen, but not in reference to Pacific Mail. I may have interviewed them.

Q. Do you know anything about Mr. Schumaker's receiving any money from the agents of the Pacific Mail Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about his having disbursed any money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear him say anything about it?—A. Nothing, except what I might have heard last evening. I do not know exactly what he did say last evening.

Q. What was that you said?—A. I do not know whether I heard him say anything in reference to it.

Q. Do you say you don't know what he said last evening?—A. I say he may have spoken of Pacific Mail. We spoke of it, and I may have jocosely condoled with him on his affliction, and all that sort of thing. I think we did speak in that way, but only jocosely.

Q. After your conversation with Mr. Schumaker, do you know of any fact in reference to his disbursement of that money?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know from him, after your conversation of last evening, in any manner that he disposed of any of that money?—A. I do not.

Q. Do you know anything about any settlements by Mr. Schumaker with any member of the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know anything about the surrender of any checks or other papers by Mr. Schumaker to the company?—A. I do not. I have not been in his intimacy except here.

Q. Where were you in January, 1873?—A. I was on the Brooklyn Union as city editor.

Q. Did you know Mr. Schumaker at that time?—A. I did not. I did not know him until I came here.

Q. Did you have any knowledge of any transactions of his with the Pacific Mail Company or any of its officers at that time?—A. Nothing that I knew of a certainty. As I say, I was city editor of the Brooklyn Union, and Mr. Schumaker was a Representative, and it may have come under my observation that he was an attorney for the Pacific Mail. I do not know, but probably I did know it in that way. I, however, did not know Mr. Schumaker then, and could not identify him with anything. It did not impress my mind particularly.

Q. Have you any knowledge of an interview between Mr. Schumaker and Mr. Lyman Elmore in this city?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or elsewhere?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. What brought you here?—A. A subpoena. I made inquiry last night while I was here to ascertain, and went to Mr. Schumaker, thinking that he might be likely to know.

By Mr. FOSTER:

Q. Have you relatives who have been in the employ of Mr. Schumaker?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Have you a brother?—A. I have no brother, except an infant.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Who subpoenaed you here?—A. The deputy sergeant-at-arms.

By Mr. WOOD:

Q. Did you not suspect what you were called for?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you Mr. Schumaker's secretary during any time that you were here?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or clerk for him, or attending to his business?—A. No, sir.

Q. You had no knowledge of his business?—A. I had information of a little correspondence which took place between some of his constituents and himself while a public building for Brooklyn was under discussion. I then copied some letters and transmitted them in the correspondence which I sent over.

Q. Were those private letters sent to him by his correspondents?—A. No; letters that his constituents wrote to him saying that they did not want him to push this public building. It is altogether aside from this investigation.

Q. You wrote some answers?—A. No. I copied those letters. I was there in his room and copied them. Whenever he received anything that was worth sending over, I copied it.

Q. Was any gentleman present when you had your interview with Mr. Schumaker last evening?—A. A gentleman was there when I went in; he left before I retired.

Q. Do you know who it was?—A. No, sir; I was not introduced.

Q. Have you communicated to anybody that you had an interview last evening with Mr. Schumaker?—A. Yes, sir; I stated at the breakfast-table that I had had, and I may have also stated so to a gentleman whom I met at the Ebbitt House.

Q. Who was that gentleman?—A. Mr. Jerome B. Wass, of Brooklyn. I do not know whether I said I had been to see Mr. Schumaker or not. I only said I was on here, and I was treated so mysteriously that it was sufficient reason for my remarking to a friend that I was wondering what was to be done with me. I was under custody and surveillance for some time.

Q. How long was it after you went out of my room before you went to Mr. Schumaker?—A. Immediately. I was released from custody then.

Q. How long after you went to Mr. Schumaker's was it before you left?—A. About fifteen minutes, I think.

Q. Did you not stay there more than fifteen minutes?—A. No, sir; I went to my dinner.

Q. Did you see him afterward?—A. O, no; I saw him but once. I only had one interview with him.

Q. And that of only about fifteen minutes' duration?—A. That is all, sir; and then a gentleman was present most of the time.

Q. You do not know who that gentleman was?—A. I do not; I should know him were I to see him.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. Did Mr. Schumaker ask you what you would testify to here?—A. No, sir; Mr. Schumaker was very much surprised. He was on his bed, and when I went in he jumped up in surprise and said, "What has brought you here, Mack?" I then said, "I don't know. You brought me here, I should judge."

Q. What made you think he had brought you here?—A. I said that because I happened to know Mr. Schumaker, and was intimate with him last winter. I supposed I had been called for that reason. We then talked about the investigation, and he said, "I was told that they were going to get my private secretary, and I told them I had not any private secretary; that I never was bothered with one." I said, "No; I don't remember that I was private secretary to you." He said then, "You must be the man whom they associated with the idea of a private secretary." He said, "You don't know anything about Pacific Mail?" I said, "Of course not." He says, "I don't know that I ever breathed a word to you about it." I told him I did not think that he ever had, for at that time I was busy with other matters.

Q. So he did in fact suggest what you would testify to?—A. O, no, sir; I did not understand that it was a suggestion at all.

Q. You said that you would testify that you knew nothing about the Pacific Mail?—A. O, no. He said, "I have never spoken to you about it; have I, Mack?" And I told him no, I did not know that he ever had.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Do you know who his private secretary was?—A. I did not know that he ever had one.

Q. Having alluded to it, I thought you might know.—A. No, sir. He himself said that he never had any.

By Mr. ROBERTS:

Q. You talked over, then, what you were to testify to, and there was no discrepancy between you?—A. Not at all; we did not talk it over at all. About the only question was this: he says, "Why, Mack, I never have spoken to you about it." "No," I said, "I never remember of your speaking about Pacific Mail to me until this last evening."

Q. What particular reason was there why, the instant the officer, or Sergeant-at-Arms, let you go free, you went to see Mr. Schumaker?—A. Because I had wanted to see him all the afternoon. I supposed that I had been summoned by him for something or another, and I did not know what else to think.

Q. Did you call on the other Representative from Brooklyn?—A. No, sir. Mr. Woodford is not here.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chittenden is the other Representative.

The WITNESS. He was not here in 1873, when I was here. I have not been here this year.

Adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 3, 1875.

WILLIAM M. TENNEY sworn and examined.

By Mr. KASSON :

Question. Where do you reside ?—Answer. Corning, Iowa.

Q In whose employment were you in the spring and summer of 1872?—

A. I was employed in the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co., Washington.

Q. What were your special duties in that bank ?—A. I was a sort of general manager of the house—chief clerk you might perhaps call it.

Q. Had you any personal acquaintance at that time with John G. Schumaker ?—A. I had not.

Q. Examine these two checks, issued by the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank of New York, dated May 30, 1872, for $50,000 each, payable to the order of John G. Schumaker, and state to the committee what knowledge, if any, you have touching their payment.—A. I recognize my indorsement on these checks. The checks passed through the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co., because they have my indorsement upon them, and would not have if they had not done so.

Q. Now look at this certificate of deposit issued by Jay Cooke & Co., dated June 3, 1872, for $90,000, in favor of John G. Schumaker, and state the transaction in reference to the checks and the certificate of deposit.—A. I do not recollect the transaction at all. I recognize these checks as having been through the bank, and I recognize the certificates as having been issued by the bank. The certificates are signed by me. The pencil initials on the checks are Henry D. Cooke's. The checks were probably cashed on his identification on the indorsement.

Q. Can you connect that $90,000 certificate of deposit with those checks ?—A. I cannot, without the books of the company.

Q. You have no recollection beyond what appears on the face of these papers, without consulting the books ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have no independent recollection now in reference to the issue of these certificates of deposit ?—A. No, sir.

Q. You will observe on the back of the certificate of deposit for $90,000 some pencil figures, reciting, "$30,000 ; paid ; 6 5 72."—A. There was probably $30,000 in money paid, and a certificate issued for the balance. I should think, from the connection, that these two checks were cashed by the payment of $10,000 in money, and by the issue of a certificate of deposit for $90,000, and that this certificate was paid by $30,000 in cash, and a new certificate for $60,000, which new certificate is dated June 5, 1872.

Q. You observe on the back of the certificate for $60,000 a receipt for $15,000 indorsed thereon, signed by John G. Schumaker. Have you any recollection of that transaction ?—A. No, sir ; no special recollection of it. I thought first that that receipt was in my handwriting, but I do not think now that it is.

Q. Do you know in whose handwriting are the words, "Balance $45,000 ; paid June 7, '72?"—A. I should think they are in my handwriting, but I am not sure about that ; it looks very much like my writing ; I wrote very carelessly and hurriedly.

Q. Is the pencil indorsement on the first certificate, showing $30,000 paid, in your handwriting ?—A. No, sir ; that is not mine ; I do not know whose it is.

Q. Refreshing your recollection by these papers, but without the books of the bank, can you make any statement touching the manner of the issuance of the certificates, or the payment thereon?—A. No further than I have stated. I suppose that that is the way they were paid; that the checks were paid first by $10,000 in cash, and a certificate for $90,000, and that then the $90,000 certificate was taken up by the payment of $30,000 in cash, and the issue of a new certificate for $60,000, which seems to have been paid, $15,000 on June 6, and the balance, $45,000, on June 7.

Q. Will you examine the books of the bank, when it is practicable, and then come before the committee to-morrow and give a further statement?—A. I will.

The witness appeared before the committee the following day, and testified as follows:

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Have you before you now the books of Jay Cooke & Company, containing the entries relating to the transaction on two checks, as to which you were inquired of at your previous examination?—A. I have.

Q. With these books before you, state what entries you find relating to these checks.—A. I find charged to Jay Cooke & Company, of New York, as remitted to them on the 3d of June, 1872, two checks for $50,000 each, drawn by the Brooklyn Trust Company on the Marine National Bank of New York, in favor of and indorsed by John G. Schumaker.

Q. It is simply an entry of the amount?—A. Yes.

Q. To whose account is it charged?—A. It is charged to Jay Cooke & Co., of New York, as remitted to them for the account of Jay Cooke & Co., Washington.

Q. To whose credit were the checks put at the banking-house of Jay Cooke & Co., Washington?—A. I find on the same date a certificate of deposit for $90,000, issued to John G. Schumaker. There are no other entries of such a large amount on that date, so that it would seem that these two checks were paid by a cash payment of $10,000, and by a certificate of deposit to the order of John G. Schumaker for $90,000.

Q. The $10,000 being paid over the counter?—A. I presume so. That would appear to be the way in which it was done. There would have been some credit if it had been done any other way.

Q. You mean that the $10,000 was paid without any check for that sum?—A. There would not have been any check for it. The two checks would be either all in money, or put to the account of some one. The $90,000 certificate accounts for $90,000 of the amount, and the $10,000 must have been paid in cash over the counter.

Q. The checks on the Marine National Bank being treated and paid in the same manner as if they had been checks on Jay Cooke & Co.?—A. Yes.

Q. So that no man's name appears upon the books in connection with it, except in the certificate of deposit?—A. That is all.

Q. Have you any recollection, now that your memory is refreshed by the books, of any person presenting those checks?—A. No, sir; I have not. I have no recollection of their payment.

Q. In whose handwriting is the first entry of the New York checks on the books?—A. The entry on this remittance-book is made by a young man named Barton, who used to write up the books. He had nothing to do with them, but to write up the books in the afternoon.

Q. Who was the paying-teller at that time?—A. Mr. John Sherman, I think.

Q. Then, ordinarily, Mr. Sherman would have received these two $50,000 checks, paid the $10,000 on them, and delivered the certificate of deposit for $90,000 to the party presenting the checks?—A. Yes; and if I recollect right the certificate which was shown me yesterday, it was filled up by Mr. Sherman, in his handwriting.

A. Pass now to the $90,000, certificate of deposit; what do you find on the books relating to it?—A. On June 5, 1872, I find that the $90,000 certificate was charged up as paid, and a new certificate to the order of John G. Schumaker issued for $60,000. As there are no other entries connected with it that certificate for $90,000 must have been paid by $30,000 in money and by a new certificate for the balance, $60,000.

Q. Is there no entry of any person's name on the books as entitled to that sum, or as indicating to whom the $30,000 was paid?—A. No, sir; except that the $60,000 certificate is issued payable to the order of John G. Schumaker.

Q. According to the books and papers the $30,000 must have been paid to John G. Schumaker?—A. Yes, or to whoever presented the certificate. If the certificate was presented indorsed by John G. Schumaker, the money would have been paid to whoever presented it.

Q. Would it indicate in the ordinary course of business the payment of the $30,000 to him?—A. It would indicate it, but would not prove it. Any outsider might have presented that certificate indorsed by John G. Schumaker, and might have received $30,000 in money and $60,000 in a new certificate. There is no positive proof by that that it was paid to Mr. John G. Schumaker. If it was properly indorsed, it would have been paid to whoever presented it.

Q. Refreshing your memory by these entries and papers themselves, have you no recollection whatever of the party to whom that money and the last certificate of deposit were paid?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. In the ordinary course of business would Mr. Sherman have been the party who would have paid that money and delivered the last certificate?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there any entry whatever relating to the payment of this remaining $60,000?—A. Yes, sir; on June 7, 1872, I find that the $60,000 certificate is charged up as being paid, and no new certificate issued, and no amount near to that placed to the credit of any one on that day, so that the whole $60,000 must have been paid. The entries on that certificate shown me yesterday show that it was paid by $15,000 on the 6th and by $45,000 on the 7th.

Q. Was there any entry in the books touching the party to whom that was paid, or who presented it for payment?—A. No, sir; nothing at all. There would not be; we never kept a record of that kind. If the certificates were properly indorsed, that was all we required. This certificate being drawn to the order of John G. Schumaker, if it was properly indorsed, that is all that we required, and that is the only record we kept of it.

Q. The money must have been given to him or to some person who brought the certificate with his indorsement upon it?—A. Yes.

Q. Do these statements comprise all that you know in regard to this transaction, either as gathered from the books or after careful consideration of your own memoranda?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have no recollection whatever which would enable this committee to ascertain who received these various sums of money from the bank?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of the matter.

By Mr. BURCHARD:

Q. Ought not that $15,000, which appears by this indorsement on the $60,000 certificate to have been paid on the 6th of June, to appear on some of the books or memoranda of Jay Cooke & Co.?—A. No, sir; we ordinarily did not pay certificates in that way. This $15,000 seems to have been paid and indorsed on the certificate, and there must have been a memorandum or docket which went in as cash that day, or perhaps it was the certificate itself.

Q. Who was the teller who made these payments?—A. I presume that they were made by Mr. Sherman. There would be nothing to show a transaction of that kind, as that was not the ordinary way of paying certificates.

Q. It was such an unusual transaction, and such a large amount, that you might have some recollection of it.—A. No, sir; we handled large sums continually. There was nothing unusual in the amount.

Q. Were $60,000 payments customary in your bank?—A. We made payments larger than that.

Q. Yes; but these were not common or usual?—A. We handled large amounts continually, so that they made no impression at all as being unusual in regard to the amount.

Q. Mr. Riggs testified before this committee that the $50,000 check cashed in his bank was a large amount.—A. It may have been for that bank.

Q. Is there any entry in reference to the $60,000 in the teller's book of June 7th?—A. [Referring to the book.] Yes, there it is.

Q. Ought there not to appear some memorandum of the payment of the $15,000?—No, sir; not if it was paid in the way it seems to have been paid. It would have been counted as cash on hand, as representing so much money on hand.

Q. And that was a frequent occurrence there—a payment of $15,000 on a certificate of deposit the day before the full amount was paid, and no entry made except a memorandum on the back of the certificate?—A. No; it was not a frequent occurrence in that way. Making partial payments on certificates was not usual.

Q. Do you recollect any instance besides this where such payments were made?—A. I cannot recall any now. It was not the usual way of paying certificates of deposit; we usually paid them in full, or paid them by so much cash, and by giving a new certificate for the balance.

Q. Does not the circumstance of the payment of this certificate being made in this way call the transaction to your mind? Is there nothing that refreshes your recollection as to Mr. Schumaker appearing with these checks?—A. No, sir; I have only an indistinct recollection of the transaction—a recollection of somebody presenting a certificate and wanting so much money on it and coming in for the balance next day; but I have no idea who it was.

Q. Then it is possible that there was a conspiracy on the part of somebody to represent Mr. Schumaker and to draw this money in his name, without his personal knowledge?—A. I do not say anything of that kind.

Mr. BURCHARD. I do not see but that such a conspiracy would be possible under your statement.

The WITNESS. If the certificate was brought there with Mr. Schumaker's indorsement upon it, and if that indorsement was correct, that is all the inquiry that we would make. That was the voucher which we would have.

Mr. BURCHARD. But Mr. Schumaker denies having any personal knowledge of the transaction.

The WITNESS. I do not know anything about that. There are the indorsements on the certificates, and that is all that we inquired into. When a person came in for a certificate of deposit, he would deposit the money and leave his signature, and we would pay the certificate on that signature.

Q. You do not recollect that Mr. Schumaker appeared there with a certificate?—A. No, sir. I do not know him at all.

Q. Would you know him now if you should see him?—A. I do not suppose I would.

Q. And you have no personal recollection, independent of these memoranda, of the presentation of the two $50,000 checks, or of the issuing or payment of the $90,000 or $60,000 certificates?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. From your knowledge of the business in the bank, what would you say was done in the matter, by reading the indorsements on the certificates, and the entries on the books, in reference to the two $50,000 checks, as to their ultimate payment?—A. I should say that the two checks were presented, and that the indorsement of Mr. Schumaker was identified in some way, so that we were satisfied that it was his indorsement; that a certificate of deposit for $90,000 was issued, and $10,000 paid in each; that then this $90,000 certificate was presented, properly indorsed, and $30,000 paid on it in cash, and a new certificate of deposit issued for $60,000; that then this $60,000 certificate was presented, and $15,000 paid on it on June 6, and the balance, $45,000, on June 7.

Q. To whom were the several payments made?—A. That there is nothing to show, except that they were paid on the indorsement of Mr. Schumaker. The certificates, being indorsed by him, were negotiable, and were paid to whoever presented them.

By Mr. NIBLACK:

Q. Ordinarily, if these two $50,000 checks had been presented by somebody else than Mr. Schumaker, would you not have required the indorsement of that person? Suppose I had taken these checks there to the bank, indorsed by Mr. Schumaker, would you not have required me to indorse them also?—A. No, sir; I should have required some knowledge that they were properly indorsed, and that they were presented by a proper person. I should not have paid an amount like that to a stranger.

Q. Is it not customary to require the indorsement of the last holder?—A. Yes, sir; it is customary, and that makes me think the money was paid to Mr. Schumaker.

Q. It must have been either paid to Mr. Schumaker or to some person well known at the bank?—A. If the initials of Mr. Cooke were on the check presented to the teller, that would be a notice to him that the checks were all right.

Q. Were not those initials an unusual occurrence, and indicating that it was a special case?—A. No, sir; it was very customary when persons were not acquainted at the counter to go to Mr. Cooke, and he would put his initials on the checks or notes, which initials were notice to the teller that they were all right.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. And with these initials of Mr. Cooke on the corner of the paper you would pay the check to anybody who held it?—A. Yes, sir; unless we had some special reason for thinking that it was not all right; that the indorsement was wrong, or something of that kind.

Q. But when presented by a man whose indorsement was on the checks, or when presented by any other holder, the initials of Henry D. Cooke would ordinarily authorize the paying-teller to pay the money to the man who held the check?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you find on the books any other transaction of $100,000 to any person in the course of that month?—A. I did not look for that particularly; I have been only hunting up this one transaction. We paid large amounts continually in our Government business, buying and selling bonds, &c. We were continually handling large sums.

Q. In money, or generally in letters of credit or certificates of deposit?—A. Large sums were generally in checks or drafts, or something of that kind.

Mr. BECK. But here was $100,000 paid in money.

The WITNESS. Not at the one time. There was first $10,000 paid, and afterward $30,000, and after that $60,000.

Q. Is not this $60,000 payment in cash over the counter a very large payment even for that bank?—A. It is a large amount, but not so large as to cause any inquiry about it, or to impress it specially on my mind.

Q. That receipt for $15,000 on the back of the $60,000 certificate is in your handwriting?—A. I think it is; it looks very much like my handwriting, but it is written very carelessly and hurriedly.

Q. Have you any recollection of writing that?—A. No, sir; I have only this vague, indistinct recollection of money being paid on a certificate, (probably $15,000,) and of a person saying that he would come for the balance immediately afterward, and that he came next day for it. I have tried to recall the transaction, but I cannot get anything specially about it.

Q. If you never saw Mr. Schumaker, and did not know him, and if you wrote that receipt yourself, is it not a little singular that you do not recollect to whom you paid the money?—A. I must have known at the time that it was some one who was authorized to receive it, and as the receipt is signed John G. Schumaker, I have reason to believe that it was paid to Mr. Schumaker, although I do not recollect Mr. Schumaker, and would not know him if I saw him.

Q. I understand you to say that you do not recollect any other case, except this one, where you put a receipt on the back of a certificate of deposit, and allowed the balance to remain, your usual habit being to issue a new certificate for the balance?—A. No, it was not a usual transaction; I cannot recall any other transaction of the kind.

Mr. BECK. I thought, perhaps, that the fact that that receipt was written by yourself, and that that is the only case you recollect where business was transacted in that way, would recall the circumstance to your mind, and recall the appearance of the person to whom you paid the money.—A. I have tried to see whether I could recall the appearance of the person, but I am unable to do so.

By Mr. KASSON:

Q. Have you examined the books to see if there were any entries (at or about the dates when the various payments were made upon these New York checks of $100,000) by the house of Jay Cooke & Co. to the credit of any person, indicating to whom any of this money was paid?—A. I have examined, and can find no credit to any one, or anything that would show any portion of this money.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 11, 1875.

RICHARD B. IRWIN recalled and cross-examined by Mr. Bell, counsel for the Pacific Mail Steamship Company:

Question. Did you ever tell Mr. Whitelaw Reid that Mr. Parsons had received over $100,000 of this money?—Answer. I did not.

Q. Mr. Reid stated in his testimony that you told him that Mr. Parsons either handled or knew about the handling of $300,000 more.—A. If you will look at page 512 you will find this statement by me: "I read in Mr. Reid's testimony his account of what I stated to him, and I think that Mr. Reid misunderstood me, although I have no doubt that his misunderstanding was caused by a confusion in my statement. I said to Mr. Reid that I had understood (as mere hearsay) that $300,000 had been spent in addition to the $900,000 which I had expended."

Q. I ask you if you did state to Mr. Reid that Mr. Parsons either handled or knew about the handling of $300,000 more?—A. I did not.

Q. Then Mr Reid is mistaken in saying that you did?—A. Either his attention was not directed to the same point that my attention was directed to, or else his memory is mistaken on the subject; but I can easily see that he may have derived that impression from connecting two different statements.

Q. You did not intend to say that?—A. I did not.

Q. What message passed between you and Whitelaw Reid while he was here in Washington?—A. A single message from me to him, in which I asked him to correct his impression on that subject, and in which I stated what I had said to him.

Q. Was that message in writing?—A. I think that Mr. Senter took it down. He carried the message to Mr. Reid, and I think he took it down in writing.

Q. Have you a copy of that writing?—A. No sir; it was just a memorandum in pencil.

Q. Did you receive any communication from Mr. Reid, either verbally or in writing, during his visit here?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Whitelaw Reid in the interview between you and him, in New York, that $1,200,000 had been used in this business?—A. On the top of page 512 of the testimony that interview with Mr. Reid is fully described, and is correctly described.

Q. Did you tell Whitelaw Reid that $1,200,000 had been used in this business?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you ever write to Mr. Whitelaw Reid about the matter of your evidence in Washington, or anything in relation to your operations?—A. I have written letters to Mr. Reid, but I really do not recollect whether they related to this matter.

Q. Since you have come to Washington?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you written him more than once?—A. I think not.

Q. Have you a copy of the letter which you wrote to him, and from which you can refresh your recollection?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you not the copy of such a letter within your possession?—A. I may possibly have.

Q. Have you?—A. I really cannot say, because I have hardly written a line myself recently.

Q. What was the substance of your letter to Mr. Whitelaw Reid so far as it related to the matters about which we are inquiring?—A. I do not think it relates to the matter about which we are inquiring.

Q. What was the date of it?—A. I do not recollect that, either.

Q. What was the avowed object or purpose of the letter?—A. I cannot tell you that, either; I do not recollect anything about it.

Q. You were certain that you did write to him?—A. I am not even certain about that; but I think I did.

Q. About what time?—A. Some time since the 8th of December last. Whatever I did write was not of any importance.

Q. I understood you to say that Mr. Schumaker was employed before the 13th of February, 1872?—A. That is my impression.

Q. That was before the letter which you received from Mr. Stockwell, and which contained the terms of your agreement?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you claim to have any authority to employ anybody before that letter was received?—A. I did.

Q. Where was your authority?—A. I had that authority under Mr. Stockwell's letter of the 1st of February, and under Mr. Stockwell's verbal statements to me.

Q. Do you claim that his letter of the 1st of February gave you authority to employ anybody?—A. I do.

Q. Are you now able to swear positively that the employment of Mr. Schumaker was prior to the 13th of February?—A. No, sir. The contract with Mr. Schumaker under which he received $300,000 was made after the 13th of February.

Q. I wish to know whether you did employ him before the 13th of February?—A. I did.

Q. After the 1st and before the 13th?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was it?—A. That I cannot tell.

Q. Was it in Washington or in New York?—A. My impression is it was in New York.

Q. Were you in New York between the 1st and 13th of February?—A. I think I was.

Q. More than once?—A. I was in New York almost every week during that whole period. I may possibly have written to Mr. Schumaker to have come here; I do not recollect exactly about that.

Q. How are you able to state, at this remote distance of time, the fact that that employment was before the 13th of February?—A. I am not able to state positively, except from my general impression that the employment was before that time.

Q. It is a mere general impression?—A. That is all.

Q. On what do you base it; have you any memoranda?—A. I have no memoranda about it; I base it on my general impression that he was employed before I received that letter from Mr. Stockwell. I think I named the amount in that letter, after consultation with Mr. Schumaker.

Q. Have you anywhere in your previous evidence ever sworn to anything in the nature of a contract, before the 13th of February?—A. I really do not recollect whether I have or not.

Q. Was it a fact that you did have any contract before Mr. Stockwell's letter of the 13th of February?—A. I do not think I had any definite contract before that.

Q. Have you not stated that you sent a draft of the letter of the 13th of February by a messenger, and that the letter was sent back?—A. Yes.

Q. After reflecting on the subject, are you still of the opinion that you employed Mr. Schumaker before the 13th of February?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Notwithstanding that?—A. Notwithstanding that.

Q. Are you able to swear positively that you had any interview whatever with Mr. Stockwell between the 1st and the 13th of February, 1872?—A. I cannot say; my impression is that I had, but I cannot say positively.

Q. You have sworn positively now that you had no talk with Mr. Stockwell on the subject of the contract before the first of February?—A. No, I think not; I would not like to fix the dates at this distance of time. I think I must have had some conversation with him between the time of my arrival in New York and the 13th of February.

Q. Do you swear to-day that you had no conversation with Mr. Stockwell, before the 1st of February, on the subject of the contract?—A. I cannot swear, either affirmatively or negatively, at this distance of time.

Q. You have stated, in reference to this letter, "I have only to say that the subject of the contract and the amount was not discussed up to that time." Was that a true statement then?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it a true statement to-day?—A. It is.

Q. Then, up to that time you had not discussed the subject of the contract and the amount?—A. No; but I did not use the words "nor the amount." I said, "and the amount."

Q. Had you discussed the subject of the contract before that?—A. I do not recollect.

Q. Do you wish to qualify that statement in any regard?—A. No, sir; it is perfectly true as it stands.

Q. Have you produced to this committee all the letters or writings that passed or existed between Mr. Stockwell and yourself in reference to this affair; I mean the letters that came from Mr. Stockwell to you, including the one to which you alluded the other day, and which you were unable to produce? That one and the three which are in evidence are all the letters that passed between you on the subject of the contract?

The WITNESS. On the immediate subject of the contract?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

A. The one which I alluded to the other day was the letter in reply to mine of the 14th of February. That is one. Then there were these three which have been put in evidence. There may have been another letter of his in reply to my answer to his of the 4th of May. My letter in answer to that is dated the 6th of May; and there may have been an answer to that letter.

Q. Was there one?—A. I do not know. With the exception of his answer to the letter of the 15th of February, and his answer to the letter of the 6th of May, I think that these are all the letters bearing directly on the subject of the contract.

Q. Are you certain that he wrote you any letter in reply to this of the 6th of May?—A. I am not.

Q. Have you any distinct recollection that he did write you a letter in reply?—A. I have not.

Q. Have you the impression, amounting to a conviction, that he did?—A. I have not. I have only an impression that he may have done so.

Q. And you cannot now swear positively that you believe he did so?—A. No, sir.

Q. It simply amounts to a probability that he may have done so. State what that letter contained.—A. I cannot say what the letter contained, if it only may have been written, for it might have contained anything. You ask me if I had produced all the letters that passed between us, and I said those two letters may have existed. Of course cannot state the contents of them.

Q. Then you are unable to give anything whatever of the contents of any such letter as that. Have you it in your possession, if it was written?

The WITNESS. Do you mean in Washington?

Mr. BELL. Anywhere.

A. If it was written, it should be somewhere among my papers in San Francisco.

Q. Have you made any efforts to obtain all the correspondence relating to this subject?—A. As I have stated to the committee before, I looked over my papers for two days in San Francisco, endeavoring to find everything that there was, but I was ill at the time.

Q. Did you find any such letter?—A. I did not.

Q. Is it not a fact that there is no such letter?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Is it not probably a fact that there is no such letter?—A. I cannot even go that far. It is possible there may be, and possible that there may not be.

Q. Is it not probable that there is not?—A. I cannot even say that.

Q. Now, to return to the answer to the letter of the 15th of February. Can you now say positively that such letter as that was written, or are you only under the impression that it may have been written?—A. It may possibly not have been answered at all, but I think there was an answer to it.

Q. You are unable to swear positively that any answer was received by you from Mr. Stockwell to that letter?—A. I am.

Q. And your only statement is that such a letter may have been written?—A. Yes sir.

Q. You will not swear that such a letter was not written?—A. No, sir. I will not swear that it was not written.

Q. Will you swear that it was written?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any recollection of having received it?—A. None whatever.

Q. Those letters, the three which are produced in evidence and the two which you say may have been written, are they all the communications that passed from him to you on the subject of this contract?

The WITNESS. Bearing directly on the subject of the contract?

Mr. BELL. Yes.

A. I think they are.
